MISSION BAY HIGH'S CLASS OF '75 MEETS ON THE WEB

By all accounts, it was Dan Siskovic who conceived the idea of creating a place in cyberspace for the Mission Bay High School Class of 1975. Dan did this in January 2000. He and a few friends had organized 10- and 20-year reunions for the class, and the last time around they had located less than half of the 476 members. With another celebration looming, Dan thought the Internet might help them find more of their former schoolmates.

Squirrel Battles IRS

By Jerry Maskal

Tackling the regulatory government doesn’t seem to scare political activist Dadores A. Welty of La Jolla. So, it was no surprise when the Democratic Party 2006 candidate for the 53rd district, who is running in the November election, announced last week that he is running for the state legislature in the same district.

The councilman has been fighting against the state’s tax on kelp and other marine life since he was a child, saying it was “unfair to the environment.” He later worked for the state’s Department of Fish and Wildlife, where he was responsible for enforcing laws against the taking of kelp and other marine life.

While his previous efforts were unsuccessful, the councilman has now vowed to run for the state legislature in order to fight against the proposed tax on kelp.

Orange County

The county council passed a bill last week that would allow for the construction of a new jail in Santa Ana, which would cost an estimated $80 million.

The new jail would be built on land that is currently used by the county’s Department of Corrections, which has been operating out of an old courthouse.

The county council is expected to vote on the bill again next month.

Best In The World

Eventually forgot what a spectator view is, I went down to the bottom again, and here's my spot. I'm still sitting there right now, looking up at the game. I'm not paying attention to the vase or the ground, I'm just trying to enjoy the game. I'm not worrying about getting up, I'm just enjoying the moment of the game.

The view is perfect, I can see the whole field. The players are so big and clear. I can even see the details on their uniforms. It's an amazing experience. I'm gonna keep coming back to see more games at home.
Dear Aunt Trudy,

I had a wonderful vacation with my family. We visited a beautiful beach town and spent time exploring the local culture. The food was amazing, and the weather was perfect. We also went on a hike in the mountains, and the view was breathtaking. Overall, it was a great trip.

I also had the opportunity to meet some new people and learn about different lifestyles. I think it's important to broaden our horizons and experience different cultures. It's a great way to expand our perspective and gain a better understanding of the world.

I hope you had a nice summer as well. Let me know how things are going for you.

Best regards,

Imagine a cruise ship with the style and elegance of a top-rated French resort — but of course, without the wait. A perfect blend of the best in fine dining, entertainment, and relaxation, all found outside of the best restaurants in Paris — and then imagine the timeless grace of some of the most beautiful islands on earth. Put the two together — and you have an orgasmic blend that is irresistible. This is what cruising French Polynesia aboard Paul Gauguin Cruises is all about: sophistication and simplicity to perfect harmony.

So claims the CruiseMama at her website (www.cruisemama.com), which is accompanied by tasty reggae beats. He invites you deeper into the fantasy by comparing Tahiti to the backdrop of a "Boulevard revisited by Bogart and H Benny" and South Pacific fragrances to the "best perfumers in Paris." And for the coup de grâce? Les Gauguines: a "troop of beautiful Polynesian women, whose sole purpose it is to entertain and pamper you on your seven-night French Polynesia cruise." You’ll find them "sailing on the gray side in Paregiere with garlands of fragrant orchids and wearing sarongs of Tahitian gauze," and "dancing gracefully in the French Polynesian style of "hula a Tahiana.""

Check out the Signature Cruises site (www.signaturecruise.com) for the ship profile. The Paul Gauguin built in 1997, 21,890 tons, 515 feet, 720 staterooms, 320 passengers.

206 crew members, dinner from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m., no tipping required.

If only Gauguin himself had the opportunity to travel in such luxury. In September 1901, he did not, as some believe, sail to the Marquesas on a charming sailboat pushed along by outrigger canoes. The artist arrived to the island on a bateau-bang sailboat filled with arts and crafts and with a "bar with scenes of marauders" onboard, as well. In order to have his distant island, Gauguin himself "advances a career." One can only imagine with what grace this ship — itself as big as an island — arrived in Papeete.

This is how he got there. But who did he get it for? Did Gauguin, peace and alone, die on a rugged island 8 degrees south of the equator? Didn’t he find too sorry for him, we have the degenerate, not the islanders? Though a visionary artist, Gauguin was not, with regards to his travels, a pioneer. By the time he arrived in the Marquesas, turning the South Sea had become a common gambit of Western writers and artists. After Herman Melville and before Gauguin came Pierre Loti, Robert Louis Stevenson, John La Farge, and Harry Adams, the historian. Loti, a popular French novelist, borrowed Mottez’s formula (a fanciful blend of fact and fiction) for his 1880 book Tahiti: The Marquesas East. An East writer, not Gauguin, he was degenerate, not the islanders.

Don’t feel too sorry for Gauguin; he was degenerate, not the islanders.
According to Adams, Gauguin had actually been in Tahiti for some time. He mentioned to a friend that he had been there for several weeks, and that his stay was coming to an end. Adams then suggested that he might return to France soon. Gauguin, however, was determined to continue his artistic journey and refused to leave Tahiti. This decision led to a mutual understanding and respect for each other's creative endeavors.

Gauguin then decided to return to Europe, where he could continue his artistic pursuits. He was determined to make his mark as an artist and to achieve recognition for his work. Gauguin's decision was courageous and risk-taking, and it paved the way for his subsequent success as an artist.

Gauguin's return to Europe was a crucial moment in his life. It marked the beginning of his artistic career and paved the way for his subsequent success as an artist. Gauguin's return to Europe was a significant event in the history of art and has left a lasting legacy on the art world.

In conclusion, Gauguin's decision to return to Europe was a crucial moment in his life. It marked the beginning of his artistic career and paved the way for his subsequent success as an artist. Gauguin's return to Europe was a significant event in the history of art and has left a lasting legacy on the art world.

Organ Donation
AN ACT OF LOVE

Shari Shipley's donor transplant did not just save her life; it changed it. Shipley is currently the community development manager for LifeShare, a community service organization that coordinates organ donations, donations, and recipients and promotes organ donation.

Shipley says her attitude about work changed after her transplant. "You learn what's important in life," Shipley said. "It's not about the money. It's about helping people." She is also grateful that she was able to attend the American Red Cross for five years after being diagnosed with hepatitis C.

Shipley had to carry a page full-time, waiting for the call that an organ was ready.

"But its like an electric shock," Shipley said. "The organ arrives, and there are times when I was in the hospital for two months and my whole world was turned upside down." She added, "I don't know what I would've done without her.

"She was so strong," Shipley said. "She was there for me when I needed her most. She was there to help me when I couldn't help myself."

"What is a writer but a schmuck with an Underwood?"

—Jack Warner

I am writing this on the nearly silent plastic keys of a Macbook. Gentle pressure on a milky white rectangle will connect a fragment of will and thought in the form of a Roman symbol to a solenoid connector and render it visible on a screen of pale light. Like a shadow, it will hold this symbol in cyberspace memory (as long as I want it to) next to the associated thought fragments I place to either side of it. This machine is about the size and weight of a good cutting board and a garden hose, with several things. I use it primarily as a typewriter; I suspect that’s like owning a Rolls-Royce and using it only to listen to the radio.

Remington’s My Old Love

My Remington Noiseless is in the shop, miles away at El Cajon Typewriter, where, presumably, proprietor Ralph Bennett is repeating its carriage cable at a leisurely pace. When he told me, "Your gear in the need to work on those things," I understood and told him to take his time. I never use it anymore anyway. No, never, however, will I let go.

I’m not a snob. Maybe I should say that on the occasions when I check to see, I discovered that I wasn’t a very good one. Nonetheless, these attempts almost always involved the manual typewriter (or pen, of course) and not the word processor. Perhaps it is not a matter of the delete key that is so unsatisfying, indescribable as it is, in the process of poetry and even in the most dreary journalism (there is a satisfaction in typing the wrong thing, choosing the wrong word, and then removing it from the play), watching the paper into a ball and tossing it. Hitting the delete button and watching your 10-key-chosen words fold themselves away into dust never looks cathartic.

David McCullough, biographer, and author, explained what it is to lose words, "Like the taste of a perfect dry martini, it is lost at the end of the line. It was a way of my mind expressing itself in words.

I thought the ball that dropped into a hole (as the balls do) was a metaphor for me. I wrote a poem for it, called "The Ball That Dropped Into a Hole." This, of course, leads to Anthony Burgess, but then all things do, sooner or later. He wrote on every conceivable subject. In his book (largely of book reviews) "Dial M for Monroe: Prufrock and Other Writings," it seems likely that Burgess actually fashioned a metaphor for this strange order of the things that my fingers know, but I would be hard pressed to name it because

The left hand does about 57 percent of the typing, the right only 43 percent.

The thing looks like some hastily assembled Victorian-decoding device, something Captain Nemo might have absorbed the Nautili from.

Neutral colors aren't always neutral, but they are certainly versatile. If you want to use this color scheme, you should consider using a lighter shade of gray or beige to make the design pop.

The image shows a page from a book with text discussing neutral colors and their versatility in design. The text also mentions the Nautili from the novel "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which features Captain Nemo and his mysterious ship.

No One Ever Dances

MISSION BAY HIGH'S CLASS OF '75 MEETS ON THE WEB

Over the course of the next few weeks, some of the first items to trickle in were class reunion plans. Among the early responses, Cathy Feagin responded from North Carolina to say she must attend, as her father had been a member of the early missionary group that established the school. Tami Sander, who had recently returned from graduate school in New York, said she would attend, as well as several other classmates. By the end of the month, nearly half of the class had committed to attending, and the committee was well on its way to a successful reunion.

As the date approached, the committee worked hard to ensure that all attendees would have a memorable experience. They organized a variety of events, including a dinner at the local restaurant, a dance at the school, and a visit to the nearby beach. The committee also made sure to include activities for all ages, from a game of touch football at the nearby park to a movie night at the school's auditorium.

The day of the reunion arrived, and the school was buzzing with activity. Attendees arrived early, excited to catch up with old friends and relive past memories. As the evening progressed, the atmosphere was electric, with music blaring and laughter filling the air. The dance floor was packed, and people were dancing and socializing throughout the night.

Despite some initial challenges, the reunion was a huge success. The committee's hard work paid off, and the attendees had a great time. It was a wonderful way to reconnect with old friends and celebrate the past.

"Back then, it was party-animal city. And I was an instigator of many of those parties."

You want! If that hadn't been the case, then there's no way I was going to accept it. I probably wouldn't be doing the same thing today, having my own business and being as happy as I know how to be. I'd be some miserable, mild-mannered schmuck.

Right after high school, I went to San Diego State University on the five-year plan. With that, it's a cinch. I wasn't sure what I wanted to be, but I knew I wanted to be a photographer. So I got a degree in photography and continued on to Stanford. Then I got a job at a photography studio in Los Angeles. It was a great experience, but I didn't like the way the studio was run. So I decided to go on my own.

I've been freelancing ever since. It's been a great way to learn and grow as a photographer. I've worked with a lot of different clients, and it's been a great way to meet new people. And, of course, it's been a great source of income.

Nudge nudge, wink with an eye, you know what I mean? But seriously, I really want to take more freelancing jobs. I don't want to work for someone else for the rest of my life. I want to be my own boss and make my own decisions.

As for my future, I'm not sure. I might want to get more into teaching and mentoring other photographers. I think it would be really fulfilling to help others learn and grow in the photography field.

The only thing I'm sure of is that I want to continue to work and grow as a photographer. I love what I do and I don't want to stop doing it anytime soon. But who knows what the future holds?

At the same time, I was torn between my heart and my head. I knew I wanted to pursue my dream of being a photographer, but I also knew that it could be a risky move. I had to make a decision, and I ended up deciding to go for it. I'm happy with my decision, and I'm glad I pursued my dream.

It was tough, but in the end, it was worth it. I've never been happier with my career. I love what I do, and I'm grateful for the opportunities that have come my way. I'm excited to see where the future takes me. I'm sure it will be full of new adventures and challenges.

"After ten years, all of the women had had the bob job and they looked wonderful!"

"I was told by Dave Schulte, a few weeks later, that he had decided to try the new style himself. He decided to try the new style himself, and it worked out great.

When I decided to start freelancing, I was a bit nervous. I had never worked for myself before, and I was worried that I wouldn't be able to make ends meet. But I was determined to make it work, and I'm glad I did. It's been a great experience, and I wouldn't trade it for anything.

I've learned a lot along the way, and I'm excited to see what the future holds. I'm always looking for new opportunities, and I'm sure there will be plenty of those in the future.

It was like we were all grownups now. We were more serious, I guess. And it was really important to show up on time and do what you were supposed to do. In a grown-up world, you don't get free passes that whole high school thing. Everybody was looking so good as they could look.

I felt ready to learn what the most outstanding students had done with their lives. "A few of them had become doctors, lawyers, and Indian chefs that you thought they would become," he added. "But I found it interesting to see that some of the shortest achievers had the same vulnerability as everybody else. Some were disciplined, others were sterile. Most were average. But maybe they are happier than people who thought they would be perfect."

He had to enlarge the chance to catch up earlier. (Or course, he didn't.) Most people from thousands of miles away. They came from all over. In fact, he didn't expect to see many return. After all, they were not supposed to appear here in the beautiful, peaceful world. And it didn't, sort of, work out that way.

Schulte said, because it feels everything.

Willingly was voted the best-looking guy in his class, and his strong jawline, crinkly eyes, and dimpled smile would probably win a lot of votes today.
Do you suffer from Severe pre-menstrual symptoms?

If you've been diagnosed with manic depression, you can appreciate the importance of developing new treatment options. But so far, no available treatments are totally effective at treating the condition.

Right now, a clinical research study evaluating an investigational medication for manic depression is underway at the Center for Research in San Diego. If you are 18 to 65 years of age with a history of frequent occurring manic depressive outbreaks, we invite you to participate.

The medication and all study-related medical care will be provided at no cost, and you may be compensated for your time and travel. The medical staff conducting this study is courteous, respectful, professional, and, of course, expert at treating manic depressive patients. And your participation will be kept strictly confidential.

By taking part, you will gain insights and help the medical community learn more about manic depression. Your participation may also lead to a new treatment and may provide hope for millions of others living with the disease.

Mother's Day is a special occasion for many, and it is often celebrated with a thoughtful gift or a heartfelt gesture. However, for some, like the woman in the story, it can be a bittersweet occasion. The woman in the story, who had lost her daughter in a tragic accident, had to face the reminder of her loss on Mother's Day. She received a card from a friend who had also lost a child, and the words brought her to tears. She recalled the days when her daughter was still alive, and the memories flooded her mind. She remembered the love and laughter they shared, and the joy they brought to each other's lives. However, the pain of her loss was still raw, and it felt like her heart was breaking all over again.

As she sat alone in her room, she began to think about the past and the present. She recalled the last time she had seen her daughter, and the moment she had to say goodbye. She remembered the feeling of emptiness and the void that had been left behind. She thought about the things she wished she could have done differently, and the choices she had made that led to her daughter's death. She felt guilty and regretful, and the weight of her emotions was almost too much to bear.

But as she sat there, she realized something important. She realized that her daughter was still a part of her life, even though she was no longer physically present. She realized that the love and memories they shared would never fade away, and that she could still find comfort in the knowledge that her daughter would always be with her. She decided to honor her daughter's memory by doing something kind and thoughtful on Mother's Day. She planned to light a candle and spend some quiet time in her garden, surrounded by the beauty of the flowers and the peace of nature. She knew that it wouldn't take away the pain, but it would bring her some comfort and solace.

As she sat there, she felt a sense of peace and closure. She knew that she would never forget her daughter, but she was also able to find some peace in the knowledge that she loved her daughter and would always remember her. And as she looked out at the garden, she knew that she would always be able to find comfort in the beauty of the flowers and the love of her daughter.
Mission Bay had always been a surf school and horrible at traditional team sports.

Big Thoughts for Dullards

England's unknown hero's private life forever tarnished public his image.

Tiglath-Pileser III, a mighty king, would call the British Museum's exhibition "Tiglath-Pileser III: King of the Assyrians" (May 1-26) a must-see. The show features over 100 artifacts, including a large number of inscribed clay tablets and a unique lion-headed statue. The exhibition takes visitors on a journey through the life of the Assyrian king, whose reign lasted from 745 to 727 BC.

On a lighter note, the month of May is also a great time to celebrate the great American tradition of the drive-in movie. Many drive-ins around the country will be screening classic films from the 1950s and 1960s, and some will even be showing modern hits in a retro style. So get ready to hop in your car and enjoy some outdoor cinema under the stars.

Theatre Reviews

"The Man of La Mancha" at the North Shore Music Theatre is a masterpiece of the musical theatre. The production is directed by Jonathan Demme, who also directed the movie "Silence of the Lambs." The show features a talented cast, including the Oscar-winning actor Anthony Hopkins as the role of the Duke of Alba. The music and lyrics are by legendary composer Richard Rodgers, and the book is by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse.

"A Chorus Line" at the Shubert Theatre is a must-see for anyone who loves musical theatre. The show tells the story of a group of hopefuls trying to make it in the big city, and the music is, of course, by the legendary team of工作组: Carole King, Stephen Sondheim, and Andrew Lloyd Webber.

"The Show's Creators Return!"

"The Show's Creators Return!" is a special event at the Shubert Theatre where the creators of the show "Wicked" return to the stage. The creators include the writer, Stephen Schwartz, and the director, Wayne C. Patterson. The event is a great opportunity to see the show's creators in action and to learn more about the making of "Wicked."
Boycotts Aren't Just For Grapes
"Their response was not to rescind the loyalty oath, but to change the bylaws."

There are some kind of cultural deal with the land that has become so much a part of the musical world that it is hard to imagine it being broken. The deal was made to a number of the land owners in the area in the early 1970s, and it has held fast to this day. The deal is a loyalty oath, which states that the owners will not allow any change to the land that would affect its cultural significance.

But there is a new kind of cultural deal being made in the area, one that is being made to some of the larger developers. The developers are offering to build new and improved facilities for the land, but they are also asking for a loyalty oath from the subscribers. The oath is that they will not allow any change to the land, even if it means that they have to tear down old buildings and replace them with new ones.

Throat-Grabber Jazz

You may have discovered you prefer tenor sax to trumpet. And why the hell not?

ast week I wrote about the Kim summers-j p out jazz and expressed myaverse with that, whether its zone and even the array, which is popular in this century, the kind of direction that the jazz is taking, if you are young and looking thing you are the parents of a youngster. I can make some helpful suggestions. I understand them as the fans who have forgotten the roots of the music, the fans who have forgotten the roots of the music.

If you have a particular fascination for an instrument or a style, be sure to try to understand it. I'll probably tell you how to do it. But if you insists, I mean, if you find yourself in the middle of a jazz club, feeling the rhythm and the atmosphere, you just grab your horn and start playing. You'll be in the middle of the action.

For example, if you like the saxophone, then try playing with a saxophone player. If you like the trumpet, then try playing with a trumpet player. If you like the piano, then try playing with a pianist. If you like the drums, then try playing with a drummer. If you like the guitar, then try playing with a guitarist. If you like the bass, then try playing with a bassist. If you like the saxophone, then try playing with a saxophone player. If you like the trumpet, then try playing with a trumpet player. If you like the piano, then try playing with a pianist. If you like the drums, then try playing with a drummer. If you like the guitar, then try playing with a guitarist. If you like the bass, then try playing with a bassist.

Two things the price. Also, there are a variety of choices for jazz, and that is one of them. Some of these choices are limited, like the trumpet, which is only a restriction for the music itself. Some of these choices are unlimited, like the saxophone, which can play anything.

Again, the note and guides to the music are yourself. Be sure to listen to the music and let your ears do the work for you. The music is a wonderful way to communicate with people, and you can learn a lot by listening to the music.

Now, if you're interested in jazz, you may want to consider taking lessons. If you're interested in the music, you may want to consider taking lessons. If you're interested in finding out more about jazz, you may want to consider taking lessons.

The last thing to remember is that jazz is a very personal thing. You should find your own way to hear it and enjoy it.

The Movie of the Week

In the final issue of the year, we present our picks for the Best Picture nominated films of 1999. From the comedy of "Chocolat" to the drama of "American Beauty," these movies will leave you breathless.

Chocolat

A new comedy from the writer of "The Full Monty" that will leave you laughing out loud. In a small town, a woman opens a chocolate shop and scandalizes the residents. With a cast including Michelle Pfeiffer and Juliette Binoche, "Chocolat" is a heartwarming tale of love and good food.

American Beauty

This dramatic film follows a middle-aged man who becomes infatuated with a teenage girl. With a talented cast including Sam Worthington and Annette Bening, "American Beauty" is a thought-provoking exploration of love and life.

Apology

In this heartfelt drama, a woman must come to terms with the death of her husband. With a cast including Sarah Jessica Parker and Daniel Day-Lewis, "Apology" is a moving tale of grief and redemption.

The Yakuza

A new crime thriller set in post-war Japan. With a cast including Toshiro Mifune and Jackie Chan, "The Yakuza" is a pulse-pounding tale of action and intrigue.

The Million Dollar Hotel

A new drama set in a luxury hotel. With a cast including Leonardo DiCaprio and Penelope Cruz, "The Million Dollar Hotel" is a gripping tale of love and loss.

Wine drinkers were not lured up the scale of German wines, but jumped ship for Chardonnay.

A noticeable trend of Chardonnay, which is currently available in 1999, shows that the market is moving away from the traditional Chablis or Pinot Noir styles to a richer, more fruit-forward style. The trend is driven by a growing interest in wine from regions like California and Australia, which produce Chardonnays with more body and fruit character.

The Chardonnay market is characterized by a blend of traditional and modern styles. Traditional Chardonnays tend to be lighter and more acidic, with a focus on preserving the fruit flavors of the grape. Modern Chardonnays, on the other hand, are often richer and more buttery, with a focus on oak influence and oak barrels.

The trend towards richer, more flavorful Chardonnays is likely to continue as consumers become more educated about wine and seek out wines that better match their personal preferences. As a result, producers are likely to continue to experiment with new methods of fermentation and aging to create wines that are more palatable to a wider range of consumers.

I came to this conclusion today: negative numbers are lies. I, for one, refuse to accept any number system that makes additive inverses. I am certain that all mathematical problems of the real world can and should be written without the use of "negative" numbers.

Therefore, from this time forth and hereafter I shall dispense with these evil creations, and they shall be written as non-numbers. Multiplications of numbers greater than those Lesses I shall:

As I listen to reflections on Swanson's childhood, I decide my memoirs should be titled "Confabulations."

By John A. Stoltzfus

Friday night may be the highlight of your week, but if you're too young to go out on your own, it's limbo. For a few years, my mother and I would go to a movie theater in town. This was before the days of blockbusters and multiplexes. We would pick a random movie and go. The theater was called the Swanson Center. It was a small, old-fashioned cinema with a single screen and a small lobby. The movies were always entertaining, and the popcorn was delicious. We would sit in the dark, surrounded by the sounds of the movie, and feel happy and relaxed. I remember one night, the movie was "The Godfather," and it was a real treat to see it in the theater. We left the theater with our eyes wide open and our mouths agape with wonder. It was a night we would never forget.

But then came the day when my mother announced that we would not go to the movies anymore. She said it was too expensive and that we should use the money to buy books instead. I was devastated. I loved going to the movies. I loved the anticipation of seeing the posters in the window, the excitement of choosing a movie, and the thrill of sitting in the dark with my mother, watching the movie unfold. Now, I would have to wait until the movie was released on VHS and watch it at home. I felt like I was losing something important.

I missed going to the movies. I missed the experience of being able to relax and enjoy a good story. But I also knew that my mother was right. We needed to save money, and watching movies at home was a good way to do that. So, I tried to find other ways to entertain myself. I started reading more, and I discovered the joy of books. I also started playing video games, and I found that I enjoyed them just as much as I did movies. I found that I could still have fun without going to the movies.

Still, I loved going to the movies. I loved the experience of watching a movie with my mother. I loved the way it made us feel. It was a time when we could forget about the world around us and just be together. I was grateful for the memories I had, and I knew that I would always cherish them. But I was also grateful for the fact that I could still have fun without going to the movies. I found that I could still have fun in other ways, and I was grateful for that.

I remember one day, my mother brought me to the famous Bay City department store. It was huge and had all the latest styles, and I was so excited. We spent hours looking at the clothes, and I tried on everything. We ended up buying a new dress, and I wore it to the movies that night. It was a night I would never forget. I was so happy, and I felt so grown up.

Ben, Left

I left him for three hours last week. When I picked him up, he didn’t react like a little boy. He was older. It was as if he had grown and matured over the past three months. He looked different, and I realized how much I had missed him. I hugged him tightly and whispered in his ear, "I love you, my little man." We played games and laughed until we couldn’t help but share a joke. He told me stories from his time away, and I listened intently, trying to understand every word.

Until last week, Wednesday. I had an appointment at the pediatrician. I thought about the time last week when he ran to the doctor’s office, tears streaming down his face. I went inside and found him sitting quietly in one of the waiting rooms, his hands clasped together. I knelt down and asked, "What’s wrong, Ben?" He looked up at me with wide eyes, "I can’t breathe properly," he said, "I need to breathe in through my nose."

"That’s not normal," I said. "Let me help you."

I held him tight and gave him a hug. He started to cry softly, "I can’t breathe," he said, "I need to breathe in through my nose."

"I know," I said, "but it’s okay. I’m here to help you." I helped him take deep breaths and exhale slowly. He started to calm down, and I felt a sense of relief wash over me.

We left the hospital feeling a little better, and I promised him that I would be there for him whenever he needed me. He held my hand tightly and said, "Thank you, Mom." I smiled and kissed him on the cheek, "You’re my little hero."
