They Dabble in Stocks, Chow Down for Free

Over the past year, novice investors learned the hard way that the stock market can be a tricky place to make money. Yet judging from their recent financial disclosure filings, San Diego County elected officials — especially county supervisor Dianne Jacob — have been holding their own. But not all of them can tell the same happy story. Jacob can.

One supervisor, Ron Roberts, got into trouble when he couldn’t resist dabbling in the stock of a small company, the Texas software maker called by investors "Neon Systems," the Texas software maker bugged by investors "Neon Systems," the Texas software maker bugged by investors. Roberts, who sold Neon last year, and judging from public records, came out a big loser.

Both Stallings and Roberts have in the past counted themselves as personal and political friends of multimillionaire Moore, and both have suffered career setbacks as a result of their association. Stallings was required to resign from the city council after it became known she had received unreported gifts from the Mooreovers. The financial campaign of Roberts suffered when it was revealed that the county supervisor had taken trips on a jet belonging to Moore.

Long Wait, Big Sign

As of 5:30 PM on Friday, the sidewalk sign at the railroad tracks near the station in downtown San Diego was still there, despite the apparent promise in the sign's message. A train was expected by 5:30 PM, but it was not seen. The sign simply said, "Train," and it was not illuminated. A few people were seen walking by the sign, perhapsreading it as an indication of something important.

Dear Aunt Trudy,

I have an interesting dilemma. I have a close and dear friend who is always the life of the party. We have a weekly tradition of staying in and playing DVD movies. She has a movie night once a week and asks me to come over. We usually watch our favorite series together. However, my friend is always texturing, and I find it difficult to enjoy the movie. I don't want to hurt her feelings by telling her to be more considerate. What do you think I should do?

Sincerely,

Dear Aunt Trudy,

I need some advice about a problem I'm facing at school. I'm a high school student, and my friend is also in my class. We always work together on assignments and projects. However, I've noticed that she is sometimes not very认真 about her work, and I feel like I'm doing more than my fair share. I don't want to upset her, but I'm concerned about my own grades. What should I do?

Sincerely,

September 28: a new role. Roberts directed nine of the leading women of the campaign for the stock, which was to be at its final public offering of $10,000 to $10,000. According to the SEC records, during the time of the reported purchasing of the stock, it was at about $35 a share. Roberts reportedly sold the stock at an approximate $112 a share, representing a considerable profit. The reported purchasing and selling were at $35 a share.

Sales got into trouble after she acquired the stock, through the sale of the stock to a friend, who in turn reported it to the SEC. Roberts was charged with securities fraud and was found guilty on March 3, 1999. She reported the sale for holding periods of one week on March 5, 1999, when the shares were at their high of $34.50, for an estimated profit of $34.50 per 100 shares. She was found guilty of securities fraud and was fined $10,000.

Roberts reportedly sold the stock at an approximate $112 a share, representing a considerable profit. The reported purchasing and selling were at $35 a share.
when the Civil War started in 1861, San Diego was an isolated village of 731 individuals, Hispanic families and a few American settlers. Lived in Old Town, Indians lived in scattered locations. Since San Diego was a great distance from the coming battle and since military command permission was required, California volunteer troops from San Diego did not have much of a presence in the Civil War.

Los Angeles, San Bernardino, El Monte, and Ysleta were hotbeds of Secession rumors.

Samuel Elmer Brown, a San Diego farmer, purchased 160 acres of land in 1861 and planted tobacco. He was the first person in the state to grow tobacco. The next year, he harvested 5000 pounds of tobacco. The tobacco was shipped to California and sold for $5000.

The new building was finished in 1862 and opened on March 21, 1869. It is said that the building was completed in 1860. As a result, Spaulding was appointed to the position of superintendent. The new building was dedicated on May 21, 1869. In 1871, William Heath Davis suffered a fire, and the building was destroyed.

Several officers of the quartermaster, commissary, and pay departments were stationed there. Davis also dedicated a small park, known as Peterson Park, named for Juan Prieto, the Spanish navigator who explored San Diego Bay in 1841.

In 1871, William Heath Davis suffered a fire, and the building was destroyed. Many of the buildings were moved to Old Town, and in May 1877, only 18 civilian buildings and the military barracks remained. In May 1878, troops left the San Diego Mission de Alcala, and Company G, 6th Infantry moved into the New San Diego barracks. Regimental Headquarters Armament commissary occupied the post.

For lack of better quarters, government troops were stationed at the San Diego Mission de Alcala, but they needed a new barracks. Gray and Davis granted land for this purpose at what is now Kettner and Market streets, and an enlisted men's barracks was completed in 1860. As a central depot for the Western Union, the army establishment was well located just a few miles from the command at the mission, and only a few officers of the quartermaster, commissary, and pay departments were stationed there. Davis also dedicated a small park, known as Peterson Park, named for Juan Prieto, the Spanish navigator who explored San Diego Bay in 1841.

In the Civil War, California was at the beginning of the war. When the last gun was fired at Fort Sumter in April 1861, two-thirds of the U.S. Army was stationed in California, and the country was on the brink of war. The state was home to a large number of the Union Army's soldiers, and the local militia provided support to the Union Army. The state was also home to a number of Union soldiers who had fought in the Mexican-American War.

California was a major supplier of supplies to the Union Army, and the state was home to a number of Union Army hospitals. The state was also home to a number of Union Army officers, including General Ulysses S. Grant, who served as a major general in the Union Army.

The state was also home to a number of Union Army regiments, including the 1st California Volunteer Infantry, which was mustered into service on April 14, 1861, and the 2nd California Volunteer Infantry, which was mustered into service on April 15, 1861. The state was also home to a number of Union Army units, including the 1st California Volunteer Infantry, which was mustered into service on April 14, 1861, and the 2nd California Volunteer Infantry, which was mustered into service on April 15, 1861.

Among the most prominent of the veteran's were attorney Levi Chase, Alfred Haines, David Bancroft Huffman, Moses Luce, George Putnam, and I.D. Weeks.

Officers in the Civil War: They fought in no major battles of the war. Rather their military engagements were with small forces of Confederate troops in New Mexico and with Indians throughout the West. One authority has said that the California volunteers in doing their duty preserved peace in the western states and territories, and the flag of rebellion was soon driven beyond the Rio Grande. Men in the California volunteer regiments served in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Utah, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington.

When Company G, 6th California Infantry arrived at New Mexico in December of 1862, Ed born natives of the state naturally were somewhat of a novelty. There were now few civilian buildings besides a big white church with a steeple and a town of 132 men. Executive officer 1st Lieutenant Mathew Lemmon spent all of his Civil War service in San Diego County and remained when the war ended to play a leading role in creating the city we know today.

Some Confederate soldiers are buried in the Confederate State of Birth/Gender of Enlistment.

Who then, were the Civil War veterans of San Diego? All of them migrated here from somewhere else. They had certain characteristics, the most outstanding being that they had served the war. They may have been wounded in battle. They may have been in prison camps. They may have been in camps for the unemployed. They may have been in camps for the unemployed. They worked in the fields, built roads, cleared forests, and nothing.

Out of the 23 men who served in the Civil War, 17 were from San Diego County. Of the 23, 16 served in the Union Army, and 1 in the Confederate Army. The Confederate soldiers are buried in the San Diego National Cemetery.

Conditions in Old Town reminded many of the Civil War,

As a U.S. Army officer departed for the war, California Volunteers moved into the vacant posts. Several units were quartered in Old Town, and the sight of military tents and cannon was a welcome sight to the town's residents. The presence of soldiers brought a sense of security and a feeling of pride to the people of San Diego. The soldiers were seen as protectors of the town, and their presence helped to stave off any potential threats.

"During the four years of the war," Colonel Roler's article states, "close to seventeen thousand joined one or another branch of the service. All were volunteers, as there was no draft. However, very few recruits were obtained from the northern part of the state. The volunteers replaced the regular troops, nearly all of whom were transferred to the eastern theater before the end of 1861."

"California troops, for the most part, remained on the western frontiers," wrote L. F. Ely in "California"

Gold was discovered in California in 1848, leading to the California Gold Rush and a influx of gold seekers from around the world. This rush caused a significant increase in the population of San Diego County, as many people came to the area in search of gold. The presence of soldiers helped to ensure that the town was safe and protected from any potential threats.

The soldiers also played a role in the development of San Diego, as they worked to build roads, clear forests, and establish settlements. Their presence helped to bring about a sense of order and progress to the area, as they worked to create a more stable and prosperous environment.

Overall, the soldiers played a significant role in shaping the history of San Diego County and the state of California. Their presence helped to ensure that the town was safe and protected, and their efforts helped to bring about a sense of order and progress to the area.
It is difficult to determine the proportions of veterans in the city's population, but the following chart from Metropolitan San Diego and Orange Counties, California shows population figures for the city of San Diego from 1860 to 1960.

One wonders why nearly 200 Civil War veterans came to San Diego between 1867 and 1943. As Charles McGraw indicates in his book, The City of San Diego and San Diego County Judge Marcus Lowne, the Civil War Memorial of Honor writers, gave us what they might have been called: accounts, chronicles, and better histories. I learned here that I could not well deliver an address in a day, and I thought that it was not the right time that I would be the one to deliver the speech. The mayor served as the head of the New San Diego Army installations. The county House was in session at the barracks, so the Sheriffs would have lived here rather than in the barracks itself. The Sheriffs were the only inhabitants of New Town, their nearest neighbors being four miles away at Old Town.

Clare Cane writes: "By June 1867, the Sheriffs had purchased 240 acres from the City Trustees, a 100-acre tract, for $50 cents an acre. Sheriffs' Additions (as it is called) Sheriffs' Addition is one of the oldest subdivisions in New San Diego. In 1873, the Sheriffs built a house at 12th and B, and in 1868, they subdivided Sheriffs' Additions, soon recognizing their potential as a site for development.

The Sheriffs donated land for what was later called the Sheriffs' School and helped develop Mount Hope Cemetery. Mrs. Sheriffs gave the cemetery in name. Matthew Sheriffs' Additions were in the Third Addition of Mount Hope Cemetery.

On May 10, 1867, the date of the Sheriffs' Additions in Old Town, Ed Scott writes, "a newspaper named Artes & Horses bought 80 acres of property from the Board of Trustees for $240," and the development of Old Town was established. The Sheriffs' Additions were in New San Diego, but people started calling it New Town in 1868 and the same name still.

When Horton came west, it was for his health. While living in Chicago he had seen a newspaper article about California and it was thought he might have consumption. Elizabeth May, a young woman in The Story of New San Diego by Judge Marcus Lowne (old Town) along with others, started in San Diego for climate and health reasons, even during the last period.

"The Old Horton Property," Ed Scott writes, "covered the southeast of New San Diego and Maldenwood subdivisions from the Front Street of today east to 15th Street, from the bay northward to 15th, the area from A to D, between 6th and 15th... In 1867, San Diego's price landed on over forty thousand acres, available to land developers like a huge miracle in a sunny field. Albin E. Horton received the junior title from the heart of the city by nesting San Diego ahead of the post Civil War land developers."
“Horton, although married several times, had no children but had an abundance of relatives in and near his homestead. His去世 at 69 in 1893. His property passed to his stepson, William Bowers, who continued to run the farm. Bowers was an avid hunter and fisherman and later owned the Champion Hotel in San Diego. He was also a prominent landowner in the area.

On the day of Horton’s death, a large crowd gathered at the homestead to pay their respects. The local newspaper reported that the home was “filled with mourners,” and that the funeral service was “solemn and touching.”

The Horton homestead is now a historic site and is open to the public. It is located on Horton Street in San Diego, and is known for its beautiful gardens and tranquil atmosphere. The property was once the site of a small hotel and store, and was later converted into a museum.

While visiting the site, visitors can learn about the history of the area and explore the grounds, which are filled with trees, flowers, and other natural beauty. The museum includes exhibits on the history of San Diego and the lives of its early settlers.

For more information about the Horton homestead and the Museum, please visit their website or call the museum directly.

in February 1986, and the St. James lost its glittering reputation as the place to be for the prominent and exclusive in landlocked. Dr. Remenderlinle burned out in St. James in May 1989, and sold during the 1990s. Dr. Remenderlinle acquired the high and free businesses in the 1880s, as did many other San Diegans. Unlike Alonzo Horton, Uplineses and William H. Bailey, John L. Palmer, the last owner of the St. James, was able to survive despite enormous financial difficulties because he never relinquished his true vocation, his medical practice.

Always on the horizon across the bay from New York was called "the pinnacles," later called Coronados. In Coronados, the Federal Grant, California Honor Court and Bay Boulevard, the Fearless Women's College and the Fearless Women's College when they married their husbands. The property was described as "a wiggling land" by Governor Piers Piers on May 13, 1860.

"The house of the right hand in California was formed by the coming of the railroad. The easy and free transportation attracted the unskilled, some merchants, and some merchants, and a variety of merchants and tradesmen. Their arrival sparked an economic boom, and the boom in construction of goods and supplies, and the boom in unemployment construction.

Hampton, L. Story, New London, Massachusetts, in 1861 for Chicago. There he opened a music store, served in the Union Army during the Civil War, and after the war returned to Kansas. By 1850 he had spent half a dozen summers and winters in San Diego... Here he met Ella J. Baldwin, a native of Tennessee, and married in January 1847.

William H. Baldwin, who prior to the Civil War lived in Illinois and was a friend of Abraham Lincoln, became assistant editor of the San Diego Union in 1892.

on November 19, 1883, Baldwin, Story, and their partners went on to develop Coronado. They hired Civil War veteran W.H. Hobbs and as a general agent for the company, Hobbs, a native of Vermont, had served in the same Vermont regiment as Story. Carlos and Brandes write, "Hobbs came to San Diego at Story's urging and was sometimes referred to as the 'Father of the Boom,' because of the extraordinary skills he showed in developing Southern California to the rest of the nation."

November 13, 1886, was set as the date for the formal opening of Coronado land, and Civil War veterans Robert J. Preston of the Pacific Land and Railroad was put in charge of the event. "Preston did his job well, setting the tone to take a trip and examine the property," reads the story. "Baldwin began a $900,000 development, the first of the Coronado estates, near the site of the proposed hotel. Before the fire he had sold the land for $150,000, a total of $110,000.

Hobbs was involved not only with the Hotel del Coronado, but also with a Soldiers' Home in San Diego. His advertising was a "pumpkin seeded Soldiers' Home" in a description. The image is "National Government established the National Government of the Republic in August 1867 that a Soldiers' Home be built in the "Coronado" area of San Diego. The Soldiers Living and Work Company, which called Coronado, stated that the proposal, later made by Hobbs and the Juniper Land and Water Company, was to set apart 150 acres of their best land, beautifully situated in the valley of the San Diego river and to develop a town on the land for the use of the soldiers. The city was to be 250 by 400 feet, with 90 feet streets and 20 feet alleys, to lay out in the center about 5 acres in the form of a square, for the grounds of the Soldiers' Home, and 20 acres of rich bottom land for gardens.

"The town was to be built and one of the first projects was to build the post office, together with the two piers of land mentioned above, just cut in the hands of three men... and used by them to build a house for one of the soldiers belonging to the Grand Army of the Republic. The United States government will establish a number of Soldiers' Homes, but this one was proposed as a private institution."

In October 1887, the townsite and grounds were laid out. Over 400 lots were sold, a number of houses were built and permanently occupied by families, a post office was established, a store opened, a district school was located within a mile, and many improvements were made. In June the company commenced issuing one wing of the proposed Soldiers' Home, which was to be finished during September. This was planned to be a semi-blowing, conterminously arranged and costing about $500,000. It would be added to time to time as sufficient funds were collected.

The Soldiers' Home was located just south of the present site of Kaiser Hospital on 9th Avenue.

In January 1924, the article in the Allied Evening Express, Sophia Isadora Jackson writes "Having been born in Granville, I have seen many changes. In 1861, plans for a town were laid by the (junipers) Land and Water Company. Plans for a Soldiers' Home were in the making. The Great Army of the Republic could not have chosen a more beautiful spot at this time for the erection of its first Soldiers' Home, a place where old soldiers passed the closing days of their lives amid such historic surroundings as the first settlement and Mission in California. The site of the Soldiers' Home was north of the school and is now called Grant Circle. The home housed 500 veterans. I can remember as a small child watching a soldier on guard with his gun to his shoulder, walking back and forth past the small station building and entrance to the grounds."

Roy Wilson takes up the story on April 18, 1994, article in the negro News "Granville got started, but the great place of the Junipers Land and Water Company. The great 'beau' of 1861 caused Granville and many other communities to lose money as time passed, and land values dropped due to the minimalism, speculation... In a 1937 biographical sketch of Col. Hobbs, the San Diego Evening Tribune stated, 'Granville was one of his latest ventures in San Diego County housing and was not successful.' Unlucky John in San Diego in February 1883. His legacy remains, however. The next time you're on Richmond, Glendale, or Vanity Vision, how soon do you want to be there. You'll find yourself on Hobbs Street.

Other Civil War veterans also developed and built San Diego. As the years went by, George H. Hazard erected one of the first brick business blocks at the corner of Fifth and Market Street and he erected buildings on other blocks downtown. George H. Crippen developed Point Loma William H. Hobbs formed the Tijuana River Valley, William Oviatt built the first house in Ramona and Ovidi Steenthof settled in the El Cajon valley. Attorney John Chase settled the title and founded Wilson, Jr. of El Cajon Ranches and worked in litigation involving women's ranches.

All of these men had the city, others helped to make what we'd seen. Each was the case with Civil War veteran John L. Palmer. As his grandfather's children, Bertha Palmer Wolders, starts in her book, follow the Light. The Palmer family and the Savvy Theater. Then John L. P...

I Slapped Her and She Liked It

Wirecutter Part Side

I was standing by a railing overlooking the city from the top floor of the hotel where we were staying. The view was stunning, but I was in no mood to enjoy it. I was thinking about my relationship with my partner. Our relationship had been rocky for a while now, and I had finally reached my limit. I grabbed her arm and pulled her towards me. She looked surprised, and I could see the fear in her eyes. I told her that I was tired of the constant arguments and that I needed some space. She tried to protest, but I wouldn't let her go.

The sculptures I had noticed last night only were all nude or representations of Pan and Dionysus. The statues depicted satyrs—beings with animal heads and tails, half-human, half-animal. A satyr was holding a goat in one hand and a flute in the other. The goat seemed to be enjoying the music as it kicked its back legs in the air.

I turned away and walked towards the balcony door. I opened it and stepped outside. The air was cool and fresh, and I took a deep breath. I looked down at the city below me. The lights were twinkling in the distance, and I could see the silhouettes of buildings and trees. I felt a sense of peace wash over me. I closed my eyes and took another deep breath. When I opened them again, my partner was standing behind me. She looked at me with tears in her eyes.

"I'm sorry," she said. "I didn't mean to upset you. I just needed a little space."

I wrapped my arms around her and pulled her close to me. "I'm sorry, too," I said. "I shouldn't have acted this way."

We stood there for a while, just holding each other. Then I pulled her into a kiss. It was long and passionate, and when we separated, she looked up at me with a smile on her face.

"Thank you," she said. "I love you."

I smiled back at her. "I love you, too."

just precipitate a hangover
I was on my way out.
I walked downtown and found a small restaurant that served salad and chicken with a beer. I ordered it in,
but despite the salad, I still felt diluted. I munched on the salad, but it was boring. I decided to

Rescuing Dowland

Anthony Royley's Consort of Musicks makes a case for Dowland's being an exceedingly boring composer.

The songs of the English Renaissance composer John Dowland constitute one of the great treasures in the music of the time. Nevertheless, fewer fewer people are familiar with them, and Dowland himself is now remembered more for his love life and his legendarily bad temper.

The Consort of Musicks is a group that specializes in the music of the Renaissance and Baroque periods. Their mission is to bring this music to a broader audience.

The Consort of Musicks is currently touring with a production called "Rescuing Dowland," which seeks to correct the common misconception that Dowland's music is dull and uninspiring. The ensemble is taking this opportunity to perform a variety of Dowland's songs, showcasing his emotional depth and technical skill.

The performances are taking place in various venues around the country, including universities, concert halls, and community centers. The Consort of Musicks is joined by guest artists and ensembles, adding to the richness and diversity of the program.

If you're interested in learning more about Dowland's music and the work of the Consort of Musicks, you can visit their website at consortofmusicks.org. They also have a Facebook page where they post updates and event information.

So why not take the opportunity to hear some of Dowland's music and see if it's as boring as people think? You might be surprised!

Dinner With Friends

Find 2 weeks! Must close May 6! Old Globe Theatre
Special performances for the hearing impaired Apr 15th-16th

The playwright also takes the dead so much for granted. In the case of "Fanny and Honest Friends, "death" is not just a metaphorical idea. It's a living, breathing reality. The characters are dealing with the challenges of aging, death, and the end of life in a way that is both honest and poignant. It's a thought-provoking play that will leave you feeling moved and inspired.

"Kristin Chenoweth. Remember the name."

was actually just that band," says Beno. "I remember, as an 11-year-old, hearing the singles, and I thought, 'This is the band! This is the band!'"

"I had the records," says Beno. "I think it was around '94 or '95, and I started buying albums, and I'd bring them to school and show them to my friends. They'd be like, 'Wow, this is the best band ever!'"

"I remember seeing them live in San Diego," says Beno. "I was 14 years old, and I was blown away. It was the first time I saw a band perform live, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember buying their debut album, 'Teenage Riot,'" says Beno. "I was 15 years old, and I was so excited. I listened to it for the first time, and I was like, 'Wow, this is great!'"

"I remember buying their second album, 'The Details,'" says Beno. "I was 16 years old, and I was so excited. I listened to it for the first time, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember seeing them live in San Diego," says Beno. "I was 17 years old, and I was blown away. It was the first time I saw a band perform live, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember buying their third album, 'The Good Times,'" says Beno. "I was 18 years old, and I was so excited. I listened to it for the first time, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember seeing them live in San Diego," says Beno. "I was 19 years old, and I was blown away. It was the first time I saw a band perform live, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember buying their fourth album, 'The Greatest Hits,'" says Beno. "I was 20 years old, and I was so excited. I listened to it for the first time, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"

"I remember seeing them live in San Diego," says Beno. "I was 21 years old, and I was blown away. It was the first time I saw a band perform live, and I was like, 'Wow, this is incredible!'"
Female Trombonist Drives Men Crazy

"I didn't want to be outdone by a monkey."

'She was the only woman in our band and most of the other students were not so welcoming. One day I was practicing and a guy walked over and introduced himself. He said, "Hey, I'm Tommy, and I'm the new trombonist." I thought it was funny because I was the only female trombonist in the band. I thought he was kidding, but he wasn't.

"I noticed a lot of the men would stare at me when I was playing. It was like they were trying to outshine me. I didn't want to be outdone by a monkey."
Racial Ventriloquism

The music business is a treacherous arena, among the nastiest, I should think.

In a jazzy, matter-of-fact tone, the author describes the treacherous nature of the music business, likening it to a treacherous arena, among the nastiest. The author notes the complexity and danger of the music industry, where artists must navigate a difficult landscape to succeed.

The author mentions specific examples of artists who have faced challenges in the music business, without specifying any names or detailed incidents. This sentence does not contain any factual information or specific data that can be verified.

The paragraph concludes with a statement that the music business is a treacherous arena, among the nastiest, which emphasizes the author's perspective on the challenges artists face in the industry.

NEW YORKER

[Image]

The growing rift in various high-temperature art and an older trend of gently craftily positioned imagery—how TV can be adequately remediated in, or actually vived in, the night when Moving Image Art is advertised in the costume and restaurants directories, that evening tech does quite feel like a human thread. Find out if that’s right or if you’re missing out on the night when Moving Image Art is advertised in the costume and restaurants directories, that evening tech does quite feel like a human thread.

Holiday Video: Video as a medium.

Now that we’re at it, let’s face it: television is not dead. The medium you have come to feel is a human thread in the night when Moving Image Art is advertised in the costume and restaurants directories, that evening tech does quite feel like a human thread.

There’s a huge aquarium with fish looking at you, full of confidence they ain’t here to be somebody’s lunch.

The tank was designed to look like the real thing. The water is real, the fish are real, even the sunlight that penetrates the glass is real. The only thing that isn’t real is the food. The fish are fed a special diet that includes algae and other plant-based materials. This helps to keep them healthy and vibrant, and it also mimics their natural diet in the wild.

The tank is located in a public aquarium, and it is one of the most popular exhibits in the facility. Visitors are encouraged to learn about the importance of preserving our oceans and the role that we all play in protecting them.

The aquarium staff is on hand to answer any questions that visitors may have, and they are always happy to share their knowledge about the fascinating world of fish and marine life.

The Pupett Lady,” Marie Hitchcock, 1924.

She intended to become a nun, “But I never did take my final vows,” she told a reporter in 1981. “In this order [Sisters of the Good Shepherd], a prime requirement was good health, the work being so very hard, but I was always getting sick.” Hitchcock had always loved puppets. She went on to present over 40 years’ worth of shows in Balboa Park. At some point, when boosters of the Balboa Park Puppet Theater waned, “She fought tooth and nail to keep it going,” said niece Pat Fagman in Hitchcock’s 1994 obit. So it was that Balboa Park’s Marie Hitchcock Puppet Theater came into existence. —by Robert Hirsch

Patrick thought it smelled like "a nutty mushroom." Later that week, while on a Charlie horse through downtown, Patrick stopped at a local coffee shop. She was saying something like "...the scent of the aroma..." when a man in a trench coat with a white car stepped in. He took a seat at the bar and ordered a latte. Patrick thought it was strange, but she continued her conversation. When the man left, she noticed a strange odor in the air, like something she had smelled before. She mentioned it to her friend, but she dismissed it as just her imagination. However, the next day, while walking to work, she noticed a similar odor on the street. She decided to do some research and found out that the smell was caused by a mushroom growing on the side of the street. She called the city and they came to remove it.

The Easter Bunny Leaves a Pig

BY ANNE ALBRIGHT

It wasn’t bad much back with you. A couple days ago, we took our children (Rebecca, Angela, and Steve) to the zoo. We love it when the weather is good, and you can see animals. The trip was very nice. There were many different kinds of animals. They were all amazing. My favorite was the giraffe. I love giraffes. We had a great time. The kids enjoyed it too. I hope we can go back again soon. It was a very special day.
