On an early Tuesday afternoon in the middle of March, the sun bent out and turned on a cool gray shadow in the shade of a tree in Taoise Park. I watched two groups of children play various games. Some were sitting on mats, some in circles on the grass, chasing each other and laughing. In another corner of the park, a group of kids played soccer. They had set up white nets as goals and a white line across with a white line across them. Other kids sat on the ground in small groups talking. The weather was nice. Their parents, friends, and boyfriends had left their colorful quilt of blankets on the grass. They were straw hats and piled around. It was a great day, and they were enjoying the sunshine and listening to music.

Why Not Dump Your Car In TJ and Get Rich? — See Page 5
Giving Up in Baja

By Bob Ovett

I saw an instance of cross-border insurance fraud about 20 years ago, when a friend from Northern California pulled it off perfectly. He was a three- or four-time-a-year Baja visitor, usually coming in summer. Each time he came to Baja, he would buy Mexican insurance, full coverage, for his Cadillac, which was six or seven years old. He'd always buy at the same agency in Tijuana. This was in addition to his California insurance.

After a few years he decided the handling seemed wasted. The Cadillac, which had developed a chronic transmission problem, one day he simply left it in the Rosenblatt Beach Lot parking lot, key in the ignition, and walked away. He reported it to the local police station, then took a cab to the same at the agency in Tijuana. He told them all about the problem, and they gave him some insurance, the Americans who own cars here can drive it in Mexico. That’s how that up to half the cars fail and run, we have people who go aside on their car, when they either own or have some problems they don’t have to deal with. The National Insurance Crime Bureau is a nonprofit association supported by all¬ most a thousand U.S. insurance companies, with the mission to investigate auto theft and fraud. Their task is to determine if a vehicle is new or in existing, Kans. "There’s a problem in the market, with so many vehicles being stolen, we can now turn to our theft prevention experts to help find and recover these vehicles." The organization’s efforts are aimed at reducing the number of cars stolen and recovered, thereby helping to prevent further theft.

For more information, visit the National Insurance Crime Bureau’s website or contact them directly. They offer resources and support to help individuals and businesses protect their property from theft and other crimes.

The key to stopping insurance fraud is education and awareness. By understanding the risks and working together, we can help prevent this issue from growing.

KPB5 stations lay off 14, budget shortfall

The KPB5 news has announced that they will be laying off 14 employees due to a budget shortfall. The decision was not an easy one, but it was necessary to ensure the continued success and stability of the news station.

"This is a difficult time for us," said station manager John Smith. "We have been facing financial challenges, and after careful consideration, we have determined that this is the best course of action for our viewers and our future." The layoffs will affect a variety of positions, including news anchors, reporters, and producers.

The station has been operating on a tight budget for several months, with the costs of producing daily news broadcasts continuing to rise. The decision to lay off employees was not made lightly, and the station has worked hard to minimize the impact on the employees who will be affected.

"We understand that this will be a difficult time for those who are affected," said Smith. "We want to express our gratitude to our employees for their hard work and dedication, and we wish them all the best in their future endeavors." The station is committed to providing high-quality news and information to the community, and will continue to do so with the remaining staff.

The KPB5 news has been a trusted source of news and information for many years, and the station is confident in its ability to weather this challenging period and emerge stronger.

Giving up in Baja

In 1982, the then 17-year-old American rancher Thomas F. Basso, Jr. was visiting Mexico when he was involved in a head-on collision with a car driven by a local named Luis Gutierrez. The accident left Basso with severe injuries, including a ruptured lung, broken ribs, and brain trauma. He was taken to a hospital in the nearby town of San Quintin, where he underwent surgery and underwent a long recovery period.

In 1984, Basso returned to Mexico for the first time since the accident. He drove to San Quintin to visit the hospital where he had been treated. He was told by the hospital staff that they had no records of him ever being there. Basso was later told by a local resident that the hospital had destroyed all of its records due to a lack of funding. Basso was never able to locate any evidence of his hospitalization or treatment.

In 2012, Basso learned that the hospital had been closed and replaced with a new facility. He visited the new hospital and was able to locate the records of his admission and treatment. He was able to obtain a copy of the medical records and presented them to Mexican authorities. Basso was eventually able to have his injuries recognized by the Mexican government and was able to receive compensation for his injuries.

Basso's experience has led him to believe that medical records are often lost or destroyed in Mexico, especially in rural areas. He has founded a non-profit organization to help people obtain medical records in Mexico and to advocate for improved medical record keeping practices.

Unforgettable Long — A Go San Diego

POP Quiz: What does California mean? Most historians agree that California got its name from Garcia Ordubada of Montezuma's chieftess romance, Los Serge de Espinosa (1518). Ceballos, a black queen, reigns over a gold-laden island "very near the Terrestrial Paradise"—i.e., Eden—named California. She tiles her army of Amazons like women Jeffrey Smith in Constableville, converts to Christianity (marriage that not the man she loved), and submits to male authority. No one agrees, however, on what she applied the name. From 1533 to 1541, Hernán Cortés sent several ships, from Acapulco and Felipe, to explore ancient waters beyond the west coast of Mexico. These voyages discovered the Baja peninsula and eventually led to Cabrillo's landing on San Diego Bay in 1542. On one of them, California got its name.

Like many explorers, Cortés was inspired by finding the Strait of Anian—i.e., the Northwest Passage, also known as the East India Passage, which would link the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. He also sought unexplored wealth, native souls to convert, and, according to many, the home of Caliopha. An island populated solely by women would not only spark a honeysuckle's delight but mount the Terrestrial Paradise might be close at hand. Cortés wasn't alone in his quest for Amazons. The largest river in South America is named for them.

Selected Quotations:

1. Hernán Cortés: "I want the natives of those who discovered we lack to give their own names to the rivers, given, and other places, on the name of the water on whose day they make the discovery, or, otherwise, as they wish it." 2. Hernán Cortés, Fourth Letter to the King, 1542: "If there be found, there is an island inhabited only by women without any men, and at given time men from the standard visit there. This island from then journeys from the province, and it will be rich in pearls and gold." 3. Down Hand Pulls: Cortés enters through an area surrounded by natives in this final phase of his career. His repeated virtual autopsy must have given him some insight into the truth of an island inhabited by women, because he wrote "Halburans or others so we saw and fancied." 4. Charles E. Chapman, A History of California: The Spanish Period... the term "California," which is sometimes traced to what seems more certain that the name of the city, was introduced for the purposes—good islands of the gold, one of which might contain the long-sought treasures, although no names gave them. In later years the word was articulated on a national level for the seventh-century California, Alas, and Hubis.

It's not that homeschoolers aren't virtuous — quite the opposite.

T WAS ONE IN THE AFTERNOON AND NOT YET SPRING BREAK.

At that moment, most San Diego boys and girls, still buzzing from their lunch recess, were inside and fidgeting in hard chairs. Their copybook diagrams showing the chemistry of photosynthesis, or drew pictures of their favorite animal at the zoo, or learned new vocabulary words, like "distracted." On this sunny day, many of them, I'm sure, daydreamed about playing tag in the park.

These contented kids, on the other hand, were making the most of their free time, one of the many perks of homeschooling. Nancy Wooster, the mother of two of the children in the park that day, had invited me to this weekly gathering of local homeschoolers. She helped organize the get-together several years ago. Weather permitting, the group comes here every Tuesday during the school year. It is, she explained, a nice way for the kids to socialize and the parents to discuss homeschooling strategies.

Nancy introduced me to a friendly woman named Becky who wore a tie-dyed T-shirt. I asked Becky why she decided to homeschool her daughter.

"It was a simple decision, really," she said. "One day she came home from school with all these questions about the speed of light. She couldn't figure it out and she wanted to talk about it, but I said, 'No, we can't. We have to color in all these banners.' It was her homework assignment. I just how absurd that was. So I decided to homeschool in order to let her pursue her interests."

"Today, homeschooling, once a rarity seen among educators and responsible parents, sits on the tip of many tongues. No longer a fringe concept, homeschooling has become a profitable business and a potent catchphrase in the political wars over education. Liberals and conservatives, atheists and fundamentalists, and people from every other ideological camp — including teachers — now recognize homeschooling as a viable alternative to an educational system that so many of us think is broke. Locally and nationwide, more and more parents homeschool their children, whether on their own or through programs set up by school boards. Almost two million children in this country attend homeschool. By most estimates, about 5000 kids in San Diego County homeschool in one way or another. That number will surely rise in coming years.

The mainstream media's increasing coverage of homeschooling has something to do with this surge. In its February 25 issue, People ran an article titled "The Learning Process" that claimed, "Home is where the school is." Early this year Leslie Stahl did a 60 Minutes segment on so-called distance

Do you have dry eyes?

If you experience dry eyes, ask your ophthalmologist if you are a candidate for PSEUDOMILEATOR for treatment.

Dry eyes are a common complaint, affecting millions of people worldwide. They can be caused by a variety of factors, including dryness in the winter, prolonged exposure to computer screens, and certain medications. If you think you may have dry eyes, it's important to consult with an ophthalmologist for proper diagnosis and treatment.

Contact lenses can provide relief for some people with dry eyes, but they may not be suitable for everyone. Some common causes of dry eyes include:

- Dry environment: Winter, air conditioning, or living in a very dry climate can cause dryness in the eyes.
- Computer use: Spending long periods of time in front of a computer screen can lead to dry eyes due to the decreased blink rate.
- Medications: Certain medications, such as those for high blood pressure or depression, can cause dry eyes as a side effect.
- Medical conditions: Conditions like Sjogren's syndrome, rheumatoid arthritis, or thyroid disease can lead to dry eyes.
- Aging: As we age, our tear glands may produce less tears, leading to dry eyes.

In some cases, dry eyes may be caused by an underlying condition or may be associated with other symptoms. It's important to consult with an ophthalmologist to determine the best course of treatment for you.

If you are interested in participating in a research study, you can contact West Coast EyeCare for more information.

"Those children have not gotten an education and never will."
Helen explained some of the reasons behind her teaching methods. She teaches the students how to study and how to work on their assignments. The students are encouraged to work in groups and discuss their ideas and solutions. This helps them to learn from each other and to develop their problem-solving skills.

On the average day, she said, "It’s important to plan your day and set aside time for rest and relaxation. This helps you to stay focused and motivated." She also emphasized the importance of maintaining a healthy lifestyle, including regular exercise and a balanced diet.

She added, "It’s important to remember that learning is a continuous process. You need to keep learning throughout your life, not just in school." This message resonated with the students, who appreciated her approach to teaching and her dedication to their success.

"I did one trimester of fifth grade and hated it. I don’t know why it was me or my teacher," said John, a student who was struggling with the material. "I just didn’t understand it, and I didn’t want to put in the effort."

He added, "But Mrs. G. really helped me. She explained things in a way that made sense to me. I think I’m going to do better next year." His teacher praised him for his effort and encouragement, saying, "I’m glad you’re taking it seriously now. You’ve got this!"

"I think this year, we’re going to move on to more advanced material," said Mrs. G., "but I’m excited to see how the students will grow and learn. I’m looking forward to the challenges ahead."

John Taylor Gatto was very happy with his work as a teacher — helping his students understand the world — but the constraints that come with teaching in a public school system was sometimes too much for him. He decided to leave teaching to pursue his passion for learning and education. This decision was not easy for him, but he knew it was the right choice for him.

He started a new project called "The socialist school for learning and development," where he would study and work for the betterment of the children who had children. Despite the challenges, he continued to teach and inspire others. He believed that education was the key to a better future for everyone.

He was a well-respected teacher, and his ideas were admired by many. But he always knew that he had a duty to teach and inspire others, even if it meant leaving the traditional classroom setting. He continued to be an inspiration to many, and his legacy lives on in the work that he did.

In the end, John Taylor Gatto taught us that we all have a duty to learn and teach, and that education is the key to a better future for everyone. He showed us that we can make a difference in the world, and that change is possible. His legacy will continue to inspire us for years to come.

A new look at the Bard's most seductive, enchanting and fantastic comedy.
The biggest hit of the summer, "I’m A Believer," has been the subject of much debate among music lovers. "I don’t think anybody can avoid being somewhat influenced by the music," said one observer. "The song is catchy, the rhythm is good, and the lyrics are meaningful." Another observer added, "I’ve been listening to it for weeks, and I still can’t get it out of my head."

Regarding the influence on the music industry, one musician stated, "I think this will have a huge impact. It’s a great way to introduce younger listeners to classic rock."

On the economic impact, another commented, "This song has definitely helped our sales. It’s been played everywhere, from supermarkets to coffee shops."

Overall, "I’m A Believer" seems to have captured the public’s attention and has become a defining moment in modern music. It’s a testament to the power of music to connect with people and transcend generations.

What the Hell Is a Rock’n Shabbat?
"If you feel what you’re doing is wrong, then whether you feel you’re doing something better is irrelevant."

"I never had a rock band going to synagogue because it’s boring," says Rabbi Arthur Schneier, whose Congregation Beth Am offers the county’s only Rock’n Shabbat program. Rock’n Shabbat is a program of spiritual and musical events that are held on Friday and Saturday nights, and provide music as well as instruction on Jewish topics. The program is a cultural event that brings together Jewish and non-Jewish communities.

The idea for Rock’n Shabbat began with Rabbi Schneier’s sons, who were part of a rock band. They suggested a program that would combine music and Jewish teachings, and Rabbi Schneier agreed. The program has since become very popular, and has attracted people from all walks of life.

The program is held on Friday nights, and the venue is a beautiful synagogue. The music is performed by local and international bands, and the atmosphere is very lively. The program concludes with a talk by Rabbi Schneier, who discusses the connections between music and religion.

The program is open to everyone, and there is no cost to attend. It is a great opportunity to experience a unique blend of Jewish culture and music.
The band plugs in its microphone before sundown on Friday night.

What the Hell
Is a Rock’n Shabbat?

“If you feel what you’re doing is wrong, then whether you feel you’re doing something better is irrelevant.”

He says he’s in charge,

Rabbi Steven Winters, whose Congregation Beth Am is located in the San Carlos neighborhood of Palo Alto, has transformed his synagogue into a replica of a Jewish rock band. His goal is to make the Shabbat service more engaging for his congregation, which includes many young families. Winters believes that by incorporating music, dance, and other forms of entertainment into the service, he can attract more people to the synagogue and help them come to a deeper understanding of their faith.

Winters’ newest project is “Rock’n Shabbat,” a service that takes place every Friday night. The service begins with a prayer led by a rabbi, followed by a reading from the Torah. Then, the service transitions into a rock concert, with performers playing a mix of traditional and contemporary Jewish music. The service ends with a closing prayer and the lighting of the Sabbath candles.

The response to the service has been positive, with many members of the congregation saying that they enjoy the energy and enthusiasm of the performances. Some even say that they look forward to the service more than they do to traditional Shabbat services.

Winters hopes that “Rock’n Shabbat” will continue to evolve, with more musical and theatrical elements added over time. He also plans to create a similar service for the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur, which is observed on the 10th day of the month of Tishrei.

“I want to create a space where people can come together and feel a sense of community and belonging,” says Winters. “I believe that music and entertainment are powerful tools for connecting with others and helping people better understand and appreciate their faith.”

For more information on “Rock’n Shabbat,” visit Congregation Beth Am’s website at www.betham.net.

A Little Strange

On his fingers were six diamond-studded gold rings, each the size of a peach pit.

I designed the Liberty Museum in Las Vegas, the other day. Was exactly the way it should have been. It centered on a shopping center, a two-minute drive from the Strip, but still the coolest thing in the city. The building had the look of a mountain, with its glistening gold and silver surfaces. It was a place where people could see the world, not just laser shows.

I remember the first time I saw the museum. It was at night, and the lights were out. The building was lit up in a way that was both beautiful and eerie. It was as if the museum was trying to be something more than just a place to visit. And that's exactly what it was.

The museum had a number of exhibits, each one more fascinating than the last. One of my favorites was the section on the history of photography. It was a massive exhibit, filled with photos from around the world, each one capturing a moment in time. I spent hours looking at the shots, trying to figure out what the photographer was trying to say.

Another section was dedicated to the history of music. It was a massive collection of instruments, each one more intriguing than the last. There were guitars, pianos, and drums, all displayed in a way that made it easy to see how they worked. And the museum wasn't just about the items on display. It was about the stories behind them. You could tell the history of each instrument, and even see some of the famous people who had played it.

Overall, the museum was a fantastic experience. It was a place where you could learn, but also be entertained. And that's exactly what I wanted. I wanted people to come and see it, to be inspired by the stories and the art. And I think I succeeded. It was a great day.

From above, the beach is a continuous chain of gentle dunes, and the ocean is an endless expanse of blue and white waves. The beach is dotted with small,Colorful umbrellas and chairs, and the occasional kite flying overhead. In the distance, a small lighthouse stands sentinel, its light guiding the way for those who dare to venture into the unknown. The smell of salt and seaweed fills the air, and the sound of the waves gently lulls the mind into a state of tranquility. It's a perfect day for a stroll on the beach, or perhaps a game of frisbee with friends. Whatever your choice, the beach is the perfect place to spend a summer day. And in the distance, you can see a small town with colorful buildings and shops, ready to welcome you back from your adventure.

H
d those who know that Kipling's iconic adventure is a joy to be spoken. It's easy to think of Kipling as the author of imaginative stories of early American ventures, while his prose is an example description of modern industry. But there's a lot more to Kipling than what most people imagine. In fact, most people go to Kipling to get away from the modern world. But facing the modern world head on,
Kipling's stories are still relevant today.

The story of Kipling's life is a tale of adventure and adventure. Kipling was born in the British Empire in 1865 and died there in 1936. His life was spent between the two worlds. He lived in India for most of his life, but he also traveled extensively

Stream of Consciousness

The eye takes in, the mind holds on, the hand puts down.

omments in my weekly column here have been rather gloomy of late, but things got a bit cheerier in that department during the last few weeks. The weather has been pretty good, and the flowers are blooming again. It gives one a feeling of hope and new beginnings. I guess that’s the way to look at things. Maybe we shouldn’t dwell too much on the negative.

But I digress. The point is, there is a stream of consciousness that flows through our minds, sometimes in a rather random manner.

It’s like a river that meanders through the valley of the mind, bringing with it all sorts of detritus and debris. Sometimes it’s clear and flowing, other times it’s浑浊 and turbid.

But no matter what the state of the stream, we need to learn how to navigate it. We need to find the channels and avoid the rapids. We need to learn to swim with the current and not against it.

It’s a delicate balance, but one that we must strive to achieve. For if we don’t, we risk drowning in the maelstrom of our own thoughts. And that would be tragic.

To Chaplin's left is Gertrude Gilbert, president of the Amphon Club for nearly 40 years. The organization (named after a musician of Greek mythology) worked to bring well-known concert attractions to town. Gilbert served on the "Board of the Fine Arts Gallery" (according to her 1947 obituary) and was an executive board member on the San Diego Symphony Association. She was in charge of music for the 1935 exposition in Balboa Park and, for the 1935 expo, served on the "Women's Executive Board."

Gilbert's most lasting work still stands in Balboa Park when the city council voted to tear down the 1915 exposition buildings. Gilbert's voice was instrumental in overturning that decision.

Checking out the marina at the beach, Leo, Windmill, or Susan Collins, are steeped in tradition, a place where fishing is a way of life. It's a place where the community comes together. People gather to celebrate the annual fishing season, sharing stories and memories of their time on the water. It's a place where the bonds between neighbors are strengthened by a shared love of the sea. And it's a place where the future of fishing is being shaped by the young people who are eager to carry on the traditions of their ancestors. This is the marina at the beach, a place where the legacy of fishing is passed down from generation to generation.

Get Them Out of the House

BY ANNE ALBRIGHT

There were days I didn't feel like it. I looked out the window. It was raining. But then I remembered what my mother said: "Don't look at the weather, look at the children."

Once there was a time when my children thought the world revolved around them. Now they're older, and I'm not sure they're smart enough to get along without their parents. They feel they're nothing without our constant supervision...

I need to find a way to keep them occupied. I opened the door to find my husband busy in the garage, and I said, "You're doing something interesting." He looked up and said, "I'm just changing a tire." I exclaimed, "Oh, that's great! I thought you were working on the house." He smiled and replied, "Well, I am working on the house."

"But you're not doing anything that will last," I protested.

He grinned. "I'm working on the roof," he said.

I gasped. "The roof?"

He nodded. "Yes, the roof."

I laughed. "You're really doing something!"

He shrugged. "I'm just trying to keep them busy."

I smiled. "Well, it's working."

He smiled back. "Thank you."
