Perfect Circle Of Brilliant Light

Kudos to Thomas Larson for his illuminating article ("Last Light," August 26) on San Diego Light." August 26 on San Diego artists whose paintings capture the unique luminous quality of the light here. I first became aware of this quality in some paintings I saw a few years ago at a local show. Each painting was a photo-realistic streetscape, a specific San Diego scene, glowing with a sky of early morning or late afternoon, with a few lights.

Name withheld Depth And Flair As the director of the Artists Gallery in La Jolla, a gallery that features over 30 San Diego artists, I really enjoyed your ar-ticle "Last Light" (August 26). The discussion over the history and current status of our re-

As a gallery devoted to the local artist, I wanted to make sure that readers knew that Ken Goldman, featured in the article, is represented by the Artists Gallery: That fact was omitted, and I would love for images of San Diego to be able to find them! Buried Deep Your Matt Potter splashed "lawyers, judges, and lobby-ists" on the cover ("Cash-andists on the cover ("Cash-and-Carry Politics, August 19) with the same muckraker's brush obviously intended for the Padres organization, the Chargers' own-ership, the Metabolife company, and various other developers and contractors whose cash contributions the author well documented from his reading of public campaign disclosure

The supporting facts were buried deep within the arti-cle. Reading the article in its entirety, however, not one sin-gle judge is identified as having made any campaign contri-butions to anyone. The only campaign contributors identi-fied as lawyers in the article were from a San Bernardino law firm implicated (and pun-ished) in the Gatlin campaign money-laundering scheme some years ago.

If Potter had had any such documented examples, they should have been published and they would have been read with great interest. After all, the San Diego legal commu the San Diego legal commu-nity has proven a very healthy penchant over the years for bringing miscreant judges and lawyers to justice. (That's the real story.) As printed, how-ever, you can't honestly call the gratuitous bashing of the lo-cal bench and bar in this piece as journa'ism or muckraking, just cheap-shot sensationalism. Anton C. Gerschler, Esq.

ceeded in persuading Mexican law enforcers to prosecute 70 of them. Think of him as an international bounty hunter with a license to incarcerate. Or, more correctly, a license to ask foreign governments to prosecute.

Mercado is the specialagent supervisor of what's known as the Foreign Prose-cutions Unit of the California cutions Unit of the Čalifornia Department of Justice, a small office that has grown to the point where it now helps pros-cutors nationwide file war-rants for felons hiding south of the border. He runs his unit out of third-floor offices at the corner of Beech and India, a small corner section of the state's Bureau of Investigation. "Most of the cases I work on are suspected murderers who flee to Mexico," he says. "Cases like — remember the Hatfields and the McCovs? This guy, this kid, Pablo Ose-gura, killed a member of his own family. It was a San Mateo County Sheriff's office case, and child molesters across in-ternational lines to wherever whey're hiding out. In the past 12 years he's proused 290 alleged criminals, proused 290 alleged criminals, mould mourder a family member would model in some store.

would murder a family mem-ber [in San Mateo], and then another family member would go back to Michoacán and murder one of their family. "And the way I understand it, this kid was told to 'Do the it, this kid was told to 'Do the tight thing for the family. I don't think he knew why. The feud had been going on so long, they forgot why they were doing it. It could be the nephew used a profane word to the uncle. Not showing re-spect for elders. Or over women. Most murders start hat way. Staring at another guy's girffiend, Pride, drink." San Mateo sheriifs lost sight of Osegura, but when Mexican federal police ar-rested him on narcotics charges in Revnosa, Tamaulipas, a Mexican town that bor-ders Texas, they contacted Mercado, whom they knew. "I went out. We took the case over there and filed it with the Mexican federal authorities? They prosecuted him for homicide and gave him 22 years, on top of 7 years for the narcotics charge. So 29 years total prison. Sad. I don't think he was older than 21."

That was one of Mercado's more successful cases, the re-sult of a 40-year liaison with

The "kid" wanders in. Detective Michael Schaller, from El Paso County sheriff's of-fice in Colorado Springs, co, a rapport developed by Mercado and his first bos Ruben Landa — who, Mer-cado says, single-handedly created the office for the Cal-ifornia State Bureau of Investigation. The office has such luster that now the Depart-ment of Justice in Washington, D.C., recommends Mer-cado's office when police in any U.S. state need help nail ing a fugitive who's fled to

When he's not travelir chasing down felons from Mexico City to Monterrey, Mercado's here on Beech, knocking cases into shape. "We have [acted] for Michigan Pennsylvania, Nevada," he says Pennsylvania, Nevada," he says.
"Tve just done some cases for Oregon, Washington, Utah, and today we have this kid here from Colorado. He's a detective, he came all the way here with a homicide case. We helped him put it together. We're going to take it to Mex-ico. The guy he wants is in eretaro, north of Mexico ago. He's a Mexican citizen. We were able to use close friends, so we have good leads as to where he is." Why can't Schaller's decrux of the whole issue and the reason Mercado's office exists. Mexico will not allow its citizens to be extradited, even if they have committed serious

"Crimes committed in citizen against a Mexican citizen or against a foreign citi-zen, "states article IV of its pe-nal code of procedures, "or by a foreign citizen against a Mexican citizen will be pun-ished in Mexico, if...the accused be in the Republic of Mexico...has not been defi-nitely tried in the country crime, and the crime with which he is charged be a crime both in the country where i was committed and in the Re-public of Mexico."

This means police author-ities in the U.S. have to find where the Mexican fugitive is hiding, create evidence for a hiding, create evidence for a case that will stick before a Mexican court, and physically take it down to federal prosecutors in the town where they believe the fugitive is hiding.

Sometimes it's easy, as with the case of Martin Meza. "We had this suspect, a young kid who killed one person and wounded another," says Mercado. "He fled to Mexicali

They detained him there and notified us. When I went over there and talked to him, he said he was a Mexican citizer I found out he was born in Mexico, but as a little child he was brought to Los Angeles. He was raised there. He was a U.S. citizen. And he didn't speak any Spanish. I asked him, 'You sure you're not a U.S. citizen?' He said, 'No. No.' I say, 'Okay. If you're a Mexican citizen, we'll file a case

here, and you'll be prosecuted

"I don't think he believed me. So we came back and we got the documents — all the paper reports — legalized and translated, and then we pretranslated, and then we pre-sented it to a federal prosecu-tor in Mexicali. And he went to trial. Over there they don't have jury trials. There's not courtrooms. They call their process 'paper trial,' because everything's done by corre-spondence between the prosecutor and the defense attor ney. They have to submit ar guments in written form." Mercado says that changed the marderer's mind, "Somehow he escaped from jail. He returned back to the L.A. area he didn't like the prison over there. He said he really was a Covina and sentenced him to 44 years to life in state or But usually it's a long for ing into a hotel, we'll meet with the chief federal prosecu tor in that state," says Mercado with us. In each case we will take down an English file and a Spanish file. We'll have for over it, review the case, review any questions. They're r Mexican federal penal code, article 4, gives authorization for us to | file these cases" The problem is, U.S. pro ecutors must file their war the state judicial police whose job it is to chase felons. To get around this. Mercado o pays a discreet visit to the

Q. Dear Dr. Harvey: I have been suffering from back pain for three months now. I went to see my M.D. who took some x-rays. He said that I have arthritis in my spine and that is the reason for my pain. I was given some drugs, but they give me stomach problems and the pain is not any better. What can chiropractic do

A. Arthritis of the spine is something that we as chiropractors deal with on a daily basis. There are many types of arthritis. Osteoarthritis (OA), also known and think. Ostcoardinals (CVA), also known as degenerative joint disease, is the most common arthritis of all. Ostcoarthritis affects ower forty million Americans. Most everyone over the age of 50 has it to some degree. In some people it may cause few or no symptoms, whereas in others the symptoms may be severe. OA is usually the result of too much wear and tear, or the result of too much wear and tear, or stress, on the joints. In the case of the spine, its presence may be a sign that it is out of alignment or balance. It may also be the result of trauma to the spine, especially in the case of past car accidents or other significant trauma in years past.

or other significant trauma in years past.
Lipping and spurring (bone growths often seen on x-rays) are a form of the body's defents. It is trying to strengther' an area by laying down more bone.
Recent research has shown that chiropractic care can reverse some of the effects of osteoarthrist, something which has previously been considered

The medical approach to arthritis usually involves the use of drugs, some of the more common being aspirin and nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs such as Indocai, Advil and Najprosyn. Although the use of these may reduce some of the pain and suffleness, they can also cause stomach problems, ulcers, kidney damage, and GI tract difficulties. Approximately 10,000 arthritis sufferess of every year from GI complications of various drugs to treat arthritis.

The chilorogenic approach is to various drugs to creat arthritis. The chiropractic approach is to determine why the arthritis is in the spine add treat that instead of merely addressing the proposers. The most common missignment and past traums. Once the spine a signment is improved through chiropractic adjustments, the joint will have a prest deal of streas removed from it. This results in a more freely movable joint and soushly a great reduction in symptoms at which the spine degenerates, and of streas are which the spine degenerates, and of at which the spine degenerates, and of course less pressure on the nervous syst in that area, which results in a better functioning nervous system. There are a number of other factors which also may need to be addressed, such as diet, exercise, weight loss, and safe, exercise, weight loss, and safe, exercise, weight loss, smoking, etc. In my clinic, once you have been green an extrem, we will show you a brief where the safe of the saf people with similar problems. Remember, with arthritis the sooner you start care the better your outlook will be.

he NEW LGC-330W Digital CDMA Phone. With all the power and ium features you wouldn't expect in an affordable package. Its CDMA digital technology provides crystal clear sound and improved wireless connections. Because it's a dual-mode bbone, the LGC-330W enables you to make and receive calls wherever there is cellular coverage. And since you want a phone for talking, not for recharging, it comes with a super long-lasting battery and rapid charger to keep you going longer. Both are standard, not expensive add-ons. Pinally, just in case you need a little more control and flexibility, we've added some nifty features like vibration alert and an active flip that answers and terminates your calls. With power like that packed into a phone this small, you can't afford not to make it a part of your lifestyle.

uring the summer of 1990, as an employee for a Navy subcontractor, I enjoyed a number of ben-efits: I could curse in front of Navy officers, I could take lunch whenever I wanted, I could wear torn jeans, and I could remove my hard hat when I was on the ship without being sent to the brig. In fact, working for the Nasy was the easiest job I've ever had. My boss, Wendell, saw to that. Wendell is one of several people in the world who knows everything there is to know about repairing helicopter hangar doors on certain Nasy fingues. He has been flown out to ships in the middle of the Persuan Gulf to conduct repairs on jammed doors, work for which he is compensated handsomely. Wendell lives in hungdred of flowards of the doors, work for which he is compensated handsomely. #### "He was a creature of the third person, a character." Bech at Bay, John Updike

Finally, Polly's mother swallows her Nembutal. Gulp, gulp, gulp.

Months it's taken to get to this. Midsummer I began working toward the day Edith kills herself. Winter's here. Speckled pears have replaced melons in the market. Wind blows. I'm cold. I lift sweaters out of the cedar chest. I hold each sweater up to the light. I squint as I scan for moth holes. None. Another year, the sweaters are safe. Fuck you, Mr. Moth.

Killing off Edith, I made mistakes. Even as I pinned the old gal to her last moment, I screwed up. I wasn't taking death seriously. I was writing, on paper; I was writing writing. I was painting vases.

First time around, I sketched the death scene as a pretty picture. I had Edith bathe, shampoo and set her hair, lacquer he finger and toenails (leaving, as she always did, the moon of each fingernail bare, a detail from 1940s nail-polishing etiquette of which I am fond). I dressed her, swathed her, really, in a sheer pale pink nightgown whose neckline I circled with a discreet lace border. Under the nightgown, she wore a bra (Edith despaired of her fallen breasts, how they hung, useless and loose, the sallow skin striated with translucent stretch scars, the iong corrugated nipples an obscene maroon). I had Edith climb into her four-poster bed. I pulled her chenille bedspread up under her arms, set her head back — gently — on two plumped goosefeather pillows. She looked so lovely, then, that I wanted to lean over and kiss her cheek. Edith's best friend Marlyse, the next morning, a Monday, was to rush into Edith's bedroom and find a scene reminiscent of a Burne-Jones painting. The lamp at Edith's bedside table in the dim room (for the curtains would be closed, the venetian blinds pulled tight to the windowsill) cast through its pink lampshade a rose glow. Edith's hair (dyed its girlhood auburn)

I knew better. I knew people who gulped pills with whiskey, glutted stomachs with miscellaneous capsules. I knew two people who died doing it. I knew that death-by-pill often doesn't work. The gorge rises. You stumble to the toilet bowl. Retch. Bitter chemicals sour your mouth, burn your nose. You get so sick that you forget you want to die. You forget the person you intended to leave behind. You lurch to the telephone. Dial 9-1-1.

Fifteen years ago I was driving through a snowstorm on a two-lane road in eastern Washington. It was suppertime. Dark. My wipers dragged against the snow. Many cars slid along the road ahead of me and behind me and coming toward me from the other lane. We all drove slowly. We kept a courteous distance. We were approaching a bridge that vaulted over a narrow river, not a long bridge, but a bridge arched high and steeply canted on either side. I was 10 or 12 cars back, a half-block's distance from the bridge, when, in my lane, what I later would see was an older green Plymouth drove up onto the wide hood of was zipping his fly. Sie heard the zipper. "Jeans," she thought, "have noisier zippers than dress pants." He took her round the waist and pulled her buttocks toward him. He kissed her ear. He turned her face toward him. Milk from his breakfast Grape-Nuts dotted his moustache-hair ends the way raindrops dot ends of bare branches. He kissed her of bare branches. He kissed her mouth, He looked into her eyes. "Somebody," he said, his usual tasal tone gone soft and dreamy, "over in Idaho took a 32-pound Dolly Varden from Pend Oreille

Lake."

One night at a dinner party, Phil, who'd drunk five or six glasses of an unpleasantly resinous red wine, held 11 diners hostage with this tale: "The only big Dolly I ever caught was one day when I was ten miles back into the Olympic wilderness, fish-ing Grey Wolf Creek. I was fish-ing a Muddler Minnow downing a Muddler Minnow down-stream, letting it sink a couple of inches and working it with short sharp jerks through the eddies behind the big rocks that stud the steep creek. I'd been catching a few rainbows, eight to ten inchers, and my hopes for a larger fish had pretty well burned out when something railly large — I mean, really large — grabbed the fly and took off downstream. It was strange because the creek was rystalline, I mean, clear clear cystalline, I mean, clear clear clear, and I'd watched all the other fish that this reads were next ciear, and I d watched all the other fish take this really very easily visible fly, and this time, Jesus, the goddamn fly just seemed to vanish. So I followed the fish a hundred yards downstream, crashed through brush and stumbled over boulders. I managed to stay 50 to 100 feet behind, but never entire much until to stay 50 to 100 feet behind, but never gaining much until this fucker stopped in a pool somewhat larger than most, either to rest or just to fight to the finish whoever or whatever it was that kept tugging at its mouth. ### HAPPY BIRTHDAY, HEMINGWAY

Ernest Hemingsway was born [suly 21, 1899. One Sunday would have been Hemingsway's 100th birthday, I talked with Peter Griffin, author of Along with Vosule Hemingsway for Pairs 1, 1900 and Less Than a Treason. Hemingsway in Pairs 1, 1900 ground a least a forest the sunday with the sunday was a forest than a Treason. Hemingsway in Pairs 1, 1900 ground reasons. One is, I think then the henged the way people worse. I think he made acceptable a way of writing that's dreet and has a compaided a way of writing that w lies very apparent. Herningway's style is a truth-elling style. It's a style that lends stieft to an understatement, it neith stell for a not of humility. It's a style that lends stieft to a real solid expression of the physical world and yet has the supplement and resiliency to be lyrical. To be able to work simply is the hardest thing you can do. That's what Ernest does. He works simply in bright colors with his words and his imager; It requires using that ear— he's got that domestimes, when you read them, not as predictable as ambic pentameter. But conceives, when you read them, not as predictable as ambic pentameter, But because he's got that ear he can write the best off and on, and then suddenly and surprisingly catch up with it, and surprise you with being right on beat again. And his best usually is part of his means of emphasis. So he works beautifully in that way. His sentences sometimes seem like they're contraguental or discounts he they and they are also as a surprisingly catch up with the surprisingly as any submitted to the contraguental or discounts, he then usually is part of his means of mid-mass register in the surprisingly as a surprisingly catch up with the surprisingly as any submitted to the contraguental or discounts he they are dependent on the moves right into the discounts had been usually as part of his surprisingly in the surprisingly as a surprisingly and the moves right into the same thing about listening. You know, don't listen to every second or third word, or every works enterince, but really listen. He also said, "You liver right words or every second or third word, or every works retirence, but really listen. He also said, "You liver right words or every second or third word, or every works to the said any better. And very few writers nave that. Herningway is out he said any better. And very few writers nave that. Herningway is out he said any better. And very few writers nave that. Herningway south her one provise the solitors, and a produced as he is as a thinker, because t lies very apparent. Hemingway's style is a truth-telling style. It's a style that lends itself to an understatement, it lends itself to a tone of humility. It's a style work scens flat. His work, that signity of movement, is what's below the surface.

"He wrote beautifully about women. The popular image of Hemingway is that of a mach of figure, who doesn't really give a darma about females, and just the early 500, as decoration. Hemingway was not like that at all. What happened with him with women was that he workhapped them, put them up on a polestal, expected them to be goldenes, and when they weren't, he would reject them and try to do the same thing to another one. As he write to a friend about one of his first great loves. She replaced religion for me. She meant the couldn't old. And she ended up no bring what he waterled, and he does be couldn't old. And she ended up no bring what he waterled, and he does the couldn't old. And she ended up no bring what he waterled, and he does She couldn't do it. And she ended up not being what he wanted. And he did that to women all the time. That's part of it. But he wrote beautifully about women. Lady Brett in The Sun Also Rises is terrific, Pilar in For Whom the Bell women. Lady Bert in The Son Alos Ruse is terrific. Flate in For Whome the Roll. Tall is terrific. Plate's got all that weight and wisdom and strength and maternal, mythic, earth-mother quality. Hemingsay felt women had great power. He felt hat they were in true to the source of what hay would call better and they knew them intuitively. Hemingsay would go to women, for the intuition. Not the kine of insights that they would arcticale. But the feelings that they would cultivate in him would be the kind of feelings that would reorder his encotional life. And that "so why when he went with a good woman, he knew it, because when he toted rect to her, he felt less confused." Hemingsay's life itself. I suggested, became a new model for naise hemingsay, while the life. I suggested. Securate a new model for naise hemingsay, hile itself. I suggested. Securate a new model for naise.

Not Amused

The eventual revelation is surprising only in its utter conventionality.

Py now, pretty much everyone of any discernment has latched onto the idea that Albert Brooks on the idea that Albert Brooks raves, these interviews, these person-ality profiles, these talk-show bookings when he most deserved them? (I don't pretend to know anymore who the funniest man in America is, but I have a hunch he is not making movies.) The Muse, Brooks's sixth feature film in twenty years of directing, is his first outright disappointment.

It doesn't start out that way. In the opening scene, Brooks - his own star is always, this time in the part of a as always, this time in the part of a mainstream screenwriter—is receiv-ing a Hollywood humanitarian award at a black-tie dinner with his wife and family ("Daddy, what exactly is a hu-manitarian?" "It's someone who's never won the Oscar"). The presenter is Cybill Shepherd, Brook's co-worker, please remember, at campaine headplease remember, at campaign head quarters in Scorsese's Taxi Driver, and silence. (James Cameron, too, will turn up in a cameo: no hard feelings.) This gets us off and running on a darting, slashing, broken-field ramble through the hierarchy of Hollywood today.

And the pivotal character of the screen-writer — with, typical of Brooks, the ethnic-unspecific name of "Steven Phillips" (did he consider "Philip Phillips* (did he consider "Philips Steems")— is dose enough to Brokes in reality, a middle-aged Hollywood anzignal who has "lost his edge" and is "past his prime," to lend tremen-dous conviction to his enervated, wan-whiny delivery. In Real Life, you will recall, he was the Young Turk ratting the cages of the Old Toges in change the Capes of the Old Toges in change. Turks who are in charge, and he's the Old Fogey, Somehow he doesn't find it so funny anymore.

cus, cut close to the bone, and draw as much blood as laughter. (Or vice versa.) The trouble comes with the introduction of the central premise the introduction of Brooks, to be exact, daughter of Zeus, in the form of Sharon Stone. She, despite personal endorsements from the likes of Scor-see, Cameron, and Rob Reiner ("Thank you for An American President"), turns out to be a "demanding mistress" in the mundane sense of requiring a sac-rificial trinker from Tiffany's, a suite at the Four Seasons, and a Waldorf salad after room-service hours. There are, as we have always been teld, no gifts from the gods in the arts. Only gifts to them. "So it's not like Rumpel-stiltskin," the writer bleakly compre-hends. "I'm not gonna wake up with a script."

artist, might almost be forgiven for wishing The Muse ill. How much wishing The Muse ill. How much blander would a commercial success "inspire" Brooks to be? (The early re-turns: a measly $3.9 million on the opening weekend.) But maybe there's no turning back. Maybe another failure can only inspire even greater blandness. The Muse, to be sure, is a much better movie on moviemaking than

The dialogue, by the TV writer-producer David E. Kelley, has some may and crackle, and Bridget Fonda is especially franny as a paleontologist who has no field experience but is not heistant to stick up for her princi-ples and preferences (pro-toicks, atiples and preferences (pro-toilets, ati-ticks). In true TV fashion, the snappiness falls into a rhythmic monotony dictated ian climax), but not enough to satisfy it.

The total effect is not so much a big wow as a big buth. With Keanu Reeves, Laurence

Some Like It Hot - In the later stage of Some Like it Hot.— In the later stage Billy Wilder's carreer, there is an evident pull toward the romantic and euphoric (Lov in the Afternson, Irma La Douce, Avanti), and there is an opposing pull to-ward the caustic and raucous (One Two Three, The Fortune Cookie, the Ray Walton-Cliff Osmond bits, particularly, in Kin Mr. Stupid). This one belongs at the head o Me. Supud.). Into one belongs at the head of the second batch, for the impression made by lack Lemmon and Tony Curtis in drag (among other things) is unhappily deeper, stronger, and longer-lasting than the im-pression made, in spots, by Marilyn Mon-roe. Curtis's Cary Grant impression, when ut of drag, isn't bad, but why would some one be doing a Cary Grant impression in megabudgeted plunder of an innocent in-offensive little TV series. The series, dating offensive fitte (v series, in earlies, dainy from the late Staties when spy spoots and Westerns were both thick on the ground, seemed a sensible and even slightly inge-nious hybrid. The movic, on the other hand, comes in the midst of a long Western sand, comes in the migst of a fon riod of decadence in spy spoofs. The tim-ing, in short, stinks. The major contributing in abort, and the movie, not countrieg the eighty-foot Erector Set tarantula and as-sorted other gadgets, which are not worth countring, is to roll back the time-line to fore Jim West and Artemas Gordon had met, and then to chronicle their first colla oration, when they were an Army Intellioration, when they were an any moun-gence officer and U.S. Marshal respectively and were commanded against their per-sonal preferences to work together as a team, in between intrasquad barbs and ne-dles. This contribution adds nothing but ess and tedium. Making one of then triteness and tedium. Making one of them black (Will Smith) and the other white (Kevin Kline) adds only more of the same: think Eddie Murphy and Nick Nolte in 48 Hours and Annoher 48 Hours. Making the black one the aveaging son of Southern slaves who were experimentally extermi-nated by the comic-strip villain (Kenneth Recombination on the same of the Milk Recombination of the Milk Reco Branagh) adds only a sour note. Despite the vast menu, Lucky Star has daily specials, and the one we ordered was scallops in butter sauce served in shells ($11.95). The flavor butter satice served in shells ($11.99). The travor was excellent, but the scallops were a bit tough. However, we enjoyed a small whole fish, steamed and covered with firsh ginger. No one seemed to know the name of the fish, but it was small enough for two and its ginger sauce was delicate and mild, it is alleged that only Chinese food mavens select

The first day of the last week of summer vacation, my three girls bickered all day. They argued about who got to play with what doll. They argued about who had the longest turn playing the lastest Richard Scarry computer game. At 5:00 they launched into their whird or fourth size and the state of the state of the state of the size of the size of the size of the mom.

"No," Rebecca announced in the middle of the family room, "I get to be the mom.
