It's difficult to go digital when facing a debt default. Some of the nation's largest newspapers are behind the times technologically, partly because they gobbled up additional newspapers instead of spending money on electronic advances. Now the digital media revolution has accelerated startlingly, and those papers, laden with leverage and facing an economy in recession, don't have the money to get ahead of the curve. San Diegans have a front-row seat for this phenomenon.

According to Bloomberg News, U.S. newspapers' print advertising sales plunged by 14 percent in this year's first quarter from a year earlier, the biggest drop on record, largely because of weak real estate and employment markets and the loss of business to the Internet.

This is surprising, because 2008 is a so-called quadrennial year. Print advertising is supposed to get a nice jolt because of the presidential election and the Olympics. Metro newspapers are being hit the worst by far, but other newspapers rose only 7.2 percent over the past year, the smallest gain since the Newspaper Association of America began reporting papers' online sales growth four years ago. Newspapers don't make anywhere near as much money on online ads as they make on print ads. Online revenue is still less than 10 percent of newspapers' total ad sales.

Newspapers’ Debt Dilemma

By Don Bauder

A consequence of all this, newspapers' earnings, if they exist, are strained. Stocks continue to plunge. In April of last year, San Diego's privately held Copley Press sold nine newspapers in Ohio and Illinois to upstate New York--based, publicly held GateHouse Media for $382.5 million. Since then, GateHouse's stock has plunged 85 percent. It's now below $3. Astonishingly, the company has not dropped its dividend. The readers' demand for content remains high.

With St. Louis brewing giant Anheuser-Busch battling a hostile $46.4 billion takeover attempt by Belgium's InBev, locals are bracing for the possibility that SeaWorld, the long-controversial aquatic park on City-owned land along the shores of Mission Bay, may be about to change hands once again. Anheuser-Busch bought the sprawling theme park back in 1986 from book-publishing company Harcourt Brace and quickly began morphing it into a small-time version of Disneyland.

The brewer spent millions on lobbyists and political consultants in its ultimately successful 1998 effort to persuade local voters to let the company override the City's 30-foot coastal height limit and build an array of amusement-park rides, including the garish Journey to Atlantis. Now, under siege by the Europeans, however, the firm most famous for Bud is said to be thinking of unloading SeaWorld, along with its sister park in Orlando, Florida, and eight other theme parks it owns. One possible buyer: the government of Dubai, the small but very rich neighbor of Saudi Arabia on the Persian Gulf. Which raises the question: would the alcohol-swigging Muslim nation tear out the beer garden that Anheuser-Busch lobbied so hard to install on the premises?

Medias

Many newspapers aren't doing so hot: according to advertising economist Jon Swallen, advertising spending on network TV over the past 12 months is up a mere 0.8 percent. Ditto for magazines. Radio is down 4.5 percent and local radio down 7.2 percent.

Keep in mind that the U.S. population is growing at about 1 percent a year. The Internet is growing rapidly, but revenue of online operations run by newspapers is rapidly growing. Yet, the drop in print advertising is dampening newspaper performance. The Internet is growing, but it's not in the majority yet.
Get Out, Stay Out
By Joe Deegan

In February 2007, the Barona Band of Mission Indians sponsored state legislation entitled “Unlawful Entry: Tribal Land.” San Diego County’s board of supervisors, as well as Sheriff Bill Kolender and District Attorney Bonnie Dumanis, signed on to the California State Senate bill as supporters. The bill would give tribal governments a new tool to control their lands by sending suspending persons letters warning them not to trespass. Violators could face a fine of $250 for a first offense and $500 for a second.

Thinking that troublesome gamblers might be at the bottom of the bill, I called the Barona casino. The “media department” did not call back. But a supervisor on the casino floor, who wished to remain anonymous, said, “It’s our attempt to get back in line.”

The Barona Band argues that “trespass incidents are a critical community safety issue.” At this time, there is no consequence when an individual is banned from the reservation and later returns. Existing law…requires lands to be cultivated or enclosed by a fence, while uncultivated or unenclosed lands must have signs posted no less than three to a mile on each road and trail to forbid trespassing. This would be impractical. The assembly’s Public Safety Committee with five ayes and no nays.

yield is almost a staggering 33 percent. I asked the company’s vice president of investor relations, Mark Maring, if he gets any questions about that yield. “Every day,” he joked.

Don’t expect that dividend to last. In its most recent quarter, GateHouse lost $27 million, double its loss of the same quarter a year earlier. GateHouse, which mainly has papers in small (often monopoly) markets, was not expected to be hit as hard as companies owning big metro dailies. But it piled up too much debt making too many acquisitions.

In a similar fix is Iowa-based Lee Enterprises, which was supposed to feast on its collection of smaller papers with little competition. (One exception is San Diego’s North County Times, a Lee paper with lots of competition.) But Lee piled up a lot of debt to buy a big paper, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, along with too many smaller ones. In its most recent quarter, Lee lost $713 million. In the quarter a year earlier, it had made $11.2 million. A year ago, the stock was above $20; now it’s around $4. The dividend yield is above 17 percent. Obviously, that won’t remain. “Lee Enterprises’ financial health is poor,” says analyst Tom Corbett of Morningstar, a stock-rating firm. “Lee has assumed a substantial debt load from its earlier acquisitions, and the company is closing in on the upper limits of its debt covenants.” (That is a polite way of saying that it could default on its debt.)

But there may be really big default news in the offing. Bond-rating firm Standard & Poor’s says Chicago’s Tribune Company could face default by the end of the year. This company, which owns the Los Angeles Times, is burdened with excessive debt as a result of a kinky buyout engineered last year by real estate baron Sam Zell. The deal left the company saddled with $13 billion of debt. It must sell assets to survive. One of those assets is the Chicago Cubs baseball team, along with its historic stadium, Wrigley Field. The Cubs, who haven’t won a world championship for 100 years, finally have a good team and might face the indignity of being sold when they have the best team in a century. The Tribune wants the State of Illinois to buy Wrigley Field, but that deal appears likely to die. “We think [default is] a possibility as early as December,” Standard & Poor’s analyst Emile Courtney told Bloomberg News.

ings, owner of the Pulitzer Prize–winning Philadelphia Inquirer, defaulted on $85 million of its debts in early June. This company took over the famed newspaper after the McClatchy Company bought Knight Ridder in 2006 and then dumped some of the papers. At the time it bought Knight Ridder, McClatchy stock was around $53. Now it’s below $7 and yielding 10 percent. The company’s bonds are rated junk (noninvestment grade), although not necessarily in danger of default. In March of last year, McClatchy sold the Minneapolis Star Tri-borne for $530 million — less than half of what it had paid for it seven years earlier. The private equity group that bought the Minneapolis paper, Avista Capital Partners, is now denying that it is in the brink of bankruptcy. Avista had bor-rrowed $450 million to do the deal and has watched as the paper’s annual revenues have fallen by $75 million, says the trade publication Editor & Publisher.
According to Editor & Publisher, among other newspa-ger groups whose bonds are rated junk or a notch above are Freedom Communications of Orange County and Medi-un Group of Denver.
MediaNews, owned by William Dean Singleton, has been rumored to be a potential buyer of the Union-Tribune. In late 2006, Hearst Corporation bought theTorrancebased Daily Breeze, which covers the area from LAX to the L.A. Harbor, from Copley with the idea of transferring ownership to MediaNews, which is operating the paper. But MediaNews’s debt rating has been lowered several times, and default is a possibility, says Bloomberg. On June 18, the chief executive of closely held Hearst resigned. There are rumors that board members thought he spent too much money on newspapers (such as investing $288 mil-ion in MediaNews) and not enough on online ventures.
Bottom line: MediaNews will have to strengthen its balance sheet greatly to buy Copley.
Tribune and Lee, once considered candidates to buy the San Diego paper, are out of the running.
Copley once had a pristine balance sheet, because Helen Copley and her selected board members had an aversion to debt. The younger management was contemptusous of this prudence and finally persuaded her to take on debt to buy Ohio and Illinois papers beginning in the mid-1990s. It sold those papers to GateHouse last year, but that company’s Mark Maring says that his ailing chain did cannot assume Copley debt. Copeley claimed it sold the papers because of tax obligations from the death of Helen Copeley, although many insiders doubt that explanation. The question is whether Copley paid off its debt after it sold the papers to GateHouse. The company did not respond to a query.
In a speech on June 2, Singleton said that 19 of the 50 largest U.S. newspapers are losing money, and the number will grow. Some experts predict that a couple of dailies will fall within two years; some will cut out certain of their editions, such as Mondays and Wednesdays. The companies have to shell out money to service debt while revenues decline but must spend money to be competitive online. To slash expenses, there have been massive industrywide layoffs.
Employees who had nothing to do with the dubious decidion-making are left holding the bag, and their heads are inside that bag.

Solid Gold researches the ingredients that go into its products very carefully. The owner, Sissy Harrington-McGill, recently went to India to study ayurvedic herbs. The biscuit treat, Solid Gold’s Cinnabone Biscuit for dogs, was of special interest. Sissy has been breeding, showing and raising Great Danes for almost 50 years. Her dogs are fed at 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. We all go to bed at around 10 p.m. If she forgets to give them their nighttime biscuit, around 2 a.m., a very loud yawn is heard as if to say, “I’m starving to death. Feed me my biscuits!”

Then, they go back to sleep through the night. Their people are well trained!

Of all the five biscuit recipes, Cinnabone Biscuit is the all-time favorite. Southeast Asia is known for its cinnamon. Nothing is too good for our furry kids.

Cinnamon information first appeared in Chinese writings around 2800 B.C. It was given to people for a variety of ailments. It helped with kidney, liver, and heart problems. It was used to keep meat from spoiling and kept disease from spreading due to its antibacterial properties.

In the first century A.D., Pliny the Elder thought that cinnamon was so valuable that 350 grams of cinnamon were equal to 15 times the value of silver.

Medieval physicians used it for respiratory problems such as coughing and sore throat. They didn’t know how effective it was for bacterial infections. They just knew that it worked.

Cinnamon was thought to have an anti-aging use, since it slows down the deterioration of cells.

Today, cinnamon is used for weight control and Type II diabetes. The Bellville Nutrition Center is under the auspices of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture. Their 2003 study found that cinnamon lowered glucose, triglycerides and LDL cholesterol, as well as improved diabetes problems.

The department also found that it helped with insect problems. As an additional bonus, the department found that even after the experiment was over, all the beneficial effects continued for 20 more days.

A professor of nutrition at the Public School of Nutrition at the Harvard School of Public Health was amazed at the long-lasting results. Dr. Anderson of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture said, “Cinnamon makes cells more sensitive to insulin.”

Cinnamon contains sulphur, the seventh most prevalent substance in human’s and dog’s bodies. Dogs love cinnamon.

In 2004, the people of Taiwan found that if they sprinkled cinnamon around the island, it killed mosquito larvae more effectively than DEET, a common pesticide. On July 14, 2004 a recommendation was made by the Agriculture and Food Chemistry Dept. in Taiwan to use cinnamon to repel insects. Yet, if the dogs found the cinnamon and ate it, it wouldn’t hurt them. Dogs love cinnamon.

From Sissy’s notebook about India in the spring of 2008, she tells what she observed.

“The elephants and camels are common beasts of burden in the city of Bombay (now called Mumbai). They poop all over as they walk along. The sacred white cows stop traffic and walk into the street, into shops – pooping all the way. Traffic comes to a dead stop as the cows wander across the streets.

“At night, women come out and gather up the poop, mix it with straw, dry it out, and use it for fuel for cooking.”

In the early 1800s in the U.S., pioneers also collected buffalo chips and cow pies for the same reason. The chips were so valuable that they were shipped to various ports as cargo. At first, they were stored in the bottom of the ship’s hold. But they produced methane gas. So, if someone approached the chips with a lighted lantern, it exploded.

So sailors marked on the ship’s walls “STORE HIGH IN TRANSIT” to let the air circulate. Later on, the abbreviation S.H.I.T. was used.

I always thought that expression was used by dog handlers as they left the ring, if they didn’t win.

Solid Gold Cinnabone Biscuits are available in 2.5-pound reusable buckets with handles, or 1-pound jars. The other ingredients are barley, lamb, oats, fish, garlic and sea vegetation.

Our other biscuits are Dragon’s Teeth to clean teeth, Dragonett to clean little teeth, Dyna-Bones for the eyes and diabetes, and Natur-Bone Biscuit for memory, circulation and weight control.

The King’s Criminal of the Week:

The criminal gave a clerk at the Korner Quick Stop his license in order to turn on the gasoline pump and get gasoline at about 8 pm. Mobile County Sheriff’s Office spokeswoman Kate Johnson said in a news release. A few minutes later, he came back in the store with a handgun and demanded money from the clerk. He took the money, Johnson said, but left behind his Alabama driver’s license.

Johnson said the clerk was able to identify the criminal because he frequents the gas station and “is on a first-name basis with the clerk.”

I Couldn’t Find The Hyatt

While I read Naomi Wise’s superb reviews almost religiously, this week I got very confused (Restaurant Review, June 26). She mentions how difficult finding the Red Marlin is due to poor signage, etc., but I was puzzled about which Hyatt it was even located in. I couldn’t find it in the article and had to Google Red Marlin to find out it was in the Mission Bay area. Anyway, Naomi’s opinions have provided innumerable pleasant outings over the years, and I feel San Diego is the richer for having her here and on staff for the Reader. Thanks to you and to her.

Much Cheering In This Library

To begin — I love this article (“No Shushing In This Library,” Cover Story, June 19)! Let me get this out of the way before I gush.

As library services director for a consortium of 75 public libraries in northern New Jersey and a former New York Times Librarian of the Year, I want to thank the Reader for this wonderful article.

I have been a librarian for a very long time, and this may just be the best article of its nature that I have ever read.

Creative, engaging from the first sentence, fun, informative, well-researched, and so well written, this piece should be submitted for an award.

Alex knows what most good librarians know — that every library, no matter the size, can make a profound difference in the lives of the people it serves. When I was a library director, I always said that my library, a small storefront library in a very poor town, was like Cheers without the alcohol. I know what a difference we made every day for the people who used our library. I use the example of when the earthquake in El Salvador struck. We had a line of people waiting to use the Internet to email back home to El Salvador to find out if their family members were alive or dead. But that’s just one example; every librarian has loads.

I have forwarded Finlayson’s piece to my colleagues with a caveat that it is long and wonderful and a must read.

Thank you for being such a visionary editor, and please thank Alex Finlayson for her exuberance and intelligence, both of which shine through big-time in this article.

Again, I loved this article! Congrats!

The Ultimate Dumpster

I’m calling about this article about Dumpster divers (“Dumpster Diving for Dinner,” Cover Story, June 26). If you can get ahold of these guys, tell them to go to the Trader Joe’s at Liberty Station, because these people I know are getting, like, three hundred dollars’ worth of food out of there every night — salmon, steaks, everything. All these guys are vegans, but there’s tons of produce and fruit, and it’s all good. It’s all packaged. It gets outdated that day, and they throw it out, and they go about midnight and grab ‘em. My friends took off back to Oregon, so nobody’s getting it, so if those guys want, they can get whatever they want. They throw more food out there than you could ever believe.

Steve Carol

Full Of Poison And Bugs

I haven’t read the article about Dumpster diving (“Dumpster Diving for Dinner,” Cover Story, June 26), but I’m going to. I’m just looking at the cover. I’m a security officer, and I work with a lot of people on the street. But that picture, and whoever was thinking of it — I’ve stopped people from eating bugs, everything that’s in there. There’s nothing consumable in a Dumpster. Absolutely nothing. I haven’t read the story, but that just, to me, shouldn’t have been done, because that stuff is rotten and it’s horrible, and I keep people from poisoning themselves every day. We keep them locked up at the shopping center. You don’t eat stuff in the Dumpster. There’s nothing edible in there, ever, anywhere. And that shouldn’t have been written, giving someone the idea that that’s an option, because it’s not. And it’s not necessary, because they have food places to go to.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

Hey, Matt:
Are you skinny or fat? And if you’re fat, are you on a diet? Everybody I know is on a diet. And some of them aren’t even fat. Who was the first person to go on a diet?

Until recently the history of mankind has been a story of famine, so your average Middle Ages dude wasn’t having trouble zipping up his jeans. But if we look at rich people back then, maybe we can find one or two who qualify. The most famous trailblazing dieter — that is, a person who modified his her food intake specifically to lose weight — was William I of England (William the Conqueror). The story goes that by 1087 he had eaten himself into a condition where he was too fat to get on his horse. And since his whole kingly image was based on the idea of a mounted William leading his men into battle, it was pretty humiliating when he couldn’t get a leg over Dobbins. Popular history says William’s solution to the problem was to lock himself in his room, eat nothing, and drink only alcohol. (Alcohol in the form of ale or mead was pretty much the common drink of the day. And hardly a good plan for losing weight.)

No record of how long he endured this regimen, but subsequent history indicates that he must have had some success. That same year, William died when he fell off his horse. Around this time, about the only thing known about weight loss is that if you throw a guy in a stone tower and feed him bread and water, he eventually becomes a skeleton. Doctors considered obesity among the common man incurable and somehow a reflection of low moral character. “Fat” and “bad” would continue to be linked to this very day.

The next diet milestone is attributed to Englishman William Banting and his doctor, Mr. Harvey, in the 1850s. William wanted to lose a little girth, perhaps to upgrade his moral standing in the community. But it was another disease unnamed that put him on the path to slimness. Whatever William was suffering from, his doctor’s Rx was a diet free of sugar and starches. In no time, William was a shadow of his former self and the girls were flocking to his gate. The world needs to know about this, Banting exclaimed. So he wrote what is probably the first diet book, Letter on Corpulence Addressed to the Public, a treatise on the value of the low-carbohydrate diet and a worldwide hit.

By the late 1900s, people had much better access to more food, science had figured out calories and other basic weight-control facts, industrial America had begun to see fat people as an untapped market, and the era of diet pills, loony fad menus, snake-oil slimming elixirs, and diet books had dawned.

Mathew Alice:
What happens to the penis that a transsexual trades in for a vagina? And how the heck is a penis made into a clitoris?
— Hmmmm, Encinitas

According to staff quack Dr. Doctor, they all go into the big international penis bank. That’s where people go to pick out their favorite to be sewed on during the opposite kind of sex-change operation. Really. It’s the truth. Have we ever lied to you? Yeah, we have. Plenty of times. Like now.

We’re all glad you didn’t go to med school, Hmmmm. You don’t just chop ‘em off and throw ‘em out. A male-to-female trade is more artful than that. Actually, there are several times. Like now.

Hey Matt:
My cousin Pablo, a San Diego Fire Department mechanic and a racing fan, said that in the American racing business, duck duct tape is known as “200 mile per hour tape” for its staying power while resisting speeds up to 200 mph on race cars. My dad used to wrap it around his wrists while working on his cars in the backyard. I don’t know why he did this, but to me he looked like a modern-day Mexican backyard mechanic Hercules.

July 4th Edition

Letter from John Adams to his daughter Abigail “Nabby” Adams, Philadelphia, July 5th, 1777

My dear Daughter,

Yesterday, being the anniversary of American Independence, was celebrated here with a festivity and ceremony becoming the occasion. I am too old to derive delight in pretty descriptions, if I had a talent for them, otherwise a picture might be drawn, which would please the fancy of a Whig, at least. The thought of taking any notice of this day was not conceived until the second of this month, and it was not mentioned until the third. It was too late to have a sermon, as every one wished, so this must be deferred another year. Congress determined to adjourn over that day, and to dine together.

From a speech given by Frederick Douglass at Corinthian Hall, Rochester, New York, on July 5, 1852.

This Fourth of July is yours, not mine…. What, to the American slave, is your Fourth of July?… Go where you may, search where you will, roam through all the monarchies and despotsisms of the Old World, travel through South America, search out every abuse, and when you have found the last, lay your facts by the side of the everyday practices of this nation, and you will say with me that, for revolting barbarity and shameless hypocrisy, America reigns without a rival.

Written by Joseph Addison (1672–1719), English essayist, poet, and politician:

How beautiful is death, when earn’d by virtue! Who would not be that youth! What pity is it That we can die but once to serve our country!

Remarks of George S. Patton: Don’t be a fool and die for your country. Let the other sonofabitch die for his.

Albert Einstein: I find it difficult to believe that I belong to such an idiotic, rotten species — the species that actually boasts of its freedom of will, heroism on command, senseless violence, and all of the Katharsien nonsense that goes by the name of patriotism.

William Shakespeare, Coriolanus (Act 3, Scene 3): I do love My country’s good with a respect more tender. More holy and profound, than mine own life, My dear wife’s estimate, her womb increase, And treasure of my hins.

Snoke the Younger (4 BC–AD 65): Men love their country, not because it is great, but because it is their own.

Bertrand Russell (1872–1970) British mathematician, philosopher, Nobel Laureate in Literature: Patriots always talk of dying for their country, and never of killing for their country.

Theodore Roosevelt: We have room for but one flag, the American flag, and this excludes the red flag which symbolizes all wars against liberty and civilization just as much as it excludes any foreign flag of a nation to which we are hostile. We have room for but one language here and that is the English language, for we intend to see that the crucible turns our people out as Americans, of American nationality, and not as dwellers in a polyglot boarding house; and we have room for but one, sole loyalty, and that loyalty is to the American people.

Voltaire (1694–1778): It is dangerous to be right when the government is wrong.

George M. Cohan: I’m a Yankee Doodle Dandy A Yankee Doodle, do or die A real live nephew of my uncle Sam’s Born on the Fourth of July George M. Cohan: Many a bum show has been saved by the flag.

The Treaty of Paris, September 3, 1783: In the name of the most holy and undivided Trinity. It having pleased the Divine Providence to dispose the hearts of the most serene and most potent Prince George the Third, by the grace of God, king of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, duke of Brunswick and Lunebourg, arch-treasurer and prince elector of the Holy Roman Empire etc., and of the United States of America, to forget all past misunderstandings and differences that have unhappily interrupted the good correspondence and friendship which they mutually wish to restore…have agreed upon and confirmed the following articles.

Article 1: His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said United States, viz., New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, to be free sovereign and independent states, that he treats with them as such, and for himself, his heirs, and successors, relinquishes all claims to the government, property, and territorial rights of the same and every part thereof.

I treasure the stability of my childhood years, but my clearest memories are of the breaks from routine — family vacations, the time Dad let us go to a midnight movie opening on a school night, my 16th birthday bash. Ye olde family reunion is upon me once again, and I’m in dire need of a punch-up — a focal point for bored children. Ah-ha, a sweet spot for their sweet tooth — popcorn from an old-fashioned popper in little-striped bags. The great swathes of pink cotton candy rolled into cloud-sized mounds, icy blue snow cones and the subsequent brain freeze. I’ll give them an old-time carnival-snack binge.

Greg at San Diego Kids Party Rentals in Clairemont (858-227-2700; sandiegokidspartyrentals.com) told me I could start making fresh-popped memories for $79 a day. “The popcorn machines are the old-fashioned kind — basically, a cart on wheels. It comes with enough popcorn and oil for 30 servings and the boxes you use for serving. You take the premeasured packets of corn and oil, cut the tops off, stir them together in the hopper, press some buttons, and you’re off. The first batch takes three to four minutes; after that, each batch goes a little quicker. It’s pre-seasoned to give a buttery-salty flavor. And you can get additional packets, each containing seven to eight servings, for $2 apiece.”

As for the snow cones, “You need to provide your own ice. We provide the rest, including syrups. We have a variety — strawberry, cherry, lime — and we send out a little booklet that contains the recipe for making your own ice. There’s a button on the machine that activates a big hammer that grinds the ice into snow. Just scoop it out into the cone and add syrup. It takes no time at all to get going, and I suggest that people make a whole bunch of snow at once. We provide cups for 40 to 50 people. That’s $79 a day.”

San Diego Kids Party Rentals offers delivery and pickup on orders over $125. “But either of these can be picked up,” said Greg. “Just keep in mind that Saturdays are our crazy days, so you’ll want to try to give us as much advance notice as possible when booking, as we do sell out. Other days, it’s not usually an issue.” Greg noted that no cleaning was necessary prior to return.

Raphael’s Party Rentals in Miramar and Carlsbad (858-689-7368; raphaelspartyrentals.com) rents antique-style popcorn carts for $116, or tabletop-style for $66. A $35 deposit is required, but if the machines are returned cleaned, the deposit is refunded. As for popcorn, said the clerk, “Our smallest amount serves 200; that’s $45. You might want to buy your own at Costco or Smart & Final. And for something like this, your best bet is to pick it up. We deliver for minimum orders of $75, but the delivery fee starts at $97.”

Abbaye Party Rents has five locations: San Diego, Mira Mesa, El Cajon, Escondido, and Temecula (888-552-2339; abbayepartyrentals.com). Antique-style carts run $95; tabletop models, $55. Sales clerk Jackie told me, “It’s really simple. You plug them in, turn the switch on, add the popcorn. We sell enough popcorn and oil for 10 to 12 servings for $1.99, and a pack of 100 bags is $4. Delivery charge depends on zip code — La Mesa is $45. We ask for only a minimum cleaning — empty the hopper of excess kernels, and wipe out any leftover popcorn. We’ll do the actual washing.”

Jackie also offered cotton-candy machines for $85 a day. “It’s basically a motor with a giant bowel on top of it. You pour the candy floss into the bowl when it’s turned on, and it spins and spins. Stick the cotton-candy stick into the bowl, and let it collect cotton candy. For this one, we ask you to clean the bowl when you’re finished. The candy floss runs $7.95, and a pack of 100 sticks is $4.95. Oh, and we also have root beer pretzel warmers for $55. You can buy the pretzels at Costco — just defrost them first. Gener- ally, a week’s notice is enough to reserve any of these.”

ABC Party & Event Rentals in Chula Vista (619-476-2222; abcpartyrental.com) were more no-frills. Tabletop popcorn machines and snow-cone machines ran $40 per day. No supplies or delivery available, but the clerk told me that either machine would fit in a minivan. Cleaning was not necessary, and a two- to three-week advance notice was recommended. At the opposite end of the spectrum was Party Pals in Sorrento (858-622-6613; partypals.com). I talked to Linda and learned that cotton-candy, snow-cone, and popcorn machines could be had for $575 each. “That includes an attendant for a four-hour event and servings for 425 people. Delivery in San Diego is $95. The attendant will bring out, set up, operate, and take down the machine and will serve the guests during the event. You determine where you want the machine to go; we just ask that it’s a flat surface. Also, you want to make sure we can get ten amps per machine — you might want to check your power supply ahead of time. We do a lot of outdoor carnivals, school events, grad nights, and company picnics. Popcorn and cotton candy tend to be most popular around Halloween. We’ve probably already booked the snow-cone machines for the Fourth of July; but other summer dates are still available.”

like a good amateur psychologist, when I encounter a hot mess of a woman I immediately look to her father. More often than not, women with low self-esteem and self-destructive tendencies (from hookers to housewives) have dubious dads. Maybe he wasn’t around and Mom had a confusing variety of “special friends.” Perhaps he was around too much, in an abusive and destructive way. Point is, a young girl’s relationship with her father shapes her self-respect and the way she will relate to men later in life. Therefore, I am confident that it is by no coincidence that my three sisters and I are strong women with healthy and rewarding relationships. As an adult, I count myself among the especially fortunate daughters who are able to appreciate their dads as both father and friend.

A few weeks ago, my father and I attended a baseball game for the first time together. My dad is not the overly masculine type. He prefers Andrew Lloyd Webber to the Rolling Stones, red wine to Budweiser, and appreciates their dads as both "housewives (even the Housewives of ESPN). If someone were to whisper "grand slam" in his ear, the first and only thought to enter Dad’s mind would be his preferred breakfast. So when he asked me to clear out a Thursday afternoon and join him at the ballpark, I correctly presumed that Dad, who is frugal to the core, must have scored some free tickets.

After we’d finished marveling at how crowded it was for the middle of a weekday (didn’t any of these people have jobs?), Dad explained that even though he had no interest in the sport, this was the first of two games he would be attending in June. The tickets to the first game were given to Dad (and just about everyone else in the section) as a token of thanks for his work as a volunteer ambassador at the airport. His second visit to the ballpark would be funded by the Make-a-Wish Foundation, in appreciation of Dad’s work as a wish granter. If it weren’t for his volunteer work, my father would never have seen the inside of Petco Park. “Not bad, eh?” he said, brandishing the two $43 ticket stubs at me. “See, baby, I spare no expense,” he added, an apt and oft-repeated joke of his.

After Dad’s booming rendition of the "Star-Spangled Banner," the game began. The crowd cheered and booed as we looked on, confused. It wasn’t until white fireworks shot into the bright blue sky that we figured someone must have scored a home hit or shot a run, or whatever it’s called. I asked Dad to interpret the letters and numbers on the scoreboard for me; I could tell by his meandering answer that he was as clueless as me, so I called him out. “You don’t know, do you? Well, let’s ask—”

“I could never ask anyone in this place that question,” he said in earnest.

“Good point,” I said, noting the multitude of Padres-emblazoned shirts and hats, the fervor in the faces of other spectators. We were like a couple of "suppressive persons" who’d inadvertently wandered into a Scientology convention. Best to keep our ignorance on the DL.

During the second inning, a representative of the airport handed us a $5 certificate. “You want is to have some distraction-free time with his progeny and play Wham-O’s Trac Ball, the rackets and ball for which he learned it was two-for-one hot dog day. To finish something sweet and crunchy, I launched an assault of creative accounting and fancy fiscal rationalization — if we combine the certificate and two-for-one hot dog deal, then that $6 bag of Cracker Jack really only costs a dollar! We returned to our seats with a few drinks and a bag of stale nostalgia and carried on a two-hour conversation while, in the background, the Padres clobbered the Dodgers.

As complicated as he may seem with his dueling "government war-gaming" and "new-agey Kumbaya singing" personalities, my father is really a simple man who takes the greatest pleasure from the smallest things. Snaking a rock-star parking space can keep him grinning for weeks (it is not rare for me to receive a phone call from Dad recounting his recent coup in some notoriously crowded area, like downtown or Balboa Park). On Father’s Day, all Dad wanted was to have some distraction-free time with his progeny and play Wham-O’s Trac Ball, the rackets and ball for which he’d been carrying around in the trunk of his car since the last time we played one year ago.

Time was tight — Jane and Heather had to split their Dad’s Day celebrations between their own dad and the fathers of their children. Representing Dad’s brood, Jenny and I (the childless daughters who had the morning free) joined Dad at his... church, where every year on that special day all fathers are asked to stand and be acknowledged. After we cheered and clapped for Dad, Jenny and I sat back, flanking our father, and listened to the guest speaker — a Zen Buddhist who spoke of his drug addiction and subsequent quest for his perfect path to enlightenment.

My dad is modest and self-deprecating. He won’t tell you he volunteers for Make-a-Wish without first explaining his selfish motives for doing so; he will wait until he is sure you fully understand the motives for doing so; he will wait until he is sure you fully understand the vast extent of his ignorance about which he will boast. "I have partaken in drug addiction and subsequent quest for my perfect universe of creation," Dad said, after I’d asked him to name something cool about being a father. The sky was clear, the air was warm, and a refreshing breeze was blowing over us as Jenny set out the food on a cement table at Presidio Park. Keeping in line with Dad’s preferences, lunch was basic and familiar — turkey, cheese, and mustard on rolls, Doritos, and Chips Ahoy cookies. “Just think,” Dad continued, gesturing toward his four grandchildren, who were playing quietly on the sunlit grass. “If it weren’t for me and my mother, none of you would be here. It’s freakin’ magic.”

“I looked at my nieces and nephews and nodded Yes, it is pretty freakin’ amazing. I would have said this aloud, but I was holding an icepack to my lower lip. I had only been playing Trac Ball with Heather for two minutes when I took the high-velocity, air-filled plastic ball in the face. Dad was quick to give up trying to choke back his laughter when he saw my cracked and bleeding Jolie. “You know,” he said, “that has never happened in the history of Trac Ball.”

Subtext: you must really be a moron. For his playful teasing, Dad earned a swollen smirk, a vision that apparently made it more difficult for him to continue chuckling guilt-free.

When we’d finished eating, Dad took a seat in his lawn chair and watched on like King Triton beholding his daughters from his throne. "Are you having a good day?" I asked, with a bit of a lisp. “It’s perfect, just perfect,” said Dad. Sensing he had more to say, I stood silently beside him as he gazed at Heather, Jane, and Jenny, who were chatting with each other while making sure the children didn’t stray too far from the blanket Jace had set on the grass for them. "You know how an artist is never happy with their creations?" Dad asked rhetorically. “Well, I’m more easily pleased. I feel like an artist who can sit back and say, ‘Okay, I’m finished with it, and now it’s up to other people’s interpretations.’"

“What’s that feel like?” I asked.

Dad let out a little laugh and shrugged his shoulders at the idea of putting into words what he felt was beyond language. After a moment, and still laughing, he said, “It’s just super cool.”

When a woman kills her husband, boyfriend, or lover, the crime is called an intimate murder.

In each of the past three years, there were roughly 17,000 murders in the United States. Of these, about 11 percent were committed by women. In most cases women kill to defend themselves during a confrontation: It’s her life or his. Women seldom murder other women and almost never kill strangers. That’s what men do.

When a woman kills her husband, boyfriend, or lover, the crime is called “intimate murder”; because the victim is known, and because a confrontation is usually the source of her rage (almost all killings by females are unplanned), the charge is usually manslaughter. Once a woman enters the criminal justice system, her fate may be eased by chivalrous public defenders, judges, and juries, who sometimes buy into gender stereotypes of women as nonviolent and passive, relational victims who deserve to be punished but not severely. At trial, a woman may generate sympathy via honest or well-played emotional displays. Is crazy-in-love a special requisite for intimate female murder? Or is there something more to the story than ruined innocence? To illustrate, here are three local cases, a consideration of contestable intentions that led to the violent end of a woman’s love.
I Loved My Husband, and I Didn’t Do It on Purpose

Marion Scott Lowry’s early life was traumatic. As a teenager, she and her mother moved to Ocean Beach, where the mother sold marijuana for the Hell’s Angels. A stepfather stole money from Lowry’s mother and frequently abused her. The mother, unable to care for her daughter, was forced to give up Marion, and at 13, Marion was placed in a foster home. Lowry, who told her story to a psychiatrist and a psychologist, transcripts of which are on file with the San Diego Superior Court, said that in 1969 her mother owed the Hell’s Angels $500 in drug proceeds, a sum she could not pay. According to Lowry, the motorcycle gang had her mother killed. The court-ordered psychologist wrote, “Her mother was placed on the freeway in the fast lane, while on heroin, by the Hell’s Angels and run over.” In the police report, the cause of death was ruled an accident.

A lost teen, Lowry ran away from her foster family but was later found and returned to school. She failed 11th grade and again ran away, this time to San Francisco, where she used drugs. She took LSD, then “graduated” to the hallucinogen STP, a much stronger psychotropic drug. As a result, Lowry was admitted to a psychiatric hospital and given antipsychotic medication to come down. Typically, when Lowry was other women and almost never kill strangers.

The man she cheated with was John Raymond Tramposh. The pair married in 1983 and lived for many years at Diamond Jack’s RV Park in Jamul. Lowry recalls that the pair drank heavily; both broke into cars to steal things, even when either she or Tramposh was on parole. Still, Lowry remembers the marriage as “excellent — no matter what, my husband was always there for me. No matter how much of a failure [I was], no matter how much I struggled,” he was, she said, good to her, and she to him. “I’d pick him up, and he’d pick me up, when I was down. When I’d run from him, he’d give me chicken soup. We had verbal fighting.” Her neighbors said, “We were either fucking or fighting.” Apparently, the fighting included times when, according to Tramposh, Lowry would strike him “on the legs with pots and pans.”

In 1991, Lowry was hospitalized with a “nervous breakdown.” In the psychologist’s report, she described herself “drinking beer, raising hell, falling asleep, cracking my teeth, and yelling at my husband.” Tramposh, While under a psychiatrist’s care, she was finally diagnosed with bipolar disorder and 10 misdemeanor convictions and 11 felony convictions, along with 8 “criminal failures to appear.” The charges and convictions include selling heroin, forgery, receiving stolen property, defrauding businesses, petty theft, escaping jail, disorderly conduct, vehicle theft, burglary, begging, child stealing, transporting narcotics, battery, prostitution, assault with a deadly weapon not a firearm, and DUL. Lowry confessed to the psychologist, “I’m a high-end bitch. I steal the nice things so I can have money in my pocket. My problem was I’d see it and take it because it was pretty.” Of late, Lowry has supported herself with Social Security disability payments.

Lowry’s day is given over to a pack of cigarettes, three or four drinks, and four to six cups of coffee. She takes methadone and Xanax. Long-term drug use has taken its toll. The psychologist describes Lowry as plump, poorly groomed, tangential in her thinking, labile (prone to swings of emotions), and “inappropriately angry.” Her speech can be “poorly logical.” Her judgment and her insight is “poor.” She is “in the average range of cognitive ability.” The Michigan Alcohol Screening Test classed her a “problem drinker.” The test suggests that “individuals with this profile are suspicious, mistrustful, easily threatened, and likely to overrespond to minor environmental stresses with belligerent behavior and emotional outbursts.” The personality disorder Lowry has is severe: it is marked by loneliness and feeling misunderstood and by a tendency to be highly manipulative and self-indulgent. The psychologist found no evidence that Lowry is a psychopath.

By 2006, Lowry’s husband Tramposh had his own worries, due to years of alcohol and drug abuse. He was sick with cirrhosis, had type 2 diabetes, and suffered from low testosterone, a side-effect of the methadone he was taking. Tramposh had poor eating habits, and periodically, Lowry would cook him a meal to replace his frequent use of the microwave. In a police report, Tramposh identified himself as having “bipolar disorder.” He noted that he “slept a lot.”

Though the marriage may have brought some stability to Lowry’s life, whatever she did enjoy was worn-eaten by drug-taking and hospitalizations. In addition, the pair often fought over attempts... to recover Tramposh’s share of a family inheritance, which, Lowry alleged, was being kept from him by his sister, Erica Winchell. Lowry said that the sister was not paying her brother the money for estate items that had been sold on eBay. According to a story in the San Diego Union-Tribune, Winchell disputed this, calling Lowry “poison.” Lowry, she said, had been “nagging Tramposh to demand his share” of money that was “tied up in probate court.”

On September 21, 2006, Lowry said she and her husband had gone to Costco “for food and water. We had been drinking. Mudslides, in the truck in the driveway [at Costco]. When we got home, we sat in the parking lot [and] drank.” A bit past 8:00 p.m., while Lowry prepared dinner, Tramposh talked about death, “about not wanting to live; he was talking about being a failure. He got a little bit mental.” That’s when the inheritance came up again. They argued over who should call the sister. Tramposh said, “You call her back.” A police report states that Lowry had been arguing with Winchell on the phone. She pleaded with her husband to phone Winchell again “on her behalf. He refused to do so.”

It seems that one of the pair ordered the other to bed. Then, Tramposh changed his mind and moved toward the phone. Lowry said that Tramposh was “angry at his sister, not taking it out on me. But he want[ed] to talk to her again.” His wife was in the way, and he went to push her aside.

Lowry, who’d been cooking dinner, was holding a kitchen knife, one they had bought at the Del Mar Fair. “It was a sharp knife,” Lowry said. “I was trying to get through to him, make him pay attention. I poked him. Stop it. Just quit it. Let’s leave this whole fucking mess alone.” Lowry said the knife didn’t go in deep, though he “did bleed a lot.” Clutching his stomach, Tramposh stumbled out of the trailer.

Lowry called 911. The operator told her to stay in the house. That’s when Lowry began spinning the first of many stories about what had happened. When the operator asked for details, Lowry said that Tramposh had fallen on something in the house. She knew she was drunk; she knew there’d be police. So “I made up bull- shit.” But, she continued, “I didn’t think he was hurt. I didn’t know how deep it was. I just thought he would need stitches.”

Scared, she ran outside and found Tramposh in a nearby phone booth on his knees. He’d called an ambulance, “as he knew he was seriously hurt.” Tramposh told the operator his wife had stabbed him. Medical technicians and the police arrived to find him “barely breathing” with a “weak pulse.” He “appeared to be unconscious.” Tramposh then whispered to the police officer that his wife had stabbed him. The ambulance rushed him to Sharp Memorial Hospital, where he had difficulty breathing and a terrific pain in his chest. A laparotomy, or incision in his abdominal wall, found “two liters of clotted and unclotted blood.”

When the police had arrived on the scene, both Lowry and her husband were in the phone booth. The police had to separate Lowry from Tramposh’s body. According to the report, she was drunk and uncooperative. Initially, she maintained that he had fallen on something in the yard, but when they questioned this story, she said that she “thought someone in the park must have attacked him” while he was outside. When Lowry heard what the hospital was doing to save her husband, she complained that they weren’t doing enough for him.

Finally, she told the officers, “It was a poke, it wasn’t a stab.” A poke to end an argument. The

Is Osteoarthritis knee pain putting you here... instead of here?

Knee pain caused by osteoarthritis (OA) is a leading cause of disability among adults. It can be frustrating, especially when it impacts simple, everyday activities.

Today, local doctors are conducting a clinical research study evaluating investigational medicated patches to see if they relieve OA knee pain when they’re applied directly to the knee.

To be eligible for this study, you must:

- Be 45 years of age or older
- Have a medical diagnosis of OA knee with mild to moderate symptoms
- Be taking an anti-inflammatory or another pain-relieving drug on a regular basis
- Be willing to remain at the study clinic for up to 36 hours

Qualified participants will receive study-related medical evaluations and study patches at no cost. Reimbursement for time and travel may also be provided.

Lowry testified to the psychologist that "the doctors and nurses said he never said anything bad about me." After her husband's death, Lowry was remorseful. "He taught me how to be happy with the story squared with the facts — the knife, the wound, the phone calls, all of which were verified. The truth, however, was not enough to save Tramposh. He lingered for ten days, until his liver and kidneys failed. He died on October 1, 2006.

In his final days Tramposh made a point of not blaming his wife. Evidence of this comes from his dying statement, which the attending nurses corroborated. "Tell Marion I love her. You need to tell the detective that she didn't do it on purpose," Lowry testified to the psychologist that "the doctors and nurses said he never said anything bad about me." loved him, and I still do, and I always will. It wasn’t meant to be this way.” Had the case gone to trial and Lowry found guilty by a jury, she might have received 15 years. Instead, the judge, who reviewed the psychological and psychiatric reports, listened to her woes and gave her 7.

The Emotionally Battered Wife Defense
Patricia Joellen Morris fell for Peter Johnson, a well-to-do executive in Del Mar, in a big way — but it was really no different from the way she’d always fallen for men, giving up her independence for the marriage, to accommodate the man’s career.

Joellen, who is called by her middle name, was a 19-year-old college student when she met and married Craig Castle. She finished her degree and spent the next 21 years with Craig and their two children. Castle took engineering jobs all over the country — Alabama, Connecticut, Houston (where they lived for 10 years and he worked for NASA), New Jersey, back to Connecticut, and Florida. While Craig traveled for work — and drank — Joellen raised the kids and started running. Eventually she ran the New York Marathon twice in under four hours. Through many moves, Joellen worked as a low-paid secretary in the medical field.

Craig’s constant absence and Joellen’s affair with another man led to the couple’s divorce. Joellen then picked up with and married Stan Blythe, a lieutenant in the Navy, stationed in Florida. This was 1985. As Mrs. Blythe, she followed her husband around — as she had Castle — to Rhode Island and San Diego. In Poway they bought a condo, and Joellen worked at Scripps Hospital. But the marriage soured. According to Joellen, Blythe was physically and verbally abusive. For his part, he remembered Joellen as jealous, possessive, angry, mean, and hateful. Joellen and Blythe separated in July 1988. (Their “regard” for each other didn’t stop them from meeting at a motel for the occasional assignation.) After he moved out, Blythe claims he once came to the condo to retrieve some belongings and that Joellen pulled a .32 revolver on him, saying that if he came any closer she would shoot. He left.

In 1989, Joellen, afraid of being alone, placed a personal ad in a newspaper. Peter Johnson, ten years her senior, called, and they began dating. The following January, when the Blythes were finally divorced and the condo sold, Joellen moved in with Peter. They shared his Del Mar digs on Carmel Valley Road. Joellen had a savings account from the condo sale and a good job at Scripps, where she was well liked. Doctors and co-workers described her as a “very intelligent,” “professional,” and “level-headed,” person who never displayed any violent or aggressive behavior." But Joellen was jealous and suspicious of Peter; she found strange numbers on their phone bill. In October she hired a private detective, and together they unraveled Peter’s deceit, a discovery that sent Joellen packing, to be near her college-age children and old friends in Florida.

Peter Johnson was a womanizer. As a senior vice-president of a medical supply company, his $100,000 annual salary helped him bankroll several liaisons at once. He’d maintained a 12-year affair with a married woman in Chicago, the wife of an Eastern Airlines pilot. (When Joellen found out about this woman, Peter, pledging he’d changed, grabbed Joellen’s leg and wrote on it, “I will not see that woman again.” She made him take a photo of the writing on her leg, so she could keep it in her wallet.) While Peter was dating Joellen, he’d attended what she called “group sex parties in L.A.,” and she was worried that he would contract a disease. Peter was also dating a professional tennis player, whose earnings funded a home in Rancho Santa Fe and nationwide travel. The pair often went skiing in Utah, where Peter owned...
According to Joellen, Peter became engaged to the tennis pro at the same time he was living with her. When that engagement fell through, Peter got the $6000 ring returned and flew to Florida to woo Joellen back, giving her the ring. Joellen wore it for several months but took it off once she learned where it had been. She insisted that Peter buy it back from her for $4000.

After Joellen called the tennis pro and heard that the affair was over, she married Peter in April 1990. They negotiated a prenuptial agreement, regarding “their mutual understanding [of] income and property and expenditures.” In general, Peter was not inclined to divide any assets, including his sailboat, with his new wife. He required they “share recreational expenses.” Records also state that he wanted to amend the prenuptial, even after they’d tied the knot.

In Florida, Peter was unsuccessful in his job hunt. So the couple returned to San Diego, where he became vice president of operations at Block Medical Group in Carlsbad. Scripps rehired Joellen for her old secretarial position, paying her $10 an hour, her previous wage. The Johnsons rented a condo on Sea Turf Circle in Solana Beach. By now, Joellen was so angry about Peter’s affairs (she was in group therapy and taking an antidepressant) that she insisted they see a marriage counselor.

The couple saw John Fleck, an Encinitas psychologist. Court documents state that Fleck diagnosed Joellen as “depressed and beaten down emotionally, while Peter Johnson appeared angry for being there and treated his wife badly during the sessions.” Peter stopped going; Joellen continued. Fleck diagnosed her as “being under

Do you constantly worry? Every day?

Do you:
• Feel nervous, tense or “on edge” most of the time?
• Have trouble sitting still or find it impossible to simply relax?
• Between 18 and 65 years of age? • In overall good health?

If you answered yes to all of these questions, you may be eligible for our investigational drug research study. If you qualify and choose to participate, you will receive physician consultations, study-related medical examinations, laboratory evaluations and follow-up visits at no charge and you may receive study medication. Health insurance is not required and compensation for time and travel is provided.

Are you living in the shadow of bipolar depression?

We’re working to bring future treatment options to light.

As a person with bipolar I, you know what it’s like to live with the darkness of depression. So you may want to know about this clinical research studying examining an investigational drug for bipolar depression compared to a placebo, an inactive substance, when used in combination with a mood stabilizer.
• You are at least 18 years old • You have a history of at least one bipolar manic or mixed episode
• You have been diagnosed with bipolar I and are currently experiencing a depressive episode

Participation may last up to 12 weeks, and includes study-related care and monitoring from specialists in bipolar I, access to a mood stabilizer, and potential access to investigational medication, all at no cost.

chronic depression with a sense of hopelessness and poor self-esteem. “She couldn’t make decisions, and she was frightened of being alone. Because Joellen was so close to a “complete emotional collapse,” Fleck said he took the rare step of urging her to leave Peter.

In January 1991, Joellen suffered what one psychiatrist characterized as a panic attack. Over the phone, she secured a job and an apartment in Clearwater, Florida, then, in person, resigned from her job at Scripps — all without Peter’s knowledge. She packed her car with furniture, a TV, clothes, and a .32 revolver she’d carried from her days in Houston, where, she said, “Everyone owns a gun.” She started the drive to Florida but stopped in El Paso and called Peter, hoping to reconcile. His unfaithfulness and his stinginess were her two biggest headaches. She couldn’t understand why, with his making “ten times” what she did, he couldn’t pay more of their everyday expenses. The pair agreed to meet in Utah. Joellen left her car in El Paso and flew to Salt Lake City, where she and Peter skied for a few days and argued about finances. At one point, she hurt her knee on the slopes and asked Peter for some Tylenol. He insisted she pay for it before he gave it to her.

According to court records, “Peter pleaded with Joellen not to come back to live with him in California unless she was sure that she could trust him and promise to stop abusing him with her constant attacks of jealousy and interrogation regarding his whereabouts.” Which Joellen had done, she said, because his serial affairs had earned her mistrust. She discovered he had four phones and four answering machines at four locations and concluded he hadn’t changed.

Joellen flew to Florida, signed a lease for a new apartment, started work, and then, within a week, was overcome by regret. Fueling her guilt was a quick visit from Peter, who with renewed promises urged her to come back. She agreed and returned with him to Solana Beach. But before leaving, she bought a .38 caliber Smith and Wesson revolver, in part because she'd left her .32 in the car in El Paso. In the next week she would pay $950 out of her $10,000 savings to have her car shipped, with the gun and her belongings, from El Paso to San Diego.

Once in Solana Beach, Peter — a fanatical record-keeper of expenditures — told Joellen she owed him for half the Utah trip's expenses. He handed her the bill: $1076. Though she contested it, she paid. But Peter’s latest “budgetary analysis” enraged her. She consulted an attorney, trying to secure the legal where-withal to be an equal partner in the marriage.

On February 25, 1991, two days before she would begin a new job, Peter got home around 7:00 p.m. Joellen was still upset over the $1076. The two started drinking wine and arguing. Suddenly he placed a bill for $3000 before her and said he'd decided that from now on she'd have to pay her own living expenses. Joellen was dumbstruck. She told him about having seen an attorney. Peter shot back, that wouldn't do. She was jeopardizing his latest coup. He was, he told her, up to become president of IMED, a local medical device company. That would mean $350,000 a year! Going to an attorney now would ruin his appointment.

The night wore on, the hour grew late. In bed, both were exhausted. According to Joellen, Peter “playfully” gave Joellen a “rough kiss” goodnight, slamming his lips against hers. Joellen got mad and said she was calling the police. (A later examination of Joellen's lips revealed “no indicia of any injuries.” Nor was there any injury to Peter's lips.) Peter said, “Go ahead and call 911.” Using the bedroom phone, she did, at 11:49 p.m. The sheriff's communications center logged the call “from a woman who was then cut off by a man's voice — followed by a disconnect.” Peter was livid that she had actually called. The marriage was over, he declared. He never wanted to see her again. She should get in her car, as she had a month earlier, and drive back to Florida. He was filing for divorce. He got out of bed and began to get dressed; he intended to leave before anyone arrived.

The kitchen phone rang. Peter answered and told the 911 operator that nothing was wrong, no need for anyone to come. The operator asked for the female in the house. Joellen plugged the bedroom phone in, and she also said that nothing was wrong, help wasn't necessary. The operator told them that officers had already been dispatched.
Finally, she put it down.

... and told her seven, maybe eight times, to drop hers. Finally, she put it down. Yurkus ran up the stairs, and Joellen announced: “He’s on the bed. I shot him because he’s an asshole. He deserved it.”

In a minute or two, between the operator saying the police were on their way and Joellen’s coming outside with a gun, she had retrieved the .38 from a bedside table. Peter, who was putting on his sweatshirt, had his back to her. She leaned across the bed and shot him. The bullet went through his body and came out his stomach. He turned and held his arm over his heart in a “defensive position.” Joellen walked around the bed and shot again, the bullet hitting and passing through his arm. With Peter screaming, she shut the bedroom door and went out the front door.

(At trial, one brief hearing of the deputies heard a man down as an act with a “degree of viciousness, callousness and cruelty that is hard to imagine.”) Inside the condo, the deputies heard a man moaning behind a closed door. They found Peter on the bed, on his back, a short pink nightgown. The time was 11:52 p.m.

In a minute or two, Joellen was out the front door. They found Peter on the floor of his car, why was a pair of women’s underwear on the floor of his car, why did he come home one night with his hair matted and his brow sweaty? Instead of answering, Peter wrote down her complaints and insinuations on scraps of paper and later entered them into a “behavior chart” on his computer.

and Hoping He’ll Change. Joellen tried to get in touch with Norwood but to no avail. She said she never wanted to kill her husband: “I was really in love with him. I was more miserable without him in Florida.”

At the hour’s end, she asked after Peter’s condition. Weir had known he was dead but kept it from her; he was afraid it would upset her even more. He told her that the bullet had severed a major artery and that Peter had bled to death. “Are you sure he’s dead?” Joellen asked. Weir said that this was the first time she became “a little bit emotional,” shedding “a few tears.” Later, though, in a holding cell, she tried to strangle herself with an electrical cord.

Returning to the condo, the police found Joellen’s other gun, the .32 revolver, in her dresser. It was “loaded with lead round bullets, which are designed to punch a hole in a target as opposed to bullets that are designed to expand upon impact and cause maximum damage.” The .38 she shot Peter with “was loaded with hollow-point or hydro-shock bullets that are designed to break up and cause death when they hit a body.”

In the end, Patricia Joellen Johnson would have two trials. Both times she testified that she shot her husband but “did not want to hurt or kill him.” At the first trial in 1991, her lawyer retained several experts who would have testified to her husband’s emotional abuse — including evidence from Peter’s first wife, to whom he was similarly abusive — but the judge disallowed it. Joellen was convicted of first-degree murder. With an enhancement for using a weapon, she received 29 years to life.

It would seem that a murder committed within the minute or two that this one did could not be premeditated. But the jury believed her act was not rash and impulsive but cold and calculated. On appeal, the appellate court upheld their verdict. The court wrote that premeditation “can occur in a brief period of time. The true test is not the duration of time as much as it is the extent of the reflection. Thoughts may follow each other with great rapidity, and cold, calculated judgment may be arrived at quickly. To constitute a deliberate and premeditated killing, the slayer must weigh and consider the question of killing and the reasons for and against such a choice and, having in mind the consequences, she decides to and does kill.” Joellen’s statements to the police — as well as her prior anger, jealousy, and rage — seemed to

Nor did her choice to use the more deadly of the two weapons at hand, the .38, help her situation.

In 1992, a law was passed allowing a woman to use “battered women’s syndrome” as a defense in a murder trial — that is, a history of physical and emotional abuse. Due to challenges to that law, it wasn’t until 1996 that California courts began allowing women with prior murder convictions to request a new trial or a reduced sentence. While serving her time at the California Institute for Women in Corona, Joellen kept abreast of these changes. On her own, she drafted legal documents and appealed her conviction on the grounds that the judge in her case refused what we now call battered spouse syndrome or the intimate partner battering defense. Finally, in 2005, a judge set aside Joellen’s 1991 conviction and called for a new trial. There her attorney could present expert witnesses who would testify that Peter Johnson had emotionally abused her during their three-year on-again, off-again relationship.

At the second trial, in 2006, the jury heard more about Peter’s “behavior chart.” He would force Joellen to sign statements designed to define and regulate her behavior, mostly to stop her from questioning him and his fidelity. Whenever she broke a pact, he would mark it on his chart. One such contract, which apparently Joellen signed, required her to pay Peter $10,000 if she falsely accused him of cheating on her. Another contract allowed him to take off his wedding ring for 30 days and date other women if she asked him any question about his past.

Based on Joellen’s description, one psychologist diagnosed Peter as having “psychopathic personality disorder” and “narcissistic tendencies.” A domestic violence expert said that Peter’s behavior was “extreme. Clearly not physically, but in terms of the psychological, emotional, and intentional aspects of power and control, he was on the extreme end of the spectrum.” Still another psychologist said that Peter “gained psychological control” over Joellen “by creating chaos in her life.” She also said that Joellen “was a victim of the most sadistic forms of psychological abuse.”

Joellen’s public defender argued for a “heat of passion” verdict, voluntary manslaughter. The jury found her guilty of second-degree murder. At sentencing, the judge noted that while there was psychological abuse, “She didn’t just snap.” He gave her 18 years to life. The 65-year-old Joellen has already served 17 years. She is eligible for parole, and her conviction is still under appeal.

If I Can’t Have You, Nobody Can

Geraldine Meyers was an aerobics instructor when she moved to La Mesa in 2003 with her boyfriend, Demetrius Warren, a bodybuilder who hoped to become a cop. They had met in Virginia in 1998; he was 22, she was 37 and raising three adolescents. Meyers and Warren cohabited for a time in Chicago. In La Mesa, the pair shared a place on Saranac Street in the South Ridge apartments. But after a couple of years, things between them fizzled. Both began dating others, even though they continued to share a bed at the apartment. Meyers surfed blackpeoplemeet.com and found Auteria Winzer, an Atlantan whom she visited once and slept with. The assignation had no legs, in part because Winzer broke it off shortly thereafter, though Meyers instant-messaged him constantly. Meyers began chatting online with others as well. Warren, who believed he was finished with Meyers, had been dating Ja’Net Green since July. The two were engaged and seeing each other at least every weekend in her Spring Valley home. Neither Warren nor Meyers knew what the other was up to — though each suspected that something was amiss.

Central to their past was a festering secret: Warren was an abuser. According to Meyers, he’d doled out the rough treatment for years. She never told a cop or a therapist, though she did tell her three children, mostly her daughter Janetra, and she’d once complained to Warren’s mother. Meyers said that Warren would beat and choke her. Afterward, she said, “You could see the handprints on my neck.” She donned a turtleneck to cover up the bruises. He would “poke” her on the forehead; he would grab her arms; he would grab her head and force her back with a jolt. He slapped her. Once he knocked her down, “hawked up, and spit in my face.” When enraged, he would come at her “real fast.” Warren was “much bigger than” Meyers, who couldn’t defend herself against him. He always raises up at me like I got no rights to say what I got to say, even though I’m very calm about it.” She never reported him, she said, because he told her, “I’ll kill you if you ever call the police.”

The battering included some 15–20 incidents, and it continued, despite Meyers’s insistence that she loved Warren, hoped he would stop, and trusted he would be honest with her about his girl-friends, all through their on-again, off-again relationship. Finally, on November 20, 2006, it ended when Meyers confronted Warren about his having taken up with another woman.

San Diego Fitness; she’d bring Warren with her as a guest.

Meyers did not tell her daughter Janetra about the most recent violence because she was ashamed: “She told me I should not be with him, that I should have left.”

There were never any witnesses to Warren’s abuse. Once, in early 2006, Meyers phoned Warren’s mother and said: “Your son needs to stop putting his hands on me. If he puts his hands on me, I’ll kill him.”

Late summer 2006, Meyers took a room in a home on Paducah Drive in Clairemont. She said she paid the rent ($600 a month) so she could have a place where she might “relax...I hadn’t been eating a lot. I couldn’t sleep. My blood pressure was 190 over 129.” Still, every Monday, she would drive to the Saranac apartment in La Mesa and get something to eat, before attending massage classes at Concord Career College on Imperial Avenue. Four hours of classes and she’d be back at Saranac, where Warren would be waiting for her. He would then have returned from his weekend away, and he’d be lying on the floor, his PlayStation on the TV, the controller in his hand.

In early November, Warren got incensed at Meyers one day when she couldn’t find a CD with photos of him posing for a modeling job. She was standing in front of an interior door when he ran at her. She ducked and his fist went through the door. He then pushed her between a table and the wall, on which the police cop. “ ‘I’ll kill you if you call the cops nobody gonna ruin me. I’m trying to be a cop.’ ”

More than ever, Meyers felt she needed to protect herself. She went to Wholesale Guns in Santee and paid $300 for a .22 caliber revolver. She passed the gun-safety test, cleared the ten-day waiting period for a background check, and picked up the gun and bullets on November 15, 2006.
(Meyers said she fired the gun a couple of times to try it out.) After loading the revolver with five bullets, she put it and a can of pepper spray she already owned (which she claimed to have used on Warren before) in her purse.

On Sunday, November 19, Meyers spent the evening with her sister, Joyce Moore, in Lemon Grove. They cooked diner, talked, laughed, and watched Desperate Housewives and a movie. Meyers did not then — or ever — tell her sister what she was going through with Warren. She left, went to her room on Paducah Drive, and stayed up until 3:00 a.m.
chatting with men online.
That night she slept fitfully, got up at 7:00 a.m., and drove to Saranac, hoping to snag a piece of fruit. There was nothing to eat, however, and Warren was not in the apartment. Meyers was angry. Later, at class, her massage instructor claimed that Meyers was “agitated and anxious.”
She made several calls to her daughter. She went in around? She had suspected his unfaithfulness, even telling some of her fitness clients. A week before, she had asked Warren if “we should use protection.” He just “played dumb.” Finally he flung it in her face. “Basically, he said to me, ‘I do what the fuck I want to do.’” Then he confirmed it. “‘Yup,’ he said. ‘It’s casual.’ Next came “the look, the stare,” and, at last, the final straw: “He said she was better in bed than me.”

Warren got back down on his stomach, picked up the controller, and went back to his video game. Meyers said something, and again he said, “‘You fucking bitch.’” Then he called her a “‘skank.’” All kinds of names. She knew, she said, “he was gonna get up and charge at me. Like he always do.” That was when Meyers lost it.

Transcripts of the police interviews reveal a lot. In them, it sounds as if Meyers is agreeing with the detectives at least partly because of their persistent questioning (“You loved him, didn’t you?” “Yes, I loved him”). She was made to tell the story repeatedly, and the detectives accused her of hiding something. (Even Meyers wonders if, under the barrage of queries, she has “changed” her story — wonders if, in fact, it was their intent to entrap her.)

Meyers said she pulled the pepper spray out and sprayed it in Warren’s direction; she was terrified he would get up again. She claimed that Warren said, “‘What the fuck are you doing, you fucking bitch.’” This enraged her, and she took the gun out and shot him. “I shot; I panicked.” He was on the floor, and the bullet went into the back of his head. She then recocked the gun (it wasn’t an automatic), stepped closer, and shot him again in the same place. The wounds were within an inch of each other. The estimate is that Meyers was three to four feet away for the first shot, while the second was fired at “close range.” Neither was a contact wound, though powder was found on Warren’s head. In the moment, Meyers didn’t seem to know she had killed him. Afraid he’d get up, she pepper-sprayed the room, the walls, and covered his back and the back of his head. There was no spray on his face.

Meyers ran to her car. She wanted, she said, to put his phone in her bag. She thought that once the police arrived and questioned her, she’d be let go. She assumed they’d believe that the shooting was self-defense. She said she took his phone so she could call Warren’s mother in Tampa. Why? the detectives asked. “I was going to apologize to her because we got in an argument and [to] say, ‘I shot your son.’”

Next, Meyers ran to the office manager. She told the woman to call 911; she had shot Demetrius. Another woman was there, and both said Meyers ran out, was gone for a time, then returned, screaming that she had to shoot him because he was going to beat her again. She gave the gun to the manager. In contrast, Meyers said she never left but sat and waited. The police theorized that Meyers went to the bedroom to doctor the scene.

In the bedroom, police found Warren dead of two gunshots to the back of his head. The PlayStation controller was a few feet away from him, close to the TV; his hands were in front of his head, and his elbows were splayed out to the sides, as if, police reasoned, he had been playing the game when he was shot. Meyers denied moving the controller.

The detectives asked why she wanted him dead. Meyers said, “I didn’t want him dead.” What were you thinking when you shot him? “I wasn’t thinking,” she said. “I panicked. It’s nothing like I staged it.” They asked Meyers why she hadn’t left before, especially that afternoon: Go to your sister’s, go to a shelter. Why shoot him? “No.” One detective countered, “I think you knew it was going to get ugly.”

At the onset of the eight-day trial in January 2008, there wasn’t any doubt that Meyers had been playing the game if, police reasoned, he had hunted down and killed. Meyers feared she’d be hunted down and killed. “Until you’re abused like me, you don’t know how it feels.” Did you go home thinking when you shot him? “I wasn’t thinking,” Meyers said, “I didn’t want why she wanted him dead. She hadn’t left before, especially that afternoon: Go to your sister’s, go to a shelter. Why shoot him? “No.” One detective countered, “I think you knew it was going to get ugly.”

killed Warren. In El Cajon Superior Court, Ja'Net Green, his fiancée, testified that she’d taken a test for a sexually transmitted disease after his death, and the test came back negative. There was no evidence that Meyers had an STD. Deputy district attorney Kurt Mechals said she admitted in jail that she had listed no disease on the intake form.

The main body of the evidence presented to the jury came from transcripts of the five detective-led interviews with Meyers. “We used her own statements against her because she couldn’t keep her story straight,” Mechals said. Detectives and neighbors from the Saranac apartment took the stand; Warren’s friends and relatives took the stand; Meyers’s friends and relatives, including two of her children, took the stand. Meyers herself testified for nearly two of the eight days.

Mechals said that her children contradicted their mother’s story that she had told them she was a victim of Warren’s abuse. “They only mentioned a couple of incidents,” Mechals said, “not in detail she was claiming.” A licensed clinical social worker who examined Meyers said that she “was a victim of ongoing domestic violence.” But Mechals didn’t buy it. There was no trail of Meyers’s confessing that fact to friends and relatives. Nor was it true that Warren had put his fist through the door three weeks before she shot him. Meyers’s brother testified that the hole had been there a year, and they’d covered it up with a towel. That was another lie. Spraying Warren’s back and spraying the walls was another way, Mechals said, that Meyers tried to make it seem like a “big melee.”

The jury was instructed to look at charges of first- or second-degree murder, as well as voluntary or involuntary manslaughter. A day and a half later, the jury found Meyers guilty of second-degree murder and the personal discharge of a firearm. This meant that Meyers had murdered Warren with some premeditation, by buying the gun and having it on her when she confronted him. She did not lie in wait for him, which would be first degree. Public defender Thomas Carenssale believes the jury was wrong. He’s appealing the case and feels that the finding should have been voluntary manslaughter.

During sentencing, one sister wrote that Meyers had never done drugs, never been violent, and had no criminal record. She “cared about women’s health issues, so she sponsored an aerobic class for women at her church.” Warren’s mother, Sheridine Warren, said that Meyers had “assassinated” her son twice: by killing him, and then by disparaging his character in the courtroom. “There is no relief,” she said, “of the pain I feel daily for losing my son.” Demetrius’s ten-year-old son Jaylen (from a previous relationship) wrote in a note to his father and the court: “I forgive you for the bad thing you’ve done. But you have to understand if you kill anyone it will hurt a lot of people inside.”

The judge gave Meyers 40 years to live in prison.

The case has gone to the Fourth District Court of Appeals. Meyers, Carenssale wrote, “was motivated by a desire to avoid another brutal attack by Demetrius Warren.” Moreover, she was “suffering from a profound depression at the time of the shooting. It is not unreasonable to assume that these tremendous stressors in her life contributed to her conduct in this case.”

In her defense, he said, it was important to remember that she had admitted immediately that she had shot him.

Mechals disputed that. He said that Meyers’s version to the police when she was arrested and on the stand during the trial was mostly fiction. “She wasn’t a battered woman,” he told me. “She wore the pants in that relationship. Warren had moved on, and she was definitely dating. [Look at] all the instant messages she had left for the guy in Atlanta because he wasn’t returning her calls. She fell in love with him. She was becoming a massage therapist and planning on moving to Atlanta.” When both Winzer and Warren rejected Meyers, it put her over the edge. Mechals said it was a case of “If I can’t have you, then nobody can.”

LA BEATA: THE LIVES AND TIMES OF APOLINARIA LORENZANA (Part Two)

September 1, 1834: the Mexican brigantine Natalia makes an unscheduled entry into San Diego Bay. Onboard are José María Hijar, Juan Bandini, and 129 settlers headed to Monterey to populate Alta California.

Many have measles. A second ship, the corvette Morelos, continues north with 100 carpenters, shoemakers, teachers, and their families, along with provisions, sheep, and five Tibetan goats.

Hijar, leader of the group, has been seasick for the monthlong voyage from San Blas. Some of his passengers have already died. The 185-ton brig drops anchor off La Playa. Glad to be ashore, Hijar quarantines the most stricken to nearby tanning houses.

Reeking of stacked cowhides and orts of rotted gristle, the huts and barn-shaped adobe houses of La Playa hold their first baptism. The 185-ton brig drops anchor off La Playa. Glad to be ashore, Hijar quarantines the most stricken to nearby tanning houses.

Meanwhile, the prim and proper Apolinaria Lorenzana had sailed to Alta California in 1800. She arrived with 19 other orphans ordered to help colonize the new territory. The boys were required to learn useful skills, the girls, “young healthy maids,” to marry, and remarry if widowed. All must raise large, Christian families and never violate their contract. In 1802, Lorenzana’s adopted mother fell in love with a soldier, married him, and sailed back to Mexico, leaving the nine-year-old girl behind.

Young Lorenzana moved in with the Carrillos in Santa Barbara, more as a nurse and servant than a daughter. In 1807 Raymundo Carrillo became comandante of San Diego Presidio, bemoaned by its inhabitants as the windiest hill on earth. When she arrives at La Playa, colonists expecting humble piety — eyes down, soft-spoken — are surprised. Lorenzana takes charge. The woman, in her early 40s, orders families living in the area to feed the sick with mission food brought on two-wheeled, twisted-wooden carretas. She builds a central kitchen at Huisache. She tells servants to cart the dead to Mission San Diego, give them last rites, bury them, and burn every speck of their clothing.

“...she came and helped them all,” said Doña Juana Machado years later. “The men, women, and children who were well continued their travels northward; the sick, as soon as they recovered, also followed.” Many must have wondered who the woman was who moved among them like a whirlwind with a purpose.

From La Cuna to La Beata. Abandoned in Mexico City at birth, seven-year-old Apolinaria Lorenzana had sailed to Alta California in 1800. She arrived with 19 other orphans ordered to help colonize the new territory. The boys were required to learn useful skills, the girls, “young healthy maids,” to marry, and remarry if widowed. All must raise large, Christian families and never violate their contract. In 1802, Lorenzana’s adopted mother fell in love with a soldier, married him, and sailed back to Mexico, leaving the nine-year-old girl behind.

Young Lorenzana moved in with the Carrillos in Santa Barbara, more as a nurse and servant than a daughter. In 1807 Raymundo Carrillo became comandante of San Diego Presidio, bemoaned by its inhabitants as the windiest hill on earth. While living with the Carrillos, and later Mercado, Lorenzana began teaching young girls to read, write, and recite their catechism. “She shared her knowledge with other women,” says Genaro M. Padilla, “in a society that generally discouraged women’s intellectual development.”

It helped that both Sergeant Mercado and his wife Josefa were teachers. Lorenzana instructed “children of either sex to read, at the request of their parents.”

She had only been with the Mercados a short while when her left hand wouldn’t move. She couldn’t shake it back to life. Finally the hand became so paralyzed “it looked like it was dead.” She stopped teaching. She loved to sew, loved working with her hands, but couldn’t. The frontier society demanded that everyone live traditional lives and carry their load. Unmarried, and in her late teens, Lorenzana had become useless.

Father José Sánchez brought her to San Diego Mission. “He took me in,” she says. “I could not move my hand at all for about two years and eight months. Then, over a period of about four months my hand held might include hundreds of neophytes.”

1. Carl Heilbron: “One who remembered her 60 years ago said to me, ‘She was almost too good. She raised Indian girls for the church.’”

2. Virginia M. Bouvier: Lorenzana documents “the contribution women made in the supervision...of daily affairs of the missions. Such tasks were monumental when one considers that a single mission house

3. Rosaura Sánchez: “Any woman who turned from her assigned duty was considered deviant and even unpatriotic, although women like [Concepción] Arguello and Lorenzana, in relinquishing the role of progenitrix, played other feminine roles in California society...but still fully in the patriarchal norm.”

began to recover very slowly."

During those three years, she began nursing the sick in the mission hospital, her left arm in a sling. Also at this time, if not sooner, Lorenzana made a choice. Given the turmoil of being uprooted, shipped from a major city to a forlorn frontier, losing her mother, and leaving the Carrollos and Mercados, Lorenzana fully embraced the one family that would never abandon her: the Church.

When she began nursing, Father Sanchez ordered her not to practice medicine, just “teach servants how to and supervise them.” But without official sanction, Lorenzana “always, as best I could, attended the sick.”

This was often done without medical supplies. After 1810, cargo ships from Mexico became fewer and fewer. Of necessity, Lorenzana learned native healing techniques: herbal remedies for headaches and fevers, potions for snakebite, salves for wounds. She doesn’t mention it, but a curandera also used prayer and ritual, like a shaman, to exorcise spiritual illnesses — among them “shock,” “fright,” and the “evil eye” — caused, it was said, by curses, demons, or lost, malevolent spirits.

When Lorenzana regained use of her hand, she returned to the home of Josefa Sal, whose husband, Sergeant Mercado, died in 1811. Josefa opened a school for girls at the Presidio, but since she also owned a garden and an orchard down the hill, she turned teaching duties over to Lorenzana. Over 40 years later, when she dictated her memoirs to Thomas Savage, Lorenzana recalled her students with fondness: “I taught Ignacio Martinez’s three daughters, and Tomas Lagoe’s niece…. Many other girls learned their first letters and other things from me.”

In 1813, while Lorenzana was at the mission, workmen enlarged the church building to its current size, the fortified walls buttressed against earthquakes. Two years later, the mission built a secondary infirmary, which would become the women’s hospital.

One day, shortly after she returned to the Presidio, Father Sanchez came to say Mass. He took Lorenzana aside. Gather your belongings and return to the mission, he told her. She would be nurse for the new infirmary. “That job was an act of charity,” she says, “because I was still quite ill and could do very little work.”

As before, Father Sanchez ordered Lorenzana not to practice medicine: she should only oversee the operation and “make sure they did the job well.” As before, she disobeyed.

She battled plagues of measles, smallpox, and influenza. These came, wreaked havoc, and departed. The consistent killer was morbo venereo — venereal disease. Every day she treated llaugas, syphilitic sores and brown skin rashes caused by sexual liaisons — often rape — between soldiers and native women.

To combat “bad behavior,” the mission segregated men and women in the compound. Single women and neophyte girls, aged 11 and older, slept in the monjerio, a nunnery. Every night an elderly matron locked the door and gave the key to a priest. During the day “the matron followed the girls’ every move,” says Lorenzana, who clearly approved of the policy, and “never let them out of her sight.” Girls only left the enforced incarceration after they were married. (Mission Santa Barbara’s nunnery had three locks, a different person holding each key. No one could enter without the consent of all three.)

At Mission San Diego, a church bell woke the girls at 5:00 a.m. They spent most of the day in a patio, connected to the nunnery by a high-walled corridor. They spun wool and received instruction. A blind woman taught them to pray. Lorenzana taught them to sew, everything from intricately stitched church garments to coarse woolen skirts for the women and blankets (“both men and women received one blanket each year”).

Neophyte boys also slept in locked, segregated quarters called juventes. Most worked in the fields or with livestock, wearing cotton shirts and lincloths. If they neglected their duties, the priests would order punishment. Even

The first plays performed in San Diego were pastorelas, yuletide pageants that Lorenzana organized. Her group gave a Christmas Eve performance in Old Town, then another one eight days later at the mission, followed by several in people’s homes. “I was always at those festivities,” she says, which were the only ones she attended.

In effect, Lorenzana may have been San Diego’s first artist director of theater. She cast the various roles for the religious comedy—“especially the role of the angel,” Gabriel, who saves the shepherds going to Bethlehem from the wily but always out-classed Devil. She conducted rehearsals and oversaw the design and sewing of the costumes for what was always the happiest night of the year. For the 1837 pageant, Lorenzana asked Don Picio to play the Devil. Owner of Rancho Jamul and later governor of California, Picio’s separatist ideas for the region made enemies in the conservative north—especially José Castro, the military commander—and in Mexico. They would have called his Devil typecasting—if he had indeed performed.

The entire pueblo came to Picio’s home on December 24. Six girls, dressed in white with red mantillas, stood three on each side of the makeshift stage and sang Christmas music. Before Picio, a large man, could make his entrance and harass the innocent shepherds, a rifle butt pounded the door. Outside was Comandante Don José Castro and a squadron of “yellow jack” soldiers come to arrest Picio for treachery.

You can’t escape, Castro told the man in the Devil outfit. Your house is surrounded.

Festivities stopped. “The families retired to their houses,” writes Machado, “grieving over the fate of our captured countrymen.”

“I think it was during the detention of Don Picio that the sad event took place at his Jamul ranch.”

Next time: The Jamul Incident.

How Not to Hit Each Other

Boating and SeamanSHIP Course

There are a couple of shoals in the bay — one at the south end of Shelter Island — that people run aground on,” says Jim Holmberg, U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary Public Education Officer. A shoal is a sandbank that creates a shallow area. Another danger zone for watercraft in the bay is an area of mudflats just south of the Coronado Bridge. On behalf of the Coast Guard Auxiliary, Holmberg will teach a nine-week “Boating Skills and SeamanSHIP” course beginning Monday, July 7. Even though the “rules of the sea” are consistent throughout the country, sailors must learn the particulars of each area they encounter. For example, when entering the Ocean-side Harbor, without a boat chart a seafarer might infer from the buoys marking the area that the entrance splits into two channels. In fact, one of the channels is a restricted area leading to the Del Mar Basin — for authorized government vessels only. Nearly all of the information a mariner needs can be found in charts provided by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

One of the topics Holmberg covers in the course is collision regulation. “Collision regulation is the navigation rule that all boats are supposed to follow about how not to hit each other,” says Holmberg. “For powerboats, the boat that is off your starboard (right) side facing forward is the ‘stand-on vessel’ — that boat is to maintain course and direction. The other boat is called the ‘give-way vessel.’”

In the San Diego Bay, small boats must often navigate around much larger cargo, Navy, and cruise ships. “The boat that is least maneuverable is going to be the stand-on vessel to the boat that’s most maneuverable,” Holmberg explains. A carrier transporting cars from Japan leaves the bay every weekend. “It’s about the size of an aircraft carrier, like a big yellow building that goes through the bay.” When it exits, Holmberg says, “It will blast its horn to make sure everyone stays out of its way.”

A mistake Holmberg has seen many novice sailboaters make is to run through the channel when a Navy or other big vessel is going through. “They don’t realize that rule number nine [of the United States Coast Guard Navigation Rules] supersedes that particular rule of sailboats over power-boats.” Which means that even though a large vessel is technically a powerboat, it is actually less maneuverable than a smaller sailboat and therefore has the right to stand on — the sailboat must give way.

Because of the high volume of traffic in the bay, the Coast Guard conducts frequent boat inspections, making sure they are in compliance with safety regulations. “You need a lifejacket of proper size for everybody on board,” says Holmberg. “You can’t put a big adult one on a little five-year-old, because if the five-year-old falls in the water, that lifejacket’s just going to pop off of him. You need to have flares on the vessel, a fire extinguisher, and, especially if you go off shore at all, you need a radio and a compass.”

According to Holmberg, who owns a 35-foot Erickson sailboat, the law does not require sailors to carry a radio and compass, though he counts them among his necessities. “The radio is the only way you’re able to communicate with anybody once you go out to the ocean — cell phones don’t work that far out.” Commercial vessels are required to have VHFs (very high frequency) radios, and all ships with radars monitor channel 16, the “911” of the ocean. Channel 16 is known as the hailing channel and is only to be used for distress and safety calls. All boats have identifying lights called “running lights.” “Green and red at the bow — green’s on the starboard, red’s on the port — and a white stern light,” Holmberg explains. “So when you’re out there and all you’re able to see are little lights bobbing in the water, it gives you an indication of what kind of boat and what direction it’s traveling in. If it has a masthead light, people can know that that boat is under power, so it’s going to follow the rules of a powerboat.”

T he sinuously curving rural roads on the far (south) side of Fallbrook offer a sig- nificant challenge to bicycle riders. Thirty or 40 years ago, the brusque hills and wooded black canyon scenery between Fallbrook and Temecula were sparsely inhabited. Today, pastoral homes perch amid the avocado and citrus groves that blanket the area. Still, the rural traffic remains fairly light, and some of the oak-shaded canyons remain pristine. Observe the following directions to trace an almost never-flat 26-mile tour of the region. Be sure to use a bike with a low set of gears and good brakes, and take along water and food for a minimum three- to four-hour tour. Be sure to pick a cool day, or else limit your riding to the cool and early part of the typ- ical summer day.

Start riding in Fallbrook by going north on Pico Avenue, north of Mission Road. Pico quickly becomes De Luz Road, and you coast down a twisting section of road in an oak-lined ravine. At the bottom of the grade, veer left, staying on the Luz Road, which fol- lows the Santa Margarita River. After a mile, you cross the river to begin a vig- orous climb to a divide. Gliding down the other side, you dip into the first of the many small, shady ravines you’ll cross or follow in the next few miles. Here and there, live oak trees arch overhead to form a cool canopy, penetrated by shafts of sunlight. Elsewhere, out in the open, vistas south and west reveal the rugged hills of Camp Pendleton’s interior.

Some seven miles from Fallbrook, the road makes a decided curve to the north and starts following the east bank of De Luz Creek, a tributary of the Santa Margarita River. Presently, you come to small cluster of old houses, which is De Luz proper. While De Luz is possibly the county’s smallest community, it is surrounded by a sizable and very abundant population in the late 1800s, which warranted the establishment of a post office here.

At the road fork just beyond De Luz, bear right on De Luz-Murieta Road. The old De Luz schoolhouse stands on the right, with the broadening Santa Mountains forming a backdrop in the west, rising to elevations of over 3000 feet.

You make a steady ascent on De Luz-Murieta Road, often passing by dense growths of live oak. You’ll find De Luz Creek several times, mostly on concrete dikes. If these crossings are wet and slippery, beware of potential pitfalls. Ahead, the road climbs abruptly to pass over a saddle. Down the other side you join the bottom of Sandia Creek, another soft-flowing tributary of the Santa Margarita River. Again, there is a delightful promenade of oak trees — and more fords. Presently the road bends sharply right and ascends steeply for 0.6 mile to the intersection of Carpanito Road. Turn right there, go 0.4 mile, and turn right on El Prado Road. Continue for about 0.7 mile to a sum- mit affording a good view of the surrounding area. Then descend to Sandra Creek Drive, where you turn right.

Ahead there’s mostly downhill riding and one sig- nificant climb — a short, but testing effort followed by a radically steep descent (these good brakes to keep your speed down!). At the next major intersection, stay right, cross the Santa Margarita River, and then follow the river bank toward De Luz Road and the one- mile climb back up to Fallbrook.

Explore the hills and dales of Fallbrook’s backcountry on two wheels.

Distance from downtown San Diego: 95 miles Biking length: 26 miles
Difficulty: Strenuous

ADDITIONAL GUIDANCE

- Bring a good road map with Fallbrook and the Santa Margarita River area highlighted.
- Wear clothing that can be easily layered, including gloves.
- Bring water, sunscreen, and insect repellent.
- Be cautious of vehicles on the roads.
- Respect the wildlife and environment.
- Be aware of local laws for off-road biking.
- Be prepared for weather changes, as Fallbrook can be cooler than San Diego.

Although the recording industry is in a downturn, Weiss says he got to know about 20 L.A.-based A&R reps when his band played at Sunset Strip—area venues such as the Key Club, the Viper Room, and the Roxy. “We always had our CDs and business cards with us. Half of us in the band are guys because they saw them every day and they bugged us to who they were.”

Weiss says associating with A&R reps paid off in the form of a lot of press and placement of music on video-game soundtracks and in a movie called Cruel World. But, no record deal. So, after two years of hustling the L.A. music scene and seven years as a band, Jagainst I will pull the plug. Their final local show was last Friday. Weiss reflects on why his band didn’t get signed: “The music industry is a pendulum. Rap-rock was in; now it’s Brit rock with screeching guitars.” He maintains that Jagainst I’s sound was not being scouted like it should. "...that are ready to go on a tour with a polished look and sound. Labels used to give development deals, where they would work with you and let you develop your sound and your image. No more.”

No Giggling Matter

On June 20, Not British, a three-piece rock band, was playing a party at a house in the College Area at around 9:00 p.m. “As far as parties go, the place wasn’t packed,” says guitarist Sal Filipelli. “But enough people that probably make neighbors annoyed, when they come and go, laughing and carrying on while they walk to their cars. I’m guessing we maxed out at 40 people packed into the living room at one point. Our drummer set up in the small kitchen. The bassist and I were in the dining room, trying to dodge a low-hanging chandelier.”

Not British ended up playing for another hour. The party thinned out to about 20 people, according to Filipelli, because there were other parties going on and because a neighbor had complained earlier and threatened to have cars towed and people arrested. “She stood outside, and as people arrived she’d tell them she had already called the cops and they’d be in trouble. Some would laugh in her face. Some ignored her or tried to apologize. One guy told me he flipped her off. One partygoer told me he had a warrant, and it wasn’t worth the risk sticking around. "At the end of our sets, sometimes we start messing around with sound effects, and we turn amps up a little louder. Sometimes play a song called ‘I Miss the Gigglers.’... At shows we’d let certain rap artists come freestyle on the song. On this night it was a girls’ rap group singing Mean Girls.”

NOPE, NOT BRITISH AT ALL

It was getting late, probably close to midnight, and it was getting loud. The lady that lives next door — who must be in her 80s — yelled out the window from upstairs. We knew she’d be trouble when she called the cops when we were just setting up our equipment at five o’clock! "In what I guess was an attempt to ask us to turn the music down, she fell down the stairs on her porch and broke her hip. The ambulance and the police came and the party ended, but not before they arrested one partygoer who was

THE ORIGINAL BEAT FARMERS

Some Country for Young Men

Many songs have been written about brothels, from “House of the Rising Sun” and “La Grange” to the musical The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas. Add to that list “Adelita’s Song,” by Vegas-based Adelitas Way, both the band and song are named after a brothel in Tijuana’s Zona Norte. Bandleader Rick DeJesus says they ended up at Adelita in search of beer.

“There were, like, 50 young, beautiful women in there, talking to old men. One of the prettiest women I ever saw comes up to me and starts talking to me. She looks at me and says, ‘Fifty bucks and I’m yours.’ I made me sad. She was so pretty, and anyone could sleep with her for 50 bucks. I started talking to me. She looked at me and said, ‘I fell asleep in the back of the truck,’ he says, “and four hours later we were getting arrested in Tijuana and extorted by the cops.” They robbed us for all our money. We were so bummed out, but I bid my $20 in my sock. DeJesus says they ended up at Adelita in search of beer. “There were, like, 50 young, beautiful women in there, talking to old men. One of the prettiest women I ever saw comes up to me and starts talking to me. She looks at me and says, ‘Fifty bucks and I’m yours.’ I made me sad. She was so pretty, and anyone could sleep with her for 50 bucks.”

So I said, “Why do you do this?” She broke down crying and said, “It’s the only way I can live and support my family here in Mexico. You can’t make money [easily in Mexico], and I can’t get into the USA.” It broke my heart.” After writing “Adelita’s Song” (“about a girl with no chance”), DeJesus liked the brothel’s name so much that he decided to use it for his band, as a constant reminder of the lesson learned.

SUCCESS (OR SOMETHING ELSE) GOES TO DEEZ’S HEAD

Deez, a native San Diegan, admits that one of the lowest points in his hip-hop career led to the writing of the song; it was after a show in Pacific Beach, where, according to Deez, he’d had a few drinks during his set. “Eventually, I drove home. On the way home my car broke down, and while I was parked on the side of the road, waiting for the tow truck, the CHP shows up and I get a DUl.”

With a suspended license, Deez turned to his ten-speed and his acoustic guitar and the lyrics began to flow: “I ride my bike all over the place, but I still got a beer belly and a jelly face.”

Deez is scheduled to perform his acoustic hip-hop set on July 11 at Brick by Brick.

The Rebuttiation Gospel Choir is a side project of the long-running indie outfit Low, but it’s a side project that stretches the meaning of the term. Two of the three members of Low stay in the band (singer/guitarist Alan Sparhawk and bassist Matt Livingston). The third member of Low, drummer—singer Mimi Parker, sings backup beautifully on a song from the Rebuttiation Gospel Choir’s self-titled debut album. And two songs on that album appear in different form on the last Low recording. But the Rebuttiation Gospel Choir is something much more than a Low remix. What Low is famous for being slow, quiet, sparse, and delicate, the Choir is loud and raucous (although, it should be said, still kind of slow). Sparhawk cranks up big, grungy guitar chords and lets rip with vaguely Eastern-sounding solos while drummer Eric Pollard bashes away.

Did somebody say grungy? Yes, the album sounds way more like 1994 than Low sounded in 1994. Maybe Sparhawk — who is married to Parker and has two kids — is trying to recapture something from his youth, even if he actually spent that youth being slow, quiet, sparse, and delicate. The album is produced by Mark Kazezile (Red House Painters, Sun Kil Moon), another guy who spent much of the ‘90s making slow, quiet, sad music. At times the album seems like the work of a bunch of aging glocks cracking open some beers and turning up the amps and grumbling that no one rocks out anymore. At one point on the album, Sparhawk bursts out with “Those damn kids, don’t they understand that you can’t do shit like that?” And then the band shows the kids how it’s supposed to be done.

Nautical Disaster falls into, and even crap-pop, sell-out San Diego, Nautical Disaster might not find great purchase among the populace, but they will stand as a reminder that sometimes the mainstream isn’t where you want to navigate your boat.

Jaye wangs her bass with sorrow and a hint of Cow- boy Junkies. The melodies set forth by Beezeley and Grimis feature gritty guitar chords in a mash-up of sounds that in one instance remind me of glam rockers T. Rex, and in the next instance the sound switches to an American or Mexican blues progression a lot like Tito and Tarantula. All of it is rock and roll, and all of it is handled perfectly.

Beezeley’s thin, sometimes-monotone voice recalls Lou Reed and acts to balance out the fullness of the music. The vocals are longing and tormented, but the lyrics don’t draw a narrative of grief or separation; they’re more collected thoughts and oblique concepts than storytelling.

I have my voice-mail number listed after my column to get the heads-up on parties around town, but I have to sift through several businesses that just want a plug. A business might be new, and they’ll tell me they are having a grand-opening party. I ask a few questions to discover it’s really not a party. They’re having a grand-opening sale. They might offer hot dogs in the parking lot. That’s hardly a party.

I also have authors call me about their book-release parties. I went to one at the San Diego County Fair. Diane Welch is the author of Images of America, Del Mar Fairgrounds, and she was having a luncheon in the director’s dining room of the grandstand building during the fair. She offered me a special place to park. I was so there.

When Diane started to talk, a large crowd gathered, and I figured that was my chance to jump on the food. It was a large spread. I chose fresh fruit and a turkey sandwich. One guy had tomatoes on his sandwich, and I asked, “How did you get tomatoes on your sandwich?” He said, “I put them there.” I laughed and explained that I thought they were banned.

I saw that they had the battered Australian potatoes that I usually buy at the fair. I pilled them on my plate and headed to a table.

A few people at my table had books. I glanced through one of them and recognized some of the photos, such as Raquel Welch as the “Fairest of the Fair” in 1958. Diane walked by and I asked, “Are you related to Raquel Welch?” She said, “No, I’m not, or she’d be here.”

I saw a photo in the book from 1937 of a guy named Bill Arballo, who’s identified as the deputy mayor of Del Mar. I was told Arballo’s been a photographer at the fairgrounds for years and that he writes for the Coast News. He looks to be in his early 80s now. Arballo stood and told the room that he used to sell papers at the fairgrounds for a penny each. “There was a sideshow they called Little

“Little Egypt was a hootchy-kootchy dancer, and it cost 25 cents to see her.”

“Little Egypt was a hootchy-kootchy dancer, and it cost 25 cents to see her.”

“In 1989. And when I presented the manager with the bill, he was a bit shocked.”

“I asked if any rich guys ever flirted with her. “Of course,” she said, and then brought the conversation back to her book.

“A lot of people don’t realize that Jim Franks is the father of the fairgrounds. It wouldn’t even be here today without him. It actually started in National City in 1880. Then the fair moved to Escondido.”

Egypt. She was a hootchy-koochty dancer, and it cost 25 cents to see her. For an extra 25 cents she’d take you back in the room and you’d see a lot more. Well, back then it was five cents for soda. You had five-cent weenies. They were ‘weenies’ back then. They were ‘hot dogs’ in the second generation. Those were ten cents. One of my friends asked me what I saw in that back room. I said, ‘How would I know? I’m not wasting my money. I work hard for it!’”

The crowd laughed.

I asked Arballo to tell me more about the fairgrounds in the old days. He told me about an organ grinder named Adams who drank a lot of wine. He said, “The monkey knew that when he got that way, he could just sit down and not work. The monkey, to collect money, would kiss girls or tip his hat. I know some people don’t like taking advantage of animals. This organ grinder, though, he’d drink so much… the monkey would just sit there and not do his job.”

I asked him about some of the famous people who would show up. Arballo said, “Well, the press party was great. They’d have steak and booze.”

I glanced down at my half-eaten turkey sandwich as he continued. “Jimmy Durante did this thing where he’d tear the piano apart. It would be an old one he’d be playing. At the end, it would just be the keys and ivory. And Al Jolson… he would sing until his lungs gave out. You couldn’t get him off stage. Mickey Rooney was a good showman. Harry James played his bugle. Or, wait, it was some wind instrument. I can’t remember. It was just a free-for-all. And this would last all night long. The rule was, the bar stayed open until everyone went home pie-eyed.”

I went and grabbed a lemonade.

At this point, Welch had a crowd she was signing books for. She had four kids at the event, and I asked her daughter, who looked to be around 14, if she would ever write a book. She nodded yes. I asked her what kind, and she said, “Fantasy.”

A DVD was playing that Welch narrated and produced with her husband Paul. I had heard something about the bombing of Pearl Harbor and how the fairgrounds were used to make submarines. I asked Paul about this. “Yeah, the fair shut down during the war. The fairgrounds are owned by the State of California, but… people cooperate during wartime. It was used for war production and Marine training grounds. It was sort of a boot camp, and they lived in the stables. They also had an airport east of the grandstand. It was on about 60 acres.” He went on to talk about “Bing’s Bomber Babes,” which produced the B-17 and did submarine assembly. I said, “Wow. When I see stories on the Del Mar Fairgrounds, it’s never this.”

I walked over to take a photo of Welch signing books. I heard her tell one lady, “Yeah, Pat O’Brien’s daughter was supposed to be here. And there was also a ‘Fairest of the Fair’ from the ’50s that we had lined up. I’m not sure where she is.”

I said, “I’m disappointed Raquel Welch didn’t make it.”

Someone in line waiting to have their book signed said, “Well, you got her on the cover of the book.” His wife said, “And, you have a prettier Welch here. Doesn’t that make it worth it?”

I said, “The fact that I’m saving ten dollars on Australian potatoes and fair admission makes it worth it.”

The summer I was six, my mom and I (plus two platinum-blond, leather-skinned aunts resembling Marge Simpson’s sisters, and a sweet, bald uncle) spent a month in a middle-class, family-oriented Deco hotel in South Miami Beach. Mainly fun, except for the invasive aunts and the stinky Noxema for sunburns. The Pearl reminds me of that vacation (minus Irma, Alice, Mom, and Noxema; fun-loving Uncle Mac may be there in spirit).

A boxy motel in Point Loma on Rosecrans, at the corner of Guildstern (don’t take this seriously, there’s no such street — alas), the Pearl was probably built in the late ’50s. It has recently been renovated with some elegance to evoke South Beach — not then, but now, with a distinct “adults only” vibe in the minuscule dining room, if that’s what you want to call it. It’s more of a drinking lounge to wake up after dark, and a lot of what the imbibers had apparently assumed their positions for the evening. There’s more room out by the pool, at a few two-tops in front of the bar, a large comfortable banquettes along a side wall. Like the Pearl is on towering barstools, at the bar or at tall tables. They don’t normally take reservations, and the busy night we ate there, therones were all occupied from the start of happy hour, when the imbibers

The second-most-popular dish is “deconstructed shrimp nachos,” a skewer of slightly spicy cornets filled with the basic materials of a Cuban sandwich — braised pork, ham, and Swiss cheese. Trey has tweaked the seasoning for the pork and added mint and rum to the “mojito mustard” (previously it was just", "wings du jour, salmon

Even better was the candied pork belly, a chunk of melting, fatty meat seasoned with ginger, sugar, and orange zest over a couple of firm-tender peas and coarse-grained Israeli couscous. The chicken was sweet up front, then faintly smoky, then complex, with a spice blend none of us could pin down, more Southeast Asian curry than North African. Delicious whatever its origins, it had a great crisp texture. In the center of the plate was a yogurt-based mixture of chick peas and coarse-grained Israeli couscous. The dish was almost as much fun as a pool party.

Our server was attentive, well informed, energetic, but the place was totally and unexpectedly slamming that Thursday night, and she forgot to mention a couple of specials. One was a luscious-looking heirloom local tomato salad (olive oil, a bit of balsamic, salt, and nothing more) that we saw on neighboring tables and lusted for too late. Another special arrived, unordered (and unhilled) among our appetizers — an entrée of spotted bass with cherry tomatoes. Glad we hadn’t been tempted, since it was so bland we tasted only sweetness. Reunion Recipes

Very Euro. Then a bunch of perky gals come beetling along aboard Vespa scooters.

Ahh... Slurp, burp, slurp again. Pinky finger raised, of course. I clink my cocktail cup down in its saucer. Sitting like a captain of industry here at the corner of Ash and India. Behind yellow and blue flowers, under a maroon umbrella, eyeballing a sapphire San Diego Bay twinkling in the morning sun at the bottom of Ash.

A Carnival Cruiser liner’s white superstructure peeks out from behind the still-purple jacaranda trees.

We’re in Little Italy, technically, but really a couple of blocks south of where the main LTL action is. And yet, I’m thinking, as I slurp my first cappuccino of the day — and what a beautiful cuppa it is — where else in Little Italy can you catch a view down to the water from a café?

This morning, tramping up India, I noticed Petrin’s big red, white, and green banner reading “Breakfast, lunch, dinner” and saw what a great little place this must be. I crossed the street, three umbrellas, and a real coziness. I crossed over and headed in to see if I could afford it.

Inside, there are fountains, and mustard walls packed with bright paintings of, like, bulls, guitars, horses. They have maroon-cushioned benches along the side wall and blond wood chairs at the tables, and a half dozen fat steeds front a kind of wine bar on either side of the open kitchen. Classy...maybe too classy.

“Still doing breakfast?” I asked this gal dressed in black. This was about 10:00 going on 11:00.

And I’m sure glad I did. All that view down Ash to the Bay — you never notice it when you’re hustling up India. Plus, surprise bonus: traffic. Little Italy style. A guy pulls up in his Smart Car cabriolet. Like a standard auto with its rear end chopped off. Very Euro. Then a bunch of perky gals come beetling along aboard Vespa scooters. So La Dolce Vita. Plus, people walking up Ash pass so close they all say “Good morning” to you over the flowers. Nice.

So I’m downing my coffee ($2.50, endless refills) in its classy cup and saucer and checking the menu. Wow, We’re in luck. My kind of prices. Panini — sandwichs — go from $5.25 for the Formaggio (cheese) to $8.75 for the Hot Torpedo (stuffed and baked with capicola, salami, and provolone cheese). In between is the $8.30 George Burger, named after the owner’s mom because sexing up the basic burger with garlic-grilled mushrooms and provolone was her idea. Oh boy, the Caponata ($8) looks good, too: sautéed eggplant with lots of veggies, onions, bell peppers, celery, and tomato on an Italian roll. Okay, the cenu — dinner — items are all up there for $10 (for a basic pasta sauce) to $19.75 for a flatiron steak. But you can have at least half of them for half price (from $5–$9) at lunchtime, which means till four in the afternoon.

But, of course, this is still mawnin’, ain’t it? A man has to break his overnight fast first. Breakfast goes till 11:30 (midday on weekends), so we’re good.

The specialties include Italian toast (grilled Italian egg-battered bread with dry compote, $.75) and focaccia with smoked salmon, cream cheese, and capers ($8.25). But under “Piatti dell’Uovo” (egg plates), the one I like is the frittata with meat and veggies — baked eggs with capicola ham pieces, plus provolone and mozzarella ($7.25, or $6.50 with just veggies). The frittata comes in a cute little ceramic bowl, egg covered in stretchy cheese, either the provolone or mozzarella. A couple of chunks of peeled orange, and two slices of toasted Italian bread are served alongside. It’s not a vast, sprawling frittata like you get in some places, but it’s tasty and filling. And it feels, well, sophisticated. I must have asked for four coffee refills to help it down. Cami doesn’t complain.

“It’s been hard work,” says the chef and owner, David Petrini, of the first couple of years. “We have to work to draw our customers. But food has always been part of my life. My father and uncle had five Italian restaurants in the Santa Barbara area, and my mother and brother and I had a place in Scottsdale.”

Turns out he was also in Hollywood for a while, acting (then getting an M.A., then in the landscaping business), but came to San Diego to start this place so he could be his own boss. “Our family is really strong,” David says. “We have reunions every two years. Maybe 120 of us gather, and eating is a big part of it. We even created a family recipe book. I use that a lot. We have our own salad dressing that my uncle makes and bottles. My cousin smokes the salmon we use for our smoked salmon pizza [$13.75–$19.75].”

I started yakkin’ with David when I came in to pay my tab. The cash register’s right beside the open kitchen. He stands there talking away, hands flying. He’s making up a salad now. It’s loaded with salami, olives, and shredded cheese. “The Numero Due salad,” he says, “Number Two.” [$7.50] Our family has been making this since 1958. Never change a good thing.

I can’t hold back a pang of regret. Why wasn’t my family like that? Big, boisterous, loving, inventing dishes, big reunions, lotta music, singing, cousins, food, some of those straw bottles of Chianti, more food…

Sigh. I swear, gonna round up some cousins, bring them down here when the sun’s setting, make a Rodney King speech: “Can’t we all just get along?”

Bare Back Grill 4442 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach, 619-274-7117. This may be the first New Zealand food place in town, but that’s what keeps the customers coming in. It’s BBG’s claim that most of their menu is certified organic. The owners guarantee hormone-free beef and lamb, both from New Zealand. So what is it about Burgers, burgers, burgers — all kinds — from Prime NZ Angus to lamb burgers with ramp and bacon? They also offer chicken. Decor inside is steel interior, from the all-black Rugby turf on the wall to the declaration of food principles. People who do not get up on homegrown-tempered meat are coming here for their first burger in years. Open seven days, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Inexpensive. — E.B.

Azul La Jolla 1250 Prospect Street, La Jolla, 858-454-9616. The flagship of the Azul chain in La Jolla, Azul La Jolla is bright, blue, and white with smart varnish and accents of dangling wood furniture and delivers fish, finished wood furniture and delivers fish, and earth tones and weathered timber at the outside’s the “in” spot, with its brick and surface. The kitchen’s famous roasted squash, and other unidades in a spacious gray space. The recipes from the herb kitchen, an island like one featured in The Book, is inexpensive to moderate. — E.B.

La Jolla Brew Company 7356 Fay Avenue, La Jolla, 858-486-6279. Don’t expect to see the beer in your glass. To taste some good beers make right here and good solid food, such as the prime rib sandwich (which goes great with a Russian beef or the roasted potatoes. Or maybe they have a few beers that’s not just plain smug. But the food tastes pretty good. And they sell it by the pound so you can mix and match. Course, you need to learn new words, like tempeh, “temple” or “temple” (as in, “a temple of meat”). The noodles have a serious wine list (858-488-7255) and two story patio dining. Lunch weekdays, dinner Thursday through Sunday. Inexpensive to moderate. — E.A.

Kabuki Sushi Restaurant 4475 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach, 858-270-3550. This has a unique system of delivering tempting dishes to your via boats sailing along a man-made channel that surrounds the sushi bar. You buy take out food and pay according to the plate size. The sushi chefs — they can be a show in themselves — have the usual panorama of sushi, sashimi, nigiri. The dragon rolls (crab, shrimp tempura, eel, avocado) and some rolls (so-called ebi) are tasy. You’re young and crowded here — is that because you don’t have to wait any longer? Transformer is open for lunch and dinner Tuesday through Saturday; closed Monday. Inexpensively. — E.B.

Karyna Thai 4755 Mission Boulevard, Pacific Beach, 858-270-5010. Think of it as a Sakura-Temple. The food in the regular menu offers excellent lamb, stuffed grape leaves, and Mediterranean comfort food with a Southern Low Country accent from Chef Deborah Scott; same menu lunch and dinner 11 a.m.-11 p.m. Inexpensive. — E.B.

The Fishery 300 Cato Street, Pacific Beach, 619-272-9985. Pacific Shellfish Company, a fishery that gets its seasonal catch from local fisherman. They buy seasonal catch from local fisherman. They buy seasonal catch from local fisherman. Open daily, lunch and dinner. Moderate. — E.B.

Azul La Jolla 1250 Prospect Street, La Jolla, 858-454-9616. The flagship of the local Bingane chain serves Japanese, Hawaiian, Californian global fusion cuisine on a dining changing menu room with a panoramic ocean view. But you need not stuff your shirt to dine here — grab a seat and relax and the atmosphere is family friendly. There’s even a low-priced lidded menu for young surfers with soft drinks and plenty and plenty by the glass and a full bar. Full bar. Short distance down to restaurant; elevator to the right of the entry (or for directions for wheelchair access when calling to reserve). Valid parking. Very noisy. One vegetarian entry, but all food restrictions accommodated. Order. Lunch Tuesday through Saturday, dinner nightly. Sunday brunch. Very expensive. — N.W.

I have appreciated cooking all of my life. When I was growing up, we sat down and had dinner together every night, so that was kind of a big thing, and in high school I was a line cook. But I didn’t think I would be a chef. I planned around being with a fire-fighter and some other things. When I worked at the Arizona Biltmore (as a cook), I fell in love with it again. I said, “I’m going to take this to another level and get an education,” and I went to the Art Institute of Phoenix. I’m French-trained and cook French food, but when I’m not working, I do other ethnic food as well. Things like Pad Thai, and dim sum. My wife is Chinese, and she introduced me to Asian food. For friends I try to keep things simple. We do more barbecue, fresh pesto, salmon and steaks, and keep it simple and tasteful. Maybe I’ll sprinkle some truffle oil on potatos.

Ingredients

- 6 ounces bitterweet chocolate
- 2 ounces Grand Marnier
- 4 T butter
- 4 egg whites (reserve yolks for some other use)
- 2 T sugar
- 1 Chassy cream (divided use)
- Sprig of mint, for garnish (optional)

Method

Serves 6

In a medium pot, bring a cup of water to a simmer. Place a mixing bowl into the water in the pot and add the chocolate to the bowl. Make sure the water does not come to the rim of the bowl and

Recipe Notes:

- This recipe is for a decadent dessert and is best served with a light, refreshing tea or a glass of white wine.
- Adjust the sweetness by adjusting the amount of sugar and cream.
- For a lighter version, use only half of the sugar and cream and substitute fresh fruit for the chocolate mousse.
What the Chef Eats

does not get into the chocolate. Stir gently to help the chocolate melt and prevent it from scorching.

Whisk in the Grand Marnier, then whisk in the butter, a tablespoon at a time.

In another mixing bowl, using a whisk or electric mixer, whip the egg whites until they hold soft peaks, gradually adding the sugar. Whisk a few table spoons of this mixture into the melted chocolate to lighten and loosen the texture, then use a rubber spatula to gently fold in the remaining egg white mixture.

In the third mixing bowl, whip half the cream until it holds soft peaks. Fold the whipped cream into the chocolate mixture.

Gently transfer the mouse to the serving bowl (or spoon or pipe into glasses), cover, and refrigerate for at least two hours.

Just before serving, whip the remaining cream until it holds stiff peaks.

Serve the whipped cream alongside the mousse, or pipe it through a pastry bag onto the top. Garnish with sprigs of mint, if you like.

Coffee, bread, interesting cheese, fruit. Plus you get grapes or a pear to go with your sandwich. We try it at Starbucks, a few doors down, usually doesn’t do it. Casual, brash, interesting cheese, fruit — it’s the perfect combo. Open 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., closed Saturday. — E.W.

Zeno’s 3967 30th Street, North Park, 619-696-4711. This much-welcomed neighborhood restaurant in a restaurant-starched neighborhood offers a changing menu of small plates, fusion appetizers, and Japanese–American beers, sakes, and cocktails. Reservations advised for Friday/Saturday nights. — K.L.

Nobu. The “party rolls” (such as “stuffed snapper” or “mango” rolls) are not to be missed, but the rest of the menu is distinctly accessible. American melting and Japanese refinement combine to make it possible to enjoy such exotic dishes as “like amounts of vegetable curry with two rice-flour–aunched dusted coconut milk to bath, fettucine-like entrees.” (Try the latter with the delicious, not-too-spicy, orange-flavored white sauce.) Fuyu persimmon and tamari sauce is spectacular. Order your dishes in the sequence you hope to eat them — that’s usually how they come out of the kitchen. And don’t expect hovering “I’ll—be—right—back”—style service — it’s just not the way they do it at Nobu. — E.B.

Cahaba Cove 777 Harrah’s Way, Valley Center, 760-777-2453. This eatery brings Pacific Beach to Valley Center with its cheerful (make that gorgeous) surfer decor and menu of classic surfer grub. With glass walls looking out on the mountains and two outdoor swimming pools, this is the only restaurant in San Diego County to offer views of the outer world. The eclectic menu, from authentic Chinese to American to Mexican, offers a very different kind of sandy and smoky, delicious, modestly priced seafood dish to try. Full bar, poolside cocktails. Breakfast Monday through Friday; lunch daily. Moderate. — M.W.

A Delight of France 126 West Grand, Escondido, 760-746-1644. This authentic French bakery is one of the best, offering daily baked authentic baguettes, brioches, quiches, pate a choux, and Pastillons. Leamond crossiant studded with nuts and glazed with sweet almond paste. They come out of the oven to perfection. — M.W.

Golden Egg Omelet House 316 West Grand Avenue, Escondido, 760-498-6620. This breakfast–lunch–brunch house is vast but casual, in brick walls and open space with a few decorations in which to swap stories (sprinkled with nectarines, Vietnamese fish sauce). We’re trying family-style cooking. Come once and Trang will remember your order and member you and everything you are — even if it’s just potato fries. — E.B.

Human 16719 Bernardo Center Drive, Rancho Bernardo, 858-476-6713. This casual family restaurant serves the comfort food we would all like to find in our neighborhood. Bahn Mien, Shumon and Human — each with its own dedicated chef — but both chefs tone the spicy, sour, or sweet down to a suburban American comfort level. If you don’t already know the difference between these neighboring cuisines, you’re unlikely to learn them here. But you can have an enjoyable meal. Te-smoked duck, egg plant Human, and shredded pineapple, tossed with pickled vegetables are the outstanding dishes. If you’re planning on a party, you may call to reserve. Many dishes at a time or everything will be served once, so it’s not a good choice for more than 49 people. — S.U.

Pearl Chinese Cuisine 11086 Avenida Pacifico, Rancho Bernardo, 858-487-1515. This restaurant’s young, protégé suburban sister, it will find modern interpretations of traditional Chinese dishes (including both familiar and exotic dishes. The kitchen serves Peking-style specialty dishes, served daily until 3 p.m., plus champagne sunny brunches on weekends. Along with standard items, those who choose here look to the late Pacific creation, some rare finds on this side of the ocean, including irresistible Shanghai soup dumplings. Dishes range from “fancy to hearty.” The best — from a taste and visual point of view — are the beef dumplings, stylish and daintily presented in a deep dish. — J.S.

Chinese Pizza Kitchen — Carmel Valley 11549 Carmel Mountain Road, Carmel Valley, 858-636-2345. Two Beverly Hills lawyers started this chain in 1985 to exploit “the premium pizza segment.” Some 150 restaurants later, and quite fluently enriched, it’s the place to order unforgettable, spicy, golden wood and black furniture, and an overwhelming, diverse menu. The inside is warm and inviting; the outdoor seating, with its tiki torches, is nothing less than paradise. — E.B.

El Callejon Restaurant 345 South Highway 101, Encinitas, 760-436-2700. This is a Mexican restaurant with a difference. Instead of the standard border crossing border foods and combo plates, it offers a long menu of �cuisine complements. A welcome change. There’s even a papel picado (mixed grill) to serve two. The atmosphere offers more pleasant. At lunch, the dining room seems like a scene from a hacienda. The restaurant may turn its kitchen into a restaurant center, where multi-cultural groups and families and groups of friends will enjoy sharing dishes and small plates with the ability to make reservations. — S.U.

The Calypso Café 872 North Thirteenth Avenue, Encinitas, 760-435-4232. This “Calypso” has nothing to do with Carrie; the Caribbean; or the Caribbean island. It’s been a hit since 1985. This is a great restaurant with a difference. Instead of the standard border crossing border foods and combo plates, it offers a long menu of dishes that are, if nothing else, a welcome change. for a substantial lunch, offering loads of crab cake appetizer is sizeable enough at Duke's, Jake's’ fare is competently prepared. Park, with its fragrant mimosa plants, with a patio overlooking the waves, but it's a sheer joy with light green and orange accents. Cooking from the coastal region is the basis of all dishes, with unexpected taste, the flavor of the Pacific Ocean, for instance, can seem to be the same in every dish. They've added seafood to this, feeling like it's the same as when you order it. A lot of seafood is on the menu, and it all has a unique quality that is not found in this area. The pizzas are a good example of this, with a nice crust on the bottom and a lot of flavor in the topping.

Le Royal Elea, 600-601-341-16, is one of the best restaurants in San Diego. It's a small restaurant, but the food is excellent. The menu changes daily, but always includes seafood. The cocktails are very good, and the wine list is impressive.

“You’re a historical character to me — dead and buried.”

In today’s terminology, you could say that Joe Bonaparte has bipolar gifts. His hands are adept in the boxing ring, clobbering contenders, as they are playing the violin. His skills are so extreme, in Clifford Odets’s Golden Boy, they’re on a collision course.

The play’s three acts depict a 12-round championship bout: Mammon versus the Muses. Joe, who practiced for ten years, won a medal as the best young violinist in New York and a scholarship at the prestigious Erickson Institute. His father, of modest means, has encouraged Joe to live humbly and make music, “The great cheer-up language of all countries.”

Even in the midst of the Great Depression, Joe wants more. On his 21st birthday, he won’t divorce himself from the violin (“I take a vacation — the notes won’t run away”), but he’ll become a professional boxer and shake “this feeling of no possessions.”

In a slim but persistent sense, Joe resembles Hamlet. Hamlet’s father’s ghost demands revenge and that his son “taint not” his mind. Joe, a defensive specialist, must pull punches to save his hands. After a while, goaded by gilded urges, he releases his hands in the boxing ring with “the fury of a lifetime.”

In a more persistent sense, Joe resembles Faust. But instead of selling his soul to the devil, Joe sacrifices his artistic gift for about 18 months of material glitter. To underline the Faust connection, Odets originally subtitled the play “a modern allegory.”

Like Joe, Odets became caught between the artistic and the commercial. After writing three proletarian dramas for the Group Theatre in the mid 1930s — Waiting for Lefty, Awake and Sing, and Paradise Lost — Odets went to Hollywood to write screenplays. He’d earn enough, he vowed, to sponsor his playwriting. Group Theatre heads Lee Strasberg and Harold Clurman screamed sellout. In 1937, Odets gave them Golden Boy to raise funds for the impoverished company. They lapped it up, but writing a deliberate moneymaker tore Odets in half.

New Village Arts’ staging gets the style, and much of the sweep, of Golden Boy. As Joe, newcomer Michael Zlotnik has fine moments: his fingers, now clenched, not lilting, are particularly expressive. But he tends to pull his dramatic punches. Two words pop up in the script, it would seem, as often as New York cabs: “gold” and “half.” Like the later Odets, Joe is never whole. He’s half into boxing and half out. In the end, bloated by materialism, he claims to be “half a man, nothing, useless.” Zlotnik’s performance could improve if he played Joe’s halves separately, each with more conviction, and not dilute them by attempting both at once.

Many call Odets’s dialogue the best in American theater. Some even say American literature. In Golden Boy, his words punch: quick jabs, often barrages of questions; combination setups; and Sunday whoppers, as when Joe rejects Lorna with “You’re a historical character to me — dead and buried.”

One could quibble that too many of Odets’s characters speak with the touch of a poet, but his words jump off the page as if they had a running start. Under Joshua Everett Johnson’s direction, the NVA cast sets Odets’s on-your-toes dialogue free. Manny Fernandez, slick hair, shiny forehead (and first-rate), rockets through his lines as Moody, Joe’s harried manager. Eric Poppick’s touching Mr. Bonaparte, Jeff Anthony Miller’s Tokio (the understanding trainer), and Greg Wittman’s humorous Sigie encircle Joe with patter and, ultimately, with confusion and hurt.

Amanda Sitton’s become an actor that actors come to watch. As Joe’s half-on, half-off girlfriend Lorna, Sitton’s shoulders swivel when she walks, and she never just sits in a chair: she has an armada of slouches, all elegant. Sitton’s readings have a pitch-perfect, been-there-done-that tone — as when she utters, “Marriage is something special...I guess you have to deserve it.”

Kristianne Kurner and Tim Wallace’s set has four playing spaces, including boxes above, punching away behind a scrim. As Eddie, the slick gangster with Mephistophelean impulses, Joshua Everett Johnson slithers around the stage like a prowling reptile. It’s easy for actors to express anger. John-son does the much more difficult task: like Denzel Washington in Training Day and Russell Crowe in L.A. Confidential, Johnson makes Eddie always on edge and ever about to erupt.

FIELD NOTES: When Odets came back from Hollywood with Golden Boy, he promised a young actor, Jules Garfield, the title role. The Group Theatre said no and cast him as Sigie, the comic-relief minor character. As soon as the run ended, Garfield went to Hollywood and changed his first name to John.

2008 SHAKESPEARE FESTIVAL

Now - September 28 (in repertory)

in the Lowell Davies Festival Theatre, our beautiful outdoor stage located in the heart of Balboa Park.

NOW PLAYING!

ROMEO AND JULIET

Directed by Richard Seer

The most thrilling Shakespeare festival yet begins with swords clashing, duets danced, oaths of love sworn, and trachorous sleeping potions swallowed — in the greatest love story of all time. Young love has never been so dangerous or delightful — as it is in San Diego’s most romantic theatre venue, our outdoor Festival stage under the stars.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR

Directed by Paul Mullins

The notorious Sir John Falstaff steps out of the world of court life to take up residence in the country town of Windsor. There he attempts to use his own celebrity by seducing two happily married wives. But once the wives (and their husbands) find out the game that’s afoot, Shakespeare’s fat knight may find the last laugh to be on him.

ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

Directed by Darko Tresnjak

Helena, a doctor’s daughter, provides a miracle cure for the ailing king and he rewards her with the husband of her choice. But after she chooses the unwilling Bertram, she finds that marriage and requited love are, sadly, worlds apart. But all is not lost in this enchanting Shakespearean fairy tale, in which an indomitable heroine cunningly sets out to win the heart of her man.

The Hit
Mike Buckley’s late, entertaining romantic comedy has one of the most conflicted villains. Sam, short for Samantha, means ‘Hit’, but is not at work as a “Hit man” and tends to become personally involved. The real villain, in this world premiere at Lamb’s, is the hospital that convinced Susan, owner of an antique shop in San Francisco, that she’s dying of cancer. Susan hires Sam for a whack job so Susan’s brother can use the insurance for graduate school at Stanford. When Susan mistakes Sam, a travel agent, for Samm, complications unfold in a briskly paced show (the pace moves almost fast enough to carry some flimsy causes, plus Samm’s cross dressing). Buckley’s a triple threat: he wrote the script, he plays Sam, and he designed the set. A shot of Johnnie’s TheatreSports (artist-director Gary Kramer says the two compare like “rugby and American football”), resembling an athletic event more than an impromptu. Teams wear uniforms and compete on A-team. Using suggestions from the audience, they play “Emotional Sympathy,” “Blind Line,” and “Freeze Tag,” with judges awarding points to the best scenes. Klunkers and Sustainers get boosts; quick wit rewarded (one of the most refreshing parts of the contest: people acknowledge a need for discipline, abundantly, then forget it). It makes for a lively, often funny evening. And Gary Kramer is one talented comedian.

Robert Dubac’s Male Intelltect: The Second Coming!
Robert Dubac’s sequel to his play The Male Intellect: An Oxymoron promises “more truth, less”— actually a shoddy and “fewer” —but less truth than lies.” Afflicted with too much male chauvinism, he tries to find a balance between his left brain (linear, rational) and his right (emotional). He labels the two hemispheres “male” and “female.” They aren’t, but anyway. In Act Two, having found his balance, he ventures behind the “door of truth” and gives us unvarnished, outside-the-box revelations (“there are no stars in Dancing with the Stars”). Although the tiddy oppositions—women are this, men that—come from pop psychology (which has always been allergic to multi-polarities), and though Dubac upholded stereotypes as much as he warps them, Dubac’s show is often quite funny. Some of the best material comes when his character, like gangly Uncle Bob, says unexpected things. His repertoire includes magic tricks (dismantling a newspaper, clumping it together, and unfolding the pristine original), a quasi-mystical blackboard with key words preprinted and bedded, and, the highlight, a cigarette in each ear performing “Dueling Banjos” from Deliver- ance. On opening night Dubac blushed through the exercise if he had a plane to catch. His characters’ accents often blurred the jokes, the punch lines in particular. The show would be even better if he gave them time to do it.

Two ideas has Hancock. The first may be summed up in the term "anti-superhero," or if you prefer it, "super-antihero." The hero, that is to say, possesses the full complement of comic-book superpowers. Even though his takeoffs and landings leave divots in the earth, the asphalt, whatever, he’s faster than the proverbial speeding bullet and able to leap tall buildings in a single bound. Bullets aimed in his direction, meantime, might do damage to his cherished sunglasses (seemingly not, for some reason, to his clothes), but they bounce harmlessly off his hide. Without so much as bracing himself for impact or yielding an inch of ground, he can stop a full-speed train in — and on — its tracks, or at least the engine on its tracks, while the trailing cars jump the tracks in a jumble. He can throw a beached whale back into the ocean as easily as you or I could throw a minnow, accidentally toppling a clipper ship in the bargain. The personality, in short, of an above-the-law pro athlete or rock star.

The second idea cannot be divulged. It could perhaps be divulged to the extent of hinting that it has something to do with the anti-superhero’s origin and history, and that it doesn’t come to light till well after the plot turn whereby he saves the life of an altruistic PR man who, in gratitude, offers to remake the hero’s image, invites him home to his favorite meal of meatballs, introduces him to wife and son, and so on: “I’m going to teach you to interface with the public.” To cast the likable Will Smith in the lead role of the film and to release it at the Fourth of July — a hallowed tradition dating back to Independence Day — does not quite count as an idea unto itself, especially because, if in fact it were an idea, it would be negated by the folly of casting him in a role that thoroughly squelches his likability. Nor does it count as an idea to have kept Charlize Theron (the wife of the PR man, Jason Bateman) out of the pre-release publicity, out of the coming-attractions trailer, out of sight: that, needless to say, is external to the film proper. The surprise of the movie the mere fact that Charlize Theron now looks like the second coming of Britt Ekland, thanks no doubt to the usual Hollywood magic of Diet, Exercise, and a New Hairdo. Since I didn’t know beforehand that she would be in the movie, I honestly did not know it was her I was looking at till I spotted the mole on her throat. (Charlize Theron may qualify as a movie star nowadays, but I must say I’ve never had a similar difficulty recognizing Bette Davis, Katharine Hepburn, Gene Tierney, Ava Gardner.) The so-called second idea, moreover, is not really worth divulging. Nothing more, for that matter, is really worth divulging, if only because of the decision — the bad idea — to use written and directed by Andrew good enough actually to resemble one said “skinny bitch”) is both lucky and ders Marisa Tomei as a semblance of and Hilary Duff’s duff. John Mctiernan, Jon Turteltaub, among other wannabes, and the relentless action scenes are always impressive in their engineering while never being in the least bearable or involving. (A fenced bout conducted in side-by-side rings at top speed unfailingly fouls our attention on the filmmaker rather than on the fighters.) In the end — in the accumulation — the action grows more than a little tedious. Spielberg's technique is superior not only to others' technique but also to his own taste. A good long time, needless to stress, has gone by since the previous Indy adventure, and the new one can't be content to try to top just that. It has to try to top, in addition, The Da Vinci Code, the National Treasure: Hunt, the Lara Croft adventures, etc. With a plot that links Russell, New Mexico, to the Erich von Däniken theory of evolution, Spielberg keeps pace in that race as well. To say so is no great compliment. Tate Blanchet, Sha LaFlure, Karen Allen, Ray Winstine, John Hurt, Jim Broadbent. 2008.

Iron Man — Marvel Comics superhero (Vintegret 1963) rescued from present-day Afghanistan. Weapon manufacturer Tony Stark, alias "The Merchant of Death," suffers first-hand that his products sometimes land in the laps of America's enemies, and to combat this he devises a personal suit of flying armor (a gold titanium alloy, actually, not iron), transforming himself into a sort of airborne Robin Bobo to police the world. The current events tie in fairly tastefully, given the conventional joinness of the approach, aggravated by the couldn't-give-a-shit-affectation of Robert Downey Jr., in the title role. With Gwyneth Paltrow, Jeff Bridges, Terrence Howard, and Shaun Toub, directed by Jon Favreau. 2008.

Kit Kittredge: An American Girl — Social consciousness for kids, an orgy of bellowing, generosity, trust, fellowship, and on and on, amid the needy in Depression-era Cleveland, with a few not-very-nice-parade poopers thrown in as obsoles porc. The lachrymose Ahhbold Bredice, in the title role of a ten-year-old cub reporter, has plenty of opportunity to promote herself as the prettiest Meryl Streep. With Julia Ormond, Chloë O'Donnell, Maxim Gaudette, Ann Cusack, Staci Castell, Jane Krakowski, and Wallace Shawn, directed by Patricia Rozema. 2008.

CARMEL MOUNTAIN: CHULA VISTA 10; ESCONDIDO 10; FLOWER HILL 14; HILLCREST CINEMAS; LA JOLLA VILLAGE

Kung Fu Panda — Plum computer cartoon about a tubby panda (voice of Jack Black, tubby button-pressing) a auring, effusive afo- comic of martial arts, disfigured with his hokum "family" in the name of noble food. Wanting nothing more than to witness the annihilation of the new Dragon Warrior, infatuated by the Secret of Limitless Power, he manages by dumb luck to get himself so anointed as to effect hitting the Kung Fu lottery. With that, the filmmakers set about to purge a dearly and widely held fantasy: the idea that the nifty outfit in the fast field, but especially the martial-arts field, can quickly close ground on the matter by means of a remedial crash course. No matter how low your opinion of kung fu or film genre, you would be justified in finding this involving, both in the specific martial art and your intelligence. And animation, despite its easy defiance of physical laws, does not much soften the insult. If the Furious Five — Tiger, Crane, Mantis, Monkey, and Viper — are together no match for the rogue snow leopard, Tai Lung, how can the Porto Panda compete? (As the Tiger rightly tells him, “If you have any respect for what we are and what we do, you will be given in the morning.”) Apart from its featherweight reinforcement of the something-for-nothing ethic, there is probably no great harm in the movie. And in its own field it cuts no corners, leaves no stone unturned. It wouldn’t do a dastardly morphine anywhere near the drawing board. Or the keyboard. With the voices of Dustin Hoffman, Angelina Jolie, Mike Myers, and Jack Black, directed by John Stevenson and Mark Osborne. 2008.

The Love Guru — Mike Myers, with an unfunny funny voice and a dime-store fast food, plays American-born, Indian-raised self-help prophet (The Number Two Man behind Deepak Chopra), whose path to the Oprah show goes through the locker room of the Toronto Maple Leafs. The hockey fan and the Hindu follower might be equally appalled. Jessica Alba, Justin Timberlake, Bey Kinglsey, directed by Michael Schultz. 2008.

Mongol — Genghis Khan, the formativewriter. Whatever he later might have been guilty of, here are the extenuating circumstances: the poisoning of his father, the abdication of his wife, his sale into slavery, etc., not to forget the burdensome birthright of all Mongols. It makes for a tedious case, sometimes enlivened by nice countryside and nice riding across it, but never much by the spoodle bloodshed. With Tadanobu Asano, Khulan Chuluun, Hong Sii Sun, and Amadou Mamadak, directed by Bedret Rodono. 2007.

FLOWER HILL 4; HILLDRED CINEMAS; LA JOLLA VILLAGE

Mother of Tears — Ostensibly this complete sequel to Dario Argento’s witchy trilogy initiated with Suspiria and Inferno, or in other words the trilogy suspended more than a quarter-century earlier. The central story-line, which can stand on it alone, concerns the unearthing of an ancient urn in a church graveyard, the unmasking thereby of the most powerful witch in the world, the rallying of an army of lesser witches (more like a convention of saucy punk rockers), and the touching-off of random violence in the streets, heralding the Second Fall of Rome. The treatment is unashamedly scholastic, the dialogue tickling lame- (“Hey, there’s something down here,” and “I just can’t get my head around it,” and “There’s more to this case than we think,” and, maybe the best laugh, “I’m only a psychia.) I can communicate with spirits, but that’s about it,” and the intervals between nauseating bloodbaths thankfully long. Yet the whole thing seems sturdy, shock, unadventurous — and aside from an extreme close-up of a scalp sliced through the wax seal of the urn, it misses the point. The blood has receded in the eye in Argento’s early days. In the final analysis, it comes across as not so much a bleacher from the past as a last gasp overture, not all filmmakers can grow like Clint Eastwood, and some of them at least manage to get out of adolescence. Featuring Asia Argento (the director’s daughter, a relation that didn’t stand in the way of a nude shower scene), Cristiana Solimeno, Philippe Leroy, Udo Kier, and Daria Nicolodi (the star’s mother, playing her... mother on screen as well, with unecdoted baby photos for documentation). 2007.

 Pee-wee's Big Adventure — The moviegoer’s first introduction to Pee-wee Herman, and both of them should be very happy about it. Jerry Lewis would seem to be the comedian’s closest screen cousin, at least in measurement of time, but he even bypasses Lewis in likeness to their silent-era forebears, with his complete and unalterable stylization from head to toe (from glazed ceramic face, that is, to mimicking, toe-tering, girlish step). Included also in that stylized head, to be sure, are a fully operatic tongue and set of vocal cords, with an assortment of gargles and gargles left out of the repertoire of Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, and their Warner Brothers stalmates, and a speaking voice like a slightly older brother of Lily Tomlin’s Edith Ann. But enough of comparisons. In personality there has never been anyone quite like him. His continual rambunctiousness to stimuli in the world around him, and especially to self-generated stimuli whenever the world lets him have his way, must have bypassed Lewis in likeness to their silent-era forebears, with his complete and unaltered body at age seventy, re-presented by Steven Conrad, observantly and intently at it. There is no clear advantage on either side, some deviant jockeying for position on both sides, never an outright villainy, and thus, evenly divided sympathy. Sarah Jessica Parker and John C. Reilly are each almost as touching as they are funny — the pinched Cynthia Nixon — throughout their six seasons of looking for love. To be sure, there’s not much looking anymore, and yet not much relating, either: the men, now that they’ve been landed, are little more blunt and aggressive, if less potent and lingering. Inasmuch as the ghostly terrorizers are not actual ghosts, their ghost-like behavior raises the issue of their self-conscious mummy. Actual ghosts would be easier to believe, not to mention easier to stomach. 2008.

 Roman de Gare — Claude Lelouch, still very much his own man at age seventy, retains an authentic romanticism and optimism, undimmed by youthful realities. A fully rounded filmmaker, good with actors, locales, color, camera, movement, dialogue, the works, he is here shown off at about 300 degrees of his maximum circumference. Fundamentally a thriller, to do with the chance encounter of two strangers at a highway rest stop and the best-selling novel that results from the encounter, the film is more satisfyingly plotted than its norm (one of his habitual lazinesses), negotiating a course of tricky twists and turns without feeling forced or underdramed. Dominique Pinon, generally cast for his dentureless funny looks, is led to new dimensions of humanity as one of the strangers; and as the other, Audrey Dana, a fresh face if not an especially young one, quite an expressive and complicated face, it is a beautiful discovery. Fanny Ardant as the best-selling novelist, notwithstanding her assortment of wigs, is led to new dimensions of affectation, a lot more than accessories themselves. Temper; the temperature (preludial 911 call: “There’s blood everywhere!”); and the assault on the viewer’s memory (“I know”) as well as in the flashback structure (preludial 911 call: “There’s blood everywhere!”); and the assault on the viewer’s memory (“I know”), is more blatantly signalled in the debut of writer-director Bryan Bertino is a lowbrow (and low-brow) Funny Games, inspired by true events, centered on a romantically rocky young couple (so, don’t feel too bad for them, Liv Tyler, Scott Speedman: they were miserable already) terrified by grossly now-you-see-them-now-you-don’t masked intruders at an isolated summerhouse. The gran outcome, as compared to that of Funny Games, is more blatant and aggressive, if less potent and lingering. Inasmuch as the ghastly terrorists are not actual ghosts, their ghost-like behavior raises the issue of their self-conscious mummy. Actual ghosts would be easier to believe, not to mention easier to stomach. 2008.

 (HORTON PLAZA 1-4; PALM PRIMENADE 24)

 The Promoters — Consistently amusing comedy, once or twice hilarious, of two doofuses in competition for the manager’s post at the new Donaldson’s grocery store “The Leaders in Quality Foods.” The one certain point of hilarity: the “black apples” scene. You’ll know it when you’re laughing at it. (There is no dear advantage on either side, some deviant jockeying for position on both sides, never an outright villainy, and thus, evenly divided sympathy. Sarah William Scott and John C. Reilly are each almost as touching as they are funny — the pinched Cynthia Nixon — throughout their six seasons of looking for love. To be sure, there’s not much looking anymore, and yet not much relating, either: the men, now that they’ve been landed, are little more blunt and aggressive, if less potent and lingering.  Sex and the City — The big-screen re- presentation of the defunct HBO series (1998-2004) runs, or better say sades, two hours and twenty minutes. That’s a lot of clothes and accessories, a lot of accompanying pop songs, a lot of chirpy first-person narration, a lot of superficiality, a lot of vacancy. Maybe it would help if you had followed these four bosom buddies — the stringy Sarah Jessica Parker, the Amazonian Kim Cattrall, the pop-eyed Kristin Davis, the pinched Cynthia Nixon — throughout their six seasons of looking for love. To be sure, there’s not much looking anymore, and yet not much relating, either: the men, now that they’ve been landed, are little more than accessories themselves. Temperatures develop do occur: one of the buddies neglects to wax her pubes, one of them peels her pants, one of them parks on a spare bicycle tire, and the remaining one dyes her hair. Symptoms of bigger things, but even so. Maybe, on the other hand, it would be better to follow these buddies so further. Written and directed by Michael Patrick King. 2008.

 (CARMEL MOUNTAIN; FASHION VALLEY 18; MISSION VALLEY 20; SPAIN RANCH 12)

 Some Like It Hot — In the later stage of Billy Wilder’s career, there is an evident pull toward the romantic and euphoric Love in the Afternoon, Irma La Douce, Asanti), and there is an opposing pull toward the caustic and raucous (One Two Three, The Fortune Cookie, the Ray Wal- ston-CIF Osmund bits, particularly, in Kiss Me, Guido). This one belongs at the head of the second batch, for the impression made by Jack Lemmon and Tony Curtis in drag (among other things) is unapologetically deeper, stronger, and longer-lasting than the impression made, in spots, by Marilyn Mon- nroe. Curtis’s Cary Grant impression, when out of drag, isn’t bad, but why would some one be doing a Cary Grant impression in a 1920s setting? 1960.

The Reader Puzzle:

Rules of the Game:
1. Each and every week we're going to make a list of EVERYONE who submits the correct answers to the previous week's puzzle. And we're printing it, too! See the list of this week's contenders below.
2. Whenever you successfully complete a puzzle, we'll also print a brief list of EVERYONE who submitted a new answer. This is optional, but it's a great opportunity for you to show off your skills and support your friends and family.
3. One entry per person per week or whenever you successfully complete a puzzle, we'll also print a brief list of EVERYONE who submitted a new answer. This is optional, but it's a great opportunity for you to show off your skills and support your friends and family.
4. Whenever you successfully complete a puzzle, we'll also print a brief list of EVERYONE who submitted a new answer. This is optional, but it's a great opportunity for you to show off your skills and support your friends and family.
5. Whenever you successfully complete a puzzle, we'll also print a brief list of EVERYONE who submitted a new answer. This is optional, but it's a great opportunity for you to show off your skills and support your friends and family.

Reader T-shirts each week to complete a puzzle, we'll also print a brief list of EVERYONE who submitted a new answer. This is optional, but it's a great opportunity for you to show off your skills and support your friends and family.

Last week's place (Clue: Fountain of Justice!) Officer Ulysses Harvey stands beside the fountain in the forecourt of headquarters, 1404 Broadway, downtown San Diego. The original plan for the 1896 building was to create a stone memorial for officers who had died in the line of duty, but that would have been too heavy for the underground garage to support. (Last week’s winners: Kina Bassette, Daryl Griffis, Sue Franke, Rachelle Storti, Rachelle Storti, Barbra Nan)

The word that I’m using is “right-sized.” A lot of companies have been laying people off, you know, they’re using “right-sized” so that you feel that (being laid off) a good thing. The word just kind of cracks me up because they’re trying to make a pleasant spin on a negative thing, and I really wish they would “size” gas prices. I can just imagine a room full of people receiving their “right-size” notification and thinking they are going to do a corporate fitness program.

I was like this thing that spins. It went down like really loud music, and the guy went crazy. I’m not sure what it’s called. It’s by the water ride. Maybe it’s the Dragon something. I think it’s the Soundwave — that’s it. We just couldn’t stop laughing. I think I lost some weight on that thing.

I would have to say the ice cream at Pat’s. My favorite thing…if it was a food item, it’s called. It’s by the water ride. I think it was this thing that spins. It went it’s called. It’s by the water ride. I think it was this thing that spins. It went.

M ight be the Slingshot, but it was just $30. I rode it, I should throw the lemonade. I don’t know if I could pick a ride that I haven’t been over to the ride. And, a lot of things are always the same thing, just spinning and swinging all over the place.

It’s the company. I always come from. We have our ritual each year. We start by looking at the turkey legs. Then we look at the farm animals. We have the cinnamon buns. And all the fair cuisine. You can’t just pick one thing. With the fair, it’s the whole enchilada.

What was your favorite thing at the fair?

LEAD STORY

— Leading Economic Indicator: Rising prices of synthetic rock fertilizers and organic food. At Bass have intensified the collection of bird droppings on 20 climatically ideal islands off the coast of Peru where 12-inch-thick seaweed guano coats the land. In the 19th century, Spain fought Peru over the high seas for the right to mine the guano, which at that time was 150 feet high in places. Said an official of the Pan-American guano production (to a New York Times reporter in May), “Before there was oil, there was guano, so of course we fought wars over it.” The exception against this dry climate means that 12,000 to 15,000 tons of guano are available yearly. Least Competent Criminals

— Police in Mesa, Ariz., chased driver Christopher Pomer, 38, in May after his companion, Ashley Strohan, 20, allegedly tried to pass a forged check at a business. The pair’s car ran red lights at high speeds to get out of town, then left the road near the Salt River Reservation, and when the car became disabled, kept going on foot. However, they ran smack into a bed of cholla cactus. At Banner Desert Medical Center, a nurse placed the needles from his body, Pomer, in pain and in tears, said, “I am so stupid. This is what I get for trying to run from the police.”

Great Art!

— Austrian director Johann Krenskis’s reinterpretation of the classic Verdi opera A Masked Ball opened for a limited engagement in Berlin in April, aimed at America’s “war and the excesses of American society today,” he said. In one scene against a backdrop of the World Trade Center, 35 naked senior citizens danced, wearing Mickey Mouse masks.

Government in Action

— The Los Angeles Police Department announced April that it had investigated 320 complaints against its officers last year for alleged “racial profiling” and found that not a single one was valid. The Los Angeles Times reported that at least the sixth consecutive year that LAPD reported a perfect record on racial profiling. The Government Accountability Office revealed in April that more than 60,000 of the federal government’s contractors owe a total of about $7.7 billion in unpaid federal taxes, and that healthcare providers who take Medicare payments owe an additional $1 billion in late taxes. One unnamed company owes $10 million in owed taxes. The Pentagon did $1 million worth of business with it.

— The British government compensates soldiers the equivalent of about $15,000 if they lose a leg in battle. In March, though, the Defense Ministry paid out the equivalent of about $400,000 in disability to a civil servant who had injured his back while lifting a printer, and in May the Ministry paid out the equivalent of about $400,000 to an army paratrooper to settle a claim of “humiliating and demeaning” treatment. The soldier had undergone sex-change surgery, converting from “Ian” into “Jan,” yet was ordered by the army to report for a physical exam dressed as a man.

Update

— In March, “News of the Weird” reported the brazen behavior of two Boynton Beach, Fla., high school girls who not only swiped money from a Girl Scout selling cookies at a supermarket, but then told a TV station on camera that they were “pissed” because they got caught and had to give the money back. One of the girls, Stephanie Woods, 18, chose to go to trial on the theft charge in May but was quickly convicted and was to be sentenced in June. A week after the conviction, she allegedly pleaded no-contest to an intervening event in which she allegedly jumped off a $28 dinner tab at a Denny’s. She said she was sorry for the theft, but also said, “I still don’t think it gives [the public] the right to be screaming things at me” around town. “People scream things at me every single day, and it’s getting really hard.”

Dating after divorce has been a learning experience for me. Right away I mentioned, and eventually did meet a very nice guy; we had good interactions and we finally had a blast partying our way through downtown, but picking up a stranger in a bar has never seemed like a great idea to me, so I begged off and went home alone…as usual.

I have to believe that there is someone out there for everyone, so I held out hope that I would meet Mr. Right through friends. I couldn’t help but be intrigued when my girlfriend Sarah emailed me:

"Hey girl, I went out on a date last night with this great guy. He wasn’t my type, but I think he might be perfect for you. Want me to set you up?"

She and George had gone out to dinner, and then he had taken her to a bookstore and offered to buy her a book. I love books! I read the whole book, and the bookstore is one of my favorite places on earth. Sarah hasn’t read a book since high school. She told me that the whole time she was with him she kept thinking, Jennifer would really like this guy.

Sarah mentioned that George was a little heavier than she preferred, but I’m a little more open in this department than she is, so...

Dated: 2008-07-08

by KAREN DALEY  •  LEMON GROVE

There are women out there who seem to really understand how dating works. They meet guys everywhere and go out all the time. When you ask them what they did over the weekend, they say, “Oh, not much, I went shopping, got my nails done, had a couple of dates…A couple of dates? In one weekend!

My girlfriend Sarah is one of those women. She pines me to admit that I am not. Men don’t approach me — not in a bar, not at the grocery. It just doesn’t happen. I suppose I meet as many men as everyone else in the course of a day, but these days it takes me a while to warm up to a guy. I must give off that vibe. (If you knew my ex, you’d understand why.)
doubted it would be an issue. She gave him my number, and the next day George sent me a cute text message: “This is a completely random text from a total stranger, Sarah thought we might hit it off — do you mind if I call you?”

We texted back and forth throughout the day and hit it off immediately. George called me that night, and we talked for hours. We discovered that we had a lot in common and made a date for the upcoming weekend. We were really excited, and Sarah said that George thought I was adorable and that he was so glad she had introduced us. She told me to be sure to invite her to “the wedding.”

Did I mention that Sarah can be a little over the top? I love her as a friend, but I couldn’t imagine dating her. George agreed. He said he felt as if he had “dodged a bullet” when Sarah passed him off to me. He said he knew her type, and although she seemed like a nice girl, he was tired of “the drama.”

George and I were emailing every day and talking all night on the phone, sharing intimate secrets and planning dates. It was that great time in the beginning of a relationship when you are both so excited about the possibilities.

A week later, Sarah left me a voicemail saying, “Hey girl, we really need to talk. It’s about George. Call me.” I saw that George had also tried to call me. I called Sarah first, but she wasn’t available, so I called George. When I reached him, he swore that he didn’t know what Sarah was calling about, but when pressed he admitted that he was still “sprung” on Sarah and that he might want to give her another chance. He said he liked me too and still wanted to explore what we had.

Are you kidding me? One minute she thinks he’s fat and he thinks she’s a drama queen, the next thing I know I am smack dab in the middle of a Jerry Springer episode. He tells me that she pursued him; she tells me that he just wouldn’t leave her alone.

I didn’t want any part of it. I don’t know what became of their relationship, because I believe that when people show you they are, you need to believe them. I never spoke to either of them again.

On this journey of dating, I confess that I’m finding it difficult to be excited about what might come around the next bend.

Tell us the story of your breakup and/or date from hell and we will publish it and pay you ($100 for 500-2000 words).

One of the most fascinating aspects of interviewing Michael Copley is that despite his best efforts, there exist questions about his past which he has not thought of before, nor has he placed his childhood in adult perspective. Asked why his parents chose to adopt, he replied, “I don’t know. I’ve had to make my mother’s name.”

“Eaglebrook there were lots of kids with important parents, and the name Copley didn’t mean much to them. I went to school with Edel Ford’s son, and with Charlie Scripps from the Scripps newspapers, also Chris Harte, whose father owned newspapers in Texas. I finished out the ninth grade at Eaglebrook, but I hated around too much later at Andover. I wasn’t the type to work hard.”

Dear Matthew Alice:
I noticed that a package of Mr/Mrs I purchased recently claimed it was the official snack food of the 1984 Olympic Games. Come on now, does this really mean that Carl Lewis will be munching on these calorie bombs between long jumps?

Sally Ruffin La Jolla

Want to buy an official toothpick of the 1984 Olympic Games? How about an official shoebox? Sorry to disappoint you, Sally, but those choice items — actually sold at the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid — won’t be for sale next year in Los Angeles. Their absence is the result of an effort by the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee to decommercialize the event.

“In school, one’s parents, literature — everything tells you that beauty is only skin deep, and yet all of those people who are beautiful, you are beautiful. If you fail at something, you can always think, Well, at least I’m beautiful, and people appreciate that. And in the end, your beauty becomes insidious. I didn’t finish college. I went to UCSD. I can’t say that being lovely caused me to quit learning, but I am convinced that if I had been ugly, I would have felt pressure to develop myself intellectually.”

The San Diego Police Officers Association and the police department are back in court again. This time it’s about new police chief Jerry Sanders’ refusal to let a police officer charged in a shooting look at an Internal Affairs investigation package prior to a Shoot- ing Review Board hearing. Harry Eastus, the association’s president: “The word we got was that the [refusal] had come from Chief Sanders, but when I later had a personal conversation with him, he said he didn’t know anything about it.”

Afterward, among the congregation, there was much speaking in tongues. It sounded like this, “Shad-deed meshoeh dah sheshah rebah-bah-bah-bah,” and “Tee-mee siah-leh tab-bah may ree sah nah ree fee-lah.” (Two examples I tried to transcribe as best I could.)

When I walked into Chattanooga to do a story, they weren’t thrilled. It was a Saturday night. The club was packed. The music was loud, and the strippers weren’t too interested in talking. I came back on a Wednesday. Manager Barry Bogart said, “The Reader did a story on us a while back that wasn’t too positive. I don’t think we need another story about the club.”

I explained that this was a music story, and all we were concerned with were the tunes. He reluctantly let me talk to some of his dancers, patrons, and the DJ.

WHAT I WILL AND WON’T WATCH THIS WEEK

THURSDAY, JULY 3
DIFFERENT STROKES 6:15-9 a.m.

Driving drunk is fun. It’s dangerous, so you’re not supposed to do it on city streets, but you can’t beat ripping across a flat, dry lake bed with the ghetto blaster pumping out “Free Bird” from the passenger-side milk crate and a skull half full of vermouth in your lap.

SINGWOWN CBS 10:00 a.m.

I’m pretty sure that the reason I strike out with women is because I don’t have any karate-mushroom-shield-throwing knives. I’ve started to coax some in, until they grow, I’m going to stick on some of those little rubbery glue strips from the back of magazine subscription labels that I’ve dragged across the butt of my neighbor’s cat. (Well, hello ladies.)

FRI 4, JULY

U.S. OLYMPIC TRIALS

NCT 8:00 p.m.

The javelin looks pretty cool. I’d like to practice this event, although I don’t have room to do it on that lawn field. My javelin contest will take place on a crowded city street and bonus points are awarded for sailing one a whole block and punching into the roof of a schoolbus. “Hold your lunchboxes over your heads, you little SOBs!” I’ve had two bags of teddy bears and methyl morning!”

AMERICAS TEST KITCHEN FROM COOKS ILLUSTRATED
PBS 12:30 P.M.
National Hangover Day! Dig around the fridge for a charred, hot dog from yesterday. Put it on your black eye. Find the bottle of cheap, cheap zinfandel. Splash some on your armpits to contend with the stench, and then lie on the cool tile next to your toilet. Lucip. A lot.

SUNDAY, JULY 6
BIOLOGY, THE FABRIC OF LIFE
ITV 9:30 A.M.
Why are hearing aids the exact color of no one’s flesh but just close enough to be incredibly creepy? The only way to make them ickier would be to fashion them with stiff white hairs, moles, and maybe a baby tooth.

MONDAY, JULY 7
THE VIEW
ABC 10 A.M.
I’m pretty sure I have osteoporosis. I called my dad to tell him I was shrinking because of brittle bones. After he told me I’m an idiot, he said, “You don’t have osteoporosis. You’re a 32-year-old woman; it’s impossible. You’re not getting shorter.” But I’m not getting any taller either, and that’s how this sneaky disease starts, my friend. Oh, how it starts.

THURSDAY, JULY 10
FOX & NEWS IN THE MORNING
FOX 9:00 A.M.
If you saw me last week on news and noticed I bumbled through some of the segment, please bear in mind that my interview happened before I got any coffee into my face. Also, while I was talking, just off camera, a middle-aged man applied makeup to himself, and that’s the first time I’d ever seen that. Watch the interview and you can hear me go “Buh, huh, huh,” and see my eyebrow creep upward. Yeah, I’m a big star. Cool under pressure, baby.

I went back to my digs for my prescription of Dilaudid tablets and some underwear.

Thoughts on Independence Day: I have very little at the moment. Independence, I mean. I have plenty of thoughts. But I'm back in the hospital with an infected ankle incision, and I am dependent on nurses for almost everything — or confederates outside, almost none of whom will bring me tobacco. That is, if I smoke. Which I don't. And Nixon didn't have a list. I am dependent on crutches again and thought I'd seen an end to that a month ago. I'm thinking quite a bit about independence, probably because the lack of it shows up so well by contrast.

Among my thoughts on Independence Day, the holiday, is that ideally it would evolve away from beer-soaked trailer-park patriotism and become more a celebration of autonomy, resourcefulness, and distinctness, rather than conformity. (We can keep the fireworks. In fact, we should make them more accessible.) Take myself, for example, as a way of distinguishing myself.

When I told the emergency room I would have to be on IV antibiotics for five days at Mercy and surgery would be likely, I knew that the doses of Dilaudid and codeine's estimation of my anesthetic needs would be inadequate. I talked them into letting me return home for a couple of hours to "get my affairs in order so I should lose the leg." To which Dr. H. (a Machinurian, unless I miss my guess) responded, "Right. From kneed down Worth the scenario?" He seemed eager. I went back to my digs for my long-abandoned prescription of Dilaudid and some underwear.

A month earlier I had approached this stunt with caution after first taking two of them with dinner on a Friday night, only to wake up drooling in front of Saturday morning cartoons. I knew nothing about Dilaudid except an anecdote involving Lenny Bruce getting busted for the stuff in a hotel room. The cops had a warrant, saw a scattering of the pills on a night table, and asked Bruce what it was. He told them, "Aspirin." When they opened the night-table drawer and saw the syringe, one of them asked, "What's that for, Lenny?" To which the comedian answered, "I hate the taste of the stuff.

And so, secreted in a crush-proof box with a dwindling supply of cigarettes — which I had to smoke five dozen, across half a block of a hospital, in a kind of heaving dox/rock waste/smoking area, and for which I propelled myself via crutches — I was somewhat prepared for post-surgery and the changing and re-packing of the wound.

After the nurse administered two 15 mg morphine pills and departed, I swallowed 16 mg of the Dilaudid for a total dosage 46 mg of controlled substance narcotics that should thoroughly sedate a mature wildebeest.

I endured the post-surgery with the help of even more synthetic opiates via IV for a total of God-knows-what dosage. And 12 hours later, when the dressing had to be changed and re-packed, I repeated the Dilaudid-morphine collaboration. This enabled me to endure the ministrations of Nurse Dietrich with minimal grip whining.

Twelve hours later: shift change for nurses and time to change my dressing once again. Loren has relieved Dietrich, and when she enters with scissors, running, mumbled conversation with himself punctuated with the phrases, "Think of the transformation is complete. He has turned into a human rat. His gray mustache and sunken cheeks, his bed-head gray hair, his eyebrows burrowed in raccoon-like rings shifting a good 45 degrees out of long prison habit to take in any signs of guards approaching.

When they opened the night-table drawer and saw the syringe, one of them asked, "What's that for?" She came to my bedside a few minutes later, leaned over and whispered, "Do you really feel the need for alcohol?" My face must have looked much the way it did when I woke up in front of Pinky and the Brain on television that distant Saturday morning: slack-jawed and moronic. "Ah, no. No. Why would I? It was a joke… the movie…"

It turns out, the hospital actually gives alcohol to psychiatry patients, who, I suppose, might go into a seizure otherwise. I would have to get a look at my chart; someone had probably written Hopeless drunk. Watch him. He will suck the isopropl out of swamp pools.

I have little room to be indignant. After all, I've smuggled in enough drugs to drop a less-robust man. That isn't an indication of a tolerance nurtured up by modern medicine, I ask Loren, "You got any whiskey around here?" I'm sure the isopropl out of swam pools.
