

Donna and Eugene

How long have you been a couple?

Donna: Since the summer of '75.

How did you meet?

Donna: The first time we met, Eugene followed me into the Little Chef restaurant and asked me if he could buy me a malted. But I didn't want to be committed for a whole malted 'cause a malted cost two bucks, so I said, "No, but you can buy me a cup of coffee," cause a cup of coffee was a quarter, cause I figured for a quarter even if I just let the guy sit by me and be nice to him, that's worth a quarter. And I had already planned to give the wrong phone number; if he asked me for it. So he asked me for my phone number, and that was the end of that. Two weeks later I saw him on the beach — I didn't realize it was the same guy — and he was playing his guitar. And this time, I guess cause I'm a music fan, the muse in me was all a sudden interested in him even though 1 had not been interested in him without the guitar. So I sat there and listened to him play, and it was like he was playing all his songs just to me. It was like from his heart to my heart. We fell in love and we've been together ever since that day.

Do you remember it different?

Eugene: Well, I remember in regards to the malted — I knew you really wanted a malt. I knew the game you were playing. And as I was about halfway through my malfed, you were done with your coffee, and I had to make a decision. Do I ask her, "Are you sure you don't want a malted?" And I thought, "No, I'm not gonna play this game. You asked for coffee; you got coffee." And then, in my memory, we had made plans to meet at the place that I was staying later that night, but I had a chance to play a gig with my cousin at a club called Elmer's in Kensington. So I put a note for her on wy door in case she did show up.

As an eight-year-old girl, I was molested by a male "friend of the family" who literally lived "down the street" in Spring Valley. Although several young children in the neighborhood were molested, he was not prosecuted. So I read with interest your coverage of the child molestation topic ("Not Only the Man Down the Street," July 12). But add this to the many obstacles mentioned (difficulty keeping track of molesters, lack of psychological help for male victims who become perpetrators, gross under-reporting of the crime, etc.): the STILL INAPPROPRIATE attitude of many in law enforcement.

Seven years ago I was told by two psychologists that legally I, as an adult, could still file charges. After some re-search, I located the perpetrator's address and know that he is still living but still not registered as having com-mitted sex crimes. My goal was to at least have him regi-stered as a pedophile. As advised, I called my local police department, which at the time was in the city of Lafayette (Northern California). Contrary to all supposed "ad-vances" in the treatment of to take the complaint. Again, contrary to all supposed "ad vances" in the treatment of molestation victims, he seemed to question whether I had been a "real victim" or one who consented"!!!! His treatment of me as an adult was at least as traumatizing as the treatment I received as a child. It is extremely difficult for most victims of sex crimes to go over the details in a report to anyone, let alone a stranger, ecially a male police officer especially a male ponce offices who is not sympathetic. But I thought at least it was done. Later I was notified by the Lafavette Police Department that they had changed their minds about taking the com-plaint and would now prefer that I make the complaintthat I make the complaint-where the crime took place, in Spring Valley, California — not that they would send the report I had already made to the Spring Valley Police De-partment, but that I would need to call and file a report with an officer there.

Again contrary to all sup-sed "advances" in the treatment of molestation victims, my calls to the Spring Valley Police Department were NOT EVEN RETURNED. Not even one call, not even a shred of interest was shown.

I tried another option and called the police station in Quebec, Canada, where this pedophile now resides. The attitude was disgusting and my overall experience dis-heartening to say the least Haven't people in law en forcement heard the statistics about repeat child moles-tation crimes? Why do they appear to think it a waste of time at any point? If a pedo time at any point? If a pedo-phile is still breathing, he is probably still molesting! If he doesn't have the opportunity, must admit I was intrigued by your last issue's cover story.

"Not Only the Man Down the Street" (July 12), It initially seemed to treat the unbeliev ably volatile topic of child sex expect from the Reader. That is, until I reached page 38, where your "expert," Dr. Mic-cio-Fonseca, bludgeons the definition of "pedophile" and mistakes "hebraphile" (one whose interests include the study of the Hebrew language) with hebephile (one who is sexually attracted to pubescent/ adolescent humans); or per-haps it was the esteemed Mr. Larson who committed these grave errors. No matter, as he continues throughout pages 40 and 41 to lump pedophiles in the same despicable group as mo

The Ted and Norm show The older brother of La folla high-tech mogul Ted Waitt is making news in Forbes maga-zine, but it isn't for selling computers. Norman Waitt Jr. helped Ted found Gateway Computers in an lowa barn 16 years ago. But af-ter they hit the jackpot, the brothers started battling, and Norm left the company in 1991 with $10 million and a 45 percent ownership stake. "For my brother, Gateway is like an alter ego — he sees him-self as Gateway," Norm told Forbes earlier this year. "Gateway became a series of meetings. It stopped being fun." Though Norn subsequently sold off much of his Gateway stock, he's still worth a cool billion dollars. Turning to Hollywood, Norm began dab-bling in movies and records with mixed success. He produced the yet-to-be-released Double Whammy, a $5 million movie about a cop with a back problem, featuring Elizabeth Hurley as a chire practor. His Blair Witch Project soundtrack album sold 75,000 copies and he's planning a project with David Crosby. But last month, Forbes reports, Norm was slapped with a lawsuit by his entertain-ment company's recently fired president, David Kronemyer, charging that his dismissal was motivated by the discovery of Norm ordid sexcapades" with a female associate. Waitt countercharge that Kronemyer was embezzling funds, which Kronemyer dem The magazine says a hearing is set for July 30.

Skateboarding is not a crime That controv new "Active Physics" San Diego city schools curriculum, under fire by critics who question its rigor, is causing a small uproar or another front. Among other "learning supplies" recently delivered to each school in the program was a load of skateboards. "It has come to our attention that there is a rumor regarding the assumed use of these skateboards by students and related safety issues," say. a memo to principals from Mary Hopper, an assistant to the dis-trict's chancellor of education, Anthony Alvarado "Should your ecive questions, please clarify that the skateboards are not to be used by students, and will only be used by the teacher for purposes of conducting scientific demonstrations, specifically in the teach ne of Newton's Third Law of Motion. As in the case with chemiing of Newton's Lind Law of Motion. As in the case with chemi-als and other science equipment, the teacher is responsible to se-curely store the skateboards when not in use." — Assemblywoman Christine Kehoe has begun to turn her membership on the asembly's insurance committee into political gold, reports Cal formia Worker's Comp Advisor. Body at War with Itself

By Robert Kumpel

r. Milan Brandon is San Diego's longest-practicing allergist. Since leaving the Navy in 1959, he has treated more than a person will come in with a severe hives reaction, and if you just treat that patient as an allergic problem, they will take a long time to get over it.

If it were a true shellfish-al lergy reaction, it would clear up in 24 hours. So if you get a reaction to food that hangs on, be suspicious. It's because it's been tainted with bacteria,

30,000 patients. His son, Donald, also a physician with an interest in allergies, practices with him at their Third Av enue office in Banker's Hill. Brandon has seen a good deal of innovation in treating allergies over the years, but he doesn't quite buy the popular belief that allergies are on the you're reacting to the popcorn, when you're really reacting to whatever oil was used in popping it. Some of these oils are old, and you never know how long that popcorn has been sitting ound before it was popped. Don't always think that every reaction is an allergy. When we skin-test these people to these things, very often the skin-test is negative because they have a toxic reaction to other things. So someone will have a reaction to shellfish, and we'll skin-test them, and if they break out, we know that they're allergic to it. But if they have that toxic-allergic reaction and we skin-test them and find out it's negative, you

The problem children have with milk and dairy products is usually the development of antibodies that lead to an allergic reaction. "It's primarily a problem with children. Let's say a mother is unable to nurse right away, and cow's milk is given to the baby. So the baby has no antibodies, at the time, against the cow's milk and has no allergic reaction. Then the mother is able to produce and starts nursing the baby. After she stops nurs ing and gives the baby milk. the baby reacts immediately to the cow's milk because it's

"There's not necessarily a risc in the instances of aller gies, but there is more awareness. Because of the media, the public has learned a lot that they wouldn't have otherwise learned. The problem now is that we're emphasizing food allergies and not putting enough emphasis on toxic allergic reactions." According to Brandon. toxic allergic reactions are commonly mistaken as food allergies. "Take shellfish, for instance," he explains. "They're a very common cause of hives and other allergic reactions. but a lot of times the reaction is not to the shellfish, but to the shellfish being tainted. So or some kind of degradation has taken place." Discerning true alleres, reactions from toxic reactions is usually measured by the patient's response to treatment "If you buy some peanuts and you get an acute allergic reaction with hives and it comes on very quickly and you treat it as an allergic reaction and the patient gets over it quickly — that's an allergy. Now, let's pretend those peanuts had a lot of aspervillus mold on them. The mold is in the powder, and that mold causes a toxic allergic reaction, which takes longer to get over. When you go buy popcorn in a theater and you get a severe can be pretty sure that they vere reacting to something Mistaken reactions are not limited to toxic reactions. Allergies can easily be misidentified. "Soybeans are a common offender. Soybeans are in so many foods, and people will eat stuff that has soybean in it, and they'll think they're reacting to another ingredient, when, in fact, they are reacting to the sovbean. When they go eat something else that doesn't have the ingredient they thought they were allergic to and break out in hives. they don't think of looking at the label and seeing what the ingredients are in that prodhad this long interval to de velop the antibodies to the cow's milk. So even though the cow's milk did not bother it in that first week of life, the antibodies have since been developing against that milk. So when the baby is exposed to the cow's milk later on, it immediately reacts. The longer the interval between exposures, the more time there is to develop antibodies and the more risk of allergy."

Allergic reactions are one of the ways the body has to get rid of a foreign "offender." The runny nose, sneezing, and watery eyes associated with breathing in pollen are just the espite boasting one of the nation's sun-niest climates, despite laboring under towering electricity rates, San Diego County isn't home to a single solar energy plant. It's not that we haven't tried. A 20-acre solar farm in Warner Springs produced a small amount of power in the early '80s before t closed in 1985. Also in the '80s, a company called United Energy Corporation, headquartered in Foster City, California, built a solar power plant in Borrego Springs. Forty-five million dollars went into the 178-acre proiect, which was in operation from 1981 to 1984. But it never put any power onto the

Then they started the ethanol production. Then they started talking about using the ponds to grow algae that could be used as a livestock feed supplement. Then it was raising fish in the ponds. There was even talk about having a dairy farm on the site, with the cows walking around among the solar panels. It was too much." Hale worked on the solar farm for the three years it was in operation, plus the following three years, when an attempt was made to turn it into a fish farm raising tilapia for sushi restaurants "If I had been in charge," he says, "I would have built two, maybe three ponds. tion dedicated to promoting as hard as it used to. After all this time, people are coming out with evidence that shows

cow's milk is better than breast

Further complicating the allergy picture are the different kinds of antibodies. "The IGF is the one that gets the most publicity, because it is involved in true, immediate allergic reactions like your immediate reactions to peanuts. shellfish, and so forth. Reac tions that occur within 15 minutes after exposure are related primarily to IGE. They are what are called cytotoxic antibodies. Hemolitic anemia. for instance, is one of them. where certain substances will cause that anemia. It's called cytotoxic because it attacks the red blood cells and makes them burst. Then there's the Type III antibodies, which have to do with the immunecomplex disorders, like serum sickness For instance if you take penicillin today, and you don't get a reaction in 15 or 20 minutes, that means you don't have the IGE antibodies, but. if in a week, you start breaking out in hives and getting aches and pains and joint swelling, that's an immunecomplex reaction. That's a very complicated reaction, and it's one of those self-perpetuating actions that can go

Some people suffer from allergies in reverse. "That's called 'anergy.' That's where you don't react. Let's say you had tuberculosis years ago. and I skin-tested you, and you don't react. That means you have anergy. Very commonly AIDS patients will have that They have such severe immune deficiency that when you skin-test them for TB, not only is the skin-test negative. but their delayed reactivity to a lot of other things is also negative. That person may ve tuberculosis throughout his lungs and his brain and still have a negative skin test because he has anergy. Of course, that's why he dies, be cause he has no immune sys on for weeks or months and be very prolonged. Then there's the Type IV reaction, which is a delayed reaction in which the lymphocytes (cells in lymphatic tissue] and cytokines [extracellular factors that alter and affect other cells! are involved. It's also called a tuberculine reaction. For instance, if a person was exposed to tuberculosis, and you test him with the skin-test, you don't see a reaction in 15 min utes. You'll see it in 24 to 72 hours. Those are the different types of reactions.

when the baby starts drinking mom's milk, the baby starts reacting to corn. A skin-test would be positive for corn There are a lot of misconcentions that we've passed on because of our bias and trying to look for facts and scientific sonally think the RAST test is a great thing. It's finally coming to the fore, even though is that there is a new treatmen

coming out called 'anti-IGE.'

"What's bothering me now

It's a shot you would take ev ery two to four weeks that blocks the allergic antibodies, which sounds fantastic. So no matter what you're allergic to it's blocking the allergic reaction. But what I think is going to happen is that doctors wil draw blood on their patients, RAST test it, find out what the patient is allergic to, tell them to avoid this, that, and the other thing. But instead of giving them allergy shots to build up their immunity to what they're allergic to, it'll be 'Oh, I'll just give you anti-IGE shots, because that'll cover the waterfront.' So you won't have to have allergy shots. The pubc needs to know that anti-IGE does not stimulate immunity against the things to which you're allergic. It's simply keeping your IGE anti bodies from reacting. I don't think we have any evidence to show that the risk of allergic than the risk of taking allergy shots. In other words, you can get anaphylactic reactions to of the problems we have with transplant patients. We interfere with normal immune mechanisms so much in trying to help the patient toler ate the organ, and that's one of the risks. This applies to treating several forms of cancer and how far we can go tem to fight back. That's one with chemotherapy too." During the 1960s the ma jority of Brandon's patients were children, but with the growth of pediatrics, almost none of his patients are chil dren anymore. Treating kids forced him to change his methods of testing - a precursor to the more advanced methods now available "When it comes to small children, you have to be very care ful about skin-testing them When I did skin-test little children - like one-yearolds - I had enough trouble with severe allergic reactions that I immediately abandoned it. I skin-tested a baby about a year old and got an anaphylactic [extreme shock] reaction to milk. We treated it and everything went fine. I still take care of people in that family, so I know they don't hold it against me, but I learned that wasn't the right thing to do. I decided it would be better to work with elimi nation measures and diet. In those days we did tests by was of 'passive transfer.' That's where you take blood from the allergic individual, separate the serum, and inject it under the skin to a nonallergic patient and mark the spots where you injected the person Then you skin-test into the spots with dog hairs, dust, feathers, and so forth. The reason we abandoned the passive-transfer test was the worry about transferring diseases like hepatitis or, nowadays, HIV and so forth. We always tried to find a family member to be the nonallergic individual. Nobody does that today except in research at universities Nowadays we have the RAST test, in which we measure the allergy antibodies through the blood. Now we measure the antibodies directly in the serum of the blood. This is very, very good and very safe. The dis advantage is that you get more

'false negatives' with it. A person may be allergic to something, but the RAST test may come out negative. On the other hand, the disadvantage of the skin test is that you have can see doctors saying, 'Gee, if it's that good, I don't have to do any allergy tests! I'll just give them anti-IGE shots!'

We've got to work on things that stimulate the immune lergy antibodies. The antihistamines and all the other medications we take, the anti-IGE are all what I call 'symptomatic treatment' or 'passive treatment.' God has a reason for each of the immune processes in our body, so that when we suppress IGE, we're allowing something else to One of Dr. Brandon's most enduring lessons in treating reactions came during his days at USC Medical School, when he worked at Claremont Community Hospital. "I was driving to the hospital to do rounds on my patients, and these men were working on the road with tractors. When I arrived, the intercom an-emergency, and they needed a doctor right away. So I responded, and it turned out to be one of the workers on a tractor. He had gone through a beehive and over 100 bees had stung him. He was literally dead. He was completely profuse with perspiration and completely white. He was as wet as you could be with perspiration. His blood pressure and pulse were zero. I got adrenaline right away, and I shot it into his heart. His heart started going right away — in the old days resuscitating was different. He responded nicely to the adrenaline, and we were able to get his blood pressure up, and in a few hours he was greatly improved.

"Now you would ask, 'Was that an allergic reaction or was it not?' Well, there's two or three things involved. Number one, he was swarmed by bees with bee venom. But there also had to be a toxic component. I've always thought that with every bee sting, there's not just an aller gic reaction involved, but a toxic factor. Now you hear all this publicity about 'killer bees' and much more about their toxic effect. I think that the real problem is that the nice bees that are producing honey for us aren't interested in stinging us, whereas the killer bee is much more interested in stinging us. His occupation is different - I'm not an etymologist. But I'm not sure that they're any more dangerous than any other bee: they're just more likely to sting you and more likely to swarn on you. I think toxic reactions are just as important as allergic reactions. We shouldn't assume that everything we see is allergic or that everything we see is toxic. Very often, it's a combination of the two."

tax dollars into an alternative power project, which had the possibility of returning on their investments; and United Energy Corporation was happy to have the funding to put its solar energy ideas into practice. There were no losers in the deal - except the In ternal Revenue Service, whom Ravenscroft blames for the failure of the Borrego solar farm. "The IRS attacked it and disallowed all the tax credits. That's why it failed, because the IRS destroyed the manufacturer and disallowed investors' tax credits. My investors didn't lose because I fought the IRS for five years. The other people, about two thirds of the money or so. went along and settled with a trustee under the court. This trustee basically wanted to put the company out of business. and he worked with the IRS to get the thing destroyed. He made a lot of money, and the IRS destroyed a lot of people.

strong enough to think he could win on the concept of what he was trying to do."

Ravenscroft continues, "in December of 1984, the IRS issued illegal public announcements in newspapers up and down California that UEC was under investigation and that they were going to disallow the credits and everything else. Well, until it goes through a court case, you can't do that; the IRS didn't "What happened was,"

have the authority to do that. What that did was trigger public opinion against the company. And people who had investments pending started saying, 'I want all my money back.' So the people who made investments in 1984 had to be refunded at the end of the year. This forced the company to lose business. It caused me to lose $6 million worth of business. This forced the company into Chapter 11 bankruptcy. Under that Chapter 11, they were trying to reorganize the company. The bankruptcy court made [Lambert] debtor in possession, and as debtor in possession, you can reor ganize your whole company. He had $6 million of debt and $100 million of accounts receivable under the contracts for the equipment, which were long-term contracts. So he started taking that income and retrofitting the equipment. What happened then is, one of the creditors went to the court and convinced them that maybe we ought to have a trustee in charge came in — I think it was a set-up deal, personally; I think he had met with the IRS before - and went out there to liquidate the company. He made a settlement with the IRS in which he agreed to discontinue the lawsuits against the IRS, and that was the end of the project."

After the solar farm died. Ravenscroft, trying to make something out of the project and generate a return for his investors, bought the land and tried to develop the tilapia farm. "I worked with some people from the University of Arizona on it. We were trying to save the project for a many investors as possible by turning it into an incomeproducing fish farm. But we didn't have the capital to do everything we needed to do. and it just kind of failed."

A little over a year ago, Ravenscroft let the property go into foreclosure. The Bank of Stockton took over ownership and sold 67 acres to Stuart Resor in June 2000 for $400 an acre. Since then, Resor has gone about the task of cleaning the place up in preparation for its next life as a recreational vehicle park and tent campground. He has bought a single-wide mobile home, which will become a caretaker's residence. And with the help of a team of local laborers and contractors. Resor has removed ten 45-foot Dumpsters of brush and debris, improved the road, stripped the old lab building down to the studs it will become a museum someday - repaired fencing, and gathered thousands of blocks of Styrofoam that once buoyed solar collectors. "I was able to give away most of that," Resor said. "One guy was insulating an airplane the project, Resor, who has been camping in Borrego for over 30 years, says he's surprised at how slow and expensive the project has been. "I'll have over $200,000 invested in it by the time I have any campers out here. First, I'm going to get the caretaker's residence buffed out. Then I'm going to start looking for investors, and I'm going to start building the campground. I'd say it will be three years to get all the permits from the county, which will cost anywhere from

STRAIGHT THE HIP

A while ago I was coming home from a job downtown, heading north on the 15. When I got to about Miramar Way, I noticed the temperature dropped what felt like ten degrees Then it seemed to warm up at about Mira Mesa Boulevard again. Other motorcycle riders have commented on this too. What might cause this?

If you can find your thinking cap - if it's not in the laundry or the junk drawer or balled If you can find your findings (app — it is not in the case and you find you added to any under your bed or something — dig it out and put it on. Let's see if we could have figured this out without bothering Matt and the cleves, so what's between Miramar and Mira Mesa? That's roughly the south-north boundaries of the Marine Corps Air Station. Lots of development south and north of there, but in between we have the Southern California revision of wide open spaces, Smills like a clue to me. Let's call the U.S. Weather Service for their take on this microclimate zone.

"Weather Service..."

"Year Weather Service..."

"Yeah, hi. We have a question here. Traveling north on I-15 at night, you get to Miramar Way and -

"...and the temperature drops."
"Well, yeah." Figure they get this question a lot?
"We get this question a lot."
"The answer better have something to do with the Marine base, or I'm out of a job." The answer better have sometiming to do with me Marine base, or i mode of a poly. As luck would have it, it does, During the day, buildings absorb heat; at night they release it. All that dreary Mira Mesa and Kearny Mesa construction radiates more warmth than do the wilds of the air base. The coolness you feel might be enhanced by several caryons west of the base that funned breezes toward the freeway. And cold air sinking down off Miramar Hill might settle in that stretch of freeway as well.

How did it go?"

On the phone is Donna Fox, owner of the San Diego SunFire. The SunFire is a new franchise in the Women's American Football League. The WAFL is a full contact, NFL ball league. The WAFL is a full contact, NFL rules, professional football league with, at last count, 26 football clubs playing in two conferences and five divisions. The SupFire

"How many women showed up?"
"We had 176." Fox's voice is raw, I'd guess she's a dozen paragraphs away from full on laryngitis. "This is indicative of what San Diego has to offer by way of athletes. We have a wide range of women who are into hiking, surfing, swimming, running, you camp name it."

"Still, 176 prospects is an extraordinary

"They were coming out of the woodwork. It was an awesome day. We got super athletes. The tryout was supposed to start at 10:30. Women started lining up before 10:00. They wanted to stretch and get ready. It was like a major competition out there." Fox's voice gives out. I hear nothing, then a raspy. "Most of the ladies had some type of expensions." rience, whether it be college soccer or volleyball or track and field. We had an Indian lady Wide receiver. "I want this woman on our team.

"I want this woman on our team."
Fox laughs, "She's a pretty good ath-lete. We also had a girl who played basket-ball for San Diego State. She came our for quarterback and was quite impressive— throws a nice, tight spiral. She's six feet tall; that's key."
"How far can she throw?"
"Took like 70 o 80 week. Wenttoon."

"Looks like 70 to 80 yards. Very strong. She worked with one of the coaches and he was blown away. She had a nerve problem in her knee, so she wasn't able to move around, but she's recovering from that."

"How long did the tryout go on?"
"We weren't able to get started until 11:30, because we were busy signing up all the girls. They wound up being out there for three and a half hours. The coaches decided to put them through a real workout to see who would last. I was so impressed. It made me feel like, 'Oh, my God; we're going to have an awesome team."

If you'll sign the right wide receiver.
"Did you walk around and say to yourself, There's my center, there's my quarterback, there's my linebacker'?"

"That's all I did all day." Fox produces a string of croaks that I interpret as laugh-ter. "I spent the entire day watching women move through drills. They ran the 40 and move through drills. They ran the 40 and were clocked at two different points: 10 yards and 40 yards. They did strength drills, agility drills, conditioning drills, and position drills for the receivers. The coach had tackling dummies and they did some hitting drills. They'd run 10 yards, go backwards behind a cone, touch it, touch another cone 10 yards away, run up to another cone, catch another quick pass, make a quick turn, and go back.

There were a lot of fast-thinking drills. And to see them do this with...such...skill was like, 'Wow.'

'Anything else surprise you?" We had a huge crowd of people watch ing the drills.

"Friends mothers fathers?" "Kids, moms, dads, husbands—a lot of husbands. I had a lot of husbands who made the initial phone call for their wives. I even had a little girl leave me a message. I called her back. Her mom missed the tryout because she had to work. The little girl went on and on about how her mom was an amazing quar terback. So, her mother is going to send me a tape and if she's anything like her daugh-ter says she is, she's going to get an invite to

Fox's voice is near collapse, I want to get off the phone. "Sounds like you had a good day. "You had to be there to understand how excited and how thrilled everybody was. Everybody felt it was a monumental event for all these women to show up wanting to play tackle football. When I got out of being amazed, I was touched, because I could not get over the fact that I have provided a forum for women to play football. At the end, none of the women would leave. They all wanted to talk. They all wanted to talk about it. They would not leave." Every man I've talked to about the WAFI.

Address: 7309 El Cajon Blvd, La Mesa, 619-463-7005 Year founded: 1983

enior pastor: Dr. Bonis E. Byrd Congregation: 100 Staff: 1 full-time, 15 volunteers Sunday school enrollment: 30

Annual budget: $100,000 Singles program: no Diversity: mostly black, some white Dress: dressy Services: Sunday, 10:00 a.m.

Last Sunday I arrived at Christian Compa Center while Bonnie Byrd, Reverend Bonis E. Byrd's wife, lectured her Sun-day-school class on the Book of Revelation Racism, she told us, was just one more sign that we were in the Latter Days. As was the "crim inal decline" of public education.

"And Ebonics,

Bonnie Byrd railed "Ebonics! Who ever heard of such a thing? Tell me, how in the world would you ever get a job talk-ing like that? How many people in the world actu ally speak Ebonics? Who could understand you Ebonics is just some ghetto mess they cooked up in

The Sunday-school class responded with "Amen!" "Uh-huh!" and "Preach it!" That Bonnie Byrd was white, and her listeners black, lent her comments a certain edge. Bonnie Byrd ended her lesson with a prayer. "I bind up the spirits of darkness in all your home and cast them beneath my feet." A few minutes later morning worship began and we spent 45 minutes singing gospel-inspired choruses that didn't much resemble those sung in white churches. The melodic lines were longer, the rhythms were more complex, and they required fancy embellishments.

The sophisticated charuses were just one of the church's surprises. Christian Compassio ter sits on a quiet block of El Cajon Boule La Mesa. The church's facade is 20 feet wide, bland, easy to miss. Inside, the 4000-square-foot sanctuary is decked out with brilliant halogen lights and state-of-the-art digital cameras and recording equipment.

Christian Compassion Center belongs to the Word-Faith movement, which means its message is often of the pray-and-grow-rich variety. Dallasbased televangelist Kenneth Copeland is the bestknown purveyor of Word-Faith theology, and it was Reverend Copeland who, in 1979, caught Rev-erend Byrd's attention. ("I walked into my living room and Reverend Copeland was on the TV," Rev rend Byrd explained to me, "and I asked myself 'Who is that west Texas white-boy preaching the Gospel?' ") Although raised in the Church of God in Christ, the largest black Pentecostal denomination, Reverend Byrd is now given to statements like, "I got my first BMW by picturing it in my soul. Not I drive a Benz. But back then I was driving a Pinto, and I could see my BMW so clearly, it was so real and I could see my now so dearny, it was so reads to me, that my smile was kissing the tips of my ears." That sort of talk irks non-Word-of-Faith evangeticals and Pentecostals. To be fair, Reverend Byrd doesn't engage in it much. When he strides to the podium, he speaks mostly about salvation and leading a God-fearing life. Last Sunday, Rev-erend Byrd told us that "you don't gain knowledge of God at Harvard or at Howard."

He told us he had reservations about black intellectual Cornel West who teaches at Harvard.
"He's a beautifully educated man, and he addresses real issues, real problems. But he has no solutions. Why master the problems when you have no solutions? The reason Professor West doesn't have any solutions is that he doesn't know the One He does not believe like we believe. Our confi dence is in something that the world can't see ing is believing, but the world is wrong. Believ-ing will give substance so that everyone else will see it. Faith is the substance of things hoped for. Dear Aunt Trudy.

My mother goes haywire when someone doesn't thank her for a great meal she's prepared or a generous gift given. I always thought she was an over reactor that leaked negativity. Now I find myself behaving like an exploding desert silo, too, when faced with ingratitude. I recently received a gradua tion notice from a friend's daughter, whom I rarely speak to or see. I got the sweet bachelor of arts recipient a fancy pair of sunglasses. I also drew her a little picture with a funny saying (I'm an artist; my pictures are not trash). Anyway, weeks have gone by and I haven't heard a single thank you, danke, or any other type of peep, and it really bugs me. I don't like that I care so much, counting the weeks I've been abused. I'm bummed that I've turned into my mother, but I genuinely have trou ble with ill-mannered people. They bring my quality of life down.

ENRAGED IN ENCINITAS

Dear Enraged

Isn't it amazing that no matter how many times we wrench ourselves into a twist and swear we'll never act like our parents, we end up emulating them anyway? When a present you send isn't acknowledged, gift-giving is robbed of delight. The giver is left hanging, dogged by uncertainty and emptiness. Your good deed becomes like an unsolved crime a sad memory, an irritant, an event with no closure, a gesture unanswered. Conventional wisdom offers two solutions.

1. You can call the grad's parents and innocently inquire if the gift ever arrived. This is tantamount to asking for a thank you, and many people don't find solicited acknowledgments satisfying. But if it will make you feel better, put pride aside and call. Then go out and do something nice for someone else, preferably a being who'll appreciate it.

2. Say nothing. Construct a little mantra for yourself and repeat it till you feel your resentment fall away. Something along the lines of: "A generous action is its own reward." As another proverb says (it sounds much snappier in the original French), "Hell is full of the ungrateful."

Dear Aunt Trudy,

About a year ago, my boyfriend and I bought a house together in the town where I grew up and have worked very hard to make it our home, which I love. He's a writer and has been a consultant to a major publisher of spiritual books located in a state halfway across the country. This has meant that he has had to travel for long stretches for much of the time that we've been in the house together. Although I miss him when he's away, I've grown accustomed to his absences, and I confess that at times I enjoy them. I work as a technical writer for the nearby university and do much of my work from home. Now my boyfriend's employer has offered him a permanent iob that will require him to relocate. He sees this as his dream job and wants very much to take it and for me to move with him. I'm in a quandary. I love him and want him to be happy, and I want to be with him, but I don't want to move. The move would mean I would have to start over in a new town, where I won't know anyone and won't have a job. We would have to sell our house in the city where I've lived my entire life and where I'm close to my family and friends. I don't even know how to begin to make this decision. Please help.

Dear Torn.

O Little Cupcake, I do not envy you. Choosing between a job. home, and loved ones to which you're attached and your boyfriend sounds like agony. If you work at home mostly as it is, would the university you write for consider allowing you to telecommute, maybe part-time, if you move, or maybe just till you find something in the new locale? Would your boyfriend's publishing company be willing to use their contacts to help you find a job you might like in the new area, as part of the conditions for his accepting their offer? You may want to visit this new city as part of a fact-finding mission before you make your final decision, to see if you think you could be happy there. Also, remember that if you decide to move, that decision can be reversible. If you give moving a chance but are irredeemably miserable, you could conceivably move back. This dilemma is about what constitutes home for you, in the best sense of the word. Is it this town where you've been all your life, your nals and your family, this house that seems so precious to you, or is it this man you adore?

The cat relieves itself beneath the vine. At home I noticed that my favorite wine had a musty taste. I smelled east Texas roads to shacks that housed fambleach when two houses away a neighbor lilies of ten.

did laundry. I knew when another neighbor smoked a cigar.

At night, when the air was more humid, ny neighborhood grew more intimate. There ire many apartments crowded with working class and almost poor. From their windows billowed the smell of dinners. Old pork. Fatty ground beef. And very often, hot does. The aroma so vivid, I could see the taut pink dogs bobbing in a dented roiling pot. I could taste the salty, rubbery meat.

The smell caught me off guard.

When LBI was in the White House, my aunt, a nurse, high on the Great Society, moved to rural east Texas to work with the poor Part of her job was to survey nutrition. She was deep in this project the summer my mother and I visited. I was six years old. We landed in Shreveport, Louisiana, My mother, I remember, wore white gloves. We stepped out of the plane into heat rank with mildew and swamp. I held my mother's hand.

In an old Ford truck my aunt drove us to east Texas. Curled at my mother's side, I listened to my aunt. She talked about red clay east Texas roads. She talked about armadillos and the east Texas people who ate them. She talked about her work, her slow trips down

"These people have strange diseases," my aunt said. Her voice rose over the old Ford's drone, "Pellagra, Shigella, Medieval diseases. Diseases you find in the poorest parts of the

In the summer in east Texas there's not much for a little boy to do. Near my aunt's borrowed house there was a creek, but it No was off-limits. It swarmed with cotton mouths. There were more snakes in th woods. And ticks. To keep me company, a neighbor lent my aunt a baby goat, which I led around on a short rope leash. I walked the baby goat up and down the red clay road, sweat running down my chubby back and thighs

One day my aunt took me with her on her survey work. We drove down a road so narrow that tree branches scraped the old Ford's sides. We came to a house so decrepit that it seemed about to dissolve into the surrounding woods. Moss grew on the roof. The porch sagged low to the ground. A halfdozen blond children, most naked below the waist, tumbled out the front door. Dirty mucous clotted their noses. They were pale. They had a funny smell.

"Mama ain't here," the oldest boy said. "She gone to

"That's OK." my aunt said, waving her clipboard in the air "I just need to ask you kids some questions about what you eat. Apples? Pears?

Oranges? She went down her checklist. No. No. No. Cheese?

"I like okra," one of the little frls said. "On Sunday Mama sometimes makes us hot dogs," the oldest boy volunteered.

"Oooooh, boy! Hot dogs!" his brothers and sisters shouted. They smacked their lips.

They practically danced. "I love hot dogs!" One of the little girls tugged at my aunt's dress. "You gonna buy us some hot dogs?"

I couldn't understand what the fuss was about. The strange children scared me. I told my aunt I wanted to go.

"He talks funny," the oldest boy said, pointing at me.

"You've never heard a California boy before," my aunt said.

As we drove away, I stared at the children through the Ford's rear window. They stood in their cluttered front yard, sunlight bright on their blond hair. From a distance they looked, I thought, a little like elves.

While she drove, my aunt gave me a talk about poverty. "For those kids," she said, "spaghetti is a foreign food. Hot dogs are a treat. That's the only meat their mother can afford." My aunt explained how hot dogs were made from pig lips and "other things we'd just as soon not see." She said most Americans didn't know how many poor people lived in their country. She said most Americans didn't like to think about the poor. "Out of sight, out of mind," she said. "Of course, Americans don't recognize poverty even when it's right under their nose."

We left my aunt a few days later. She stayed in east Texas for several years and eventually tracked the local incidence of leprosy. We left the baby goat tied to my aunt's fence. I guess he wanted to follow me. When we drove away he bleated and kicked. He bit at his rope, trying to break free.

After some awkward conversations brokered by our friends, we agreed to go to the Holiday Ball together. But it was a false start One or the other of us backed out, and we didn't speak again until graduation, where we sat sideby-side, sweating, waiting for our diplomas. Her last name was Wood.

Lately Dan has been involved in a print pro ject that explores the forms and meanings of urinals. He launched the project in 1996 with a perfectly bound artist's book of 18 duotone plates of the Portojohns installed in Washington, D.C., for the Million Man March. "Throughout his-

More recently, Dan has been taking photographs of the Longest Urinal in the World, the 290-foot trough rebuilt each fall by Royal Flush Inc., at the base of the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge on Staten Island in preparation for the New York Marathon. The public urinal, what the Oxford English Dictionary defines as a "building, erection, or enclosure for accommodating persons when requiring to pass urine," is a recent invention dating to the 18th Century. "Families of the California Presidios: 1769-1834"

JUDITH URBAN CAMPBELL MASTER'S THESIS USD, 1998

The Presidio, Max L. Moorhead, University of Oklahoma Press, 1975: Life in California, Alfred Robinson, Da Capo

by Smith LIFE AT THE PRE-SIDIO, Part I Miguel Costanso designed the garrisons of Alta California Unlike the massive, imposing structures of the Middle Ages, Costanso's presidios would never win awards. "Old-world military engi neers," writes Moorhead, "deplored their archaic plans and shoddy construction. even their situation in respect to surrounding topography." But the presid-ios, with walls 10 to 12 feet high and 4 feet thick, "served their purpose well. The defensive capabilities of the frontier presidio were never seriously challenged."

"Presidio" comes from the Roman praesidium, a "fortified garrison of troops." Spain built the coastal presidios to fend off invasion from its major rivals, England and Russia. "The forces sent to hold California against these two nations seem ridiculously small," writes Campbell, and the territory couldn't have been more isolated. Spaniards called it "este ultimo rincón del mundo," the last corner of the world.

Sebastian Vizcaino named the bay after San Diego de Alcalá, on November 12. 1602. When Junipero Serra established 1769 - he kept the name. At first the structure, on Presidio Hill, was "little more than a crude camp in a non-Christian land." San Diego had 23 soldiers (90 memhers of the Serra/Portola expedition died of scurvy). Only 75 soldiers, from San Diego to Monterey, guarded 400 miles of coastline.

Don José Camacho, who visited San Diego in 1778, said the presidio's strength was its two four-pounder cannons. One defended "the open country to the north" (Mission Valley), the other the south. "The presidio wall is all of adobe, having many openings or portholes where one can fight without exposing the body to the enemy." Camacho also said the soldiers worked "constantly" in "repetitive jobs."

Soldiers stationed at the presidios often brought their families. Others intermarried with native women. Soon

Several visitors described the dwellings as "hovels" that leaked badly in winter. Richard S. Whitehead writes, "Obviously such construction left much to be desired when...the wet mud dripped down on the occupants."

The same was true of adobe walls, which eroded in the rain. The San Diego chapel had its walls plasHonoria Tuomey writes. "Adobe is at once the charm and tragedy of the Span-

People slept on plank beds, adobe benches, or on rawhide stretched across wooden frames. In large families, the sons "threw their blankets wherever they liked, outside or on the covered corridor that circled the interior plaza." Families purchased sheets blankets, and pillows when they could afford them. Alfred Robinson, an American, visited San Diego in 1829. "This was to be our home" he wrote, in Life in California, "and though it did not altogether coincide with the idea I had previously formed of it, yet if their walls were cold and their floors damp, their hearts were warm and the abundance of their luxurious entertainment more than compensated for any disappointment."

Dirt floors were "cheap and durable." But floors were also bare, in the early carpets were considered unsanitary." The dampness bred mold and mildew and, like the rawhide in the beds and doors, became a breeding ground for fleas. Robinson complained that all of San Diego"is infested with fleas, and it is a rare thing to find a house without them."

Campbell notes that fleas were one reason why the "neophyte indians burned their huts periodically at the missions and rebuilt new ones." An exit off Interstate 5, at Camp Pendleton, commemorates old San Diego's infestation: Las Pulgas, in Span-

Eugene Yes.

Donna: I didn't recognize him' cause when I first met him, he had his hair all pulled back. He was lookin' all like he was out on the prowd. lookin' for a woman. You know how men get, all duded out. When I saw him on the beach, he was not out to impress anyone. He was just being himself. And that's what I think girls like. Well, at least I do. And after he played an original called "Fortunate Lady," he sang "Oh Donna, Oh Donna" [singing], the Ritchie Vallens song. I didn't think he remembered my name.

Eugene: When I was done, she came up to me and kinda breathlessly handed me a matchbook with her number on it and said, "Please call me." It reminded me of Tiny Tim and Miss Vicki. She put her phone number in his ukulele.

Donna, could you describe Eugene for me?

And could you describe Donna?

Eugene: I respect her, and I respected her when I met her. She's a lovely person who is oriented towards spirituality, which I see as her strongest point, which would override any of her weaker points in the long run. And I'd say that our 25 years have proven me correct. She's a wonderful mother. We have two children together. And she's been a wonderful mother to children I have from previous relationships that don't live with us at this time. I would say that over 25 years I have been more fortunate than not to have her as my wife.

Okay, onward to your last disagreement. What happened and how did you get through it?

Donna: We're not really over it all the way. It was last Sunday night and Eugene and I had had good sex. He has to take Valium at night to relax. t helps him sleep. He's an insomniac. So on Wednesday night — and I've noticed this beforewhen he takes his Valium, when he takes it before our sex, he has a hard time getting an erection. And that's not much fun for me; I can't bring him to a climax. I could do it from now to forever and it wouldn't work. So I was complaining the last couple of times this happened. It's frustrating and it nakes me feel inadequate. So on Sunday I noticed he had a nice erection and it responded really well and he came nice and I felt secure about my womanhood. And I asked him, "Honey, did you take your Valium?" And he said, "No." And I said. Thank you for not taking it before we had our sex," 'cause I thought that he was doing it out of consideration for me. It really meant a lot to me, and I really enjoyed the sex a lot better. So what does he do? The first thing out of his mouth was,

"Well, I'll take a Valium next time." How could he say that when I just said what I said? And I didn't want to touch him after that. And that's where we've been pretty much since then. Eugene: Well, it's kind of ironic because, first off, what it led to was that I didn't want to touch her because it would have been her turn [laughs] It was really a misunderstanding, and I explained it. And I'm going to explain the misunderstand ing again. I am a person with formal education in psychopharmacology and I monitor substances and my reaction to the substances when I take them. Now, although she did quote me correctly, this is how something taken out of context can be misunderstood. What I said was, "Next time I'm gonna take a Valium." However, she got so overwrought by that statement and what it meant to her that she did not hear the rest of what I said even after repeating it numerous times and trying to set the record straight. In my mind, as a scientist, the Valium was immaterial because a Valium — which surprised me many years ago — Donna: No, no, no. He thinks it makes him better. But I'm the woman, and it does not make you better. Eugene: The first thing that happened was that I got an erection when I took the Valium, within five minutes, which surprised me. I would have expected the opposite.

Donna: With or without me

Eugene: Without you. It relaxed my autonounceroous system enough so that those sexual feelings started to flow. So it actually helped me get an erection. This could be confusing, so!
want to try to keep it going in a linear fashion. My feeling was that the problem came from the fact hat for four nights before the date night I had keep a mild sleep aid, which I don't always take. Now, you have to remember that this erection problem is very intermittent, maybe in 25 years —

Donna: Only when you take Valium, believe

Eugene: It's happened three times a year, if that. My attitude is that I can't get hung up on that and get worried about it because psychologically I would be starting something that could cause met oned Viagra next time because I would start to believe I was impotent. So for me to prove my point I would refrain from taking the phenothizzine for at least two or three days before the day, but I would still take the Valium. And if there was no problem with erection and climaxing and what have you, that would prove that I was correct, that it wasn't the Valium.

Domar But that wasn't the first time that I had had a problem with you taking a Valium before our date instead of at bedtime when you had not taken the other medication. So we agree to disagree, I guess, on that. He thinks it helps: I think it hurts. A lot of times we agree to disagree on things.

Eugen: I did acquiesce at one point. I did say to her, because she's more important to me than the damn experiment—and let me interject that we are talking about a 5-milligram Valium. I agreed not to take the Valium cause she's more important. "And if it'll make you happy, I would not take the Valium on the next date night."

Donna: But I was mad by then, and it didn't matter what he said [laughs].

Eugene: This is her weak point. Once she gets mad and gets knocked off — like a bird on a wire. Once she falls off the wire. then it's an excuse in some kind of way to stay mad. There is no resolution.

Donna: It's too late. Eugene: There is no intellect at that point. She will just respond to the emotion until she calms down. Experience has also shown me that she will calm down in 24 hours, sometimes sooner, sometimes longer. Donna: You've done that too, but I do it the most.

Sounds like it has been resolved. What do you think?

Eugene: It has faded out, ran its course. I mean how big a thing is it really things that could happen in life, this is like a grain of sand next to the Rock of Gibraltar of possibilities.

But it is a good example of the interactions that have resulted in a 25-year union, wouldn't you say:

Eurene: Yes, and it has pretty much dissipated. Tonight is our date night, so if we don't have sex. it won't be because of this. It

Eugene: Well, that depends on whether the underdynamics improved In other words, the dynamic of the disagreement itself really doesn't make any difference one way or another. It could get resolved, and that's important - the fact that it does get resolved to the point that the relation ship goes on, that is. But whether it makes any improvement in the future, that depends. For example, if Donna would say, "You know, that does kind of make sense, that if I get knocked off the wire. I let my emotions run away with me and at that point I can't really hear, listen, and I'm unable to understand any response that Eugene does give me." Donna: That's because ber what the question was I feel like some things keep coming up because they weren't fully resolved. If the had been completely resolved, they wouldn't keep coming up. In a way, one reason things keep coming up with Eugene and I they may get closer to a resolution each time. If noth ing else, you've expressed your opinion. Sometimes it's just about getting to a point where you can give each other enough space to agree to disagree and be happy with that.

Eugene: Without being disagreeable

Donna: And you get to a point where your mate is more important than being right. So I don't always have to be right.

So it's not necessarily swept under the rug sim-ply because you were not wayed, nor does it have to be a festering thing that destroys a relationship. It can be a strengthening thing because you see that, Hey we can even have unnesolve things and we are still okay. What was the last fight you had that you would be willing to discuss?

Audrey: How about the time you said you were going to go out with me? You remember; and I got mad at you, and you got mad at me getting mad at you.

lack: Yeah, 'cause I knew you were going to get mad

Audrey: Okay, so I had made plans without really telling him, so that was bad on my part. I did tell him, but I did not remind him that day. It was a Friday night.

Jack: You never told me. Audrey: I did tell you. but you forgot [laughs]. So I came home that day, and I called him on his cell phone He was at happy hour with his friends from work. I asked him if he wanted to go and he said, "Yes" [smiles at lack, who is grimacing). So am I telling the story

Jack: We had had two beers already.

Audrey: He's a lightweight. Jack: I don't get out

Audrey: So, anyway, he said that he wanted to go, and I asked him what time he would be home, and he asked if I wanted to come down there with him. I said. "No." cause we were going out. So he says he'd be home by 8:00 or 8:30. So nine o'clock rolls around, and he's not home. So I called him on his cell phone again, and he's, like, "Oh, what time is it? What time are we supposed to go? Okay, I'll be home in 30 minutes." At that point I was really irritated He got home at 10:00, and by then I was mad.

lack: It was like 9:30. Audrey: It was a bor ing fight [laughs]. He walked in the door with an attitude 'cause he knew I would be mad at him.

Jack: I did not walk in with an attitude.

Audrey: Yes, you did. Jack: No, I didn't. I migh have walked in prepared but not with an attitude, and I was tired. Audrey: Tired's not the right word [laughs]. lack: Had a couple drinks. I was coming down from my bar run, and I was not really interested in going out again. I might have been up to it if I came home and didn't come off like a ierk. She didn't look like she was really ticked off. I might have had the energy to go out, but after I know she's pissed and I'm pissed at that point. it's just not going to happen. I didn't say I didn't wan

So she suggested this kinda textured coffee-colored vellow, you know, with sponges So I did that. Now, bear in

He wanted my vision to be the same as his vision, which was never going to happen 'cause I'm a different person and I think differently. I'm a girl. for one thing. So that was the problem. Jack: Yeah, it was pretty bad, actually. We had already put the tile down. I let her pick out the tile. Now it seems pretty minor. The tile had a certain style. The tile was gray, and she wants to paint the walls dark blue. I thought it would look terrible and I told her so

Could you share some of these home issues?

Robert: [Laughs] That's funny 'cause I can't think of anything. We are fairly tolerant of each other. Maybe that's where the chemistry comes in. I do get upset with her sometimes, for instance, and she probably doesn't even know this upset me cause I didn't tell her. Anyway, we had a lot of com pany in town recently, and sometimes I don't think we're being the best hosts. I often wonder what - like. if her folks are in town and stayin' with us, maybe we should find out what's goin' on, make plans; you know, meals, and stuff like that. So I'll maybe get upset

Julie: But you won't say anything [laughs].

Robert Recause she's lackadaisical. Maybe that's just not a concern for her It is for me, though. I'm sure I picked up a lot of that from my father. Dad was an ex-Navy man. He always planned and prepared meals when we had company. But we're getting way off the track, and we need to talk a little bit about a good knock-down drag-out.

Julie: Well, there was the time you got really mad at me when I knocked the pipe off the wall. But we didn't talk about it. We just kinda fumed.

Robert: Yeah, we had all sorts of plumbing problems, and -

Julie: We got our gas rerouted. We didn't have gas for two weeks and we had no water -

Robert: They had to tear the walls out of our place. It was just a mess, a really crazy week. And I don't normally drive home with her, but we were pulling up to our place and we parked behind our garage. It was on a Friday. Iulie: And the plumb ing just got fixed that day.

Robert: So she sheared off the faucet behind the garage, and water went shootin' out in the alley. The last thing that I wanted to do at this point was start messing around with plumbing. I just wanted to hit the couch and relax. It had been one of those weeks:

I couldn't help but get real upset. So we had to figure out how to shut the water off and run to Home Depot and get stuff to cap off some lines. On top of that it was a Friday, and if you brought a plumber out, it'd probably be an emergency-type thing and, you know, extra charges and all. Julie: We didn't really

Robert: I was upset with her, of course.

Iulie: Of course Robert: I think the way we dealt with it was by clamming up until it blew over. Julie Then we do a joke

How long does the wait-for-it-to-blow-over phase last?

Robert: A lot of times we will separate ourselves. Like, I'll watch TV in the living room, and she'll go into the other room and watch something else. We do need a little bit of our own space. and I think by having your own space, you have time to think these things out. You may decide that it's not really that important. Julie: A lot of times we'll inke about it Robert: Or stick our tongues out at each other the next day Julie And then it seems all fine again.

Robert: I don't think there's been any time in our relationship that we have raised our voices enough to say that we were, like really screaming and velling. There's been times that night let out a big "AAAAR RRGGG" or a scream or something, but it's not totally directed at her. But some times I wonder if that's healthy in a relationship to

Lee Ann: There's not much that we fight about anymore, not that we haven't over these years.

Paul: And we do, but it kind of a full-scale conflict

For the purpose of this story, a fight is any conflict from the toilet seat to infidelity - conflict, reaction, tion compromise discussion, and the like. So with that in mind, when was the last even minor butting of heads you had between you

Lee Ann: Do you think it was Hawaii? I don't think we've fought since then. We have discussions now. I see what you mean about fight ing. When we were 16 or 17. we didn't know how to fight; we were kids. Then through the drinking years the fights got real ugly, the knock-down, drag-out variety. Raisin' kids was always good for disagreements. But we had an agreement that we'd never argue about the kids in front of them: we'd go off and close the door. And still it happened.

Paul: Of course, that got better when we stopped drinking: I am a different person now than I was ten ears ago. So my wife reacts differently to me now.

Lee Ann: It's a lot more laid back now

Daul: We also take time outs now. Having been together for 25 years and kinda growing up together. you just kinda get a feel. You know, it's like, "This one I had better go into the other room for a bit and leave it be, maybe check out how our stocks are doing on the Internet "And ther when I come back out five minutes later, a lot of times the disagreement has just blown away: you know, it's not even an issue 'cause it was stopped before it could become an issue. Lee Ann: I tend to dwell thing important and you just want to blow it off.

So then "Hawaii" was your last fight?

And they were leavin forever?

Paul: For a long time I think some of it was getting ready to go to Hawaii, the adrenaline rush and all

Lee Ann: Well was want to hurry up and have fun You get so antsy. I worked late on Friday night and that caused - and did I go back on Saturday? Paul: Yeah, late Friday and that was part of our deal too. I told my boss, "You got me until 8:30 or Friday night; after that I'm gone."You kinda went ahead and worked late on Friday and went in Saturday. It started at three hours, then four, then after five. And all along you're callin', sayin', "Oh, just one more thing and then I'm done." And so there was two hours' worth of "one more thing"s. She's not a workaholic, but she works a lot, and that causes

It sounds like a case of you wanting the trip to be Ann to say no to the overtime. Is that what was happening?

What did you feel from Paul at this point?

Lee Ann: It seemed to me that he thought I was trying to please other people and not him, you know that "this is what I want to do and this is why I want to do it." But I had my own reasons, and eventually I did say, "Okay, it is too much, and we canceled lunch. So we canceled dinner on Sat urday and lunch on Sun-

Lee Ann: Yes, I have, and it did not take long for them to turn off the phone. So I took back the job.

What do you dislike about Lee Ann?

Paul: She works too much, but that's also part of her good trait of devotedness. She has a good boss - he has belped us out in the past - but I think she goes overboard. She does more than he ever expects. She does not get places on time. She's always laggin'.

Lee Ann: That's probably gotten worse [laughs] Paul: It's nothing new or different; it's just some thing I've learned to put up with after 25-plus years. I

The whole secret is communication, not to think that the other person is going to know what you are thinking. They may think weird Michelle: |Laughs| Yeah. Scott: Do you want to anything about that?

Michelle: Just that I think we're very lucky in the fact that we hardly ever disagree on stuff. We do communi cate pretty well. We usually know how the other one's going to react. We talk about it so much that we don't get to that point where we dis agree about stuff.

How did you first oach this dis When were you first aware of your discomfort over he

Scott: Well, we were sit ting around the dinner table talking about it. She suggested going back to Cleve and to visit her family. It started as a misunder standing, like most disagreements do. I thought meant she was going to go to Cleveland when we had already planned to go

Stephanie: Okay, where work at there's this guy, he is gay, but I found out that he's bisexual also. So because I was straight before and this is my first relationship with a gay woman it looks really bad that I told Pat that he's just gay. I lied 'cause I thought it would be easier. She's really disappointed that I would lie about it. She thought so all along but I didn't want a confrontation. Pat: Can I add some thing? I didn't actually bring it up, but all along I had my suspicions about this guy. I'm not saying that he's a bad person at all, but today during some intimacy, before we got started, she got all - uncomfortable. When I came home from work, she was telling me this guy is totally gay and then at the last minute she said, "I lied to you." And then she told me that he's bisexual, which isn't the issue. It's just the lying that kinda, okay, took me by surprise. I was really disappointed in her. To me a person lying is up there with stealin' Like she said this is her first lesbian relationship, and I totally understand that, and I do have to go the extra mile because of that. Pat: Well, this is only my second relationship with a heterosexual. The first one was when I just got out of college. With a straight-woman-gay woman relationship, there's a whole trust issue that runs through my mind do I want to deal with this whole heterosexual thing? My guards go right up.

How did you respond to Pat's concerns?

Stephanie: I felt bad 'cause I said that. I had told her that he was going to give me a ride today, and I didn't want to deal with the confrontation, but then I felt bad just before we were going to get intimate. I thought I should just tell her. I didn't realize this was going to be an ongoing ightmare. I feel really bad that I lied, but I can only make amends. Once you do something you can't take it back. You can only try to make it right. Big deal he's bisexual. That doesn't mean I'm going to be with him. You know what I mean? I'm happy with her. And, yeah, it's really hard 'cause I've always been with men too. I guess it's that whole threat that because somebody might like me, that they want to be with me. But I feel the same way with her. A lot of women try to pick up on her and what can I do I mean. I have to trust her. So a guy comes along. Big deal. It's not like that in the gay world either, like "You're the one," and it's not like that in the heterosexual world either. It's really hard for me. That's always against me that I've been with men all these years.

Sounds like vou were nervous about her being uncomfortable with you being in that situation, so you were trying to make it easy on her and it

Stephanie: It's been an ongoing thing 'cause I get along real well with gay men. A lot of them are maybe bisexual and maybe they make passes, but they are primarily gay. You know how they —? I don't know if you know, but a lot of them try to pretend that they're straight, but that doesn't mean anything to

Pat: That's the whole issue. It's like she was just explaining. It goes vice versa, like I get along with women and I do have these flirtatious ways about me, but I would never act on Stephanie: It's so hard because a lot of times it's not really like that. Yeah, she has really flirtatious ways, but it's the same thing on my side. I can be that way too, you know? I've never been in a lesbian relationship, and it makes me feel really insecure when she tells me how she feels more comfortable with gay women. So it's kind of like, Well, you've always been with a man anyway." And it's that threat — "Well. you could just go back to a man." And that really bothers me Actually it really hurts my feelings. We're trying to resolve it

'cause I'm used to dealing with men. So I'm trying to remember to deal with her as a woman. But she's the kindest woman. I really love her. I fell in love with her soul. I never thought that we would be together, and I certainly never imagined that we would be living together. I like her whole aura, and I want to live my life with her, have a future with her, and have a baby with her. We have a lot of plans, but it could all get sidetracked because of my past. Now, if she was a virgin, it would be another thing altogether. I mean, we all have a past.

Pat, could you describe Stephanie for me?

Pat: Stephanie, too, has the soul of an angel. She's really supportive, and I can see myself having a life with her. She's strong-willed and very positive. I just wish that she could - well, for both of us, that we could come to some type of conclusion with this unnecessary dispute about our relationship. It's insecurity on my part as well as hers, and I love her to death.

Stephanie: I love Pat and this has been the best relationship I have ever been in. I see her as my soul mate. Sure, we have a lot of problems because of the way that I look at things; actually, 'cause men are so much easier to deal with. So it's really hard for me just to be honest. I don't like confrontations. I feel like if I just don't say anything, then it makes it better, but it really doesn't, it always comes out in the end and then it makes it look ten times worse, like, "Well, why didn't you say anything?

I'm afraid of people lying to me too, and while I know that I can't control other people, at least if my side of the street is clean, I can get indignant if I am lied to [laughs].

He destroyed my childhood, he killed my soul. I have met with attorneys and was told that there is a statute of limi tations on molestation, and it is too late for me to charge my father. His crime should not have any statute of liminot have any statute of limi-tations; it should be in the same category as "murder." He "murdered" my young soul, destroyed my innocence, and was never punished, never labeled. Instead, he divorced my mother after 30 years and married a woman close to my age with a little girl and repeated his crime on this new young soul. The laws need to change. I should be able to charge my father with this crime today, to stop him from committing this crime on another young girl.

The law has been changed to be harsher on all sex offenders, which is a good thing. The problem is, sometimes it is harsh on young men in their teens. A young man 18 having sex with a young woman close to his age should not be labeled "registered sex offender." They are two young people who think they are in love. This is not the same thing as a father molesting his young child for years and years. That man molesting his child should be labeled "registered sex offender" be-cause he is a sex offender. But the teen in love should not be labeled a registered sex offender because he is not.

The law needs to change so that victims are able to charge their offenders with these crimes any time within their lifetime. It may take a victim years to become emotionally able to confront their offender There should not be a statute of limitations on sex crimes These predators are the true sex offenders and even though the crime happened 40 years ago — it is still a crime they committed and they should be punished and labeled for that crime. I feel they should be more harshly punished than the young man at 18 who thinks he's in love with a young woman and she has consented to have sex with him. I did not fall in love with my father when I was 5 and want to have a secret sexual en-counter with him until we got caught. My father did this to me and told me that I can't tell one because my m would get very mad and they would get divorced and then I would be very unhappy. That is a trick my father played on me and is not the same thing me and is not the same thing as two people close to the same age falling in love and having sex. The only reason my father stopped his activities with me was because I told my cousin. We were talking about sex and she asked me why I knew or much about it and I told her so much about it and I told he my father told me I couldn't tell anyone because my parents would get divorced. She said that wasn't so bad, her parents were divorced and it was OK. So, I told her, and he stopped When I had my first serious boyfriend my senior year in have been attracted to boys from about 12 to 15 years of age. Like many pedophiles, my friendships with boys of that age are completely pla-tonic. Instead, I try to integrate my attraction in ways that do not involve sexual contact. It manifests itself in a attention, and concern for my young friends and their well being that I typically do not see coming from other adults without my orientation. I certainly am not a danger to my young friends. Quite the opposite. I am the one they call when they need an adult other than their parents to confide in loke with or ask to read many of the comments in your article ("Not Only the Man Down the Street," July 12), which reflect the same inaccuracies about pedophilia that I have heard for years. Let statement by Dr. Miccio Fonseca that pedophiles suffer from a "sexual disorder" of the same category as that suffered by rapists or those aroused by murder. What the good doctor fails to explain is that the term "sexual dis order" is a label voted on by the APA. Not too many years ago, garden-variety homo-sexuality was likewise labeled a sexual disorder by the same body. I contend that pedophilia is not a "disorder"; it is a sexual attraction. It differs from a disorder in that it does not seek the harm of the object of the attraction to gratify sexual desire. A pedophile is not a molester. True pedo-philes (lovers of children) that I have spoken with believe that children must be respec-ted and revered, not exploited. The second is the mind-boggling assertion by Dr. Fellmeth that pedophiles should be so marginalized by our society that they no longer be afforded basic civil rights. Where did this guy get his political theory, reading Mein Kampf? Don't get me wrong, I love boys. I am certainly in favor of protectin them from those that would like Maheu know, the visible tongue and-groove hardwood is merely the icing. It's the subfloor that makes the difference, particularly for dancers who stomp, jump, and leap, as opposed to, say, ballroom dancers, who glide. A good subfloor reduces shock, stress, good submoor reduces snock, stress, and, ultimately, dancers' injuries. L.A.-based David Sukonick and his Bolo Productions were, in fact, chosen to design the center's subfloor.

Their subfloor, that is. As dancers

Maheu thinks Sukonick is so good at designing for dancers because he is himself a dancer of the jumping, leaping kind: he performs with and directs the Well Tempered Ballet Company.

Maheu was among the crew of 20 center members who did the actual onstruction of the subfloor, with construction of the subfloor, with Sukonick supervising. It's made of 16-to 20-foot high-quality pine boards laid out in crisscross pattern. "It's like a basket weave," she says. "The boards are long because the shorter the boar the less springy they are. The longer the better, but also the harder to handle and to store." There are four separate layers of these weavings. What is the nature of folk dance today that requires such a specialized surface? Weren't those dances traditionally danced on vernacular surfaces, so to speak?

"You could say that, Yes, when

But Maheu and the other outvoted him, opting to dull the sound with insulation. "[Sukonick] recently designed a floor for a flamenco-dar teacher in Santa Barbara who was having a hard time with her hearing because of all the noise. So he put in

FROM THE DUST JACKET: A FROM THE DUST JACKET: A few years ago, Andy Rosenzweig, chief investigator for the Man-hattan District Attorney's office, was abruptly reminded of an old double homicide: a friend from his youth, a former prizefighter, had been murdered along with another man in 1970. It bothered Rosenzweig that the killer had eluded capture for nearly three decades. He resolved to track down the fugitive and - if he down the fugitive and — if he was still alive — to close the case.

In a surprising, intensely dramatic narrative, Philip Gourevitch brings together the story of Rosenzweig's pursuit with a mesmerizing account of the killer's criminal personality and his decades on the lam. dinary men who embody opposing but quintessentially American codes of being — that of the lawrian and that of the outlew. Set in a New York City millies that has all but disappeared, and written with a keen ear for the vibrant idiom of the men and women who once peopled its streets, this is a book for our times, written with a force and immediacy that compel attention. When Gourvich's first book, We Wish to Inform You That Tomorrow We Will Be Killed with Our Families: Stories from Rwunda, appeared in 1998, the novelist Robert Stone said of the author, "There is no limit to what we may expect of him." With A Cold Case Gourveitch sustains the promise of his earlier work, masterfully transforming a criminal investigation into a searching literary reckoning with the urges that drive one man to murder and another to hunt murderers.

A CONVERSATION WITH THE AUTHOR: Philip Gourevitch was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1961. "But," Gourevitch protested on the day that we talked, "I don't really think of myself as from Philadelphia. I was raised in New England, in col-lege towns in Wellesley, Massachusetts, and in Middletown, Connecticut. My father was a professor of philosophy. He taught political philosophy." Gourevitch graduated from Cornell Uni-versity, with a degree in English. He attended Columbia University, where he received an MFA. In 1995 he worked, freelance, for The New Yorker and made the journey to Rwanda that became his first book, a book that won the National Book Critics Circle Award, the George K. Polk Award for foreign reporting, and the PEN/Martha Albrand Award for First Nonfiction. "By the time that book came out," said Gourevitch, "I'd done enough things at the magazine that they asked me to join the staff, which I did in 1997. So I've been a staff writer since that year."

I was curious as to what Gourevitch saw from his office window at The New Yorker. I asked. He answered, saying, "It's a gor-geous day, big clouds, and I see the Empire State Building. And the little piece of New Jersey across the rooftops of, I guess, what would still be called Hell's Kitchen and Chelsea — Frankie Koehler's would stu be cause? Then S Ruchen and Cheesea — Franker Roberts old neighborhood [Koehler is the murderer who is pursued by retired chief investigator Andy Rosenzweig]. I can look over the rooftops of Hell's Kitchen too.

The murders on which A Cold Case focuses occurred one evening in early 1970, soon after Frankie Koehler visited Channel Seven, a restaurant on West 54th Street in Manhattan. Koehler, who had been having an affair with the wife of an incarcerated man, got into an argument about that affair with the restaurant's owner and another man. The argument turned physical. Out on the sidewalk, there were fisticuffs. Koehler got the worst of it. Later that night Koehler, who at 16 had killed another 16-year-old, acquired a gun and shot the two men. Koehler managed to slip away, out of the city. He changed his name to Frank O'Grady, escaped to Cal-ifornia, and took up residence in Benicia, a small town that is a 45-minute drive from San Francisco.

In 1997 Andy Rosenzweig got to thinking about the still-unsolved double homicide. He reopened the "cold case," cold since its closure in 1992. Frankie Koehler had always been the suspect. Skilled, persistent, and lucky, Rosenzweig eventually located Frankie, who now has been tried, convicted, and put away. He will be considered for parole in 2004. Gourevitch visited Koehler in prison. I asked him if he had seen him recently.

"I last saw him in '98. I didn't feel any particular desire to go see him there in prison. He'd said a lot, but he'd also, on some (continued on page 66)

I said that murderers can seem much more complicated and eresting than in fact they are.
"Yes. I think that one of the things that is sometimes forgotten is how readily they acknowledge and deal with the fact that they're murderers. They're not pretending not to be murderers, or, any-way, Frankie Koehler's not. He did not try to hide or disguise, in way, Frankie Koenier's not. He did not try to nide or disguise, in any way, the fact that he's a murderer. In some ways, it's what makes him interesting to himself. He's self-absorbed. His life is more internum interessing to numeri. He is sen-assorbed, rist use is more inter-sting because of that. And he knows that it makes him power-ful in some way, powerful and intriguing, that he's done some-thing that most people don't do, that everybody wodors about, so that he feels that he's scary and strong."

That Frankie Kochler had murdered, I said, seemed, for all the years after the two murders he committed as an adult, to give

"Exactly. I think so. That's us putting our way of thinking — of trying to understand him — on it, but I think it's accurate. I think having committed the murders gave him a story of his life, that it made him feel exceptional. It also meant, think, that when he became a fugitive that he found himself genuinely excited and delighted to have this new life."

I said, rather meanly, that Koehler's need to escape New York, his becoming a fugitive, also allowed him to not have to continue to work construction, which, in part, was what he did before he committed the double homicide or of the world. He knew New York. And then he'd made Benicia a place that he knew. And now he wen back to New York. On a train. And why didn't he get off the train? If he knew that there was a way that they might figure out he was on the train, why didn't he use ar alias? Why didn't he get off the train and take a different train into town? Or switch to a bus. You can't seal off New York City to all incom ing traffic from the west. It was only because he stayed on the very train he got on in the first place that they caught him. And even there they had to recognize him.

"So he had everything going for him, and he basically sur-rendered. And in a weird way, I don't think he really wanted to go to prison, but I think once his own world out there felt like it as unraveling. I think there was a desire to be connected to his old world, to be able to acknowledge his crime. Even the way he wanted to have his name back. And his name is the name of a criminal. To be restored to his identity as a criminal.

I said that it seemed to me that Koehler felt compelled some to complete his story, to find the ending for it.
"Yes. I feel that way."

Gourevitch's other telephone rang. He asked if I'd wait a moment while he answered it. While I waited I thought about a friend, a retired homicide detective, who remains obsessed by several mur-der cases that he was unable to solve. What, I asked, Gourevitch, makes it impossible for these guys to let these cases go?

"Among the good ones, men like Andy Rosenzweig, there really is a sense of "What would the world be if people took it easy about such matters?' You don't compromise, you don't let it down; if you let one go, you let them all go. How do you deal with that? I think, finally, one's own sense of meaning and pur-pose gets all tied up in it. It's almost like an athlete. There's got to be a solution. There must be, there has to be a trail of some sort. That feeling, the guy has got to be out there. It's like when you fiddle around with some little gizmo you're trying to get to work. Or when you know that you installed something in your computer, or fixed a little cabinet, or planted a plant, and it's not doing what it's supposed to do. I think it's that kind of thing of,
'You can't let it go.' And what would the world be if I let it go?
If I let it go, then the world sort of falls apart."

I said that my retired friend says that it's part of the job of a homicide detective to never forget the victim.

"I think that's also true," said Gourevitch. "Andy Rosenzweig's line is not his own line, but he is fond of this line that he got from a homicide detective, which is, 'Who speaks for the dead? Nobody, if not for us.' And it's feeling that you hope that somebody would do it for you. There is a kind of memorial purpose. It's not like they're trying to prevent death, but they're trying not to allow death to become unaccounted for and meaningless

It was my impression, I said, that men and women who think in the way that my friend does or Andy Rosenzweig does see themselves as defending the dead.

"Yes," said Gourevitch, "defending them, standing up

I had read a conversation that Gourevitch had a year earlier with a reporter. He had said that he saw commonalities between Koehler and the killers in Rwanda. In both cases, Gourevitch said. the killers had "a sense of entitlement, a license to kill."

In the publicity material tucked into A Cold Case, Gourevitch explains how he turned from writing about the genocide in Rwanda plants now he turned from winding about us genecides in wards, when, in 1994, an estimated 800,000 people were killed in 100 tys — to writing bout a low-profile, 30-year-old murder case Manhattan. "There's no pat answer to that," he writes, "but I think of A Cold Case as a big book because I consider the eternal moral, legal, and human issues that turn through it to be, in their way, just as fundamental, compelling, and inescapable as the issues that absorbed me in Rwanda. There is a clear thread linking the questions I came up against in Rwanda and the questions that haunt this book. In Africa, I was drawn to examine what it means to pursue justice in the wake of 800,000 murders in a society with no functioning legal or police system. In turning to the story of Frankie Koehler, I saw how hard it can be to close a case even when it is a single incident of nonpolitical homicide in the hands of one of the most capable police forces and — for all its flaws — one of the most sophisticated legal systems on earth. In both situations, the practical challenges of justice and the law quickly expand to what can only be called a spiritual dimension, as one confronts the puzzles of character and conduct that make some of us kill and others hunt down killers. The thread, then, is murder, an inescapable aspect of the human condition."

I said that Gourevitch had a nice way of telling this story.

get these very often, but as a story it was just perfect. The elements were perfect. The story had a kind of natural formal elegance and perfection. And I felt my job was to stay out of the way "Well," I said, "you did. You really did."

The Right Stuff

The ultimate test is Bach.

Dianist David Korevaar, who grew up in La Jolla (he teaches at the University of Colorado) Colorado), attracted my attention when I heard him perform at Mandeville Auditorium last year with the Prometheus Piano Quartet. I have now heard him more extensively, on recordings and in concert, and I have to say that he is one of the most satisfying musicians I have encountered, a true artist The ultimate test is Bach.

and Korevaar has had the self-confidence to record both books of the Well-Tempered Clavier (on Musicians Showcase), CDs that seem to have a rather limited distribution but seem to have a rather limited distribution but which ought to be in the library of every Bach lover. To talk about a performance of 48 distinct works (a Prelude and Fugue for every key, and then the same pattern all over again) is an overwhelming task. I always prefer to focus on a single Prelude and Fugue, and my benchmark - just because I find the music so fantastic — is the A Minor of Book II. The differences in performances of this pair of works are radical: different instruments, different tempos, different attitudes toward articulation and phrasing, different ways of relating the Fugue to its Prelude, different decisions about the taking of repeats in the Prelude, even a difference of opinion as to whether the final chord of the Fugue should be A Minor or A Major. Bach keyboard performers impress their sensibilities on the music like an unmistakable handprint What one hears in Korevaar's performance of the A Minor is an ineffable sense of rightness in all the choices. It is not that everything he chooses to do needs to be set up as a standard for everyone else; rather, it is a matter of the unity and harmony of those choices, the way they fit together to produce an integrated and beautiful musical experience. Consider tempo, for example. Almost everyone seems to agree on the brisk vigor of the Fugue. But many performers these days play the Prelude at a similar brisk pace. Korevaar chooses an ambling tempo that brings out the fascinatingly odd quality of this two-part invention, with its dizzying chromaticism and its obsessively repeated rhythmic figures. The od produced by this tempo is reinforced by a sinuous flow of dynamic shadings in both a sinuous now of dynamic shadings in both hands, tracing the structural and emotional implications of the rising and falling chromatic scales, moving the listener's mind along a complex path of expression that never breaks

REVIEW
JONATHAN SAVILLE
There is so much subtle event-making at each moment that one understands why Korevaar omitted the double-bar repeats of each half: a full six minutes of this strange, insinuating music might leave the listener exhausted, almost suffocated. (I nevertheless think that Bach wanted something like that effect, and that with the freedom afforded by a recording - Korevaar should have tried it.)

When the Fugue arrives in Korevaar's performance, all energetic assertion, the feeling is one of release from a kind of self-imposed internal bondage, emphasized by the infinitely delicate way Korevaar underlines the Fugue's passing references to the material of the preceding Prelude. He limns the Fugue with complete clarity, but without pedantry. The intellectual virtuosity of the contrapuntal writing is perfectly balanced, in this performance, with a sense of the music's dramatic shape, its driving rhythmic impetus, its rising excitement. And throughout all this, the piano tone remains lucid, warm, and blooming, its discreet array of colors perfectly correlated to the character of the themes, the interrelationship of the voices, and — I think one could say — Bach's intuitions about the key of A Minor (which is the key Korevaar ends in, very effectively) If you can play Bach that way, you can play pretty much anything, as Korevaar's recital at the First Unitarian Church in Hillcrest amply demonstrated. He began, not shyly, with Beethoven's "Appassionata," which he marked once again with his own distinctive signature. That signature fuses a meticulous literalism with a bold personalization of those elements of the music not explicitly specified in the score. Korevaar observed Beethoven's markings religiously - they are, after all, essential parts of the composition, far more directive than anything one finds in something like the Well-Tempered Clavier. But composers of Beethoven's school understood that a myriad of interpretive details had to be left up to the performer, details had to be left up to the performer, who, if he identified with the music's intentions, would get things right through the use of his own instincts.

Let me offer two examples of this process in Korevaar's "Appassionata." In the fifth variation of the slow movement, the repeated group of six eighth-not chords reiterating a single pitch could legitimately be played with absolute evenness. But for Koreyaar, these notes were saying something new, unfolding a deeper potential in the stolidity of the original theme. Each time he played them, he introduced a slight rubato, calling attention to the group as expressively noteworthy, and suggesting a certain emotional tension in the utterance, an effortful quality. All this took place withou emphasis, almost at the edge of the listener's consciousness, vet it was sufficient to give the whole variation a peculiarly gripping character Through this subtle device, the pianist achieved not only formal variety but something more important: a revelation of the music's inner life, a tracing of emotional experience at the level only music can chord of the Presto had the effect not of interrupting the climactic momentum but of springing it forward with terrific force. Moreover, it threw into vivid relief the notional value of the chord. Where we might have expected a dazzling transformation into the parallel major (as, for example, at the analogous point of Beethoven's String Quartet in the same intense key of F Minor, which I wrote about a few weeks ago), here the composer keeps us in the tragic mood that dominates the "Appassionata" Sonata, indeed plunges us into it with even more relentless passion. Korevaar's tiny but telling device (not, of course, indicated in the score) gave full value to the shock of that terrific moment

Similarly in the finale, Korevaar's decision to take a minuscule Luftpause ("pause for breath") just before the first fortissimo F-Minor

> It is this sort of thing that differentiates a real musician from a merely talented pianist. Technical brilliance cannot be the criterion, since every young pianist is a superb technician these days. In that regard, Korevaar certainly need fear no competition: much of his program consisted of music of supreme difficulty, topped by Ravel's Gaspard de la nuit - which however, was memorable not because the pianist met all its daunting challenges with aplomb but for the uncanny poetry he evoked from the score, with its glitter and grotesquerie and icy terror. The utterly controlled, almost caressing, yet dire and ineluctable tolling in "Le er" ("The Gallows") took one's breath away.

The second half of Korevaar's program was

Man on Fire

He created a new Naturalism, which presented the body as a complex organism of agony and aspiration.

know people who, allowed a short visit to Rome, traipse all over town looking only at pic-tures by Caravaggio. It can take some time. To see The Entombment of Christ in the Vatican collection you have to walk through endless over to see the recent Sistine REVIEW Chapel restorations that have turned Michelangelo into a Mexican muralist — a great Mexican muralist. The 1603 Entombment is Caravaggio's W.S. DI PIERO most mechanically complex picture. Nicodemus cradles the legs of a smudged, livid Jesus while John cradles the upper body; behind them stand the three Marys, each expressing a different response: grief, mournful curiosity, shock. The weightedness of Christ's corpse is palpable. Car-avaggio wasn't painting a dead person so much as he was painting deadness. The scene is staged on a stone slab, displaying this epoch-making ent as crudely improvised theater. The best place to begin a Caravaggio tour, because it's so central (and there are no maps to delay you), is the church of San Luigi dei Francesi near Piazza Navona, which contains The Calling of St. Matthew and The Martyrdom of St. Matthew. In the "Calling," Caravaggio executed one of his many innovations, painting the mouth more ex-pressively, more instrumentally, than any artist before him. Christ stands to the right of a group of figures counting money on a table, pointing a finger at Levi, the dandified tax collector with a coin in his hatband, who gapes with surprised dismay at the claim made by this arrogant intruder. A funnel of scintillant light - Caravaggio's "cellar light" — wedges down into the scene, in-tensifying the unreasonable absolutism of the call and channeling the man-God's summons to sacred service. Levi became the Apostle Matthew in an instant of light, just as Saul on the road to Damascus, knocked from his horse and blinded by lightning, became the tireless proselytizer St. Paul, a scene Caravaggio painted for a chapel in Santa Maria del Popolo. In Caravaggio's vision, God's inter-vention in history is often a jagged light rending a pasty darkness. Saul was struck blind so that Paul could see. In another chapel is the Crucifixion of St. Peter. Caravaggio painted flesh, especially when in distress, charged and shaped by the inner life. Peter's body, inverted on the cross and pushed forward on the picture plane, is an of-fering of corporeal suffering to history, to us.

Caravaggio makes us see the clay of our flesh, a material "worked"

by pain, devotion, and endurance

PIERO by bain, devotion, and endurance.
You can prepare for a Caravaggio junket by reading around in two recent biographies, Peter Robb's M: The Man Who Became Caravaggio and Helen Lang-don's Caravaggio: A Life. Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio, born probably in 1573, became the most famous Italian painter of his time, his work much in demand by churchmen and nobles. Out of a disciplined renaissance realism and exces-sive 16th-century Mannerism he created a new Naturalism, which presented the body as a formidably complex organism of agony and as-piration, possessed of a spiritual mansion with many secret, brusquely opened rooms. There are few official records documenting Caravaggio's life. A couple of brief, contentious biographies appeared shortly after his death in 1610, but what we reconstruct about his day-today existence comes largely from police reports day existence comes largely from polic reports, trial proceedings, and inventories. Caravaggio was a man on fire, an unstable compound of sen-sitive artist and swaggering street mutt, constantly picking sword fights, antagonizing friends and patrons, roughhousing at brothets and (strange to say) tennis courts, the equivalent of the book in galler of on youth, frequenced by oughnesseth. young Turks, and assorted louche characters with their blood up. One of his eccentricities was to spend big money on a suit of clothing, then wea it, only it, until the fine cloth hung from him is rags. At the peak of his career he killed a man in a brawl and was exiled from Rome: later, in Naples, he was attacked and disfigured by un-known hired assailants. He aspired and was elected to, then expelled from and imprisoned by, the Knights of Malta. He died of fever, impoverished and alone, while making his way back to Rome His burial place is unknown.

Caravaggio's story is largely a patchwork of information triangulated from contemporary events, art transactions, ec documents. The lives of other artists are similarly information-poor but we normally don't infer from the data and work a familiarity with the artist. With Caravaggio, the work possesses the character of the man who made them. We see the paintings and feel we know not just what but who he was because he painted skin, light, and fab ric as expressions of spiritual recognition, suffering, seduc-tion, and menace. He transformed scriptural and apocryphal episodes by passing them through his own and cutting off his head. The

He left his feeling for all of life and death on his canvases and created a new intimacy of violence. Judith is grabbing Holofernes's hair, slicing away, blood sheeting like long tongues from the wound, her mission half-fin-ished while Holofernes, rousing from a drunken stupor and still alive, is horrified to realize he's already dead. The look on her face, oddly affect less and terrifying, reveals a clear conscience performing an irreversible act. In the same room is Narcissus, in which the exquisite boy, enraptured by his image in the water, dips his hand in the pool as if about to plow its surface and smash the im age he so adores. I take this as a self-portrait of the artist, any artist, who feels compelled to dis rupt an established manner, even at the risk of other losses, because to remain enthralled is a kind of self-embalming. In the room are also pic-tures by caravaggisti, painters who imitated Caravaggio's style. Some were decent painters.

> but their work is overripe with feeling, and the cellar lighting that Caravaggio created to fuse spiritual and material worlds becomes overex cited scenic melodrama, which reminds me o T.S. Eliot's remark that all bad poetry originates in authentic feeling.

Caravaggio's paintings explosively dramatize erotic neediness and appetite. It's worth a trip to the Capitoline Museum if only to see St. John the Baptist. Caravaggio wanted to divest the subject of its conventional dignified, stark, draped-withflesh physiognomy. His young boy wants something from us, our sexual interest maybe Posed in the nude, half-turned in a gesture of sexual come-on, this opportunist looks straight out at us, as if he's taken off his clothes exactly for the purpose of being in thi picture, posed in this coquet tish, awkward way. The saint's body becomes a strange medi-ator between us and the ram, which he hugs in a flirty way, as if, quite apart from his future as the Baptist, his real function is to broker sexual power and desire. His moist, open-mouthed smile tells us he knows more than we do about sexual wilder-ness and has secrets he knows we want to know. He's a boy who thinks he will never die giddy with happiness and dan-ger, ready to risk anything for the sake of a moment's pleasure.

David seems quite cool to the extraordinary act he's just com Caravaggio was a poet of mitted. Slaving and decapitating nsuous excess. In his Self-Por-ait as Young Bacchus in the Goliath is just something he happens to have done. Goliath's ferocious head, another self-Borghese Gallery, another rich illection, his skin looks portrait of the artist, its features wrapped in a pearly mould tinted greenish gray. The grapes Bacchus holds — he has lips like dripping away in blood and sag-ging skin, tells us he's a monster. David's face tells us he may be Chazz Palmintieri's a born killer. St. Jerome in His ted the same hue, bearing Study on the other hand, is a kind of sepulchral promise: He portrait of saintliness eroded by suffering. His flesh looks worn dares us to taste them, taste their power to make us surrender to with use, yet as the body fails the god of disorder. In David and muscle shrinks to the bone

Robb writes close to the ground and places Caravaggio's sexual appetites - his love of boys and use of them as models as well as his whorehouse troublemak ing — at the source of his art Langdon is more demure, sedate, and measured. She sees Caravaggio first and last as a re-ligious artist, and so the defining context for his art is Counter reformation theology and politics. Robb also reads the paintings for their religious cor ent, but he does so because of their (and Caravaggio's) sexual nature. Langdon, astonishingly, ignores Caravaggio's altogether. ack O'Brien has done such an odd thing with Twelfth Night that watching it requires an adjustment.

For the past ten years, local productions of Shakespeare's comedies left the impression the directors would rather be in REVIEW Philadelphia. They've treated the JEFF SMITH plays like burdens, punishments for crimes unknown, and treated theatergoers like groundlings al-lergic to nuance. Forget character and situation, place or time. We've been in a decade-lone gagathon in which shtick, not Shakespeare, hath

In O'Brien's staging no one wears a Padre uni form. Chewbaca doesn't do a cameo. The production never apologizes for the play or, like a trip to the dentist, concludes with "See? Shake-speare isn't so bad. Applaud yourselves for staying Stranger still, given our recent history, O'Brien doesn't exaggerate any element. Instead, he blends tones and voices like a choirmaster. Twelfth Night is funny when Shakespeare is funny. But the char acters are more than comic ciphers. They are either on the threshold of, or have abandoned, a great love, and for every Orsino, drawn to an impossible dream, there's a Feste, eager to "dis"

Twelfth night, the Feast of the Epiphany on lanuary sixth, resembles Fat Tuesday during Mardi Gras. It marks the end of reveling. Both some pack away party masks and prepare for a sober tomorrow, others don't heed the night's "last call" and continue on with "cakes and ale."

When the play begins, almost every character is in an interlude, neither who they are nor whom they seem. Each behaves as if upside-down. Olivia mourns her dead brother the way a widow would her husband. Duke Orsino's bloated either on Olivia's equited love or absolute rejection. Viola dresses like a boy to conceal her identity. The gentry, especially Sir Toby and Andrew Aguecheek, frolic like "the lighter people" — i.e., commoners. And the servant, Malvolio, yearns to rule his masters. Only Feste, the Clown, appears to have both feet on the ground. But he, too, stands in an ambivalent space: he's supposed to be a wise fool but is uncertain when he's being which.

Most scholars agree that Shakespeare wrote Twelfth Night around 1601, between Hamlet and Troilus and Cressida. This makes sense because in Twelfth and Troilus Shakespeare becomes obsessed with "degree," the proper order of things.
"Take but degree away," says Ulysses in Troilus,
"untune that string, and hark what discord follows." Both plays have an almost reactionary fear of disorder. Twelfth Night restores things pretty much (though Malvolio's a loose end, as is how long Olivia and Sebastian's sudden marriage will last). In Troilus, loss of degree becomes a virus that eats the play's meanings.
The most repeated word in Twelfth Night is

"It's 'Seinfeld'set to music!"

Jack O'Brien's staging of Twelfth Nightis so balanced and gimmick-free one can almost rlook its slow pace. O'Brier humanity. By Act Five, how ever, when they start seeing double, the production should frenzy to a point of "distrac-tion." It doesn't. Instead it continues on its stately way. But everyone should be like revel-ers who have partied past their limit, drunk on the complications that surround them.

James Leonard Joy's elegant set also has an upside-down quality. Marble terraces recede to a rectangle of water — where gondolas cruise — which, like the edge of the world, drops into space. Ferns and ivy stretch everywhere, as do cascades of wisteria and pockets of pink geraniums. Especially when combined with Robert Mor gan's mid- to late-18th-century -ish costumes and Mark Bennett's autumnal music, it's an inviting locale, as handsome as I've seen at the Lowell Davies outdoor theater. But it misses the play's date. Twelfth Night is January 6. Wisteria and gerani-ums are spring-bloomers, not perennials. The flowers, like the absence of degree, aren't in their proper season.

Sue Cremin does service-able work as Viola, though with an annoying habit of waving her arms like wings and then freezing in V-shaped positions. The habit would annoy less if it didn't look so premeditated Olivia won't marry Orsino be-cause she's beneath his social station ("She'll not match above her degree," says Sir Toby, as if to prove my earlier point) Equally adept at grief and gaga-eyed amor, Margaret Welsh is a kick as Olivia The Globe has stacked its deck with some of its finest male comic actors. In their midst, however, Deborah Taylor's every bit their match as Maria She's Olivia's woman-in-wait-ing: an ardent social climber and the play's real schemer. Taylor makes her a Machiavel with a wicked laugh and armloads of agendas (if she can do away with Malvolio, she understates, "The house will be the quieter") Thanks to Taylor, Maria's voice rarely heard in productions of Twelfth Night, rings loud and

- and a mite scarey Malvolio and Feste book-end life. The "time-server" Malvolio has yet to live a sin-gle minute fully, and Feste's sad, wise sensibility lies beyond ex-perience. Paxton Whitehead's Malvolio is a chronic control freak but also has a tincture of innocence, as if he'd know bet-ter if he weren't such a repressed "enemy of life." Whitehead, who speaks with the father of all theatrical voices, is excellent. So is Harry Groener as Feste. Groener matches Feste's verbal dexterity with physical inventiveness (he does 30 things with the fool's cap, for example, even flipping it like a pizza). Also, Groener cre-ates the haunting suggestion throughout, that Feste has already read the play.

downsizing of MusicMatch.com. The 30-year music industry veteran moved to San Diego from Monterey last year to work for MusicMatch. Last week he was one of 44 MusicMatch employees to get pink-slipped.

Also out the door were brothers Jason and Scott Riggs, who cohost local music shows on 91X and 92.1, respectively. Jason Riggs got the news four days re his marriage last Saturday

MusicMatch, except for the way the dismissals were announced.
"I am disappointed in the press statements that followed. They made a reference to the 44 people who were fired as being nonessential. That's putting salt in the wounds. I expected a little compassion and honesty from MusicMatch."

On July 10, MusicMatch reduced its staff of 158 to 114. Bean lost his job as vice president of programming, which included overseeing a MusicMatch service called Radio MX, which allows users to customize their ell as the programming of 25 music format stations in inderstood. They just didn't get the music.

Bean started working at a free-form progressive rock station in Monterey in 1971. He stayed in radio until he left for Michael Nesmith's Pacific Arts record company

"MUSICMATCH.COM" FIRES 44

the MusicMatch system. Bean maintains that most of the current music on-line companies are defective by design. "Music industry people come from a lot of emotion Internet people are basically ones and zeroes, with a lack of emotion. So far, no one has been able to merge the two. MusicMatch was superb at building the architecture, but the emotional content was never in 1978. In 1980 Bean said Pacific Arts became the first independent music video production company.

"We won a Grammy in we won a Grammy in 1981 for Elephant Parts. That was the first Grammy ever awarded for a long-form video." In 1985 Bean struck out on his own and worked on video projects for Paul McCartney's MPL Communications. In the early '90s he moved to Manhattan to head CTI Records (Larry Coryell, Grover Washington), then launched his own Bean Bag label (Jesse Colin Young). That label went under when its distributor wen bankrupt. "That's when I decided to move into the Internet music space. I felt it was going to explode....I built e-commerce stores for Vibe and Spin magazines to merchandise CDs. Then I put music streams onto those websites. That's when came into contact with MusicMatch. They solicited me to come to work for them. From March [2000] to November, I was building their music streams [MP3 music files sent one after another]. Then in November they introduced their MusicMatch radio stations to the public. We built up over 800,000 listeners in cight months."

Bean's reputation in the industry spread. In February he was asked to speak at the Gavin Convention for the radio and record industry That's when he told the orld what's wrong with Web music companies.

"I explained that at a radio station you have a general manager at the top who oversees profit and loss. Then under that you have your sales and programming and music staffs. Then you have your operations or office staff. At the bottom of the pyramid you have your engineering staff to make sure you're on the air. The problem with music-on-line companies is that it's upside down; you have the engineers acting as general managers. These companies are run by engineers who have no experience in sales or marketing or business That's the problem. The Internet industry does not operate like industries that we know. They are not forced to make a profit. They are run as research and development centers trying to find the holy grail that will make that company the next Microsoft. These companies just do not have business plans that would eventually lead the company to real income and profit. My experience is these companies are being run by young people with no real business experience." But Bean is not giving up on either business or musi-"I am staying in the music business. I still have the love and passion." One

"I know a specific song about cracking pepper."

hen Sue Cain of the Balkan folk-mu-sic quartet Harmonija introduces the song "Mi Go Zatvorile," she has to translate the story from the original Macedonian.

"Jordan has been locked up in a dungeon, with water up to his knees; he's been miserable. His hair has grown long. Finally when he is freed, he rushes home to his mother and his girlfriend. But EILENE ZIMMERMAN only his mother is there and she tells Jordan his girlfriend didn't wait for him to get out - she arried his best friend."

This synopsis is fairly typical. There are a lot of Balkan folk songs about heartbreak and romance and many others about war and living under siege. These are the themes of Eastern Europe.

The four women who make up Harmonija are addicted to Balkan folk, with its irregular meters and odd melodies. The music they per-form is traditional folk, most of it Bulgarian, although some songs come from Macedonia, Yugoslavia, and Turkey.

"What's seductive about the music are the rhythms and harmonies," says Mary Ann Downs, the group's founder. "The rhythms are irregular, not like Western music — 7/8 and 5/8, but not 4/4 — and it's very challenging.
And there are a lot of close harmonies, seconds and other intervals, that are close to each other in a scale. These are harmonies you don't hear in Western music. In some songs you'll hear this drone note underneath, and the melody bounces up and down off it."

The note that is "droned" in any given song in an ote that is droned in any given song is at the bottom of the scale, known as the "tonic." Those singing the melody often linger a moment, a second above or below that note, explains Marie Hayes, the third part of the

Because of Bulgaria's history (Turkish dom-ination early in the 20th Century, and then Communism) and because the country is mountainous — with many regions isolated from one another — the folk music within the country varies. The predominance of that drone note some songs are duets where one person sings the melody and the harmony is the drone note, varying only a little bit now and then. You really have to hear it to appreciate the quality of that harmony; it's hard to describe because it's so different from Western SCENE music.

Bulgarian folk songs focus MERMAN on rituals, work, customs, his-tory, and heroism, according to the Bulgarian Art Site, maintained by Kalina

Ginkulova in Sofia. Bulgaria. (Her published information is from an old Bulgarian textbook.) Many of these folk songs were sung at work parties, where women would get together and do chores — like needlework or washing — and sing to pass the time. "They didn't sing about work," says Sanna Rosengren, Harmonija's fourth member. "More often than not, the songs were juicy love stories."

Because many of the songs are in a quick 7/8 time, they turned into dances. This Bulgarian dance rhythm is known as "ruchenitsa."

"It's divided up like this: 2, 2, 3. Two quick steps and then one slow," she explains. Another 7/8 dance is lesnoto, divided up as 3, 2, 2 and danced more slowly than the ruchenitsa. The konanitsa is a dance rhythm done in 11/8 time

"It's divided up 2, 2, 3, 2, 2," says Rosengren. Some song rhythms mirror the rhythm of work. "I know a specific song about cracking pepper, says Hayes. "It's in 5/8 because after every crack, one needs to take a break before hitting it again. So it goes crack-wait, short-long, 2-3. It can be sung at a work party where everyone is doing this at the same time

Downs, who plays the guitar and Bulgarian tumbra, has been singing Slavic folk songs for nearly 20 years. She started in a Boston chorus and wound up in Lakeside, where Harmonija first began. In the mid-1990s, Downs was singing in Malaika, another Slavic folk group. When the group disbanded, Downs wanted to continue and approached Cain - her next-door neighbor.

"My kids were at an age where I felt I could take on something else, and I missed music and singing," says Cain.

Artist: Harmonija Venue: Borders Books & Music, Mission Valley Date: Friday, July 20, 8 p.m. Cost: Free

Phone: 619-295-2201

Hayes joined the group next. That was 1996. Two years later, the threesome felt a fourth singer was needed. Rosengren had grown up in Sweden but came to San Diego for graduate school. Rosengren did postdoctoral work — studying how immune cells get into inflamed tisin Denver and spent her time outside the lab singing Bulgarian music with the group Planina. When Rosengren came back to San Diego for work, she wound up seeing Harmonija perform at the defunct Hillcrest coffeehouse A Better World. "I stomped right up to them after they played and said, 'I want to play with you.' And they said, 'Can you sing bass?' A few months later they called and asked her to audition.

"What drew us to this stuff is that we were all bored with Western music, I know I was, I couldn't stand that choral stuff we did in high

High School. She says for her, singing in choir meant singing a simple harmony a third apart from the sopranos, who sing the melody. "Every once in a while the tenors get to sing a seventh for a split second, but that's as crazy as it gets."

split second, but that's as crazy as it gets."

Because the Bulgarian language and other Balkan languages sound similar and are easy to pronounce, says Hayes, the words don't require undue effort to say and sing. "That frees you up to put your effort into the dynamics of the song, the ornaments," she says. "You don't get caught up in the words."

Singing in a Balkan voice is different from Western singing was Downs, in Meetern words.

Western singing, says Downs. In Western songs, the sound is focused on the back of the throat, but in Balkan music, "It's up in your face, rather than back in your throat. It's up front. And there's never any witherto." there's never any vibrato."

Crazy Impatience

"Once I was hanging out with Monk, and he told me he could play like Art Tatum if he wanted to."

ast week I wrote about Coleman Hawkins and his brilliant, productive career, one that ■spanned several eras and fundamental changes in the jazz idiom. Such were his musical skills and curiosity, Hawkins was able to not only adapt but to broaden the range and enhance wha ever musical setting he encountered. And he managed this without changing his basic style, a mature style, intact from the early '30s on, with that big tone and signature vibrato: that ur paralleled, sure sense of swing and When Hawkins arrived back in New York in 1939, after a sat isfying 5-year stint in Europe, he was at the pinnacle of his musical abilities, around 40 years of age

(No one is sure about Hawkins's real birth date.) New York, then as now, was the center of jazz in this country, and there was no shortage of great mu sicians around - men like Art Tatum, Lester Young, Benny Carter — to challenge Hawkin

One of the younger musicians who would catch Hawkins's interest not long after he arrived back in town was the pianist and com-poser Thelonious Monk, some 17 years Hawkins's junior. Monk, like Hawkins, had quit school and gone AUGUST KLEINZAHLER off to work as a musician at the as of 16, playing piano and organ for a touring evan-gelist. The great pianist/composer Mary Lou Williams heard Monk play in Kansas City, prob ably in the late '30s. Williams didn't particularly like Monk's mature style and always maintained that early on Monk could "play a lot of piano" like Tatum but "got disgusted with the music." My friend O'Meara, who plays some tenor sax, onc met one of Monk's favorite sidemen, tenor stalwart John of Monk's lavorite studenten, tenor stan-wart Johnny Griffin, who told O'Meara the following story: "Once I was hanging out with Monk, and he told me he could play like Art Tatum if he wanted to. I told Monk, 'Go on, you're crazy,' and Monk sat down and gave forth à la Tatum, till my jaw dropped." Kenny Clarke (who backed Hawkins on drums in the 1949 session from Lausanne, Switzer-land, I discussed last week) first heard Monk play in 1939, when Monk was working in a quartet. Clarke ("Klook") recommended Monk to Teddy Hill, who managed the celebrated Minton's yhouse club in Harlem, where the young proto-beboppers came to jam after hours. Monk was to begin waxing his own recordings as leader by 1947, but previous to that he worked with a variety of orchestras, including those led by Cootie Williams and Dizzy Gillespie.

Hawkins enlisted Monk for his quar tet as early as 1944, when a lot of other musicians of Hawkins's vintage would have been skeptical or downright hostile to Monk's innovated REVIEW unusual-sounding style. But Hawkins had big cars and knew what he was about and what Monk was getting at. Four of the sides he cut with the Hawkins quartet are available on different compilations - "Flying Hawk," "Recollections," "Drifting on a Reed," and "On the Bean." The sound quality isn't wonderful, but the music is intriguing, with Hawkins incorporating bop elements into his own mature style. What is more intriguing is the Monk style caught on wax this early on, not fully fledged but caught on wax this early on, not fully neoged our unmistakably Monk, at age 27, three years before he began recording as leader for the legendary Blue Note sides Genius of Modern Music, Volumes 1 & II, recorded between 1947 and 1952. Monk moved to Bob Weinstock's Prestige label in 1952. Monk, it turns out, had never been under contract to Alfred Lion at Blue Note; Lion never put his musicians under contract. Monk and mained loval to each other that Blue Note had stopped record-ing Monk because he had run out of material, that Monk had no r originals to offer. Apparently, that turns out not to be true. Monk had available his compositions "Bye " "Hackensack," and probably msha Swing," among others.

The truth seems, as usual, to have something to do with money. Lion was an enlightened, sympathetic producer, perhaps the most important and v sionary in jazz history, but he couldn't provide Monk with any sort of long-term commitment and assured income. It was in that same year, 1952, that Monk had been stripped of his cabaret card, which limited his ability to work in New York Further, his extreme experiments with dissonance, empty spaces, and asymmetric rhythms, did not make it easy, under the best of circumstances, for

Monk to get work. Monk was also "eccentric," not to put too fine a point on it, and was given to not turning up at gigs or evincing certain "idiosyncratic" be-havior when he did. Monk's wife Nellie is quoted as say ing that Monk didn't get uch work even before he lost his cabaret card. Monk's idiosyr crasies were legion and crasses were legion and well-documented, and he apparently did suffer from mental illness, a disease that grew more pro-nounced later in his life, finally disabling him in his last few years. But, near as I can tell, a lot of wha part was impatience. It's important to remember that, even more than Armstrong and Ellington. Monk was one of the century's great musical ge niuses, comparable, in my view, to som Bartók, who, regrettably, never heard Monk play, at least to my knowledge. I can't but think Monk would have fascinated the great Magyar. When Mary Lou Williams spoke of Monk's Williams's myopia and, perhaps, jealousy, was that the young Monk had advanced so far hartime that it galled him to be asked to trot out the same old musical clichés (clichés to him, at least night after night. Monk had no interest in playing like Tatum. He doubtless was more aware his monster technique. But why try to reproduce or out-Tatum the man himself, when one has one's own burgeoning vision of sound and structure? Monk and Hawkins always got along, and neicreatures, otherwise, as near as I can tell. But it must be a lonely world when you're that far ahead of everybody else in the medium you're immersed in and have an endless appetite for. So when you well, when not sitting down together and playing music, you probably have a lot to talk about apart from the weather.

RESTAURANTS

Top Drawer

Whenever a restaurant's name starts with "Top Of..." it invariably translates to "top of your budget." You'll get a priceless view with your food and pay for it. That's certainly true of Top of the Cove, a classic upscale La Jolla "destination" that just got a new look and a new chef. If your summer agenda includes visitors whom you want to impress big-time (future in-laws or investors, an old romantic rival, or elderly rich aunt), it may well become your destination, too. But if you're just looking for fun, consider the charming, more

Built as a "beachside bungalow" in 1893, expanded over the years and converted to a restau-rant in 1952, the Top's newly renovated dining room is quietly elegant, with an antique fireplace and a lovely windowed alcove in the rear, overlooking La Jolla Cove. Even fresher than the furnishings is the new chef, 33-year-old Alain turnishings is the new chet, 35-year-old Alain Redelsperger (pronounced RED-ell-spear-ZHAY). Although his culinary style is light and graceful rather than startling, he has turned the Top's backward-looking menu upside down, replacing the old, heavy brown sauces and crean reductions with the light, natural flavors of mod ern French fare.

ern French fare.

Redelsperger hails from Strasbourg, an Alsatian city of diplomats, trade missions, and braseries.

His signature dish, which proves fully worthy of that dignity, is an exquisite cold roulade of duck foie gras presented as a moided circle surrounded by a thin halo of its own golden fat. Sans even a trace of organ flavor, the liver is the texture of butter, just a his firmer than a mouse. Its fingle. butter, just a bit firmer than a mousse. Its finely calculated accompaniments are a dollop of feath-ery, none-too-sweet "marmalade" made from dates and a scattering of coarse crystals of the fla-vorful Breton sea-salt called fleurs de del, which the chef uses to enhance flavors throughout the meal. (My friends and I ignored the adjunct greens and toast triangles as interlopers on the roulade's perfection.)

Our other appetizers, however fine, had to suffer by comparison. A "Napoleon" of sea scal-lops looked more like a leaning tower of pieces, although it did wear Bonaparte's cocked hat a triangular cracker of filo, capping three thick scallops on a bed of tartly dressed mesclun robed in a sun-dried tomato pesto dressing with a toss of capers. The scallops were nicely seared, with near raw interiors (like crisp, cream-filled candies) that had a very firm, even muscular texture. A Maine lobster salad also had rather chewy meat. accompanied by mixed greens, slices of flavorful accompanied by mixed greens, sinces of navornion orange and red tomatoes, a heap of crushed avo-cado (a Gallic "guacamole"), and a vinaigrette of verjus. (The latter is the tart juice of unripe grapes, an upscale late-REVIEW necessal condiment that's returned to chic kitchens. Everything old is new again.) A squab breast salad featured gentle leaves of nymphet arugula in a slightly sweet vinaigrette with a truffe fragrance emphatic enough to carry diagonally across the table. The tender squab nuggets had a rather laid-back flavor for that gamy little bird but were well served by crisp shreds of deep-fried artichoke and ring of pine nuts.

At the opposite extreme of light and dark-ness were medallions of New Zealand farm-raised elk in a reduced pinot noir sauce. Dave asked. "Has to be," said Marty. "Nobody stands around a kitchen crocheting vegeta-bles." The lotus was fun but bles." The lotus was fun but the sweetness of the parsnip purée eventually palled. We were happier with the earthy "eggplant caviar" (sort of a fine-diced ratatouille), which accompanied a rack of lamb (at $38, the most expensive entrée on the menu). Mild-flavored and simply seasoned, the meat was garnished with a plate's-edge ring of very sweet carrot emulsion with a trace of cumin. Our least interest-ing entrée was roasted duck breast with Swiss chard, braised potatoes, and a subtly sweet balsamic-beet deglaze that tasted, despite the beet juice, like the thousand other balsamic duck breasts we've encoun-tered in the last decade. None of these dishes, in fact, were radical - merel flawless. The evening's specials were more rarefied. They included a stuffed three-pound Maine lobster roll for $75 and a portion of pink Baja baby abalone in caper butter for $100, a traditional weekend offering much beloved of the blue-baired matrons. That's La Jolla for you. We'd have loved to try a quarter-order, but the house offered no such compromise.

"When I was growing up in Redondo Beach," Don reminisced, "I'd go diving every weekend and bring home a whole gunnysack of abalone."
"So that's why they're extinct in California - vou did it!" said a passing waiter.

"This restaurant has its own abalone story," another waiter chimed in. "In 1922, a man with two young daugh-ters purchased this property for $4000. The girls would dive for abalone in the Cove and then fry up their catch and sell sandwiches to beachgoers — a full-grown abalone in each

But a steady diet of haute cuisine palled. He was eager to cook "casual food," too, just as he does at home, and leaped at the chance to do both styles simultaneously at Top of the simultaneously at Top of the Cove. He started working there mid-April and quickly changed the menus, both up- and down-stairs. "I have my French classical roots," he says, "but I've adapted my food in Cali-fornia. So instead of the heavy succes these bad in Erroch cooksauces they had in French cook ing in the '60s. I have light sauces, with vegetable juices and chicken or veal stock instead of heavy meat stocks, cream and butter... I don't want to have 90 ingredients on the plate like they used to do with 'elegant food.' I want to remember what I'm eating so I just combine five or ingredients on the plate. The food at this restaurant was too old-fashioned, it hadn't changed in years. That's not what peo-ple want now — people don't want to fall asleep after din-

"I'm hoping to change the menus again in September — we'll have fresh porcini, fresh beans in October; the root veg-etables will come back, and we'll get salsify [oyster plant] from Belgium. I'm going to import wild game. The food of Strasbourg is very earthy. Where I grew up, if you taste a piece of venison or wild boar, you know it's game. When you get farm-raised wild game, it doesn't taste gamy at all. I can't wait until fall to change that, too. We don't want people feeling that dinner here is a one-time occasion. Whenever they come back, we'll have a different menu. We'll keep some staple items like the foi gras roulade because that's the number-one ingredient in my region and my signature, but most other ingredients will change seasonally. If people go two or three times a year to Top of the Cove, they should see different items each time We want to keep people ohammed and his sister sit opposite me, looking out the window. It's dusk in the back of the number 7 bus. We're rumbling up University, Friday night. She's dressed in the head-wrapped, traditional way. I'm itching to ask them. Fi-nally, I lean forward. "Do you know if there's a Somali restaurant up here?"

Ten minutes later. Mo hammed has hauled me off the bus, at 50th, handed his sister off to their mother, and led me across the street to a small shad owy strip mall where trees hide a sign: "Oak Park Plaza." In the gloom, we spot a clump of men, some dressed in long white cotton gal-ahiya robes and jackets with Muslim hats and leaning on elaborate walking sticks. They sit and talk and smoke outside a place with a sign I can just make out.

"Afrique."
"Come," says Mohammed. He leads me into a room filled with men crowding around tables. Their loud, excited talk mixes with the crack of domino pieces and the slap of cards. Th atmosphere, I'm guessing, is Mogadishu coffeehouse. "Come." Mohammed leads me through and around some screens to the other side. Here it's quieter. Men eat at tables, in groups, and singly. Some have real distinguished beards, a few wear white turbans. Mohammed introduces me to Abdiaziz. "The owner," he says, and gives me a

I look at the menu. "Muufo and marinated diced meat/goat meat/steak. $7.00."
"Oh sure," I say. "I'll take the goat."
"No goat today. Sorry. But I give you steak."
"Fine."

"Fine."
"Go-o-o-oaal!!!" yells a TV announcer on a giant screen. A Chinese soccer team is playing an African team. Now that I think of it, the place looks vaguely Chinese. Eggshell-blue ceiling. Red Chinese fans on creamy-yellow walls.
"It was a Chinese resuarant before we came," says Abdiaziz. He's back from the kitchen with a bowl of vegetable soup and two six-inch fly-ing-saucer-shaped breads on a plate. "We came in 1999. I'm from Mogadishu. My father was a businessman. He died. My wife and my mother are here with me. They do the cooking."

A minute later he's back with a second plate. This has a garlicky-smelling thin-cut steak with raw onion slices on top and shredded lettuce on the side. He adds a little bowl of green hot sauce and a large bottle of olive oil. He sees me hesitate. "Let me show you our

After dinner — and for that $7.00 1 was tanked out — Abdiaziz takes me back around the screens and introduces me to a table of men playing cards. The winery itself does not share the vineyard's decrepi state; only additing, weathered deck, jut-ting out from a nearby slope, shows any sign of neglect. The sage-green, wood-sided building seems trim and ready for service, its as-yet-unrealized potential highlighted by the surrounding stillness. This is not a misperception; often, gen-eral manager/winemaker Duncan Williams is the only person here.

The winery, according to its current owner, Premium Vintners, provides "premium wine for some prestige restaurant and hotel account in the area, and also on a national basis." The oundation of the business is a private-label pro gram, which provides by-the-glass and house wines to local eateries such as Candelas and Greytone Steakhouse, "We're kind of a consolidation hipping point for Premium Vintner's main busi

This kind of operation, which involves bring-ing in bulk wine from different parts of the state, sionally blending them, then bottling, labelng, and shipping, does not need a venue as grand is Fallbrook, a sizable structure outfitted with oncrete-block versions of Champagne caves, left over from the days when the winery was part of the Culbertson sparkling wine holdings. (It's easy to imagine VIPs touring the dim, archway-lader cellar, then stepping out to the deck for bubbly under the stars \ But, says Williams, he and the Williams — who also makes his own wine. Kestrel, from his vineyard up in Amador - assures me that "[The owner's] got this end of the business built up to a pretty good level. We want to expand into areas that we're not that active in right now - namely, local retail. We're going to start making wines here at the facility on a far larger scale. We'd like to grow into a traditional small winery, with mailing list and direct sales and a tasting room. I think both sides of the business would enhance each other."

Calendar

By using the private-label bulk-wine business as a founda-tion, Williams will be able to sidestep the traditional division between smal wineries: small-production mom-and-pop, cult status boutique, and expensive experiment. Instead, his model will be akin to that of large wineries, like Beringer, which produce vast quantities of inexpensive wine and are consequently able to finance their high-end production — only on a much smaller scale. (Current production is 10,000 to 12,000 cases, though Williams says the facility could easily double that.) Since he's local. Williams hopes to be able to work more closely with local accounts than his larger competitors delivering orders more quickly, etc. And since he's relatively small, he finds that he's able to of fer a better (less mass-produced) product.

Part of this effort to infiltrate the local ma ket involves an attempt to upgrade and revitalize the still-extant Fallbrook label. A salesperson, hired by the owner, has secured placements in several Albertson's grocery stores, as well as sev-eral area restaurants. The eventual sourcing of local fruit will also help in this endeavor.

For now, contacts established during his days in Amador County will prove useful — "I really like the fruit up in the Sierra foothills," he explains. "I think it has really good concentration The vineyard I ended up [sourcing from] is non-irrigated (which tends to produce fruit less diluted by water). It's very cool there at night, which I think contributes to better balance in the wines. giving them a chance to recover from the sugar-developing/acid-reducing heat of the day. The plans are laid, all except for the problem of getting product on the public palate via a tasting room. The winery is surrounded by private roads, making a winery-based retail site impos-sible. When he talks about other venues, Williams begins to sound a lot like Witch Creek's Dave Wodehouse, who situated his tasting room/win ery in Carlsbad. "We're still looking for a really good location, not necessarily just to hit the tourists, but someplace where we can get the traffic and have it work well. If we had a wish list ... maybe Old Town? I can't think of a higher-

"A tasting room would give us freedom to ex-pand to different varietals and blends, because once you can get people to taste the wines, you can sell them. Right now, our focus is kind of Cabernet, Chardonnay, Merlot. We sell White Zinfandel and Sauvignon Blanc also." Because of the foundation business, "We're pretty much mainstream — that's where 95 percent of the market is. But with a tasting room, we could source old-vine Grenache from Baja. I got a call from them through some contacts I made in Temecula," where he also intends to buy. "It's fairly young, but [the fruit] looks great; I have high hopes fo it. I'm going to be going up to La Cresta, which reminded me more of the foothills than a valley-type appellation [like Temecula]. I know Temecula gets the cooling breezes, but I felt [La Cresta] was gets the cooling breezes, but I felt [La Cresta] was a little bit cooler. I definitely liked the look of the soil — it looked richer, more like what I associ-ate with quality fruit." Williams says the best of the winery's production will be bottled under their Pepper Lane label, which is currently available al ost exclusively in restaurants.

Finally, there is the estate vineyard, lying fal low on the surrounding hills. "The vineyard was tow on the surrounding finits. I the vineyard was not active when I got here, "says Williams. "At one time, I think it was actually doing pretty well. Some of the [vine] trunks were pretty good sized. I think it may have flourished briefly. We're go ing to replant the vineyards. At least five acres, maybe as much as ten. We can phase it in over a couple of years. I'm going to be out there shortly walking it, seeing how much we can put in durwanking it, seeing now much we can put in dur-ing the first phase. I've got at least five or six acres that are pretty flat, which will be a little easier to get ready for planting next spring. We're proba-bly going to plant Cabernet and Merlot — those we could do on a limited basis. As a winemaker it would be a lot of fun to have that outlet."

Director Frank Oz is concerned more to change his pace than to top his past efforts.

he score is excellent — the mu-sical score, that is, by Howard Shore, bluesy, subdued, taut, ing a legitimate suspense film - yet The Score on the whole is more con job than big-time caper. The bait, the hook, would be the DUNCAN SHEPHERD big-time cast, Robert De Niro, Edward Norton, Marlon Brando, Angela Bassett. Confidence builders, for sure. The second two, on closer inspection, can be summarily dismissed. Bassett is no more than The Girl, an untethered flight attendant who alights intermittently in the apartment of a Montreal jazz-club proprietor and out-of-town safecracker, but who for the duration of the movie stays mostly in flight. Brando, as a foppish fence dressed for the tropics, admittedly commands the well-worn accolade of Can't Take Your Eyes Off Him When He's On Screen, but that's because, primarily, he takes up so much of the screen even in long shot, and secon-darily because of our morbid fascination in searching for the slithering sex object of One-Eyed Jacks inside the body of a whale. To a fresh pair of eyes, this blimpish imp might come across (we can only imagine) as something like a frilly, fidgety, uppity Sidney Green-street. It is by now impossible, even for the starriest pair of eyes, to continue to view any Brando ap-

HEPHERD pearance, no matter how fleeting, as a ma-jor screen event: not when his previous appearance in Free Money, for exam-ple, went straight to video. Here of course he is acting opposite De Niro, one of his presumptive heirs (as op-posed, there, to Charlie Sheen), but the interest of that diminishes in strict proportion to the fewness of their minutes together. That leaves us, for most of the way, with De Niro and Norton, and a by the-numbers heist plot whose main virtue is avoidance of excess. (Com-edy and fantasy director Frank Oz is concerned more to change his pace than to top his past efforts.) De Niro, strivto top his past efforts.) De Niro, striv-ing for an almost Buddhist aloofness, preferably reducing his moving parts to just his eyes, is particularly solid. It Calendar MOVIES would not be too long a reach, how ever, to point out that the rest of the cast, not to mention the heist plot, is hardly a match for Michael Mann's Heat (Pacino, Kilmer, Voight, Diane Venora, Amy Brenneman, Ashley Judd, Ted Levine, Tom Sizemore, Dennis Haysbert, et al., in addition to De Niro): standards, surely, can't have plot: I didn't quite get the basic set-up that places Norton as the "inside man" at the Montreal Customs House, passat the Montreat Customs Frouse, pass-ing himself off as a mentally defective janitor at the critical moment when a 17th-century French scepter (priced at 530 million on the black market) hap-pens to have been discovered in the leg of an impounded piano. Are we to un-derstand that this larcenous go-getter has been dutifully showing up for work five nights a week, biding his time, performing his spastic act indefinitely, in the expectation that sooner or later something worth stealing would turn up? Or are we instead to understand that he has hastily endeared himself in this manner, for one express pur-pose, within the rapidly closing window of opportunity? Much of the high-tech prestidigitation passed me by as well. (I have come to loathe the stock figure of the asocial - and uncine figure of the asocial — and uncine-matic — computer get who can supply a passkey through any plot impedi-ment.) And I can never consent to the descriptive adjectives of "classical" and 'old-fashioned," or even "intiligent" and "adult," in reference to a heist lim with a happily-ever-after ending. On that score, The Score and Sword-rith are deadlocked.

Legally Blonde, directed by new-comer Robert Luketic, is a wish-fulfillment fairy tale, more voguishly known as an empowerment myth, hilliment fairy tate, more vogusary, known as an empowerment myth, concerning a So-Cal sorority sister, Fashion Merchandising major, and Miss Hawaiian Tropic runner-up (Reese Witherspoon, in her mile-wide vein of mockery) who gets herself admitted into Harvard Law School to chase after her ex-boyfriend — and of the class. Some of the details, if you allow maybe a hundred yards of slack for knowledge of how the world works, are giddily inventive: the admission-application "video essay" (diercted by an unspecified Coppola) delivered in an assortment of swimming pools and bikinis, or the pet Chilbushua named Envisee or the pick. Bruiser, or the pink pompom at the top of her classroom pen. (Pink is her favorite color, though the supposedly peppy palette of the film would pale alongside that of The Closet. There's a difference between a chosen color and a difference between a chosen color and a rendered color.) Ready as we may be to applaud the discovery and cultiva-tion of a human brain, willing as we may be to believe that this can occur in the airiest of heads, we might balk nonetheless at the two-faced assump-tion that it's as simple as turning on tion that it's as simple as turning or a faucet. The idea of growth without change goes against nature. Like the idea of satire without teeth.

sprightly road movie cum buddy movie about a reluctant Nigerian fiancé and a rejected French suitor who travel together to the former's appointed wedding in Niagara Falls, the Capital of Love as well as the Suicide Capital (something for both of them). Travelling roughly the same route, and eventually in the same automobile, is a Spanish señorita who, at first sight, has turned the who, at first sight, has turned the bridegroom's head. A further comp-lication: she is travelling with her smugly possessive British boyfriend. What partially deflates the sought-after sprightliness is the almost eerie barrenness of the shoestring produc-tion — the emptiness. the stillness. tion — the emptiness, the stillness the quietness. (A couple of critics quoted in the ads have apparently with a nudge from the press notes likened this "minimalism" to the style of Jacques Tati. That's very charitable of them.) What partway pumps it up again is Natalia Verbeke, a league Penelope Cruz who looks ready to step up to the majors: ready, at any rate, to be pencilled in under Cruz on the screenplay rout-ing slip. What again poles a pin in it, though, is the underwritten role of the Nigerian, whose chief assets, after his nice manners, are his crippling introversion, his air of gloom, and his - or rather Tunde gloom, and his — or rause. Adebimpe's — mechanical acting

The travelling show known as Outfest moves into town tonight and tomorrow, Thursday and Friday, at Landmark's Hillcrest, and Friday through Sunday at its Ken. You might have thought there was no screaming need for a Gay and Lesbian Film Festival when, in the normal course of business, over just the past few weeks, the Landmark chain has showcased such gay-themed fare as The Closet, The Girl, Enlightenment Guaranteed. The Anniv Songcatcher, and Big Eden. Then, too, no fewer than three of the offerings in the festival, Lost and Delirious, Hedwig and the Angry Inch, and All over the Guy, are already scheduled for regular runs in the near future. The ten additional programs in the festival ough tainly to quiet any screamers.

Earlier this year I owned up to going AWOL one weekend in Los Angeles to attend part of a retro-spective of the works of Valerio Zurlini, an Italian humanist purged of vulgarity (wonder of wonders!), a less celebrated younger contemp-orary of the so-called "Big Three," less didactic than Antonioni, less operatic than Visconti, less bom-bastic than Fellini. (Though no less, in that same order, contemplative or stylized or expressive.) By way of a followup I am now raising what Soap Opera Digest would call a "VCR Alert" — for Zurlini's Family Diary on TCM this Friday night at eleven. Unavailable (as far as I am aware) on video, unrepresented (as far as I remember) in the copious clips contained in the three-hour posthumous documentary on its star, Marcello Mastroianni, it is guaranteed to be one of the great films of your life. Whether you know it or not.

Lara Croft: Tomb Raidor — The daughter of Sir Richard Croft inherits a sacred mission from her late father, who seems to have known when she was eight years old that she would grow up to be a militant extremist of Girl Power, and known too that she would discover the hidden clock and his written instruction, about it within and his written instructions about it within one week of a once-every-five-thousandyears planetary alignment — the long-awaited moment when the secret society of Illuminati would attempt to reunite the two halves of the Triangle of Light, giving them the Power of God. the movie goes literally in reverse motion, with people walking backwards and saying "Olleh" instead of "Hello," although that in fact is the method of the opening scene: a Polaroid snapshot gets sucked back into the rotation inapariot gets student back into the camera, and a spent cartridge jumps up into the chamber of a handgun. But this just gives the movie its initial push backwards in time. After that, the scenes (in normal time. After that, me scenes (in normal forward motion) are arranged in opposite order of occurrence, a bit reminiscent of the screen adaptation of Harold Pinter's play, Betrayal, or the earlier Elizabeth Jane Howard novel, The Long View. One big difference between this and those is that difference between this and those is that Memento is a thirdle, not a relationship thing. Knowing how it all turns out would appear to be more cripping. Yet appearance, as we all know, can be deceiving, Another big difference is that the action here is squeezed into a tighter time than the contract of the across ending at the town of repetitive overlag—where the precious across started. Events, in others words, have been broken up arbitrarily in discourse, out that you for the median course, out that you in the median course, out that we join them in median course, so that we join them in median course, so that we join them in median words, have been broken up arbitrarily in mid-course, so that we join them in medias res and must wait until the ensuing scene to find out how we reached that point. Still propher difference. another difference, slightly soiling the purity of the concept, is that the scenes are separated by black-and-white interpolat (for explanatory purposes, mostly) of indeterminate chronology, and there's a heavy dose of verbal recapitulation right proves to be a true test of your powers o entration: a good thing in and of itself You have to pay close attention. And you ave to do what the hero himself is unable to do: to remember what came before. The trick of the thing — the inspiration and justification for the ass-backwards order of procedure — is the hero's peculiar "condition," as he refers to it, whereby he is ncapable of forming new memories ever ince the head injury he sustained while his since the head injury he sustained while he wife was getting raped and murdered. Admittedly the movie is something of a stunt, a sleight of hand. The reverse-order gimmick could only work in concert with one time only. (Though a reverse-order sequel, strange to say, is not unimaginable. It hangs together. It does its job. It can hav It hangs together. It does its job. near Santa Barbara for the purpose of supplying gourmands in San Francisco. There, according to the article, "a four-pound fish furnishes not more than a pound of meat, and owing to freight charges and the cost of catching and handling them, that one pound has averaged in the neighborhood of 35 cents to the consumer."

Coronado lobster dump, 1890.

An 1894 Union story reported the establishment of a lobster-packing company

An earlier lobster-exporting enterprise had been set up "on one of the islands off San Diego," but too many of the sea roaches died in transit. The Santa Barbara venture entailed processing. "They are cooked at the station as soon as caught, the meat taken out cooked and packed in vinegar in the [ten-gallon] kegs, and by the time they arrive [in San Francisco] they are all ready to be made into salads. By the new arrangement nothing is lost, and the fish are in a healthy condition when cooked. No freight has Dan Thomas, proprietor of the Gathering on Washington Street in Mission Hills, is standing next to our table.

We're waiting for our chicken and salmon dinners, priced pretty much as they were in the 1980s, when the Gath-

Goldfinch. (I have many treasured memories of happy hours there that I do not remember.) As if to underscore on not remember.) As if to underscore the bargain we are getting, Thomas demonstrates in concrete, yet bizarre fashion, the concept of inflation. He places a penny in the palm of my date's hand. (My date tonight is Ruby, an aerobics instructor from Santee.) I see, that is, I'm pretty sure I see, Ruby's fingers close over the coin. Thomas does some kind of ramadoolah and asks her to open her fingers; the penny is now still a penny, but the size of a small might say. I'm 15 inches from this. I see nothing suspicious.

At the bar, magician Craig Stone is confounding a merry but reasonably sober couple, Dave and Tracey, with card tricks: Stone names the eight of behind the bar, and casts another shadow. "This is going to be difficult," he says, "because she wrote her name upside down on the eight of hearts." He walks forward quickly, as if frustrated that the trick will not work with this upside-down signature gitch. (I wonder what possible difference that could make and what, exactly, constitute upside-down on a playing card.) Stone flutters his fingers in the air, displaying their emptiness. His shiristeeves are lifted nearly to his elbows. I'm leaning over the bar, waiting for a drink refill, and Stone reaches toward my right arm and says. "Hey, where'd you get this?" — or something like that. He brashes my forcarm and lifts sway a 1924 silver dollar. "These are rare," It hink he says, and then pockets the money.

As if suddenly remembering what he was supposed to be doing, he turns back to the facedown deck next to a glass of beer, holds his sizeable hand just above it, and says, "I merely, .east... a... shadow... and the card rises to the top." He whips the eight of hearts with Tracey's signature off the deck. Top card. This has all transpired in a manner of seconds. Stone looks over at me, my steely eyes narrowed with the effort of lightning-quick calculations, replaying the illusion in my photographs imml. Stone then looks back at Tracey and says, "He doesn't trust me now."

As he lift she card, displaying it, he says, "I have to be perfectly honest with signature glitch. (I wonder what possible difference that could make and what,

By John Brizzolara

As he lifts the card, displaying it, he says, "I have to be perfectly honest with you, Tracey, and this is the only time I will be; I'm actually Dave's father." Laughyou, Tracey, and this is the only time I will be: I'm actually Dave's father. "Laugh-ter and giggles. "Now I'm going to take this eight of hearts and place it into my wallet, where it is being guarded and kept safe by my massive chest." He does so. "Inside my wallet is also a zipped compartment. Expeed up the front and along the center. Would you unzip that please" He presents the wallet to Tracey. "Dave, am I holing arything behind the wallet?" Dave is in a position to see and says no. "Inside is an envelope. It is sealed. In that envelope is a reminder of where the control of the c

"Again, there is nothing in my hand." He splays his fingers, rotating his wrists.
"Pull that out of there," he says to Tracey. She does and he tears open the paper.
Inside, of course, is the card with her signature and the date. Clearly I've missed something, though I've scrutinized Stone's hands every step of the way. He must have cleverly whisked his wallet out of his jacket while isoms over the bar, a nanasome, cap-per, and affable gains with a disamination and the proposed of the part of th cealed all along on the back of his capacious hands with barely visible, two-sided tape you can buy in any five and dime, releasing it with a well-timed flex of the knuckles, through his fingers and into his palm. Pretty elementary stuff. With enough practice, a drunken mime working at kids' birthday parties could do this in a coma.

"So," I ask him, sneering "how long did it take you to pull that one off?" I look at Tracey and Dave, chuckling like I've seen and go, baby. It's all a chea sham. I've been around Stone looks thoughtfully at the ceiling, counting off

I notice the neglected Ruby is standing at my side and wonder how long she's been there. She's looking up at Stone with adoration, like he is the King of Kings. "Let's go eat," I say. The entrées have arrived and the chicken is great; it's like having sautéed In entires have arrived and the cricken is great; it is like having sauteed and roasted chicken, moist and clender, with a pecan pie at the same time. I'm loving it and watching Stone, who has now moved around the room to a table with kids. Here he is performing God-knows-what kind of satanic flummery to the delight and fascination of the children, the little rubes.

Craig Stone is at the Gathering every Friday and Saturday night from 6:30 until 9 p.m. Dan Thomas is there a lot.

-EVE KELLY

Throwing up, vomiting, tossing your cook-ies, upchucking, whatever you name it, the cleanup is nasty business. My husband Patrick and I recently had a night from hell. Our three-year-old consistently threw up every few hours. Each time. Patrick would str son, put him in a warm bath, roll up all the soiled bedding, take it downstairs, and stuff it in the laundry-room hamper. By sunrise. Patrick was bleary-eved and we had run out brew of cleaner - a one-third scoop of laundry detegent with a couple of capfuls of bleach in almost two gallons of warm water. Then he would scrub the putrid area. Suddenly the smell in the air would change from stomach acid to bleach. The sickening, though, and I am on a hunt for a new cleaning concoction.

I spoke with Norman Francis, owner of Padre Janitorial Sup-plies on Market Street. "We have kits that are called Blood Borne Pathogen Kits," explained Francis, "that are designed for any kind of spill or accident which might result in human contact with bodily fluids, whether it be blood or vomitus or urine. Ever since the AIDS scare originally started, that has become a big issue — making sure you can safely dispose. You can still get sick from vomitus or other types of blood-borne diseases.

"The kit comes with an antibacterial spray, gloves that you'd put on so that you won't come in contact with it, a little scooper, contact with it, a little scooper, an absorbent, and a little bag to put whatever in, a pair of cheapo goggles — everything you need to handle something like that." (They cost about $16.00

"A lot of the school districts will put the kits on the bus in case a little kid gets sick on board. Sometimes banks or stores have them, if someone walks in the door and and it is an absorbent - it literally will consume. You put some in a cup of coffee and it will suck all the water out. It dries out the fluid so that it is easier to scoop up and kills the smell."

Padre Janitorial Supplies also sells the disinfectant separately — a product by the Fuller Brush Company called Fullsan Spray Disinfectant, costing $5.88 for a 16-ounce can. Its main ingredient is ethyl alcohol and it claims to be effective against AIDS, herpes, and influenza. It works on walls, floors, and Eager for some more info, I phoned Waxie Sanistary Supply and spoke with Tom Seaton. "Under the Occupational Standard Health Association, there is a law called the Blood Borne Pathogen Law. In order to clean up a body fluid or spill there are all types of regulations involved. We sell a couple of different brands called Emergency Clean-up kits. Potentially infectious liquid spills are controlled easily using these kits. Each kit has everything needed to disinfect the spill area while providing the components for personal body protection. You get a disinfectant towelette that kills

 AIDS and is effective against tuberculosis. There is a little face shield, a little spatula, and a red hazardous bag. Each of our packages has a real absorbent gel that gels up to 120 times its weight so that you can pick up the spill easily. You've got to have some kind of disinfectant that gets by the Occupa-tional Standard Health Association. In order to be legal, it has to have a tuberculosis-dis-

"There are very few disinfectants that have that claim. Alcohol will do it, bleach will do it, although bleach has to be a registered germicide in order to legally do it. Not all bleaches are a registered germicide; it should have an EPA registration or if it says germi-cide, disinfectant, sanitizer. Any kill claim that it makes has to be registered with the EPA. But, more important, is protecting the person doing it." Waxie Emergency Clean-up Kit costs $71.90 for a package of five.

Still curious about in-home remedies
for cleanup, I called up some veteran parents, experienced in the line of stomach ailments. experienced in the line of stomach ailments. Bill, father to eight children, touted baking soda for an odor killer. "One family reunion, something like ten different kids got the flu. I was running around with my pail and some bak ing soda doing cleanup. The baking soda really takes away the odor. Then I would just fola family reunion.

My sister Cathy is mother to a brood of six. She also offered her favorite concoction. "I always use warm water and white vinegar. It kills the odor right away. You have to ther stomach a vinegar smel for a little while. The key stomach a vinegar smell

Kid stuff

BY ANNE ALBRIGHT

She Moved Through the Fair

The last time my husband Jack and I took our kids to the Del Mar Fair was three years ago. Now I remember why we don't go every year. Three years ago, our older son Johnny had just been born. I bundled up my tiny two-week-old boy and pushed him around the fairgrounds in the stroller. Our daughters, Lucy Angela, and Rebecca, were 21 months, three, and five, respectively. Jack took Rebecca and Angela to ride the leastscary rides in the kiddle zone Lucy wandered around the botanical exhibits with her grandparents. We ate a disgusting lunch — giant corn dogs and Australian batterfried potatoes swimming in ranch dressing - and drank sodas as big as pony kegs. After a few more rides, we bought cotton candy and ice cream and a balloon beside the riverbed. The cars whizzed by on the for each of the girls. We stayed for five hours and spent nearly $200. For the last two years, Jack and I have

For the last two years, Jack and I have gone by ourselves. Both years, we got a babysit-ter and ventured out in the evening. Last year, we left the fair feeling a little bit guilty. "Next year, we'll definitely bring the kids," Jack said.

"Okay," I agreed. That's how I found myself inching our van down the Via de la Valle off-ramp of 1-5 at 1:30 the Tuesday before July 4. Rebecca, Angela, and Lucy sat in the far back seat straining to see the top of the Ferris wheel. "I see it!" Rebecca exclaimed with manic excitement. "I see the Ferris wheel!"

"Are we almost there?" Lucy asked. "We'll get there as soon as we park and walk to the O'Brien Gate," I told her. "How long will that be?" Angela interjected.

"Soon, I hope." In the middle seat, Johnny sat beside tenmonth-old Ben. "Where's Daddy?" Johnny

"He's going to meet us at the gate," I told him. "Daddy had to work today." "And I'm going to ride a motorcycle," Johnny said.

"And a truck," Rebecca chimed in. And a truck, Rebecca chimed in.

"And the ponies," Angela nearly sang.

Ten minutes later, we were inching through the dirt toward our parking spot. "How far away do we have to park?" Rebecca asked anxiously. "Pretty far " A scruffy sunburned man in jeans and an orange vest waved us into a spot freeway a hundred yards in front of us. Behind us, the fair seemed a distant mirage. "Do we have to walk?" Angela asked.

"Yes," I answered.
"Why can't we take the shuttle?" Rebecca ointed to the open-air shuttle at the parking lot's far end.

"By the time we get to the shuttle stop, we'll be halfway to the gate," I told her. While I spoke, I unloaded our enormous double stroller from the rear of the van and started loading it with the diaper bag and our picnic din-ner and the sweaters and sunscreen and water. "And it would be too hard to unload the stroller and fold it up just to ride a short way."

When I had smeared sunscreen on every. When I had smeared sunscreen on every-one's arms and necks and faces, I popped Ben into the stroller's front seat and locked the car. "All right," I cheered, "here we go." I led my little parade down the long dirt road to the underpass and up toward the fair. Three days earlier, I'd broken the little toe on my left foot by accidentally slamming it into the base of Ben's high chair. My toe ached. I limped. "All I need is a bandage on my head and a flute, and we could do our own little Revolutionary War reenactment," I thought. Rebecca held Johnny's hand and encouraged him. "Come on, Johnny," she said. "Daddy's said again. lack waved to us from beside the sand pounded his fat white hands on the stroller's front tray and kicked his legs. "Did you have to park very far away?"

lack asked. "About halfway to Rancho Santa Fe." I wered.

"Me, too. At least we're here."

The next five hours disappeared in a blur of farm animals, kiddie rides, and junk food. The three girls clambered to ride every ride. Jack purchased the tickets and doled them out.

"You each get to ride ten rides," he told them We ended up buying more tickets. I lost coun of the rides they rode. Johnny chose his rides carefully. He selected only those attractions that involved pseudo motor vehicles: motorcycles, trucks, racing cars, bumper cars. Each time he climbed into the driver's seat, his sweet little-boy face tool on the look of a man prepared to stare death in the face. Only when the ride had begun did Johnny's face relax into a smile. Ben spent the entire fair trying to climb out of the stroller or twist out of Jack's or my arms. We finally let him crawl around in the arms. We finally let him crawl around in the dirty hay and dust on a deserted stage beside one of the funhouses. I followed Ben around and grabbed the hay and discarded straws and and grabbed the hay and discarded straws and soda cups out of his filthy hands before he stuffed them into his mouth. We walked back to the car around dusk. As I drove out of the parking lot, Rebecca asked. "Can we come to the fair next year?" "Maybe," I answered. "Or maybe we'll sculpture outside the O'Brien Gate. "DADDY," the kids all shouted and ran to him. Ben be often enough for me.
