Rock Rules

It was well written, to the It was well written, to the point, and a fun read. I would like to clarify the three elements that collec-tively determine the overall cut-grade of a diamond. The American Gem Society, founded by Robert Shipley of GIA fame, has for many years advocated a numerical cut advocated a numerical cut grading system. The AGS diamond-grading facility offers a full diamond certi-ficate which covers the same information as a GIA certificate with the very important addition of a cut grade. It is important to note that the diameter of a diamond is only an indicator and not an assurance that the diamond is cut to ideal proportions. is cut to ideal proportions. Critical information in determining the proportion grade of a diamond include paviof a diamond include payl-lion depth, crown angle, table size, girdle thickness, and the size of the culet. Assuming that all of these elements fall within the range which is considered ideal, one still has to grade out the symmetry of the diamonds as well as the the diamonds as well as the polish grade. The three ele-ments (proportion, polish, and symmetry) collectively determine the cut. Ours is a wonderful in-dustry, and I thank you for embracing it.

I read with interest the story of Dale Raver, his friend, and the City of Escondido ("City Lights," June 7). In all actual-ity, it was humorous! I detest the snootiness that any "law have written this ticket. have written this ticket." Yeah, right! Give anyone a pen and a ream of triplicate tickets and they will be occupied for days! I wish Mr. Raver all the best and would like to see a follow-up story in a future edition of the Reader.

Regarding the story in your "City Lights" section, June 7. I agree wholeheartedly with Dale Raver concerning the ambiguity of the front-license-plate laws. I have dealt with warnings concerning this law on more than one occasion.

Shaky-kneed Lifeguards Slam Former Boss

By Justin Wolff

When B. Chris Brewster announced in late April that he was stepping down as chief of San Diego's Lifeguard Service on July 31, he believed that the nadir of his 13-year tenure was behind him. For example, he didn't seem concerned about his legacy when he told the Union-Tribune that "the timing and the terms" of the resignation are "100 percent based on my decision and no one else's. No one has asked me to leave.

Brewster, 45, said he was resigning because he's financially secure and wants to bring his lifesaving expertise to developing countries. Brewster ac-knowledged that many of his employees would be happy to see him go ("It's time for a genthe Union-Tribune, and "I broke a lot of eggs - but man, what an omelet"), but he ex-before they moved to the Far Valley Road property. "I met sions," he recalls, "He came by once and asked my wife and me if we minded if he walked around in the buff, We said we didn't mind as long as he stayed out of our Strassle admits that outdoor nudity goes on at God Unlimited but insists it's not part of their religion and that they are not a nudist camp. "It's just that the sun is there," he says. "We enjoy nature, we like the sunshine, and some of us like to go out and sunbathe naked and even walk around naked. It has nothing to do with the inner divine We feel it's natural, and the body should be something sacred and beautiful, and we shouldn't feel any part of it is bad in any way. Nobody has to go naked here. Some do. some don't. Nobody is of fended, and it's not misinter preted for anything else like free sex or anything like that. But we recognize that in American culture, things are a little different. That's the reason for the fence."

Which brings up another bit of meal from the Campo rumor mill. In the Moun tain Empire, fences are discouraged because they detract from the wide-open feel of the area and prevent the free movement of wildlife. So when the cedar fence was being built across the God Unlimited land. close neighbors and other Campo people worried that the whole 90 acres would be fenced off. Strassle says they shouldn't worry. Only the side that borders neighbors will be fenced "as a courtesy to them," Strassle says. The rest of the campus adjoins Bureau of Land Management land.

Along with neighborhood visits, God Unlimited is planning a neighborhood party around its swimming pool in an effort to improve relations with the Campo community And Strassle invites anyone from the community to visit the God Unlimited campus anytime. "I believe it's good for us to get to know our neighbors," Strassle says, "and for them to get to know us to realize that we are normal people who enjoy nature and like to take time to find the inner self" =

Whether the issue was discipline, qual ifications, or promotion, the main theme was arbitrariness. Other commissioners heard from people anonymously in closed-door sessions, and they seemed to corroborate the public complaints. It seems that the questions raised in the 1998 report have yet to be ad dressed and that's very frus trating." Eaton added, "I think it's fair to say that most of the charges were directed at Chie Brewster and certain subordi nates who are his operatives. From the moment Brew-

I spoke with several lifeguards and ex-lifeguards who were willing to characterize his legacy. Joe Avolos, who has been a lifeguard for 24 years and who testified at the Civil Service Commission hearing. said, "The amount of animos ity that this man has is astounding. His style of management is intimidation; that's why so many good people have left. Now we're becoming a segregated service very male and very white. La Jolla's Bill Owen, who was a supervisor with the lifeguard service before resigning in 1988, echoed Mico's senti ments. "His is not a positive legacy," he said. "The service lost about 90 percent of its permanent management and

You don't have to love Big Tobacco to be impressed with its marketing skills. Consider its current $100,000,000 advertising campaign:

You can hardly turn on the tube without running into one of those precious little novellas about how the Smokefolk help bring food to the hungry, water to the thirsty, sanctuary to the abused and comfort to the afflicted.

It's fascinating in a spooky sort of way to watch them try to reinvent themselves as our friendly, concerned, deep-pocketed neighbors. And all they ask in return is that we simply forget what they'v done and ignore what they're doing.

And, they haven't changed what is arguably the most powerful introductory offer ever created:

Boys and girls, don't smoke. Not yet. Smoking is for big people exciting, popular, powerful grownups. It's not for you. Not yet."

No one working in the health community thinks the game is close to over. The tobacco industry, crocodile

It's called the truth.

edited a number of articles on water safety and has lectured all over the world on the subject. Ed Harris, president of the San Diego Association of Lifeguards, has spoken in support of Brewster in recent weeks, telling the Beach & Bay "The department wouldn't be anywhere near where it is today if it wasn't for his ability and his vision."

I spoke with Chief Brewster on May 24 and asked him about the allegations made by his lifeguards. "Substantiated complaints are one thing," he said. "Unsubstantiated complaints need to be looked at with a wary eye." Brewster is quick to mention those things that he has brought to the service. He points to higher pay for lifeguards, their "height ened professionalism," and the increased specialization of the service, which, because of the terrain here, must make water, cliff, river, and scuba rescues. "We have become recognized internationally as a model lifeguard agency, and that's something that we can all be proud of," he said, "It's been a true renaissance. I think this will be remembered as a golden era in San Diego lifeaving history."

But Brewster acknowledges that the job has not always been easy or pleasant. One of the things that has been a continual frustration has been trying to further diversify the ethnic makeup of the lifeguard service," he said. "That has been an extraordinarily tough nut to crack. I really believe in the value of a diverse workforce, but the fact is that the diversity of lifesaving forces throughout California uffers from the same impediment - namely, you have to be a strong swim lifeguard, and strong swimming skills are not universal among the population." He added, "I'll be happies to leave behind the personne issues that are an inevitable part of the job. Whenever high tandards are set in public emslovment, there are detractors within the system who believe that in the end they're going to be paid the same whether they do a great job or an okay iob. My view is that those who pay our salaries deserve the highest levels of service and

Responding to the recent Civil Service Commission hearing, Brewster said, "The problem with allegations of that — allegations. It's unadiudicated talk that seems never to be substantiated, and so in my view it amounts to gossip. I believe that the Civil Service ues to be manipulated with regard to lifeguard matters by a number of people with a variety of agendas. At the same time however. I think the commission has been a rather compliant participant in a process that has at times smacked of McCarthyism to me anyway. It's three hours of people venting about things that aren't working in their lives. I think it makes the process appear rather disingenuous. Some people chafe at be ing made accountable for their actions and would like to imagine that it is in and of itself an intimidating process. I think making folks account able for meeting expectations is critical to ensuring ethical and proper behavior."

Though it would seem that the rift between Brewster and some of his employees no longer matters because he's resigning, many view this as a crucial moment for the Lifeguard Service. Lance Mendoza told the Civil Service Commission, "I hope in choosing our new chief we don't choose any of our current supervisors; they have been poisoned." Fire Chief Robert Osby agreed. "In looking for a new chief, we ought to ask questions that are patterned on the recommendations of this commission," he said, "We need a lifeguard chief who understands that these are human beings, not robots, and they need to be treated accordingly. And that has not been the case."

But Brewster believes the new chief will likely come from his department, "There are not that many lifeguard forces in the country," he told me, "that are comparable in size and responsibility. You can only choose from Florida, Hawaii, and California, and within California you have to narrow it down to Southern California. So now you've got L.A. County

I know I speak for all of us when I send out a big THANK YOU to the Star for telling is about Towa's nevert stare move. In truth us about Tonya's newest career move. In truth, I've missed the perky lass. I should have checked in on her long ago.

We'll begin at the moment of creation. We'll begin at the moment of creation, 1994. Detroit, Michigan, Nancy Kerrigan, 24, had been practicing at a local arena for the U.S. Figure Skating Championships. She was favored to win until a stranger smashed her right knee with a metal rod. The injury caused her to withdraw from competition, a competition that was won by Tonya Harding, 23. Within two weeks, Harding's then-husband, Jeff Gillooly, and three associates were arrested for the attack.

Harding denied her husband's accusations and copped a plea-bargain, which provided for copped a plea-bargain, which provided for three years' supervised probation and as 100,000 fine. She was ordered to pay $50,000 to a Spe-cial Olympics fund, $10,000 in court'costs, and do 500 hours of community service work. Bot-tom line: she walked. Okay, the hard part's over, now comes payday. There is only one move to remember on the freak circuit. Cash in big and eash in imme-diated by the community service.

Harding's first move showed an under-standing of freak-tour dynamics, indeed, it was a pro move, raking in a reported $300,000 from Inside Edition for one lousy interview. Subtract court fines, lawyers, taxes, and she's about even with the world. But the decks are cleared. Tonya is packed and pacing the railroad station, impa-tient to based the greaty train tient to board her gravy train.

Let's move on to her music period. Hard-

Harding sells her Portland house and Olympic skating outfit to satify an overdue tax bill. Harding tells police that a "bushy-hared man" forced her at knifepoint to drive out to the country. She says she escaped by driving into a tree and running away. Nobody believes her. Harding's pickup truck is repossessed. More recently, the Charleston RiverDogs, and olina fame, celebrated Tonya Harding Bat Night.

At the close of Life Church's 150-minute-long service, Pastor Allen Higgins invited everyone to come before the altar for a blessing in the Holy Spirit, Men and women, young and old, marched forward. They stood there, eyes closed, hands outstretched Pastor outstretched. Pastor Higgins made his way down the line, clamping his palm on one fore-head after another. Some people jumped as if jolted by electricity. Oth-ers swooned backward into the waiting arms of ushers who then lowered their bodies to the floor.

In the liturgical churches, the service culminates in Holy Communion, a ritual grounded in Easter. In Pentecostal churches, the service culminates in moments of extreme emotion, even catharsis — moments recall ing not so much Calvary as Pentecost. At the end of Life Church's stheend of Life Church's service, I wondered if this was, in part, why Pentecostal services last so long. Holy Commu-nion requires confession, contrition, and absolution. Being Slain in the Spirit requires an emotional state that takes onsiderable effort to achieve.

Life Church's service began with a full 60 minutes of singing. These were new, up-tempo, rock-inspired hymns. They were backed up by planist, bassis, guitarist, drammer, and saxophone player. The lyrics, as usual, were projected across a big blue screen. The byrics, as usual, were the simple and repetitive. While Life Church's members and repetitive. While Life Church's mem-simple and repetitive. While Life Church's mem-bers sang, they became so overcome with joy they jumped up and down. A few sat in their seats, rocking back and forth, sobbing. The affects of Pentecostalism, and of the charismatic movement, are now so pervasive that it's not uncommon to see even Missouri Synod Lutherans waving their arms while they pray. Life Lutheraus waving their arms while they pray. Life Church at first seems so generic that you have to listen hard to Pastor Higgins to discern where he stands. He gives you clues. Nothing explicit. In his sermon on "Hope," he spoke of the "Cor-porate Church" and "Corporate Christ" and "Five-Fold Ministries" and the "Restoration." Since the mid-20th Century, the Pentecostal world has split into factions. The Assembly of God is the best-known example of "classic Pen-tecostalism." Other churches fall into the "neo-Pentecostal" camp. They embrace a number of theologies that drive evangelicals and classic Pentecostals round the twist. The Restoration Penteosatals round the twist. The Restoration of which Pastor Higgins spoke, for instance, has nothing to do with the return of Charles II to the British throne in 1688, Pastor Higgins was instead invoking one of the tenests of Kingdom Thesdogs, with shash that some day soon superadopen and the standard of the standa

s and beliefs, would have a difficult time getting the gist of Pastor Hig-gins's sermon. For 45 minutes he spoke about "hope," stating and restating that we were destined for "an aware-ness of God, a realm of power" we couldn't yet imagine. That this "realm of power" meant a theocratic dictator-ship was something Pas-tor Higgins failed to mention

This is my discomfort with "nonde-nominational" churches, the "fellowship" and the the "fellowship" and the "community" churches. They will tell you they eschew definition because Americans are no longer interested in "doctrine," or "religiosity," or "de-nominations." But all these churches push a these churches push a specific theology. I'm not saying that Pastor Higgins is a heretic or doesn't love God. After his service he told me he was from New Zealand from a norm. Zealand, from a nonre ligious family. When Pastor Higgins was a 30-year-old contractor, with "everything in the world going for him," a man witnessed to him, saying that "he who believes in Jesus will not perish from the Earth, but have everlasting life." The man who introduced Pastor Higgins to this famous equation was a Bap-tist. Pastor Higgins admits that for a while he, too, was Baptist. Until he received the Baptism in the Holy Spirit in the Holy Spirit.

It took a good 20 minutes of speaking with Pastor Higgins before he used the phrase "Latter Rain Movement," which told me, in an explicit way, about the neo-Penteostal movement to which he ascribed.

Thave no particular theological axe to grind. But more and more I encounter "nondenomi-time" and more I encounter "nondenominational" churches that are, in the end, not so "nondenominational." I have to-wonder about the denominational." I have to wonder about the newcomers who walk through their doors. I have to wonder about their church members. I also have to wonder why these churches don't put their innovative theologies up front, in their programs, in pamphlets near their front doors. Why?

Dear Aunt Trudy,

After years of struggling with depression, I found a great psychotherapist and started seeing her twice a week. She has helped me enormously, and I'm deeply grateful. I've been working with her for about three years now. Brilliant, compassionate. creative, generous, I can't say enough about how much she's done for me, how working with her has enabled me to improve my life. Here's my problem. A couple of months ago, it seemed that my psychotherapist was getting very drowsy toward the end of our session. Her head dropped a few times, and then quickly jerked up again, and her eyes seemed heavy. You must be imagining this, I told myself. Since then, it's happened a few more times. There's no doubt in my mind: I have to face the fact that my wonderful therapist is nodding off during some of our sessions. She's been so terrific I feel like a heel asking what's up with the near snoozes, but I also feel strange about not mentio ing this since it's so obvious. I'm terrified that if I bring this up she'll take offense, get mad, and maybe drop me as a client. I don't want to be an ingrate. But it's also really bothering me. What should I do?

PERPLEXED IN POWA

Dear Perplexed You've had the courage to deal with your depression. Walking into that lion's den is no small accomplishment. Surely you have the necessary nerve to bring up these untimely skirmishes with the sandman. Let's be clear: you're not accusing your therapist of any nes, and you're not being rude. You're merely stating a fact; it seems that she's been falling asleep lately. If positions were reversed wouldn't you want the person sitting in the other chair (or lying on the expensive leather couch) to be honest with you? Isn't that part of the whole point of the therapeutic relationship: to be real with each other? Tell her sweetly, but tell her. I don't mean to sound like a fortune cookie, but some unanticipated good may come of your speaking up.

Dear Aunt Trudy,

I don't really like nature. In fact, it makes me nervous. I'm always scared I'm going to get bitten by something, get lost, be freezing cold or boiling hot, brush up against some poisonous plant and spend the next several weeks covered in calamine lotion, popping cortisone pills, and scratching myself wildly. I just don't see what the big nature hype is about. Give me some beautiful architecture, a great café, a decent seat at the movies, and I'm happy. This didn't really matter until recently, but now I'm married to a man who loves to commune with trees, water, dirt. Do I have to partake? DOWNTOWN CITY CHICK

Or so my mother was constantly telling me when I was a tyke, back when all I wanted to do was stay inside and read. Could you tolerate driving through nature in a car? There are countless car tours of gorgeous landor longer, during which you could glass would protect you from all that untamed chaos. Your beloved could stop periodically, get out, stretch his legs, explore a bit, and you could sit in the car, or if you're feeling brave sit on the hood and read Vogue or Film Comment till he returned Obviously you don't want to do something as extreme as camping or backpacking, but there are more highly controlled nature situations you might actually enjoy. Getting riendly with a travel agent who could make recommendations after you explain the problem in detail might help. Some national parks have fancy hotels in them, which could suit you as their nietic cabins would not. Also, there are nature resorts, wildlife refuges, etc., which are so groomed and safe that you might actually like them a little, once you got used to them, and which you would certainly prefer to anything sans amenities or more remote. was working in my herb garden last weekend when my neighbor, pulling weeds on his side of the fence, retched.

"My God," he said. "What are you doing over there? What is that smell?"

"I'm just trimming an herb," I said. "It's getting too bushy.'
"My God."

Epazote

I was hacking away at Chenopodium ambrosioides, epazote, an herb used in Mexcan cooking. Because my soil is poor, and because I descend from pessimists. Lalways plant two or three of the same herb. In a little over a month, my three small epazote plants have grown two and a half-feet tall. Their long tapered leaves throw shade on the surrounding basils and oreganos and thymes. My chopping and trimming released a cloud of epazote odor that drifted over the sevensort tence that separates me from my neighbor.

Crushed epizzote smells a little like gasopungent and vaguely sulfurous. ("An

For centuries, people in China, Turkey, Mexico, Brazil, and a dozen other countries have used Chenopodium ambrosioides to purge worms from their systems. (One of the plant's common English names is wormseed. The French call it "worm herb" or "worm leaves.") Until antiparasite drugs became available in the 1940s, many Americans recognized epazote's smell. Baltimore was America's Chenopodium ambrosioides capital, using the plant to produce thousands of gallons of Baltimore Oil, a house-

Epazote has famous cousins. Spinach. beets, and Swiss chard are Chenopodiaceae. As is quinos (kween-wah) the Inca Empires "Mother Grain." The Inca used it to thicken stews, make bread and a sweet gruel. Upon their arrival, even the Spaniards began adding quinoa leaves to soup, finding them "tasty and heathful." While inseparable from Mexico's, the plant has been here for a long time. The earliest official local reference I've found is recorded in a "comive plant distribution database" managed by UC Berkeley. On December 6, 1920, someone named M.F. Spencer spied Chenopodium ambrosioides growing in "a canyon at an approximate elevation of 150 feet above sea level." (On August 10, 1928, Carl V. Meyer spotted it locally "along a drainage ditch in a cultivated field." On September 7, 1948 Malcolm A Nobs and S Galen Smith found it in "Escondido, about five miles south of Lake Hodges.") When I finish cutting back my epazote,

I can't get the smell off my hands. It reminds me of a friend who, while living in rural Mexico, once purged herself of hookworm by every day eating an epazote-and-papaya-seed paste. Ascaridol is deep in my skin. If I have worms in my gut, they must be, I think, ner-vous. What is he up to with that stuff? I take a handful of leaves to the kitchen and add them to a pot of beans.

There's no substitute for epazote. You can make Mexican food without it. The result is pleasant but unmemorable. Without epazote, Mexican food becomes generic, just another nice way of preparing proteins, carbohydrates, and fats. Consider the difference between a peck on the cheek and a long.

If the degree of a manifesto's passion and ardor were any test, the Prague Manifesto would be an important one: "Any system of communication which confers lifelong privileges on some while requiring others to devote years of effort to achieving a lesser degree of competence is fundamentally antidemocratic," it asserts. But grand as it sounds, the manifesto is neither a pronouncement written by firstgeneration communists during the Revolutions of 1848, nor a decree drafted by besieged university students while the imperial, third-generation communists rolled their tanks along the Vlatava River in 1968. In truth, the Prague Manifesto has probably had zero influence on radical thinking (in this world, anyway), its primary purpose being to promote Esperanto, the "planned" (and failed) language that was supposed to save us from xenophobia: "The child who learns Esperanto learns about a world without borders, where every country is home." Instead, Esperanto — which means "a person who is hoping" — has become a laughing-stock, the stand-in for anything that's perceived as pie-in-the-sky - like the Euro dollar or world peace. The language, though, has made a mark on other worlds. Did you know that the original 1960s Star Trek television series was supposed to be filmed in Esperanto? For a moment the series' producers were impressed by the success of Incubus, the 1965 film (shot in Esperanto) starring William Shatner as a wounded soldier who falls for a blonde succubus

Dr. Ludwig Zamenhof invented Esperanto in 1887. Historians have assigned to the Polish doctor many skills; he's been described as a Wunderkind, a polyglot, a philologist, and an oculist, a fancy-pants word for what he really was — an eye doctor. Zamenhof, who grew up in a soci ety that spoke the world's most difficult lan-- Russian, German, and several Eastern European tongues — believed a common lan-guage might overcome the parochialism and ethnic strife that plagued his region. He began work on his planned language, which he would eventually call "Lingvo Internacia," when he was in high school; he published the first Esperanto textbook (for speakers of Russian) in 1887.

Esperanto is a systematic language, it has consistent, regular rules. The Guinness Book of World Records (I know, I know) claims Esperanto is the only language in which there are no irregular verbs. French, by contrast, has 2238, and Spanish and German have about 700 apiece. In Esperanto, there are just six endings for verbs, and the present, past, and future tenses are always made by adding -as, -is, and -os to the infinitive.

tive for speak, paroli, we make mi parolas, mi parolis, mi parolos, parolu!, and so on. All plurals are made simply by adding -i: akvo means waters Retty Manson, a leader in the Esperanto movement told the New York Times, "You can get over the grammar in hours, All nouns end in o, adjectives end in a, and adverbs end in e. It's phonetic, and there are oppression." only 16 rules of grammar with no exceptions."

The Esperantisti (my word) who wrote the Prague Manifesto claim the language must be implemented universally in order to neutralize the predatory march of English — read Nike, cap-italism, etc. — across the globe: "The unequal distribution of power between languages is a recipe for permanent language insecurity, or outright language oppression, for a large part of John Brizzolara's 1987 novel concludes with York's return to Rachel Cole's ranch, where he ushers her bout the grounds at gunpois forcing her to reveal the dark dealings buried beneath the stone steps. It's as bad as he suspected... and

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

Walking through the dining room, down the long hallway toward the boots on the carpeting and the ragged, scared breaths coming from Rachel. I thought of the line in a dozen war movies where some guy turns to his buddy in the jungle of a foxhole somewhere and says, "It's quiet, Kowalski...too quiet." Eddy in the bell tower couldn't have been alone. They wouldn't leave Rachel undefended during the hunt. I won-wasn't a library. Bookshelves cov-ered half of one wall. File cabinets the other half. One wall was all windows punctuated by blue velvet drapes with white piping. Another wall was an exhibit of expensive-looking, bizarre art: erotic paintings, wall hangings from Tibet or Nepal depicting blue demon gods with necklaces of human skulls, flaming swords, huge tongues and hardons penetrating eager Indian maid-ens, primitive sculptures of fertility goddesses, ceremonial knives — stuff like that. There was also a bank of photographs of Rachel with three mayors of San Diego, a former Republican president, a right-wing evangelist, and a dozen other peo-ple who looked vaguely familiar from parts of the newspaper I rarely read. In the middle of the room was a huge mahogany desk the size of a small aircraft carrier. A com-

The first thing I did was to walk to the windows and look out. One floor below us was the front of the estate, the cul-de-sac driveway, and the dry fountain with the statue of the woman. On the rim of the fountain was the boy Conan/Hector had called Mariposa. He was whittling a piece of wood. A sawed-off shotgun rested next to him.

Rachel hesitated for a moment and then said, too quickly, "The estate is full of Gene's men. You'll "Shut up. How many are here?

"You killed the one in the tower.

the kid to find the others. Tell him there's trouble out by the stables."

She leaned out and did what I told her to, though her voice shook. That was okay though. She seemed appropriately scared. The kid took off running around the side of the building. "Now, I want records, documents, proof of what's going on here. We'll start with the files. Open them."

She reached into her desk. I watched her carefully. With a small key she opened the bottom locks on the cabinets. I tore out files and threw them on the floor one after another None of them had anything to do with what I wanted When I got to a drawer marked "Personnel Ser vices." I grabbed folders with company names on them. There were purchase orders for "Unit Deliveries" to Reichenback Laundries in L.A. and San Francisco: 150 Units $150,000 PAID. I would need a few boxes of the junk in the room where Walters was, but most of all I needed witnesses. I had to get Juan and Maria out as I could.

Rachel watched me as I paced the room trying to think of who to take this to. I could forget the cops in this country; in fact, I could probably write off any state law enforcement agency at all. As if she were reading my mind, she started to laugh. "Are you going to call the police? The FBI?" She picked up the phone. "Here, call the governor.

I'll give you his private number. Tell him Cherry Cole is calling and wants to turn herself in for smuggling aliens." She held her sides and laughed until tears formed on her cheeks.

"Where's the rest of your staff? The houseboys and the other maids, gardeners, whatever?"

She composed herself long enough to look up and answer me levelly. "They're in Borrego for the week-end. I keep a place there." She was probably telling the truth. She wouldn't want them underfoot for the big Pepper Belly Shoot and Barbecue. I continued to pace-

Absently I noticed the spines of some of the books on the shelves. The Tantrio Tradition, books by Arthur Avalon with titles such as The Serpent Power, Hymns to the Goddess, and another one called The Cybeline Cults. One in particular caught my attention - it was called The Fifth Yuga by Ian Broctor. I pulled it down and looked at the spine. It was heavily bound by some vanity publisher. Inside were inscrutable diagrams of "world forces," maps of human "power centers" that all seemed to focus on genitalia. I read passages at random entitided "Rites of the Chimera" and "The Transference of the Life Force: The Virgin and the Left-handed Way." It was a how-to manual of butchery couched in the language of mysticism. I threw the book at Rachel.

"Where's Broctor?" I shouted.

She flinched as the book hit the desk next to her. "He's here."

He's here."

"Where?"

"In this room with us."

I looked around. "You can't see him. He is here astrally."

Reaching into the shelves, I pulled an armload of books onto the floor. "Cut the shit! Where is he?"

"Physically, he's in his study." I wasn't paying much attention though, because I noticed, in the space I had just cleared on the shelf, what looked to be a hid-den door set into the wall: oak paneling with seams and an ornate brass hinge that hadn't been polished in a long time.

His jaw was swolle nicely "Meditation evocation, arcane rites, commu nion, and idle philosophy this must be how you see me whiling away my time. As you now perceive, I pursue other disciplines. Here is where I shall wrestle the Chimera, Death itself, onto the proverbial mat." His voice lowered to a whisper. "I am so very close. You

The white and blue chopper came in low. I could make out the wolf's head nsignia on its side. It made a pass over the house and then wheeled down the mountain toward the tennis courts. I picked up a few calls from the mountains, each one asking the other if there was any news from Blue Hunter.

Somewhere below us they must have conferred with the guards from the gate and decided to split. This was a very sensitive little soirée and this much unsched uled activity - Mexicans with guns and the estate burning down the way it was — must have consti tuted an unplanned-for contingency. Any idea I had about witnesses seemed to lose its meaning in the chaotic shadows of the inferno behind us. I trudged down the road with Maria, falling in and out of step with refugees from both sides of the border.

Another four-wheel drive came lumbering down the road behind us. It was silhouetted against the fire light, and people clung to the hood, the sides, and back so that I couldn't see at first that it was Ryder's Renegade. The sharpshooter kid was behind the wheel Next to him was Juan, his Turning to the driver, I asked him what had hap pened up there. He told me pretty much the same thing s his wounded partne had. The servants' quarters ere too heavily guarded. they waited for a chance and got one when Walter called everyone in to charge the estate. Fortunately fo me, it took the troops a lit tle too long to regroup and launch a concerted siege on the place. The resistance we had met on the way ou was desultory and confused. We had gotten out before they could organize. He told me his name was Julio and shook my hand. "You na let me take this He looked at me half challenging, half asking.

'I wouldn't try to stor you. I may be stupid, but I'm not crazy." He grinned and threw it into gear. "Wait a minute, you'd better leave that rifle. That's a bad bust if they stop you."
"No way." He shook his head. "I'm not taking another breath in this coun

Juan climbed back into the overcrowded jeep.

'You'd better hurry," told them, "La Migra will be here soon.

They waved and took off through the gathering darkness. As it turned out there was no hurry at all.

It was probably 9:00 before wasn't much left for them to work on except the surrounding woods. The columns of people who had oured down the road had long since dispersed on foot in vans, jeeps, or golf carts. Maria and I stood icross Route 18 and watched the flames on the hill

"Why are we sitting here? What are you wait ing for?" she asked sleepilv. Her head rested on my shoulder while I sat on the dirt off the highway "I want to see if some body is going to show up. "Can't you take me out of here? Someone will arrest me and take me back to Mexico if we stay here. "Go then "

No, I'll wait with you. The turquoise Border Patrol car arrived some 15 utes later. Maria was asleep. Ybarra stepped out of the car and walked over to me, his headlights full

"Gato?" he asked

"My name is York. Nathaniel York."

"I figure you were right," he said. "You figure I was right,"

I echoed. I didn't know what he meant.

'I started calling around for authorization to move in here, and it got very funny. Assholes tightened up all over the place when they figured the location and got the woman's name. Rachel Cole."

"You telling me she wned the fuckin' Border Patrol the Bureau of Immi gration and fuckin' Natu ralization?" I seemed to be speaking from the depths

"What happened?" "Drive me back to the city and maybe I can tell you about it.' "Okay."

"Her too. She's illegal probably. Then again maybe all her papers are up there. I gestured up at the dwindling flames on the mountainside. "I figure they proba

"No, that's not what I'm saying. I'm saying we can't move in on private property without a lot of red tape. The red tape seemed to get pretty thick over this. If I thought the patrol's hands weren't tied on a higher level, I'd feel "He trailed off and started again, "I couldn't thought I was really working for somebody up here and didn't know it.' "Yeah, that's why called you. I was right to call you. You showed up. It just didn't work out, that's shoulder.

On the drive back I told Ybarra as much as I thought he would buy. I was tired and I told him more than made sense and left out a lot He didn't say anything about any of it. Nothing at all except "Jesus Christ."

While my classmates appeared excited solely by the prospect of being outdoors on another of San Diego's perfect days, free to play for a few minutes under a blue sky, I looked up, scanning for gray clouds and signs of rain. Rain meant we'd be marched back upstairs, where, as droplets pattered down against the windows, we would quietly read to ourselves at our desks, or (just as good) we'd be read to. I did not publish again until high school. In my senior year, as editor of the school newspaper, in my last editorial I put forth a proposition I had developed. That same year the school put out a literary magazine. I slaved over a book review of The Once and Future King and a short story called "Such a Sweet

Way to Die." The review was good and the short story was not. But it was my first piece of fiction, a humorous account of a man who drowns people in large vats of honey. What surprised me was that readers later reported how they saw the dark cellar, smelled the dank ness, heard the glug-glug of the golden honey as the body went under, felt its stickiness and the last sweet taste of those who were drowning. Between writer and reader, I discovered, a

I was hooked. In ancient times, swift runners carried reports from one king to another. If the messenger brought news that pleased, he could hope for a reward. But if the king was not happy with the news, the messenger might be killed. Writers are today's messengers. They bring the news, and they remain at peril. M., the most gifted writer of my high school class, wrote for that same literary magazine. His poems and short stories showed a sensibility that was light years ahead of the rest of s. Even then I understood that his natural gifts were extraordinary. His telepathic connection was powerful perhaps too much so. It needed careful nurturing. but instead, he toyed with his mind, his imagination by indulging in drugs and alcohol. Instead of writing fiction, he began to live his life as fiction. He became a character in his novel. It turned out to be a murder mystery. Twenty years ago.

tion or being driven, and Dexter was both. But he was also afraid. So when Isami graduated, they married, and, soon enough, she was pregnant. He got a reporter's job for the San ing himself that he'd write news stories by day and reserve nights for his novels. He was on staff with the newspaper from 1968 until 1995, when they let him go. In the course of nearly 30 years, he wrote no fiction. Like M., rathe than write fiction, he lived his life as a character in a novel. It. too, turned out to be a murder mystery. I did not see much of them in those first early years. After graduation, I took off for Europe. In Germany, while I struggled to be classified as a conscientious objector, I got work as an archivist for the American-military newspaper the Stars and Stripes. My job was to locate clipping and photo files requested by the editorial staff. One photo file, "War/U.S./Viet nam/ Atrocities/American. contained photographs of GIs holding by the hair the severed heads of two Vie Cong. The dead men's eyes were milky and askew, their expressions gripped by some ferocious uncertainty Because there were three Americans but only two heads, the GIs had to share heads for their photographs The soldiers grinned hard, atrocities, but nothing eve appeared in the newspaper out those soldiers and their heads. When I saw those photographs, I was reminded of the myth of Perseus, how he cut off the head of Medusa with her crown of writhing serpents by studying her reflection in his shield. I returned to in New York City, then in 1980 returned to Califor nia. Dexter picked me up at the airport and took me to a bar to break the news tha he and Isami had separated. We each had two drinks. I was learning how drugs and alcohol establish the alpha brain-wave pattern, the mental state associated with creative work. Alcohol stimulates, setting up the alpha brain-wave pattern; it seems to inspire the muse. It took me a while to notice, how ever, that depression follows. This was not a trade-off I was willing to take. After a struggle, I won out over booze and drugs. Meanwhile, Dexter went on to have a couple of girlfriends, but for the st part he stuck to himself, getting his Christmas cards out in mid-December, mailing birthday greetings so they arrived on the right day or early (but never late). He attended whatever Saturday-night party he was arrive (with a dish if it were potluck), but then he'd spend most of the evening alone, on the front porch or the back steps, chain-smoking. On Monday morning he'd be back at his desk, slam ming together another assignment. He reported on political corruption, child abuse, murders; for a while he had the city-hall beat; he wrote a searing series about teenage run aways who prostituted themselves for a meal; he was the first on the scene of bloody car wrecks. He lived in the world of events and was expert at getting in the "whowhat-where-when-why and-how" at the top of his stories. He stopped talking about writing fiction but often asked me how I was doing. I think it pleased him that I was having problems with my own fiction

Misery loves company. In all the years that I knew him, I saw Dexter take just five drinks. Yet he died an alcoholic, his fiver and kidneys shot, his stomach and esophageal tract ravaged, his heart, according to his doctors, "two-third dead." He dried out a couple of times at expensive centers, tried different treat ment modalities, including nothing lasted long. After a month at a center in Calis toga, on the way home he bought a bottle of Smirnoff vodka and drank it in the car. His bosses at the newspaper delivered warnings, and at his lowest point around the time that the newspaper let him go, he'd crawl around his home because he was unable to walk, suffering from alcohol-induced diabetes. He fell and suffered a concussion and a brain hemor rhage. The doctors stitched him up and warned him that his body could take only so much more abuse Grasshopper. I heard the slurred speech, and I knew he was on another bender Drinking was forbidden at the facility, but Dexter used persuasive skills - no longer available to him as a writer - to convince the manager that he needed to drink in order to sleep.

Not long afterward, in early May, he suffered a heart attack. Out of the hospital, the next week he wrote Midori, his older daughter, his last e-mail in which he speaks about attending an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting and his own drink the last year of his life, he began to write his novel. But he had waited too long. Dexter once had an excellent ear for dialogue, but now his language was flat. He'd lost his critical judgment and could not see that his characters (all sketched from men who lived at the center) were cardboard. He could not give his story a dramatic arc because, by that time, Dexter had lost much of his own imaginative pow-ers. He had been living too long in the drunk's nether world. Wildly optimistic, he wrote Masaye an e-mail, For years, I'd been waiting "Hold onto your britches,

Instead, on a sunny morning in mid-May, he told the people at the residential center that he felt tired and was going to lie down until ch. feeling.

Dexter Waugh

"I think he was always depressed," observed Isami after the funeral. "In the end, I hope he just went to sleep and didn't wake up. "Either you continue to liv in epiphanies," writes Saul Bellow, "or you shake them off and take up trades and tasks; you adopt rational principles and concern yourself with society or politics. Then the sense of having come from 'elsewhere vanishes."

Writers accept that they are from elsewhere. It is a lonely place, and writers can sometimes feel they are abandoned there. Writers are born and then they are made or unmade. Pain and suffering are an aspect of their talent. Because of this link, their pain must be read as a part of the gift, All people have gifts, and all gifts come with a price. Our pair must be paid for, even i the package is never opened or the gift never used.

I loved Dexter and admired M., but neither my affection nor that of those who loved these mer was enough to stop them from looking upon Medusa and perishing. The three GIs in Vietnam and Father Rigney also faced Medusa. The writer cannot tell all their stories, but if he tells a few well - describ ing courage and strength and the complicated nature of urges, the powerful dray that takes men into battle and, yes, their tragic innocence — then he has done his job.

On my off days, I can be found searching the skies for signs of rain. — Jangchup Phelgyal art writer, part editor, part publisher, Romeo Marquez is the journalistic force behind Diario Veritas, the English-language, Philippine community newspaper. At least through November 2000 100 persons and part of 2000 100 persons and 2000 persons and 2000 100 persons ber 2000, the paper has come out monthly with a circulation of 5000 to 10,000 readers. Romeo, a tall, middle aged man with a graying ponytail, wears khakis, a long sleeved sport shirt, and loafers. His eyeglasses are rimless, but that has more to do with practicality than style, he says, just as the ponytail is less fashion statement than political one. He grew the ponytail in lune 1998, the same time he started Diario Verias.

"That was a political statement I made, a kind of protests," he says, referring to the

"That was a political statement I made, a kind of protest," he says, referring to the ponytail. "I wanted to show that I did not conform to the set standards of the Philippine community. Incredibly, the ponytail attracted more attention than I wanted it to. Every time people asked me about it, I told them it was my way of showing my nonconformity with the way our community leaders and newspapers were doing things."

The Point-Point Joint is filled with customers pointing to various dishes. One African-American customer points to the adobo, a chicken-and-pork dish cooked in soy sauce, vinegar, ground pepper, and lots of garlic. A Spanish-speaking customer points to the pancir, the popular noodle dish.

But before my attention goes to the food, Romeo reminds me of the tour he wants to give of National City.

We leave the restaurant and hop into his beat-up 1986 Nissan Sentra.

When I ask him to claborate on the beauty pageants, he says, "Before I tell you about the beauty pageants, he says, "Before I tell you about the beauty pageants, i'm going to take you to a fish market where it all began for me." As we drive away, I realize that Romeo is referring to bis newspaper's beginnings.

Three years ago Romeo Marquez stopped being the editor in chief of Philippine Mabuhay News and started Diario Veritas. Veritas means the truth in Latin. But Romeo started his newspaper in order to provide the Philippine community with the facts. He had a jourability belief that the facts would lead to the truth.

Romeo Marquez laughs. Sometimes it seems like the entire world - at least the world as it is known in National City — can be reduced to the beauty pageant. I wanted to intro duce a serious issue into the common dialogue that Filipinos engaged in.'

We have been driving around National City Now Romeo Marquez pulls his beat-up car into a parking space in front of the Family Loompya market.

Loompya market, and my nose fills with aromas of the sea and the earth. The fish and meat and vegetables remind me of some place far from San Diego. The aisles, even though is a morning in the mid dle of the week, are filled with customers, many of whom seem to know each other and shout greetings to their friends.

Some nod hello to Romeo Marquez, Others seem to scoot past hin quickly. He says hello and "When the Americans took over the Philippines from Spain after the Battle of Manila Bay, José Rizal was chosen as the best person to be a national hero and symbol for the Philippine struggle." Romeo says as he picks up a melon, looks at it, then puts it down. "Rizal was chosen because he was a pacifist. A more likely can didate for historical saint hood was Andres Bonifa cio, the leader who instigated the revolt in the first place. But Bonifacio did not fit the American ideal of a national hero. He came from Manila shantytown masses, and he favored

In the world of Romeo Marquez, though, every thing is ripe with a narrative

Take the Family Loompya 'Loompya' is a play or ords taken from lumpio which is the equivalent of spring rolls," he says.

As he speaks. Romeo Marquez has the manner more of a good schoolteache than of a renegade publisher

"Lumpia," he says, "is one of the favorite dishes of the Philippines, just like pancit, the noodle dish you saw at the Point-Point Joint."

Romeo now moves purposefully amid the fruits ind vegetables, nodding hello to some people as they wave hello. Others scow and turn away. Might all this coming together or avoidance have something to do with José Rizal?

Outside the Family Loompya market, I ask Romeo about these encounters.

"If you go to the other Asian comp unities." he says, "they tend to speak with a unified voice. But unity is not the Filipino way. We speak in many voices. It is hard to get two people to agree on anything."

We get in the car and drive away into the combustion of National City. "Everyone has their own opinion," Romeo says. Plus, everyone wants to run the show."

The Philippine community, he tells me, does not have a unified voice "Everyone wants to Politics is politics. But shopping is all about survival. It is about eating food. Romeo was driving his parents and a sister to Seafood City to do some grocery shopping.

As they shopped, he lingered around outside the supermarket.

He noticed a stonemason at work. Romeo asked the man what was going on.

His parents both have disabled-parking permits, and so the car, even though Romeo was driving it, was smack-dab in front of Seafood City and the stonemason doing his work.

The stonemason told Romeo about a statue that was going up. The man was working on the base, getting it ready for the bust. This worker was Mexican But the man remembered the name, he said, because it sounded almost Mexican.

"It was to be a bust of a man called José Rizal,"

Deplorable Slum

This is in response to the article on Donna Frye and Danon, running for District 6 ("City Lights," May 31). I have lived on Diamond Street for lived on Diamond Street for 30 years, and our once sweet, sleepy beach neighborhood has turned into a deplorable slum. Street people defecate wherever they feel like it, and they pick, piss, puke, and spi gusting. Byron Wear's office doesn't give a damn, and they don't lend a hand either. I wish PB were united in one district and Donna Frye could serve on the council for us. She could turn the old donothing idiots on their heads nothing idiots on their heads, spinning, with her well-reasoned, innovative, and bold defenses for saving our formerly lovely beach town. I wish that she could run for our district down here. We're three different districts, and there's no way for us to get anything done here in Pacific

Beach. I've called Byron Wear Beach. I we cannot byton wear until I'm blue in the face, and I've called the police too, and they're just letting this part of town — the closest part, the most expensive part of the slum. I'm just a few blocks from the ocean and it's just disgusting. You don't even want to walk in our alleys. Candy Riley Pacific Beach

I have to say I feel pleased because I suffered such taggeringly horrible attacks here when I wrote Burnt Diaries. I was thought to be alone, the one criminal, but that can't really now be considered to be the case with all these other women popping around."

I mentioned that a friend had said to me, about male poets, I mentioned that a triend had said to me, about male poors, that one reason these poets often have love lives that are far more active than the love lives of novelists or biographers is that it takes far less time to write a poem than to write a novel or biography or grand history.

"Well, I think that's a very, very good point. In fact, one of the funniest jokes about that has to do with the playwright, Simon Gray, who's a best friend of Harold Pinter. And Harold, who writes Gray, who is a best friend of Harold Pinter. And Harold, who write very short poems from time to time, sent Simon his he has a habit of sending his friend his poems and his haikus, which's very nice and they're good. And then Harold rang him up. He couldn't stand the wait, and said, Well, Simon have you read my poem?' And Simon said, 'I haven't finished it yet.' Which actually is incredibly funny, So, I think your friend is right. I mean that must be why they're always sort of at it. I suppose they find it pretty easy to get womer always sort of at it. 1 suppose the, providing they, the poets, don't look too ghastly."

I said it was my impression that people in England were rather unkind to Plath, socially. I said that I'd read that A.S. Byatt, who was at Cambridge at the same time as was Plath, had called Plath "an entirely silly woman" and disparaged Plath's dyed blonde hair and bright red lipstick.

'Yes," said Tennant, "I think they were absolutely probably awful to her, but I pick up a feeling that she got up people's bly awhal to her, but I pick up a feeting that she got up people a moses rather, which is very difficult when you don't know some-body. Two or three friends of mine, who were actually at Cambridge and met her a few times, got the feliaing of some-body who seemed to be giving the impression that she didn't have time for them. Recently, I read something where it said, 'Sylvia Plath, who boxed herself into rows somecumg water et saud, "Sytva Prath, who boxed herself into a corner." I felt like going around and killing that writer, actually. That kind of attitude I think is really unacceptable, don't you? It's extraordinary. But people did it all the time, what Hughes did to her. And I suppose — I'm too old really to know — that people still do it. They must."

"Of course it did. Of course it did. The fact that the film that is being made of Ted and Sylvia considered thinking of leaving Assia out appalled me. In every kind of way, I think, the film is totally controlled by the Hughes estate. Therefore, they will make Hughes seem this wonderful person. So I hope — if anybody could be persuaded — that my bods will right the imbalance in some way. So, therefore, I felt it was worth having done it."

I asked Tennant, "Was there anything in The Birthday Letters that surprised you "Yes." she said. "the adversarial tone of many of the poems

"res," she said, "the adversariat ione of many of the poems and the fact that nobody noticed it surprised me most. They were so full of loathing, I thought, many of them."

When Plath and Hughes were still living together, I said that I thought that it must have been very difficult for Plath, as a poet.

"She," I suggested, "was a poetess, to Hughes. And, as he was with all women, he was always teaching her." omen, ne was aiways teaching ner. Tennant was not sure that she agreed. "I don't know, because, still remains an incredible discovery, an artist of miraculous gifts and mature achievement.

At Sherwood Auditorium, Neiman's youthfulness was not something one could — or wanted to — ignore. Something of a dandy, he was dressed in an old-fashioned buttoned-up frock coat and striped pants. He sported a mass of long, wavy, auburn locks, with side-curls over the ears, an apparatus that flew spectacularly forward and backward in moments of musical passion (of backward in moments of musical passion (of which there were many). His thin face, with pierc-ing eyes and aquiline nose, was decorated with a trace of mustache and beard. Altogether, he looked like a visitor from the 19th Century, a genius of the keyboard who is at the same time a theatrical idol, Franz Liszt redivivus Was this a bit ridiculous? Yes, but it was also rresistibly charming, because the calculated pre-tentiousness of his appearance was balanced by a character of frankness, simplicity, and warmth, a kind of sunlit California naïveté, which he com-municated to the audience in all his interactions municated to the audience in all his interactions with them. Here was a performer who seemed authentically happy to be sharing his art with others, who seemed truly grateful for the wild applause his playing repeatedly evoked, and whose glowing self-confidence seemed to express not glowing self-confidence seemed to express not approach to the confidence of the confidenc his own composition (one of which he dedicated to a recent happy event in his family, the birth of nis brother's canid — not quite the sort of thing the heavy, brooding, aloof, great-Russian-pianist-persona Arcadi Volodos would do). A report on the visual aspects of Neiman's recital would not be complete without mention Without having changed principles, I have to make an exception for Adam Neiman. own emotions but a precise and valuable visual gloss on the music he was playing. Instant by instant, to a fine degree of detail, these visual referents portrayed and commented upon the events in the score, from the large-scale contrasts of dynamic architecture to the instantaneous changes of direction or mood in the midst of a phrase. Neither gratulious nor superfluous, the visual aspects of the performance illuminated the visual aspects of the performance illuminated the music by drawing one s attention more acutely to what was already there to be heard. The richness and subtlety of Neiman's interpretation could be fully appreciated through the listener's ears alone. But he gave us equally rich and subtle acting and dancing to go along with it. I found his movements both graceful and expressive, beau-tiful to watch, and — most important of all profoundly true to the music

It is should be said right away that challenges. It should be said right away that Neiman's technique is a good as piano technique can be — as utterly unfazable as Pollini's, as Kissin's, as Volodo's. His pedaling is particularly noteworthy, helping him to produce that blooming resonance along with vivid clarity that constitutes the ultimate voice of a grand piano (the Steinway used by the Chamber Music So-ciety has never sounded so wonderful). But every young plaints has a great tech-nique these days. It was something way beyond that that moved the audience so deeply in these performances, fascinating the mind and exalting the soul. I have re-ferred to Neiman's abilities as an "actor," terred to Neiman's abilities as an "actor," and I did not do so lightly. All great mu-sical performers are actors (this does not apply only to opera singers). In each work, they take on a role; they embody the character that lies within the music; they enact the character's adventures, as these are defined by the musical ideas and their treatment; they do not merely execute sounds, they live through a fictive expe-rience; and it is the truth of that experience that gives us the thrill we are seeking when we go to a con-cert. What finally distinguishes a great pianist from a merely good one is the great artist's ability to identify with the inner life of the music and to force the audience to identify with it as well. That the sounds of i their specific denotations) is irrelevant. Everyone who listens to music knows that it tells a story and that its story is somehow about life (our life) even though the language is not the ugh the story cannot be translated

It is in this respect that Adam It is in this respect that Adam Neiman is oimpressive a performer. In the final movement of Beethoven's Opus 110, the noble, confident fugue is interrupted, and the plangent theme of the preceding Adagic returns, but now broken up, fragmented, as though uttered through sobs; and when this recence has run its course and subsided into he silence, the finance returns in inversion, its inversion, its silence, the fugue returns, in inversion, its calm, majestic inventiveness undefeated by the eruption of grief, and indeed spurred to even grander afions by it. This is not a story I am makir hrmations by it. This is not a story I am making up (though the feeble words are my own). It is the story Neiman lived through as he played the movement: I heard it, and assw it, as clearly as if I had been witnessing The Winter's Tale.

A recital such as this one requires the performer to play many roles, one after the other,

ing Neiman's performances could doubt that in fact there was something of vital human meaning going on, that it was a representation of lived life we ere witnessing.
The final work on Neiman's

The final work on Neiman's program, Rachmaninov's Opus 28 Sonata, comes already with an indication of programmatic content. Its three movements are supposedly a representation of Faust. Gretchen, and Menhi les, on the model of Liszt's Faust Symphony. In a graceful and lu-cid speech before his performance of the work, Neiman pointed this out, evidently wishing to alert the audience to an appropriate way of listening to the music (which certainly does not make its chief points through its allually the power of Neiman's performance of the Rachmani nov lay less in its vivid emotionalism (which, after all, s obvious, and is to be found in everyone's performance of this work) than in the con-summate intelligence by which the pianist made the music's dramatic structure clear. By the end, any suspicion that this might be a bloated, overro might be a bloated, overro-mantic rhapsody was definitively put to rest.

It is in fact a terrific work, something Neiman himself fer-vently believes, and something he confidently proposed to demonstrate to the audience. In his spoken comments, he told us that he intended to make the First Sonata as much a part of the standard reper-toire of pianists as the Sonata No. 2 is. A bit of overweening chutzpah on the part of a 22-year-old? Maybe, but - as with everything Neiman did or said that evening - the sin-cerity of the claim, along with his selfless admiration for the music, gave his words an air of charming innocence only a

Although it resembles the Emperor's newest outfit, Serge is convinced the painting's art because it has importance (it comes from Antrio's '70s period) and value. But do price tags always reflect quality? And does buying such an expensive paint-ing make Serge a connoisseur? Serge's friend Marc contends that just because a work has monetary contends that just because a work has monetary worth doesn't make it art. Marc believes in clas-sical standards of appreciation and abhorred the day Serge used the "D-word" — i.e., decon-struction. In Art the painting is or is not there, depending on the ob-server. Eugene Ionesco also based The Chairs on a present absence. A man and woman, married 75 years, live in a light-house-like structure. The foghorn is real. The searchlight, making its 360-degree sweep, is real. The sounds of boats arriving, dropping off passengers, and leaving are real. The doorand leaving are real. The door-bell is real. As are the chairs they sit in. We just don't see the guests, who have come to hear the old man's message to the world. Are the man and woman playing make-believe, as they do every night? Are the guests real but somehow invisible? Or

"At certain moments," lonesco wrote, "the world ap-pears to me emptied of

EVE ENSLER TORCHING AND ALMOST ALVAY COMPELLING "

The old man and woman greet new guests, introduce them around, and the stage fills with around, and the stage fills with chairs. It becomes, at the same time, more full and more empty. Everyone awaits the Or ator, who will impart the old ator, who will impart the old man's message. As in much of Ionesco, the closer you ap-proach something, the more it recedes. "The world is incomprehensible to me," he wrote, "I am waiting for someone to ex plain it."

"The further one goes," says the Old Man, "the deeper one sinks." He's worked as a janitor for eight decades. His wife, cursed — blessed? — with 24-hour amnesia, supports him, though encourages more ambition. He might have someambition. He might have some-thing to say. Like the searchlight, his speeches flicker with illumination — and why have so many people, including the Emperor, boated to such an out-of-the-way place? Other times hounds are adulted.

an out-of-the-way place? Other times he sounds gaga-deluded. But surely the Orator — like Godot — will grace us with rev-elation. Surely we'll get to the bottom of this. The Chairs flopped when it opened in Paris in 1952. 'Only too often,' says Martin Esslin, The compy chairs on stage were.' The compy chairs on stage were.' The compy chairs on stage were the compy chairs on stage were.' auditorium." No one was ready for its absent presences and un-real reality. Sledgehammer Theatre's current production makes the play our contemporary. The questions it raises are still with us — they infuse Art, for example, which Reza wrote 40 years later — and its the-atricality still captivates. Jonathan Silverstein, who just graduated from UCSD's MFA program, is a young di-rector to watch. He's as comfortable with Shak comfortable with Shakespeare (i.e., his recent Twelfth Night at UCSD) as theater of the ab-surd. Silverstein's encouraged quality performances from Tim West, as the Orator; Dana Hooley, as the Old Woman (one of the world's most codependen beings); and newcomer Daoud Heidami as the meaningful/less

Old Man.
The production, boasting sharp design work, is quite good. It could improve, how-ever, if the actors varied their verbal attack. They belt lines throughout. But Ionesco la-beled The Chairs a "tragic farce," which calls for fleet deliveries and an overall lightness of tone. Ionesco isn't frontal. He prefers to come up behind you, tap you on the shoulder, and, when you turn around, he was never there.

ondon is a great town, no lie. "When you're tired of London," Samuel Johnson said, ■"you're tired of life." Maybe so, maybe so.

Although, I can imagine that it is very easy to get tired of London if one lives there and has to press into the crowded tube every morning and evening to go to work for, by American standards, miserable wages and return to small, drab digs (by American standards) that one pays an astronomic (by Amer-ican standards) rent for. It's a dirty, gray, old city, sprawling forever in all four directions and, once away from the older more central districts, not at all

But it's a great town, nonetheless, and one of but it is a great town, nonetheless, and one of the centers of this earth, surely the center of Eu-rope, with regard to commerce, culture, you name it. It is now also one of the most cosmopolitan and multiracial cities on earth, far more so now than when I first visited in the '70s, and it's a live-lier, richer place for it. One can actually find good, inexpensive food now almost anywhere in food now almost anywhere in London, whereas 25 years ago it AUGUST it was usually street sweepings with chutney and mushy peas.

And it's especially a great town for writers. For actors too, no doubt. Reggae singers, fringe political groups, haberdashers. Even Madonna has moved to London! But for writers it's an enhancement of the condense with the con pecially stimulating port of call. You can't walk down a street without seeing a plaque that says Virginia Woolf or H.G. Wells or R.L. Stevenson. Shakespeare, Marlowe, and Jonson walked those Shakespeare, Marlowe, and Jonson walked those cobbles, drank at inns five steps below them, and staggered home in the London rain just as writers in London do now. But also there exists in London, as there doesn't here, a broad-based literary culture, a contemporary literary culture (be it fiction, poetry, playwriting, music criticism) that no longer exists in America, if it ever did. Perhaps for a couple of generations in New York. So publishing or giving a reading or just hang-ing out in London for a writer is maybe the equivalent of a musi-cian or a composer spending time in Berlin.

One of the literary friends I visit in London is Jim Campbell, who makes his living writing a weekly column, a sort of high weekly column, a sort of high-brow gossip column for the Times Literary Supplement. Now, the Bull's Head looks like your ordinary pub on the outside and upon walk ing indoors, but a side room to the place is of ular importance: that's where the music is. The singular importance that's where the mussc is. The Bull's Head is the 'oldest', longest-running jazz pub in Europe, with jazz performances seven nights a week, 52 weeks a year since 1950. That's retty damn good, by my lights. A rich tradition of jazz in Britain has existed at least since the early '30s, probably even before that, with visiting Americans electrifying British audiences with their syncopated rhythms and throbbing beat. That's a whole other story, but there are no better-informed, more enthusiastic jazz fans in the world than in Britain, and over the years a nucleus of first-rate British jazz musicians emerged, in varying styles, who can play with anyone.

It was a relaxed, almost intimate atmosphere, one It was a relaxed, almost intumate atmosphere, one that you raredy encounter in the States anymore, quite frankly, particularly for the kind of performance we were all about to enjoy.

cians who as early as the age of 16 was working profes-sionally. In the '50s he played with a number o bands, including those led by Ted Heath, Ronnie Scott, and Kenny Baker. From 1960 to 1967, Tracey was the house pianist a Ronnie Scott's Jazz House in London, one of the great showcases of American tal-

Bobby Wellins talent. The idea of the place was to present first-line American jazz soloists in an informal setting, and the place was a huge success.

What a laboratory it must have been for Tracey to hone his piano skills, backing up performers like Ben Webster, Zoot Sims, Stan Getz, Johnny Griffin, and Sonny Rollins. Those seven years proved to be a fruitful but physically exhausting period for Tracey. In 1965 Tracey established his own quartet with the Scots tenor Bobby Wellins and the following year recorded a jazz suite he composed based on Dylan Thomas's Unider Milk Wood Tracey wrote a number of other suites fo Wood. Tracey wrote a number of other suices or big band that he recorded on his own label, Steam Records, established in 1965. Tracey arranged some Ellington compositions for a collection in 1968 called We Love You Madly and then during the '70s played mostly in small groups. Later in the '70s, Tracey led an octet that continued until 1985. Somewhere in 1985. Somewhere in there he may have gotten into a bit of trouble with drugs and disappeared for a while, but I don't know the details.

Regardless, there he was onstage at age 74,

Regardless, there he was onstage at age 74, looking ten years younger and with his son Clark on drums, It was a Clark Tracey good evening, a straight-ahead seasion with Tracey and Wellims showing off their goods.

Tracey and Wellins showing off their goods. Tracey sounds a fair bill ike Monk, with a per-cussive, insistent left hand and angular melodies. There's a good measure of Ellington in the mix as well, but Tracey remains an original player with a beautiful sense of time and proportion. Unlike a lot of American players, especially younger players, he doesn't overload his solos and try to show you all the tricks he can do, which would make for a considerable bag of tricks. He's would make for a considerable bag of tricks. He s remarkably tight and eloquent, with as few notes as necessary — as is Bobby Wellins. What a plea-sure to hear these two old veterans of the music wars interact through the evening. At one point a guest tenor sax player, young Ben Castle, sat in and launched a propulsive solo that resembled the younger Sonny Rollins. There aren't a lot of pyrotechnics involved

There aren't a lot of pyrotechnics involved when Tracey plays, but you word it listen to any-one now at work who's more canny and deff with so few notes. None of the above discs is so good as seeing Tracey — and Wellins — live at the Bull's Head. Nor can you walk around the corner and get a big greasy bag of chips with vinegar afterward, but all three discs will give you a notion of just how good it can get in London. ■

They say you should never go shopping at a super-market when you're hungy. That goes double for Trader Joe's, where the temptations are so much more alluring, Ludcily, right across the street from the Uptown Center TT's is Tera, offering a cool, shaded patio and tasty little plates of American "spas," which are sized just right for preshopping snacks, light hunches, or dinner starters. ger is, once you settle on the patio on a balmy day, you may not want to leave. That's because Terra's tapas are no itty-bitty Spanish bur blies. They'd more tellingly be named La Jolla's late: Cha Cha Cha and similar 'grazing menus.' And, like potato chips, it's hard to stop at just one. A couple of these, an icy drink, and you just may lose interest in food-shopping. One of my favorite selections is the mush-contracted by a mild-mannered mixture of Crabinance by a mild-manner of mixture of Crabinance by a mild-manner of mixture of Crabinance by a mixture ing the life even out of the top-ping. A similar fate befell a special of jerked pork chops — one of the two thin rib chops was rea-sonably succulent, but its leathery twin tasted as if it had spent a month sprawled in the sun at Montego Bay. Even before I asked chef Jeff Rossman about this, he'd already decided to replace the tark of chops with a loin cut, which ought to work better on the grill. The jerk seasoning would still benefit from some fine-tuning — it was a valiant attempt but overwhelmed by allspice to the detriment of the other spices. (What I missed especially was the fruity-mustardy jolt of Scotch Bonnet chiles - or, since they're not easy to find here, at least a per-ceptible trace of a good Jamaican thickness and velvety tenderness, a dense, juicy hunk of meat topped by a thick, fatty layer of duck skin sweetly touched with skin sweetly touched with tamarind honey. The accompa-nying starch was slightly gritty, gluey rice, resembling the al dente risotto that some Italian chefs favor. All the entrées came with seasonal vegetables cooked gen-tly and simply. By the time you read this, the specific vegetables may have changed with the sea-son; in addition, many entrees will change with the advent of sum-mer, which for Terra is barbecue restaurant's fortes. A "taster" tri-umvirate featured a warm, moist bread pudding with a light, fluffy bread pudding with a night, nutry texture, a competent crème bridle of the eggy (rather than creamy) model; and a fudgy chocolate dessert with a crisp, nut-speck-led exterior. Unfortunately, with not one chocoholic at the table, we lacked sufficient appetite to brave Terra's elaborate and pop-ular "chocolate cigar." Although I have quibbles with many specific dishes, I think the food at Terra is sound and imaginative overall, with combinations that have been though binations that have been thought about. The potential is great, and so, for that matter, are the current pleasures. I know I'll come back often to this amiable, relaxing restaurant — if only to "tapa" off my Hillcrest shop-

ABOUT THE CHEF

ABOUT THE CHEF Chef Jeff Rossman was almost born in a kitchen: When he was 12, his parents bought Pam Pam Cafe and Grill (which they still own) on Hotel Circle. The fam-ily opened Terra three years ago. "It's owned by all three of us —

It's owned by all three of us— I signed on the line, too," he says. Now 32, Rossman didn't start out to be a chef. He attended UCSD majoring in economics because, he says, "I wasn't sure what I wanted to do." There, he found himself frequently cooking — and enjoying it — for his college fraternity. "From college I went into real estate, but I always I went into real estate, out a same, migrated back to the restaurant and cooking. I just ended up staying there a little bit longer, a staying there a little bit longer, a little bit longer." At Pam Pam, he gradually upgraded the coffee-shop menu to include skewers, sauces, and pastas. "It started taking off and got to a point where I wanted to do a little more. It wanted to do a little more. It was frustrating not having a regular clientele — it was all transients. So we opened up here. Neil Stuart, who helped start Pacifica Restaurants [in Del Mar and Old Town], helped us come up with a menu and a concept. He was our opening chef, and he left after six months chel, and he left after six months to pursue his catering business." Several other chefs followed, while leff ran the front of the house. "I just took over as chef about eight months ago, when we got rid of our last chef because he wasn't doing what we wanted," he says. "Now it's back "I've learned a lot through reading cooking magazines and surfing the Internet," Rossman explains. "I worked for a few weeks with a fabulous chef back weeks with a fabulous chef back in Boston, Michael Schlow at Cafe Louis. I learned a lot there. I've done some things with some local chefs and learned from working with Neil Stu-art. I have a wife and a three-year-old child, so I don't three-year-old child, so I don't get much chance to travel, but I pull my inspiration from some of the bigger chefs around the country like Charlie Trotter [of Chicago], Douglas Rodriguez [of Patria in New York] doing Aken [of Florida] for that Caribbean influence we decided to use some of that influence here. Not the really trendy sort of stuff, not using the Spanish names — we stick with low-down American terminology. I tend to go a little Caribbean-South American, a Caribbean-South American, a little Latin on a lot of my spices... And then people get it and go, "What is that? I never heard of quinoa!" It works; people are kind of intrigued. We do different fun thipgs coming up with Riko Bartolomei and Steve [Pickell] Bartolomei and Steve Pickell from Cafe Champagne up at Thornton Winery. They're all good friends of mine, and we're thinking about doing some-thing similar to the Chef Celebration but just on a real Celebration but just on a real low scale. We're trying to set that up for Sepfember. And during the summer, until Labor Day, we're doing Barbecue and Blues with live music on Sun-day nights. We always have fun

"How many people are even likely to know what a Tempranillo is?"

several years ago, a friend made me a very nice present of membership in the Ridge Vince et al. Advanced Tasting Program. We both harbored a deep affection for the Ridge Gey-serville Zinfandel — which was still under $20 at the time — and had sampled some remarkable wines, notably an oldvine Grenache, from a mutual the program, I would receive oc-casional two-bottle shipments of this or that Ridge wine, made in this or that Ridge wine, made in minuscule quantities and rarely available through retail outlets. Of-ferings included single-vineyard Zinfandel, Syrah, Petite Sirah, Grenache, Carignan, Mataro, Alicante

Bouschet, and even Sangiovese.

The deal was that I would put one bottle into

The deal was that I would put one bottle into storage for my friend and consume the other at my leisure. We kept it up for about three years; the only bust in the bunch was that Sangiovese, which may have been a bad bottle. I especially enjoyed the Af-icante Bouschet, harvested from a very old California vineyard: simple and delicious. Why doesn't anyone make this anymore? I wondered.

I thought of that wine when I heard Carlsbad's Witch Creek winemaker Dave Wodehouse say that Witch Creek winemaker Dave Woodenouse say that his low-end blend contained Tempranillo, Bar-bera, Grenache, and Alicante Bouschet. The connection didn't end there; during our conver-sation, Hearned about Witch Creek's Cellar Club, an institution very much like Ridge's ATP. Armong other benefits, explains Wodehouse, "Every six to seven weeks, members get two bottles of wine; they can either pick it up or we ship it to them. They get 20 percent off on those wines, and anytime they buy nything from us, they get 15 percent off."

The similarity to Ridge's program is no accident. 'I really love variety,' says Wodchouse. 'I wouldn't want to be doing just Cabernet Sauvignon for the rest of my life. For me, it was a natural thing to want to try varieties that other people weren't doing. One of my models for this was Ridge Vineyards. They had great wine and a great winemaker. They had all these varieties that

They had all these varieties that other people dicht have and different vineyard sources and so on. That gave me the inspiration to do and of cernache and Carignan, that a lot of other people don't do. Since we have a large Cellar Club—about 600 people—that gives me an opportunity to experiment." Many of Wodehouse's smaller batches and blends are never sold house's smaller batches and blends are never sold to the public, instead, they are snapped up by the club. Wodehouse gets to play, and his customers, won over in the tasting room, get to try stuff they might not pull off a shelf.

"If you'r extuck on the wholesale market and you're fighting for shelf space, it's mostly Cabs and Merlots. If you had to self your even likely to know sale...how many people are even likely to know what a Tempranillo is? If you knew what it was and you liked it, you would buy one off the shelf, and you liked it, you would buy one off the shelf, lake a chance. But for your average guy, it's Cabernet. Merlot, maybe a Zinfandel. That's why you don't find Tempranillo. It's a shame, because it's a great variety down here. In Portugal, they call it Tinta Roriz, and they use it in making Porti." A Port fan himself, Wodehouse was happy to be able to enhance what was a stirely Zinfandel Port with 50 percent Tempranillo for the 2000 vintage. Though Wodehouse has dodged the wholesale bullet, the great blessing of such variety in source and grape comes at a price. Because Witch Creek does not own the vineyards from which it buys, he cannot be certain that the fruit will be treated the way he wants it to be treated. Growers generally want to increase tonnage to increase profit; makers want to decrease it for the sake of quality. And it's not as if you can try-before-youbuy. "It's rare that a situation comes where a grower says, 'Okay, it's ready to pick now; come on out and try the fruit.' You can only tell about the fruit when it's pretty much ripe," and growers like to have their fruit sold before it's hanging ripe on the vine. Ridge winemaker Paul Draper solved this problem by buying from hillside vineyards with poor soils, where overcropping was not really an option. Wodehouse is more liberal in his buying option. Wotenouse is more meria in its boying habits but shares Draper's concerns. "Hike to try wines that have been made from that vineyard be-fore, but mostly, the first time, you re just rolling the dice. You do it one year, and if it works out, the diec. You do it one year, and if it works out, you come back links of agreements, but you can get all kinds of agreements, but you can great like hims do fargements, but you can the possibly be going to all these different vineyards all over the state, checking on sugars and acids, so you deepend on the growers. Sometimes they ir every conscientious, and sometimes we are they can be a fine to the constitution of the constit went up to get Grenache and came back with

When these things happen, Wodehouse doesn't demand a refund, but he will ask for a discount. "If the fruit is not something that we're looking for, and it's not going to make as good a wine as the stuff we actually wanted, it's only fair that we don't pay full price. But having said that, we were able to make some really nice wines from those grapes." Overripe Zinfandel can be used for late-harvest Zin or even Port-style wine, while underripe Grenache might make a pleasant rosé, or add acid to a blend.

Another difficulty facing the producer of ob-scure varietals is price. Wodehouse admits this is a tricky issue. "Our first Rarbera — well, we've never had something like a Barbera before. How are you going to price a Barbera? You can't just go by what they sell it for in Piedmont — I wish we could get that — but you know there are good [domestic] Barberas out there. You try them and [domestic] Barberas out there. You try them and say, 'Is this a good as the Boeger, or this guy, or that guy?' When there are people to put yourself against, it's a lot easier. In the long run, if it sells too fast, then you've got too low a price; if it sells too slowly, then you have too high a price. We try to keep it reasonable, so that things move at a

As with other films that have boasted a Dogma certificate, attention is irresiably drawn to the sought-after "essence" of storytelling, through the sheer nonprofessional-through the sheer nonprofessionalthrough the sheer nonpro ism of it: the graininess of the video transfer, the waveriness of the camerwork, the rawness of the lighting en this and the overblo though, seems to be getting national and harder to find, to say nothing of less and less happy when you find it.

And why not? The camera loves her. The director clearly loves her. (Who needs Gong Li?) Why shouldn't the schoolteacher fall in line? Well: "This teacher is out of our class," warns granny. But the flashback structure, with a present-day frame in black-and-white and a running narration, removes all suspense, leaving only pretty landscapes, pretty sentiments, and that pretty face. Amores Perros — The Traffic route to Amorea Perros — The Traffic route to "complexity" three interlocked storylines under one umbrella. All of them, set alike in Mexico City, have to do with one kind or another of love, and all of them involve dogs and varying degrees of crulety thereto. The one point of intersection shared by all three is the high-velocity car collision that opens the action and that recurs three more times, from three points of view, at different junctures in each of the stories different junctures in each of the stories. The first and lengthiest of these, treating of dogfights, stickups, sibling rivalry, and intrafamilial infidelity, is so unrelentingly harsh, brutal, ugly, squalid, etc., that first-time filmmaker Alejandro Gonzalez l'arritu was all but guaranteed to be branded "passionate." His disinclination to hold the camera steady — his surrender intended to form of comments of the contract to form the contract of the properties. instead to forms of cinematic palsy and paroxysm — tends to confirm his fervor. Measure — A tale of revenge told in reverse. To put it like that is not to suggest the movie goes literally in reverse motion, with people walking backwards and asying 'Olich' instead of 'Hello, although that in fact is the method of the opening scene: a Polaroid snapshot pers sucked beach into the carriers, and a speet curtifuley jumps up into the chamber of a handgue, but this caniers, and a speent cutriding jumpa up into the chamber of a handgan, But this backwards in time. After that, the scene (in opposite order of control order order of control order arbitrarily in mid-course, so that we join arbitrarily in mid-course, so that we join them in medias res and must wait until the ensuing scene to find out how we reached that point. Still another difference, slightly soiling the purity of the concept, is that the scenes are separated by black- and-white interpolations (for explanatory purposes, mostly) of indeterminate chronology, and there's a heavy dose of verbal recapitulation right before the finish. This arrative technique proves to be a true test of your powers of concentration: a good thing in and of itself. You have to pay close attention. And you have to do what the hero himself is unable to do: to remember what came before. The trick of the thing what came before. The trick of the thing— the inspiration and justification for the ass-backwards order of procedure — is the hero's peculiar 'condition,' as he refers to it, whereby he is incapable of forming new memories ever since the head injury he sustained while his wife was getting raped and murdered. Admittedly the movie is something of a stunt, a sleight of hand. The reverse-order gimmick could only work in concert with the blank-memory gimmick copycast beware. This is a one-of-a-kind whatchamacallit designed for one use only, one time only. (Though a reverse-order sequel, strange to say, is not unimizing in than properly. It does not so job. It can have

With a Friend Like Harry — Fine French thriller centered around the self-anointed "liberator" of a (literally) harried family man. Admittedly the move is slow to the boiling point, and in truth never really rises above a simmer. Any impatience with it, however, would be a reflection more on Hollywood brainwashing than on filminaker Dominik Moll's control of the property of With a Friend Like Harry - Fine tension. It's true enough that he observes no regular schedule of thrills, fills no standard quota of them, and in any event standard quota of them, and in any event favors the fisson over the electroshock. But all of that is just tangible evidence of fabled French taste. With Sergi Lopez, Laurent Lucas, Mathilde Seigner, Sophie Guillemin. 2000.

Can Diego County Fair, 1948. Six years later, Del Mar got to put its name on the annual event. Two years from now it will be known as the San Diego County Fair once again. It's indeterminable when the "Gay Way" (see photo) became known as the "Midway," but don't expect another name change too soon.

The scene is a two-story home set along two rows of similar homes with siding falling away from structures, dusty, parched squares of diri intended to be lawns, but only weeks ago were ponds of mud miring tricycles, cheap baskethalls, and cinderholeck elevating junk care. An delery Latina greets the firemen and nods to aman stretched out on a bench in front of the property. He is pockmacked, effinionisting, eyes closed, and he clutches some possessions. I hear him tell one of the paramedics (whom Dillard calls Arnold because he wears that Terminator crew cut and verap-around shades) that the patient is 46 years old.

"What so no here?" I ask.

"Whattya got here?" I ask.
"Nothing," says Dillard. "He just got discharged [from Paradise Valley], and he got nowhere to live. He needs a ride back to the hospital." The man in question flutters his eyes, and I see the whites of them are the color of nicotine-stained

A wince crossed Patrick's face as he heard the thud and tinkle of heavy glass bouncing, then breaking, on pavement. Liam, our four-year-old, had snatched a set of shot glasses from the liquor cabinet; he fancied them the perfect homes for a gaggle of soil-crusted worms he had excavated from the backyard. As he ran across the patio to show Daddy his miniature occustem, his face following with miniature ecosystem, his face glowing with enthusiasm, the glasses slipped from his hands. The worms plummeted to their deaths amid the lacerating shards. Those shards also cut at Patrick's heart — he had inherited the sho more traditional modus operandi.

2 I popped into Tableware International downtown. The shelves displayed a handsome, beveled, clear-glass, two-ounce Oxford liquor shot glass ($2.75); thick, clear glass, hort one-and-a-quarter-ounce shot glasses abeled "whiskey," with white marker line

($2.75); clear, short, plain shots ($2.75); and a variety of tequila glasses, some with tinted Mexican glass ($3.25). Manager Michael Holliday told me "these colored ones are the one they use down in Mexico. They take old Coke bottles and recycle them. Up here, we use more of a standard shot glass. However, some places, if it's a really expensive tequila, will ried a four-glass set of clear, tall, slender one-and-a-half-ounce shot glasses ($4.99). Their simple lines enticed me, but they just weren't special enough to replace Grandpa's glasses. By now, I was ready to literally go for broke, so I made one last stop at Macy's Home Store in Mission Valley. I marched right over-($3.95 each). Ocean Beach Antique Mall across the street resembled its neighbor in the shot glass department. Space 20 had about 50 clear glasses, location and liquor-themed ($1.25-$1.50) and space 50 carried 40 or 50 glasses with location themes ($3 each). Easing back into my to the Waterford Crystal section, and there it was: the West Hampton shot glass ($49). Its tulip shape, hexagonal base, and soft, rounded scores won my heart. Sandy, the sales associate, told me this was the only one in stock. "We usually have just one. If you want the glass or glasses for a particular occasion you should order it ahead of time. Our

We Don't Want

Any More Surprises

Our first guinea pig didn't last very long. My husband Jack and I bought it in April as an and I bought it in April as an Easter present for our five chil-dren. Our girls, Rebecca, Angela, and Lucy, loved her, Jack and I watched them close-ly to make sure they didn't love her too much. A couple of years ago, we had a cat that the girls never let alone. When the girs never let atone. When the cat began urinating all over our house, we put him outside. He ran away. After vowing never to own another pet, I relented. We bought the guinea pig to teach the girls to care responsibly for respiration.

BY ANNE ALBRIGHT

The girls named the new animal Chocolate Chip. For the first few days after we brought Chocolate Chip home from Petco, we let the girls take turns holding her. While a five-minute timer ticked off each girl's turn, one girl and then the next sat quietly on the couch and craded Chocolate Chip in her lap. They croned and sang to her. Chocolate Chip sat quietly. She and sang to fier. Cincolate Cup sat quietly. She seemed docilie, sometimes downright lethargic. One afternoon, six-year-old Angela held Chocolate Chip. Angela paused as she stroked the guinea pig's silly brown fur. "What's this lump, Daddy?" Angela asked.

"What lump?" Jack walked over to the cuch and felt a prot on Chocolate Chiri back

"What lump?" Jack walked over to the couch and felt a spot on Chocolate Chip's back just below her neck. "I don't know," he told Angela. "Maybe we should call Petco and ask them what it might be.

The woman at Petco told us to bring the guinea pig back to the store. "It might be some sort of parasite," she hypothesized. "She's too young to have a tumor."

We loaded the kids into the van and drove

We loaded the kids into the van and drove to Petco. While we waited, a kind woman named Olivia examined Chocolate Chip's lump. "I don't know what this is," she told us. "I'll take her to the vet and see if they can tell me. In the meantime, you can have another guinea pig, or you can wait to find out if you can have this one back."

The girls voted to wait for Chocolate Chip.
Angela cried on the way out to the car. She and her sisters prayed for Chocolate Chip that night when we went to bed. "What's wrong with Chocolate Chip?" two-year-old Johnny asked

"She has an 'owie' on her back," Jack explained.

"Will she get better?" Johnny asked.

"Will see get Detter: Johnship Banker."
We hope so."
A few days later, Olivia called our house.
'Chocolate Chip has a fungus, 'she told Jack over the phone. 'Because you guys have a lot of kids and she would be held a lot, you probably shouldn't take her back."

shouldn't take her back."

Jack paused to digest the news. "Is the fungus something that the kids might have been exposed to by holding her?" he asked.

"Well," Olivia said, "are they showing any

The girls nodded in agreement. "We each held her, and she seems to like us," Rebecca

"We named her Cinnamon," Angela

Cinnamon waddled around her cage and ate the guinea pig food we put in her bowl.

When we came home from dinner on Mother's Day, the kids ran out into the backyard to eat Otter Pops for dessert. Angela paused by Cinnamon's cage. "There's something in the cage with Cinnamon," Angela announced. "It looks like a baby."

"There's not a baby in the cage," I said as I walked over to look.

I walked over to look.

But Angela was right. There was a baby guinea pig in the cage. There were three baby guinea pigs in the cage. They lay still. Their eyes were closed. When Jack reached his hand into the cage to check on the babies, they were cool to the touch. "I'm afraid they're dead," he tolo the girls

All the girls cried. We buried the three All the gurls cried. We buried the three babies in a quiet corner of our backyard and said a prayer. I tried to call Petco. "First they sell us a guinca pig with a fungus," I furmed to Jack, "then they sell us one that's pregnant and has three stillborn babies." Petco was closed. When Jack called the next day, the manager apologized and offered us another guinea pig.

"You don't understand," Jack told him. "We don't want another guinea pig. We just don't want any more surprises."
