Apartments are San Diego's first to go 100 percent solar, according to builders

Scripps Ranch — San Diego apartment and commercial office builder H.G. Fenton has partnered with Kyocera Solar to build the first “zero net energy” apartment complex in the Scripps Ranch neighborhood, says Kyocera in a release.

Solar modules provide 100 percent of the electricity required for Fenton's Solterra “EcoLuxury” Apartments, according to Kyocera, covering all common-area needs as well as those in the 114 residences on site via a 338-kilowatt solar system. Residents can access a smartphone app to monitor energy usage and control thermostats, among other features.

The units don't come cheap. One-bedroom units start at $1645 per month, and two-bedroom plans go to $2255 a month and beyond. That might not be a problem for residents of the 92131 ZIP code, however, who boast an average household income of $151,142.

Employer participation lagging in summer jobs program

Downtown — Mayor Bob Filner and city council president pro tem Sherri Lightner appeared yesterday afternoon (May 30) at a roundtable to drum up support for Connect2Careers, the city's teen summer-jobs program formerly known as Hire-A-Youth.

“We need you to help our young people,” Filner told a crowd of prospective employers gathered at the San Diego Concourse downtown. “It makes exceeding sense to have them placed in real learning opportunities.”

In November, the city, under the direction of then-mayor Jerry Sanders, allocated $200,000 to save the program from closing. This year, 377 applicants aged 16–21 had signed up to be vetted by specialists hired by the city before being sent out to interview for placement in paid internship programs. Out of over 1000 employers contacted, however, only 53 agreed to participate — and just 49 students have actually been placed through the program.

“We need to do more — much more,” Lightner said, repeating Filner's call for more business community involvement. She noted that other cities have much higher investments in student jobs programs, such as New York, which she said spends $40 million annually on a similar program.

“This is not right, this is wrong”

Man's cell phone footage is evidence in pedophile case

Vista — A 13-year-old boy who saw disturbing pictures on a man's cell phone secretly took the phone and brought it to his father.

The father said his son told him, “You got to see what's on this guy's phone.” The father said he looked at photos and videos on the phone and saw “weird stuff that really bothered me.”

The father, Charles Bryant, testified as a witness this morning in superior court.

Charged with 11 felony accounts of child abuse, 43-year-old Daniel Hood could face “116 years to life” in prison.

“I seen this guy Daniel,” Bryant told the jury. He said he has known 43-year-old Daniel Hood since they went to grade school together, and Hood was a guest at Bryant's home in Norco for a few days in January 2012.

The witness said he saw Hood on the phone “messing around with” a little girl. Because Bryant knew “this is not right, this is wrong,” he said he first tried to hand over the cell phone to local police in Riverside County. But the Corona police officer declined to pursue the matter, telling Bryant there were problems of jurisdiction. So Charles Bryant next contacted the FBI, who accepted the cell phone as evidence and began an investigation.

Hood is now on trial, charged with 11 felony counts of child abuse. He pleads not guilty to lewd acts with the 9-year-old daughter of his girlfriend, with whom he was living in Oceanside in 2011.

Prosecutor Keith Watanabe claims that Hood's cell phone contains multiple videos and still photos that the defendant took of himself while he abused the little girl. The alleged victim, now 11 years old, is expected to testify tomorrow.

The defendant could face 116 years to life in prison if convicted of all charges, according to prosecutor Watanabe.

Golf deep in the hole — San Diego no exception

By Don Bauder

Escondido Country Club has closed, and neighbors fret that real estate values will plummet. Join the — er, uh — club.

Similar woes have afflicted courses in San Diego and all over the world. Course owners have taken a financial beating, as former San Diegan Jeff Silverstein can attest. Employees have been laid off by the score.

San Diego County has more than 90 golf courses, according to the tourism authority, and seemingly perfect weather all year, but that's not enough. In recent years, Ramona's Mt. Woodson Golf Club has been foreclosed upon and sold to a new owner. Chula Vista's Salt Creek Golf Club was sold out of bankruptcy to a new operator. Rancho San Diego's Cottonwood Golf Club went into bankruptcy but is operating.

In Borrego Springs, one course is closed, another has been converted to a research facility, and a third has cut back from 36 holes to 18.

In anticipation of baby boomers retiring, golf courses got vastly overbuilt.

But baby boomers aren't retiring as fast as expected and may not have the attention spans required to play golf. According to National Golf Foundation statistics, there were 30 million golfers in the United States seven years ago. In 2011, there were 25.7 million. In that span, rounds of golf declined from 500 million to 463 million. Last year, there were 13.5 golf course openings and 154.5 closings.

Former San Diegan Jeff Silverstein's golf-management company has taken a beating as the golf market has receded.

The median sales price of a course last year was about $1.8 million, down sharply from $2.875 million in 2011. Meanwhile, the average price fell by around 45 percent from almost $4 million to $2.16 million, excluding posh courses going for $30 million or more. The number of sales above $3 million was only 27.2 percent of total sales, down from 47.8 percent in 2011.

No wonder golf course investors and their financiers are increasingly shouting the palindrome “Flog golf!” Indeed, one reason course sales have dried up is that primary lenders pulled out.

Former San Diegan Alan Fisher, consultant for golf expert Pellucid Corp., keeps track of inventory in pro shops — clubs, gloves, shoes, shirts, and the like. “I don’t see anything encouraging, although the weather this year has been pretty terrible. I’m not a naysayer, but the golf industry once had 30 million players, and it has lost 6 million. The best thing that could happen would be if 400 golf courses were plowed under. We’re way will be, ‘Will it bounce back up and at what velocity?’” says Harvey Silverman, who is also with Pellucid. The apparent housing recovery has stimulated developments on golf courses, “but only 25 percent of people buying homes on a golf course play golf. We closed 150 courses last year, but that leaves us about 8 percent Escondido Country Club, along with Mt. Woodson, Salt Creek, and Cottonwood golf courses are among the local courses that have fallen on hard financial times.

overbuilt.” Fisher points to demographics: younger generations are “more interested in instant gratification.” It takes an average golfer a minimum of four hours to play a round on a standard course. The game is difficult, cerebral, expensive, and frustrating. “You can play all your life and not be good.” These factors may not appeal to baby boomers headed into retirement.

“There is always a chance of [the industry] hitting bottom, but the real question overbuilt.” He fears this year’s late spring “could affect some courses sitting on the edge.”

Chris Karamitsos, cofounder of the National Golf & Resort Properties Group within Marcus & Millichap, says, “The transaction market [in golf courses] is not in the free fall it was [in] some years ago. I think we are going to hit some stabilization. But when a market is at the bottom, you never know until six months past the time.”

As golf-course prices spiraled downward, onetime

San Diegan Jeff Silverstein got a black eye, suffering deep financial reverses. He headed a limited liability company named IRI Golf Group that owned and managed courses. In 2010, 2011, and 2012, newspapers in Tucson and North Carolina, in particular, reported gross mismanagement at courses part owned by IRI. Three courses that IRI owned jointly with other investors went bankrupt. The city of Rockwall, Texas, acting on complaints about upkeep of a golf course there, filed a notification of instances of contract breach prior to the course’s bankruptcy.

Last year, the Arizona Daily Star reported that of four Tucson-area IRI-owned golf courses, two had closed because their water got shut off, a third had its water shut off because of $90,000 in unpaid bills, and employees at a fourth course complained they were not being paid. Other media latched on to the story, and Silverstein kept saying he was working to sell courses and restructure IRI’s debt. One water district’s president complained that his dealings with Silverstein had been “long and irksome.”

In North Carolina, employees of courses owned by IRI or Silverstein said they were not being paid. At several IRI courses, golfers complained of poor maintenance. Meanwhile, members expressed their beefs to Ripoffreport.com, which exposes alleged frauds. Among many things, writers complained of bunker drainage, dangerous cart paths, employees not being paid, and employees’ checks bouncing.

UNDER THE RADAR

Mixed martial politics

A politically wired San Diego State University figure in the news of late has been

Ricardo Lara, a Democratic California state senator. Two weeks ago, the SDSU alum was forced to cancel a $3000-a-head Memorial Day weekend fundraiser featuring mixed martial arts fights in Las Vegas after the Sacramento Bee revealed that would-be host, Station Casinos, is lobbying hard for a California tribal gambling operation. Lara denied anything was amiss. “To ensure there’s no perception of any conflict, I felt it necessary to cancel the event, effective immediately. There has never been — and there will never be — any connection between my outside fundraising and my legislative duties as an elected official.”

Lara was recently given the “Legislator of the Year” award by the California State Student Association. SDSU president Elliot Hirshman, widely known as the $400,000 man for his controversial starting salary, received the “Robert C. Maxson President of the Year Award.”

Out at SDSU, is Roush Moores-bound?

After three controversial decades, San Diego State University’s vice president of business and financial affairs Sally Roush is finally retiring from her $230,400-a-year job. Originally director of personnel services, Roush was promoted to her current position two decades ago. During the hands-off era of university president Stephen Weber, many academic insiders said she virtually ran the institution, parrying a bevy of sports scandals, buttering up the city’s wealthy male donors, and, as a final hurrah, presenting for the death of a grandiose plan by the board of the school’s non-profit foundation to build an on-campus shopping-and-entertainment mall. Back in the late 1990s, one of Roush’s major assignments was the care and feeding of John Moores, the mega-millionaire Padres owner who was using big gifts of stock in his then-high-flying Peregrine Systems to fund sports facilities at the university.

“It is my honor once again to thank you for your generosity to San Diego State University,” Roush wrote Moores and his then-wife Becky in a February 1999 letter obtained under the state’s public records act. “Your most recent gift of stock generated $7,437,877 upon sale.” She continued: “We at SDSU take very seriously our responsibility to be good stewards of the funds you have donated, and to do our best to utilize the funds in a way that supports our Athletic Department — and therefore the University — in a first-class way.”

“As you know, sometimes we have stretched our thinking and, heaven forbid, our administrative processes. But this is a good thing, and we enjoy the challenge of striving for new levels of accomplishment. Your gifts and gentle guidance have been tremendously motivating. As always, if you would like a briefing on project status, or any issue at the University, please do call on me.”

Three years later, Peregrine went bankrupt, and Matthew Gless, the firm’s former chief financial officer subsequently was sentenced to 63 months in federal prison in what had been revealed to be a case of massive fraud. Besieged by scandal, Moores demanded his name be stripped from university improvements that the stock sales had funded. “Look, take my name off stuff. I don’t want my name used in affiliation with the university if it’s going to be a lightning rod for controversy,” then- Padres vice chairman Bob Vizas quoted Moores as saying. The Padres owner ultimately escaped prosecution, State senator Ricardo Lara, reigning “Legislator of the Year,” thought it best to cancel his big Las Vegas night.

Outbound SDSU official Sally Roush justified her $230,400 annual salary by bringing in gargantuan donations, including a $7 million stock donation from John Moores.

Unbelievable

I'm calling about the story you guys printed on May 23 regarding the Labrador and his lover/owner (SD on the QT: "LGBTQIA-Z?"). That is so sick! I just can't believe you guys printed something like that.

Like Sherry

I read the May 23 Reader cover article written by Eva Knott about Sherry Chu Chang's murder ("She Gave Her Son an Ocean-View House, a New Lexus, and $130,000," May 23) and was moved to tears.

The author described my life for the last twelve years, supporting a grown son. Like Mrs. Chang, I have done everything humanly possible to "help" my son. Like Mrs. Chang, I have never given up on my son.

My son is now in his late thirties, surviving somehow on the streets. He gets in touch with me when he needs money; other than that, I don't hear from him for weeks. He has not worked in over five years and, just as Sherry Chang wrote to her son in an email, I feel as if he has ruined my life. I have been consumed with his life and his problems since forever.

When I hear from him, I think, finally, he means what he says. He's going to figure this out. I believe him when he says that he wants to shape up and find a job and get off drugs. I believe him when he tells me that it's not his fault: he doesn't know how his truck got broken into, he doesn't know how he lost his wallet, he doesn't know how he got ripped off. He doesn't know how he lost the money I gave him last week. He will pay me back, he promises, if I can help him out, just this once.

I know many parents say this, but my son seemed like such a smart child when he was growing up. How could a boy with so much potential end up like this? For years, I have blamed myself. For years, I have blamed anyone I could, desperate to find an answer. The answer is that there is no answer.

I have spent countless sleepless nights worrying. I wait for that call from the San Diego Police Department or the local sheriff's office. What has happened now? The ugly world of drugs has changed him. Like Sherry, I don't want Vandalized already?

New lifeguard statue gets a paint job

The San Diego lifeguard statue in Ocean Beach, dedicated in a ceremony last week (May 23), has been vandalized. Last night, May 30, someone painted portions of the statue in three different colors.

OBecians bristle over defacement of the new lifeguard memorial statue.

In a phone conversation with lifeguard lieutenant Nick Lerma, he stated, "I think this is so thoughtless and disrespectful to the 11 men that lost their lives here in 1918 when they all drowned. But I doubt the vandals gave any of that much thought at all."

Denny Knox of the Ocean Beach Mainstreet Association said, "I really hope this wasn't a local that did this. That is so sad to think about."

Knox had no details about the crime. She heard that Park and Recreation came out and cleaned what seems to be water-soluble paint off of the statue. The defacement of the statue is reminiscent of the periodic abuse experienced by the "Cardiff Kook," a statue erected in Encinitas in 2007. It has been repeatedly vandalized, but only in comical fashion, with clothes and other props that can be easily removed.

Jogger suffers heart attack Passer-by happened to be a nurse, gives CPR

A man suddenly fell to the ground, suffering from an apparent heart attack while jogging in Balboa Park on Wednesday, May 29.

A woman walking by with her husband turned out to be a registered nurse and quickly began administering CPR until the fire department and emergency medical technicians arrived.

When asked by this writer if the emergency personnel had taken the woman's information, she indicated they had not but thought they would once the man was loaded into the ambulance.

As it turned out, no one bothered, and as the ambulance and fire truck pulled away, the nurse's husband commented that it was "surprising how rude the fire department guys were to the pedestrians who had tried to assist the man."

Drive-in goes digital $2M renovation for South Bay theaters, projectionist fired

The South Bay Drive-In Theatres on Coronado Avenue in south San Diego recently updated its projection booths to digital. The digital conversion is being forced on all movie theaters by the major movie studios, which are expected to eliminate the production of movies on 35-millimeter film by the end of this year.

The South Bay Drive-In is owned by Los Angeles-based DeAnza Land and Leisure Corp., which is completing a conversion of 21 screens at the six drive-ins it owns at a cost of $2 million. The South Bay theater has three screens and operates a swap meet on the grounds on Wednesdays and every weekend.

The conversion of the South Bay theater meant closing for four days so the projection booths could be retrofitted with special glass windows, more vents, stronger air-conditioning, and an internet connection. The projectionist who ran the 35mm projectors was the first of several employees to be let go, according to theater employees who asked not to be identified.

Now a theater employee inserts a jump drive into a server the size of a refrigerator and then enters an encryption key to play the movie. The encryption key is sent via email after the movie arrives and is only good for the duration of the licensed showings for the theater. After that, the encryption keys no longer work.

John Vincent, president of United Drive-In Theater Owners Association, said in a recent interview posted online that the evolution to digital is a tough expense to take on for drive-ins, but the technology comes with a marked improvement in movie quality.

"We've heard this time and time again from the theaters that have converted, especially one that did it last year, that the feedback from the customers was great," Vincent said. "They really appreciated the brighter picture. No matter how good your setup was with film, it could only be so bright or you would melt the film."

The South Bay Drive-In Theatres, reflecting prices at drive-ins nationwide, charges $7 for adults and $1 for children ages 5 to 9. Younger children are admitted free. Customers get two movies for their ticket.

Council votes "yes" on development

New apartment complex: more traffic... but more tax revenue

After a nearly two-and-a-half-hour hearing, the La Mesa City Council on May 28 voted 4-1 on actions to allow the construction of a 198-unit apartment complex on an 8.64-acre site located at 7834 Parkway Drive. Councilwoman Ruth Sterling voted against the motion that upheld a planning commission approval of the Fairfield Residential project proposed for land north of Interstate 8.

The council vote also authorized actions that included a general plan amendment and zoning change for the site where a bowling alley was built in 1963. The facility, converted for use as Coleman College in 1981, has been vacant for six years.

Sterling called Fairfield a "good neighbor" in terms of existing properties. But she also acknowledged the testimony of project opponents, noting concerns about increased traffic, and told McCoy that the project was "so large." Before voting, she said, "I can't go against the public."

The hearing attracted more than 100 people. Mary England, La Mesa Chamber of Commerce president, mentioned the $500,000 in annual property tax the city would receive and the benefits of adding residents to the population. "They [renters] will live, dine, and eat in La Mesa," she said.

Opponents' objections included the prospect of increased traffic on the two-lane Parkway Drive and the effect of additional drivers on their streets. Residents said that drivers, including parents, already speed near Maryland Avenue Elementary School.

Cave rave!

Surfers and cops not pleased with the low-tide holiday party

On Memorial Day, May 27, at 8:30 a.m., San Diego police responded to a citizen's call at Sunset Cliffs Natural Park. Early morning surfers were surprised to find what looked to be the remains of a low-tide rave in a sea cave on the beach.

Boat Beats Camel

I'm on a boat!"

"I was wondering how long it would be before someone said that," David said with a sideways smile.

"Well, the answer is, 'Before we're even onboard,'" I said. I couldn't tell which of the two guys in front of us had called out the phrase, but they both seemed pretty happy about it. The moment I stepped from the dock to the aft of the Fantasea (the yacht my friend Jane chartered to celebrate her birthday), I couldn't help but pay homage to the Lonely Island tune myself. I hum-muttered the line, "never thought I'd be on a boat," despite the awareness at how tired the song was after four years.

We collected a cup of sparkling rosé from the deck's salon and then made our way to the top for the best view as the boat headed into the bay. I lifted my cup at David and took a sip. "This is so much better than renting a camel," I said as I stared off toward the horizon.

"Wonder what that guy's compensating for."

We followed our friend's gaze

to see another boat with the word Penetrator

scrawled in dark

blue cursive on the white stern.

I could tell from David's facial contortions that he didn't know what I was talking about. "Jane wanted to rent a camel and let people take rides on it in her backyard," I explained. "But then she found out camels have some kind of anxiety about steep slopes, and you know she lives on a canyon, so then she thought she'd get a donkey, but that just wouldn't be the same. When she told me she was also considering a boat party," I slapped David on the arm. "Of course I pushed for the boat."

"A camel? Really?" said

David. "A boat is way better than a camel. People would have to line up one at a time for a 30-second tour of Jane's backyard. And all camels really do is poop and spit. They're the ones that spit at you, right? Or are those llamas..." David sipped his drink as he trailed off in thought.

"Check it out," Shawn said, gesturing off the starboard side or the port side (I didn't bring my boat-ing glossary, and the thing was so long I'd forgotten which end was the front). "Wonder what that guy's compensating for." We followed our friend's gaze to see another boat with the word Penetrator scrawled in dark blue cursive on the white stern.

"Look at that one — they must be friends," David said, pointing out a small ship just a few slots over, on which the word Dominator was painted. After that, the monikers seemed to get a little more feminine. Lady Godiva III made me wonder what might have happened to I and II. I snapped a shot of Bella for my niece of the same name and then rolled my eyes at Grand Delusion, mostly because I had to say it aloud before I got the pun.

"Boat names are so cheesy," I said.

"Yeah? What would you name yours? You know," David caught himself, "if you had one."

"When I have one," I jokingly corrected him. Joking, because we both knew that if I had enough money to buy and maintain a boat, I'd probably spend it on an exotic pet. Like a cheetah or a fuzzy wombat. No, wait — wallaby. Yeah, I'd probably get a wallaby.

"Well? What would it be?" David waited while I tried to be clever. He waited for a while. And then he went to get another drink and returned to wait some more.

"I don't know," I finally answered.

"What about you?"

"I don't think I'm a traditional boat-name kind of guy," David said. "I mean, I probably wouldn't follow the usual 'rules' for boat-naming. You know, there's naming the boat after someone you love —"

"That could work: mine would be the David II," I said.

"I'm not sure how I feel about that.

There's only one David," David said.

"Anyway, there's also naming it after how much money you spent: like, some people call it Money Pit, or naming it after how you came by the money...you know, like Pick Seven. There's the references to escaping — Liberty, Hydrotherapy, stuff like that. And then, of course, the puns." David didn't have to give examples of these — we'd already seen a few, and I was familiar with many more: Aquaholic, Nauti Boy, Vitamin Sea.

The sun had gone down and a full moon had risen. A few wispy, dark clouds passed in front of it, as though illustrating a haiku poem. After dancing a bit, eating sushi (Jane and her husband Bill had arranged for Hive to set up a sushi bar on the yacht), and chatting with old and new friends, I found David on the bow, taking photos of the sparkling city lights reflected in the water.

"I refer to my car as 'the Barbmobil.'" I said, picking up where we'd left off.

David laughed. "You would call a boat the Barbmobil?"

"No...maybe Barb's Boat. I don't know... that sounds pretty bland. I like puns, but I like alliteration even more."

"Diva's Dilemma?"

"Dilemma? Too negative," I said.

"I just figured mine out." David wore a satisfied smile. "Tardis."

"It's a boat, not a time machine," I said in a pissy tone, mostly because I was upset for not coming up with it first. After all, we'd nicknamed our cube-shaped home the 'Pandorica,' another reference to Doctor Who, the show we're both geeky for. David even has a T-shirt that reads, "Not that kind of doctor." I have one with an image of the Tardis that reads, "Mad man with a box." And we fight over who gets to play with the sonic screwdriver.

"It's a vessel that travels through time and space," David said. "I believe a boat can do that."

"Well, shit," I grumbled as I gazed down at the water. "Now we have to get a boat." ■

Honoring the Fallen

Camp Pendleton Memorial Day celebration includes opening of monument to military suicides

Giant hole in the ground intended to signify "black pit of despair" that swallows over 6000 veterans each year

Camp Pendleton's Black Hole memorial

"Last year," says Camp Pendleton director of Memorial Day ceremonies Lawrence Kickbucket, "the number of United States military personnel who died from suicide exceeded the number who died in combat. Clearly, the time had come for some kind of memorial designed specifically for the poor souls who, even today, are dying at the rate of one every 18 hours....

"It's a tricky business," continued Kickbucket. "A lot of people feel uncomfortable honoring veterans who have done something that some people, including Fort Bliss commander Major General Dana Pittard, still consider to be a 'supremely self-ish act.' [Ed. - Pittard retracted his statement, but still.] After all, Memorial Day is supposed to be honoring those who acted selflessly for our country's sake. But it's hard to escape the fact that veterans are killing themselves at a much higher rate than the rest of the country, and it seems logical to conclude that their misery somehow stems from their service. We felt the Hole was a fitting memorial. It's not a proud edifice; rather, it's a significant wound — something that makes folks uncomfortable when they get close to its edge. That's sort of the point."

Hairy Situation

Boy Scouts of America: "Obviously, we're going to have to re-think the Bear scout badge."

"Especially since we're not allowing gay scout leaders."

San Diego Stays Classy

San Diego TV news program does non-story on sequel to film about San Diego TV news program that does non-stories

Has the singularity been achieved?

10 NEWS SAN DIEGO — Anchorman Bill Griffith began the May 24 non-story about Anchorman 2 by saying, "Right now, Will Ferrell and the cast of the Anchorman movie are filming part of the sequel at SeaWorld. Hundreds of San Diegans are taking part in the shoot as extras." Then he stopped reporting and started lying, saying, "And 10News has a look inside."

"Puts a smile on your face, doesn't it?" lied co-anchor Kaushal Patel in reply. Then she continued lying, saying, "A 10News reporter is live in Mission Bay with how the filming is affecting the park during the start of the busy Memorial Day weekend. Dana, I'm sure there's lots of looky-loos there," she lied again.

"Absolutely, Kaushal," lied Ms. Rice. "In fact, they have asked us to stay off the property. You can see we are behind the fence here at SeaWorld." She then had the cameras zoom in on a trailer, some semis, and "it looks like a tent with a check-in sign on top, possibly maybe for the extras."

Finally, she lied, "Obviously, a very interesting day for folks who were headed out to SeaWorld to kick off the Memorial Day weekend."

To recount: 10News did not have a look inside. The non-look inside did not put a smile on anyone's face. Ms. Rice did not report on how the filming was affecting the park. There were not a lot of looky-loos there. It was not obviously a very interesting day for folks who were headed out to SeaWorld.

Upon learning of the non-story's near-perfect lack of substance, Will Ferrell announced that the film would break from shooting for a week so that the cast could regroup and discuss whether local news parody was even possible.

Yoga = Satanism

Lawsuit seeks to save Encinitas schoolchildren from school-implemented worship of Baphomet disguised as healthful exercise

"I'm all for health and wellness," says concerned parent Pearl Clutter, "but I know for a fact that Eastern religions are just devil worship in disguise. Mind you, I'm not suggesting that Hindus know they're devil-worshippers. I'm sure they have good intentions. But you know what they say about the paving on the road to hell!"

Clutter has been moved to speak in response to the Encinitas Board of Indoctrination's recent decision to implement an Ashtanga yoga class into the school's physical education curriculum. Because yoga is just Satanism with good PR, some parents have sued the school to have the program removed, "if only to keep the schools consistent on the point of separation between church and state."

"I know some people don't believe what I say about yoga," continues Clutter. "But some people don't believe in global warming, either. Just because you don't believe it doesn't mean it isn't true. Let's consider the evidence. Every Ashtanga yoga routine is supposed to end with three concluding poses, one of which is called Padmasana. Just take a look."

STRAIGHT FROM THE HIP

BY MATTHEW ALICE

Heymatt:

How tall is the tallest building in San Diego? Is there a limit as to how high you can build in the county?

— Jeff, via email

There's an easy answer to the first part of your question. One America Plaza. It's exactly 500 feet tall. Why exactly 500? Because the Federal Aviation Administration began restricting building heights in downtown San Diego during the 1970s. With the airport right there, the FAA figured it would be a bad idea to raise Sears Tower-style buildings in the middle of the airport's flight path. If you're keen to die of boredom, point your web browser to faa.gov and find "150/5190-4A - A Model Zoning Ordinance to Limit Height of Objects Around Airports," which doesn't apply to San Diego in particular but does a good job of illustrating exactly how dull government documents can be.

The second part of your query is more contentious. Building-height restrictions often engender heated debate. The most impactful local rulings are the coastal height limits, which San Diegans passed as an initiative in 1972. In short, nobody can build higher than three stories west of the five. Exceptions are made for downtown and Little Italy. Maybe you remember my bit about story poles from a while back? Well, people don't like having their ocean views obstructed and the coastal height limits protect that from happening. The regulations have their enemies, but they've stood up to every legal challenge since their inception. Outside of the coastal zone, periodic battles over building height flare up and are settled. Developers face stiff resistance when they want to build above 60 feet, the fallout from which often leads to temporary moratoria on tall buildings in certain neighborhoods.

Heymatt:

When I was a kid (a long, long time ago), all the cars had a strap hanging down under the frame that dragged on the street. We called them "grounding straps." The story back then was that if the car got struck by lightning, the strap would ground the car and the occupants would be okay. I didn't think a strap would conduct electricity, but, what do I know? So, what's the real scoop?

— Paul

You can still buy a grounding strap for your car if you've got 20 bones and a few minutes to spare browsing Amazon. Normally, rubber straps are poor conductors, but the grounding versions are impregnated with a conductive material so free electrons can flow from car to earth with only nominal impedance. The manufacturers claim that static buildup in a car can lead to passenger fatigue and other nonspecific ailments, which sounds like a load of snake oil to me. Lightning isn't the real reason for the strap, either. During a lightning strike, a car's metal body acts as an impromptu Faraday cage, transmitting the electricity from the strike along the car's periphery because of a phenomenon called the "skin effect." The most useful aspect of the grounding strap would be that it neutralizes the vehicle's and passengers' electrical state so that nobody receives a nasty little shock upon disembarking. That same spark has been implicated in explosions and fires at gas stations, sometimes erroneously blamed on cell-phone use. I've never been hit by such a shock, but I've heard of it. We Alices are naturally good electrical circuits as it is. Great-uncle Marvin Alice was once hit by lightning on the Old Course at St. Andrew's during a stormy round of golf. To hear him tell it, he insisted on finishing his game (in which he shot a 69) before consenting to medical attention.

Heymatt:

Your answer about gender-specific bathrooms got me thinking about building codes. Since all these buildings have to be constructed with working restrooms, is it technically illegal for someone in a shop to tell me they don't have a bathroom?

— Holding It

Well, "We don't have a bathroom" is an oft-repeated load of utter crap. Building codes and federal labor laws both mandate bathrooms sufficient to the proposed occupant load. For customers, getting to use the bathrooms can be the tricky bit. Businesses don't want people using their bathrooms, so they make them "employee only." From a purely technical standpoint, customers are legally "occupants" of the building when they do business there and the bathrooms are theirs to use. But just try explaining the fine print of California building codes to an obstinate 7-Eleven clerk. Chances are you won't get far unless you happen to be a state building inspector and can quote the codes from a position of authority. Advocates for bathroom access, particularly people who suffer from inflammatory bowel diseases, are pushing for versions of "Ally's Law" in every state. Currently, a handful of states have passed legislation that obliges businesses to allow customers with a medical emergency access to the bathroom. Perhaps, in time, everybody will follow suit and those of us with less problematic colons will gain the right to use bathrooms with impunity as well.

Street Style

BY SIOBHAN BRAUN

Ombres and Mermaid Hair

Every summer, my daughter's hair turns green. No matter how much I spend on chlorine-fighting shampoo or how religiously I rinse her white-blond tresses after swimming, it develops an aqua tint. I worry that the kids at her school will tease her over it. So far, the opposite has happened.

HARLEY MOORE (top) & MICHELLE DOMINGUEZ (bottom)

JESIKA GONZALEZ

Last year when she returned to school from summer break with sea-foam highlights, the girls in her class wanted "mermaid hair," too. I think their requests have everything to do with the latest rainbow ombre trend.

Eighteen-year-old Harley Moore has been dyeing her hair since she was 15. She says she gets a wide array of reactions — mostly from older people and children.

"Elderly people always want to know what my parents think about my hair. Little kids love it and ask their parents if they can do the same thing to their hair," Moore told me with a laugh.

I found 18-year-old Michelle Dominguez on the Orange Line, headed downtown. Dominguez was a hair-dyeing virgin until a week ago. Her aunt is in beauty school and needed to test her new skills out on a brave soul. Dominguez obliged and went for a drastic ombre.

"People say they love it. I wasn't expecting to get so many comments on it," Dominguez said.

Twenty-six-year-old Jesika Gonzalez surpassed the ombre for a full head of violet mermaid hair. It is so muted that it is nearly gray. Gonzalez wore a floral jumpsuit that gave her a modern Three's Company vibe. ■

TITLE: Reportero Numero Uno | ADDRESS: reporteronumerouno.blogspot.com
AUTHOR: Matt Phillips | FROM: March 2012 | BLOGGING SINCE: University Heights

POST TITLE: Of nostalgia for a city
POST DATE: Friday, May 24, 2013

As a personal rule, I don't believe in nostalgia. It's too imperfect an emotion. Not quite memory as elegy, nostalgia is too rooted in the heartsick blues and the random chance that is sorrow. I've avoided it most of my adult life.

I made an exception for San Diego, though.

When I left San Diego, just two days before Christmas in 2008, the city had beaten me down. I was unemployed and broke. I'd spent weeks wandering the North Park streets, wondering how I'd pay the rent.

That night, when I left the city, my best friend picked me up in his minivan. We drove down Kansas Street and made a right on University Avenue. Somehow, the city seemed more visible than usual. It was a little model of human life: the soft-glow light from the North Park sign illuminated drifters on their endless city patrol, whirring bicycle tires weaved through traffic, and the accordion-like seven line bus stopped and started in front of us. I remember thinking that I wasn't finished here, in San Diego. This is my city, I thought. I know these streets. I know the bus routes and the shortcuts. I know all the happy-hour specials and I know where to park on holidays.

Eventually, we caught the 163 north to the 15, and we were gone. Two questions pulled at me, though: Did San Diego give up on you? Or did you give up on San Diego?

II

This May, I found myself hurtling like a bullet across Texas in my red '94 Volvo, headed for — you guessed it — San Diego.

I'd left Durham, N.C., with a journalism degree and I felt confident, free, even strong. But then a weight settled over me. I started to think about that winter in 2008...when I was a penniless, hopeless 20-something banished from San Diego by circumstance and hard luck.

What had gone wrong? And how could I avoid the same result this time?

I don't have a definite answer to either of those questions, but I think, somehow, the answers have to do with personal evolution.

The kid I was, back then, seems so small and narrow in worldview compared to the man I am now. I'm no Renaissance man or anything, but I understand what it means to contribute to my community, my city, and the world. Back then, I thought it was all about what the city could provide for me. I acted like San Diego owed me a living, like I deserved happiness just because I'd chosen to live here. That's poor logic, and it isn't useful.

My own decisions led to my leaving San Diego in the first place. I quit a good job because I was stubborn. I was hired somewhere else — at a respected restaurant — and I disrespected the owner. He was making a contribution to his city, and I wasn't. I didn't deserve to be here, in this city. I deserved to be banished.

But, somehow, through a weird combination of hard work and dumb luck, I made my way west...to San Diego.

III

Maybe nostalgia isn't so bad. It works like an emotional magnet that pulls our hearts back toward things we loved and, maybe, things we still love. Nostalgia is our own personal compass needle "North."

This week, I was headed back from Coronado with some old friends. We'd spent the afternoon on the beach. As we drove over the Coronado bridge I looked out over the city. San Diego was an organism under the sun, a humming city of mohawks and ink-etched skin, of sleek, black BMWs and rumbling city buses, of hulking cruise ships and drab Navy destroyers, of fixed-gear beater bikes and gleaming weekend-warrior road bikes, of café racers and roaring Harleys, of double-hopped IPAs and creative cocktails, of beach bums and bartenders, of farmers' markets and urban gardens, of playful mutts chasing frisbees, of murmuring seas rolling back and forth across golden sands, of gawking tourists and irritated locals.

As we reached the bridge's zenith, I had a realization: San Diego was everything I've thought about during the past four years with that sharp, unwieldy human obligation that is nostalgia.

I'd spent weeks wandering the North Park streets, wondering how I'd pay the rent.

It Ain't Easy

"WPBL Arena" — it's a television studio, plain and simple

Creating a professional sports league is work best kept in the backroom. Pro leagues start out like a Midway carnival barker, "Step right up, ladies and gents, see Lobster Boy in his tank!" As you may recall, the august National Football League was founded in a Canton, Ohio, Hupmobile showroom.

The road establishing a sports league is paved with wannabes. Baseball: Players League, Atlantic League, Federal League, Blue Ridge League, Continental League, United League, Western Baseball League. Football: All-American Football League, American Football League, Continental Football League, Indoor Football League, United States Football League, World Football League, XFL, and UFL. Hockey: World Hockey Association, International Hockey League, Pacific Coast Hockey Association.

The above is prelude to introducing you to the World Professional Billiard League. The WPBL was originally launched last year. Well, originally it was launched three years ago in Winnipeg, Republic of Canada, but that's another story. In this story, the WPBL was supposed to start operating last fall. Regard their press release: "INAUGURAL WORLD PROFESSIONAL BILLIARD LEAGUE (WPBL) SEASON STARTS NOVEMBER 8, 2012: ...multi-city 132 match professional league...with teams in 12 cities across the USA and Canada, and 36 of the world's top pool players..."

January 21, 2013, press release: "WPBL DUPED BY LAS VEGAS CONTRACTOR ...league has experienced several setbacks arising from construction delays and the acquisition of city permits.... Due to fraud and numerous illegal activities, the construction crew has now been fired.... Lies were told, fraud was committed, and tens of thousands of dollars were paid for permits that were not acquired.... We are confident that upon launch, the WPBL will exceed all expectations and will be a positive step forward for the billiards industry as a whole."

March 29, 2013. "CONSTRUCTION RESUMES ON WPBL ARENA. After a three-month delay, construction resumed earlier this week at the WPBL Arena in Las Vegas, NV..."

The WPBL is made up of 12 teams, three players and one alternate per team. Teams represent Atlanta, Las Vegas, Miami, Los Angeles, Houston, Phoenix, Pittsburgh, New York, Toronto, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Boston. Since all games are played in Las Vegas, one wonders if players have any connection with the cities they represent? Hey, why not field the Cayman Islands Offshore Bank Accounts as the league's first expansion franchise?

WPBL says there will be 156 matches over the course of a 26-week season. The league says there will be $1,000,000 in prize money, although I don't know where the million came from or where it is now. League says 36, 48, now 60 of the world's top players are signed. The league has adopted Bonus Ball as their game. The object of Bonus Ball is to make shooting pool television-compatible. Teams, shot clock, points, manufactured excitement. All games will be played in the "...new 13,000 sq. ft. WPBL Arena in Las Vegas..."

Well, 13,000 square feet seems like a lot until you think of it as a rectangle 114 feet by 114 feet. The WPBL has posted pictures of their arena on its website. Nice-looking space, very purple and gray, plush seats for 100 people or so, but the arena is a television studio, plain and simple. Makes sense, play all league games in a television studio located in an office park one block south of McCarran International Airport.

"WPBL LAUNCHES MAY 30th. The World Professional Billiard League will launch the inaugural 2013 season Thursday, May 30th, at 7 p.m. PT.... Each of the 156 matches will be broadcast live at WPBLtv.com in HD. The first match of each week, broadcast every Thursday at 7 p.m. PT, will be aired FREE."

You, dear reader, can be a part of the action. For only $9.95 per week, or $169.95 for the entire regular season, you can enjoy LIVE PPV matches in your habitat.

"WPBL DEBUT MATCH, May 31, 2013. Technical difficulties interrupted the live stream when the server became overloaded with fans trying to view the match. All issues have been rectified and tonight's match will be broadcast as scheduled at 6 p.m. PT. As a show of gratitude to our fans for their support, we are offering the remainder of this weekend's matches for free."

"WPBL STOPS FIRST WEEK-END LIVESTREAM, June 1, 2013. The World Professional Billiard League's live on-site production has been a success. However, our live stream has been met with various difficulties beyond our control. As a result, the WPBL staff has concluded not to air additional matches this weekend."

Found on the "Contact Us" WPBL web page: "Our phone line is currently not in service, but will be later this week."

—EVE KELLY

Once you've gone under the knife, your thoughts of the sun change.

Last year, I lost a chunk of eyelid. Basal cell carcinoma. They didn't get all of it the first time, so I had to do it all over again. A month of eyelid stitches later, I became a creature of the shade.

"A classic spot to get skin cancer is the area around the eyes," said my dermatologist. "People will put on sunscreen, but they never get it to the very tip of the eyelid; they are concerned about keeping the sunscreen out of the eyes. And the skin around the eyes is thin."

Sunglasses are an accessory I don't leave home without. And I've been on a search for a non-greasy sunscreen with a high sun-protection factor, or SPF, as it's called.

"I work all the counters, so I have tried all the different types," said a cosmetics customer-service lady at Macy's. "I have sensitive, white skin," she laughed. "My favorite is the Clinique Sun SPF 50 Face Cream [$21]. If you're going to wear sunscreen, make it good, go for the high SPF. This stuff doesn't make you look like a glowing, shiny alien," she added.

"I've been using Lancôme Bienfait Multi-Vital SPF 30 for about 15 years," explained Nona ($45 for 1.7 ounces at Sephora). "I also just got the Coola from Birchbox last month. The best way to spend $10 per month [Mineral Sunscreen SPF 35 Citrus Mimosa, $36 for 3 ounces at coolasuncare.com]." Birchbox delivers beauty samples to your door for a monthly fee (birchbox.com).

"Our family likes the Alba Botanica brand," offered Katie ($10.99 for 4 ounces of Natural Kids Very Emollient Sunscreen SPF 30 at Sprouts). "It's important to us that we use products that have the fewest harmful chemicals as possible. In addition to it being paraben-free, it has a wonderful, light scent with a non-greasy finish. The regular kids' SPF 45 has provided great protection over the years, including water use. We used to also buy the specific water-resistant sunscreen but it was more greasy, and we came to realize that their regular sunscreen is also water-resistant for 80 minutes, so we stopped buying the swim version."

"Neutrogena Ultra Sheer Dry Touch!" answered Lorraine. "It has SPF 45 and it makes

"A classic spot to get skin cancer is the area around the eyes."

your face really soft and leaves no residue [$7.97 for 3 ounces at Walmart]."

"Neutrogena Ultra Sheer Dry Touch," agreed Bernice. "This is the only one where the kids don't complain when I put it on their faces. It's very fast absorbing and waterproof, and it really does have a weightless, clean feel so you don't feel like you are wearing sunscreen."

Tracy recommended Murad Essential-C Moisture Broad Spectrum SPF 30 ($60 for 1.7 ounces at murad.com). "I second the Murad Essential-C," concurred Aneta. "I have tried many and that one works, and it reduces my freckles that I have had for years. Go figure."

"Check out Paula's Choice," suggested Anna. "It's one of my favorite lines and is also well priced. I've been pretty satisfied with the results [Paula's Choice Extra Care Non-greasy SPF 50 is $14.95 for 5 ounces at paulaschoice.com]."

"Unbeknownst to many people, most sunblocks are chemical ones," said Christine. "My mom put us onto it years ago to look for natural ones, particularly zinc oxide or titanium dioxide. These are the active ingredients in the ones I use. MD Solar Sciences has chemical-free creme sunscreen [SPF 50 Broad Spectrum UVA-UVB is $30 for 1.7 ounces at md-solarsciences.com]. I order it online. I also use Neutrogena Pure & Free Baby 60 SPF, but it's a little greasy [$9 for 3 ounces at Target]."

"I don't wear sunscreen often," admitted Molly, "so I don't want to spend a lot on a bottle that is likely to expire long before I use it up. The reasonably priced Eucerin Everyday Protection Face Lotion SPF 30 I've been using hasn't seemed greasy to me [$9.99 for 4 ounces at Walgreens]."

And, finally, "Aveeno Natural Protection Lotion Sunscreen SPR 50," suggested my friend Jill ($10.99 for 3 ounces at aveeno.com).

Can you find the big secret in this casino?

The Pala Indian reservation sits 40 miles northeast of San Diego, on 12,333 acres in the middle of the San Luis Rey River Valley. If you approach from along Highway 76, a winding, two-lane road that takes you through Palomar Mountain's foothills, the first landmark you see is the Pala Casino. It's a Las Vegas-style casino and hotel, and it looks garish among the modest tribal-member-owned ranch-style homes and rundown businesses. The casino boasts over 2000 slot and video machines, 87 table games, a 9-table poker room, and a 507-room hotel. It opened its doors on April 13, 2001.

If, instead of entering the casino's parking garage, you make a left onto Pala Mission Road, you wind up in the heart of the reservation. Remnants of the tribe's past are evident along this main drag. A scruffy mutt with matted white fur roams the graveled lot in front of a rundown fruit-and-vegetable stand. Next door is a small, paint-chipped Mexican restaurant and hamburger joint.

"People have a hard time feeling sorry for us, because they say all we care about is the money. But our heritage is being ripped away."

Double-wide trailers house a beauty salon and a tattoo parlor. A few blocks farther and you come to the Mission San Antonio de Pala. A white picket fence surrounds a cemetery overrun with wildflowers. Wooden headstones tilt over the graves, etched with old tribal family names. The mission opened June 13, 1816, and it is the last California mission still in operation. Across the street sits the Pala General Store, established in 1867. Tribal elders sit on a weathered bench out in front and watch the comings and goings.

Another half-mile down Mission Road, the gaming wealth becomes evident. A sports complex and the tribe's brand-new administration building, professionally landscaped, sit side by side.

The casino opened after California voters passed Proposition 1A, in March 2000, approving Indian gaming on reservation lands. Since Indian tribes are sovereign, the Pala Band of Mission Indians does not publicly disclose their profits, but the Pala Casino is clearly profitable. Each of its 800 or so members over the age of 18 receives an estimated $13,000 (before taxes, insurance, utilities, and other benefits) in casino earnings per month.

In the late '90s, when the idea of a casino was first considered, members viewed it as a source of security for their financially struggling tribe. Back then, the reservation had few opportunities for employment, and many members moved off the reservation to make better lives for themselves. But a small minority wanted nothing to do with the casino, viewing it as an invitation to trouble. They wanted to keep things as they were and not let outsiders in.

"The casino was supposed to be a good thing for our people," Paul Johnson, a former member of the Pala Band of Mission Indians, explains. "Unfortunately, a small group of people have turned it from something that was supposed to uplift our tribe and used it for their own personal gain."

On June 1, 2011, eight tribal members were disenrolled by the band's executive committee, a six-person elected governing body that rules the tribe. A year later, 154 more members were taken off the roll, losing their per capita, health benefits, and housing. In early 2013, two more were cut; these last members are children.

The cited cause of tribal disenrollment is a blood-purity dispute. All 164 disenrolled members are relatives of the late Margarita Brittain, a woman whose lineage has long been questioned by tribal members. The Pala Band of Mission Indians' tribal constitution states that in order to be a member, $\frac{1}{16}$

Pala blood is necessary.

The disenrolled give various reasons for their removal; none have anything to do with blood quantum. Among the alleged motivations are greed, power struggles, and old family feuds. But there is one notion all 164 agree on: if the casino had never opened, they would still belong to their tribe.

At the center of the scandal are two men: Robert Smith, current tribal chairman; and King Freeman, the previous chairman.

It's a Wednesday afternoon when I pull my truck into the parking lot of the Pala store. The structure has a Wild West feel. A rusted vintage sign features a Coca-Cola label and advertises "Levi's, Genuine Indian Jewelry, and Curios." A larger sign reads "Pala Store established in 1897."

The shop is bustling. Outside, two old men — one with long white hair, the other wearing clunky prescription glasses — sit on a bench. Inside, women chit-chat in the aisles. A group of elders shares a table near the store's café.

King Freeman stands behind the counter. He greets me with a nod.

The Pala store has been in Freeman's family for three generations — his grandfather was the original owner. Freeman leads me through the store and toward the back room, stopping to scold two young women who stand in front of the coolers. "Stop your gossiping," he says with a wink, and the women smile.

Freeman carries himself with importance. When he speaks, his voice is so soft I am forced to lean in to hear him. This soft tone gives his words additional weight.

Margarita Brittain was King Freeman's great-grandmother and a respected tribal elder. Brittain arrived on the Pala reservation in 1903 when she was six or seven years old; her people, the Cupeños, had been forced from their village at Warner Springs and were relocated to the Pala reservation to live with the Luiseño tribe. In 1913, the two tribes merged to make the Pala Band of Mission Indians. In order for individual Cupeños to become members and receive parcels of land, 1/8 Cupeño Indian blood was required. In the 1960s, that was changed to a requirement of 1/16 Luiseño or Cupeño blood.

On the official 1913 Pala enrollment documents, Margarita Brittain is listed as a full-blood Cupeño Indian. In the 1970s, however, it was discovered that someone had gone into the document, circled Brittain's blood degree, and in ink changed her blood quantum to 1/2 and her children's to 1/4. Her descendants speculate that the change was made out of spite, because Margarita Brittain had married a white man and taken his name.

In 1984, the Palas voted to correct the mistake, and the decision was appealed to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The bureau investigated Margarita Brittain's blood degree for more than six years. Eventually they found that Margarita Brittain had appeared as 1/4 on the original 1913 roll in Washington, DC. In 1989, the bureau issued their final determination that Margarita Brittain was 1/4. Now, 22 years later, Brittain's blood is again being called into question.

King Freeman's childhood home sits on family land located on the corner of Old Mission Boulevard and Brittain Lane, a street named for his ancestors. The house is a run-down one-story home located a half block from the Pala store. The front door boasts a mausoleum-style entrance, carved with the name "Freeman" in bold capital letters visible from the road.

The 164 disenrolled members of the Pala tribe are all descendants of the late Margarita Brittain, whose blood purity was called into question.

"My sister and I were born in that house," Freeman says. "I don't have a birth certificate. I was born at home, and no one recorded it. The only thing recorded is my baptism."

King says the reservation was very different during his childhood. "I was born in 1935. We didn't have much here, growing up. I guess there was a lot of poverty, but we didn't realize. We had food and clothes. We weren't street people. Everyone had money. Not a lot, just enough to live on."

Freeman's children were among the first eight tribal members disenrolled. "It was kind of a shock. There were rumors it was coming. Chairman Smith threatened me at a general council meeting. He said to me, 'Your kids are coming off the roll.' I didn't think he would really do it. I said, 'Well, go ahead and do it,' because there would be a lot of other people that would have to come off the roll, too. I wasn't talking about my family; I was talking about other people whose blood degree is less."

Smith's alleged threat occurred after Freeman had circulated a petition questioning the fitness of Leroy Miranda to serve as vice chairman of the executive committee. King

Freeman had been elected to fill that role, but Chairman Smith allegedly threw out many of Freeman's votes, claiming that they didn't count, and Leroy Miranda was put in as vice chairman.

The Pala tribal constitution states that no one with a felony record may serve on the executive committee. Miranda has a felony stemming from an arrest in 2009 for soliciting a male prostitute at Happy Time Adult Book Store in Moreno Valley.

Freeman says that his blood degree wasn't questioned "until three or four of us brought up the issue of getting Leroy removed. I was chairman for 19 years. I don't like the way meetings are conducted anymore, and I am very verbal about that."

A few months after Freeman's petition circulated, the executive committee sent letters to Freeman's children and his nieces and nephews. The letter stated that the eight did not have the sufficient blood degree and were no longer members of the tribe. Cited was the long-questioned blood quantum of Margarita Brittain. The disenrolled members were given 30 days to file an appeal with the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In the end, the bureau recommended that the Pala Executive Committee reenroll the eight, stating that they did in fact possess the necessary blood degree. The executive committee refused.

Although many of the disenrolled point to Freeman's petition aimed at removing Miranda from the executive committee as the final straw that led to the disenrollments, none seem to hold a grudge against Freeman. When they speak of him, their fondness is evident. Meanwhile, Freeman stands firm on his actions. "I don't regret doing it. I'm not going to bow down to anyone. Would you want a man that went to jail for [soliciting] male prostitution representing you?"

Freeman is concerned about the changes he's seen in his tribe. "People don't understand how much power Robert Smith has. He is going to tear this tribe apart. But the young people don't care. As long as they have money, they don't care about the politics or nothing. It has changed. When I was growing up, you respected the old people. That has been lost, but that's a fact of life. Money ruins a lot of people. Once you get money, all you think about is yourself. It's kind of like a dictatorship. I never expected this to happen. Looking back, I can see the little changes that took place to get our tribe to where it is now."

The changes Freeman alludes to involve the executive committee's subtle revision to the tribe's constitution prior to removing members.

The committee created a new enrollment ordinance giving them sole power over tribal membership. Further approval by the Secretary of the Interior is no longer necessary to add or remove members. The general council (all tribal members over 18) was assured that this change in the constitution would make it easier for their children to become tribal members.

Along with the new enrollment ordinance, the executive committee withdrew its membership from the intertribal courts of Southern California. This action took place in March 2011, only three months prior to the first wave of disenrollments. The action gave disenrolled members no legal recourse — intertribal courts would have provided the parties with access to court hearings and appeals, and records would have been available to the public. Now, in order for the disenrolled to take legal action against the executive committee, they must appeal to U.S. courts, a difficult task, given that Indian nations are sovereign, and U.S. courts have no jurisdiction over them.

"It's a sad little thing," says Freeman. "[The casino] was a source of income. We had people coming back to the reservation. I was vice chairman when the casino was being built. I wasn't expecting it to get so big.

"When I saw the blueprints for the casino, I thought, Who is going to come to the Pala Reservation to go to a casino?"

When I saw the blueprints for the casino, I thought, Who is going to come to the Pala reservation to go to a casino?"

When Freeman's children were disenrolled he felt betrayed. His son and daughter were devastated.

"Their health insurance and their money, that all went away. But that really isn't the big issue. The big issue is that their rights were taken. My kids were born here on the reservation."

On the reservation there is division between Britain's descendants and the executive committee and its supporters.

"Anger doesn't solve anything," Freeman says. "I forgive what [the executive committee] has done, but at the same time, I hope they are held accountable. I see these people and I say hello to them. Robert will walk by me and not say anything."

* * *

When it comes to the disenrollments, Robert Smith says that everyone blames him.

"I'm used to it," Smith tells me over the phone; he is too busy for a face-to-face meeting. "I've been in politics for a long time, but it can be disheartening. Some people see me and won't say hi to me,"

Smith's tone changes when asked about King Freeman. "There is no feud between King and me," he bristles. "He's an old guy. We don't see eye to eye. You can't please everyone all the time."

When asked about the casino, however, his voice brightens. He rattles off the benefits it provides to the Pala Band of Mission Indians. "Because of the casino, we now have scholarship programs so

BIPOLAR DISORDER CLINICAL TRIAL

Researchers at Sharp Mesa Vista Hospital are enrolling men and women for a clinical trial. Individuals who have been diagnosed with bipolar disorder and are currently experiencing a manic episode may qualify.

Eligible participants will receive all study-related care at no cost, and may be reimbursed for time and travel.

Participation is confidential and trials are safely conducted under the supervision of experienced physicians and research specialists.

DEPRESSED?

A clinical research study is underway to evaluate an investigational drug for depression.

To qualify for the study you must be:

- 18 – 65 years of age
- Feeling depression for at least 4 weeks

Qualified participants will receive all study-related evaluations and study medication at no cost.

Compensation may be available for those who qualify.

Are you taking prescription pain medication for moderate to severe CHRONIC LOW BACK PAIN?

Do you also have constipation?

We are conducting a clinical research study that is looking at whether an investigational medication is suitable in treating both moderate to severe chronic low back pain and constipation.

You may be able to participate if you:

- are 18 years of age or older
- are taking prescription pain medication for moderate to severe low back pain
- have ever experienced symptoms of constipation from your pain medication.

If you decide to join this study, you will be asked to stop taking your current opioid medication. Instead, you will receive the investigational medication, a currently available medication or placebo (which looks the same as the investigational medication but contains no actual medication). You will have a one in three chance of receiving the investigational medication. You will be asked to take the medication twice a day. You will also need to complete a Patient Study Diary every day with information about your bowel movements, pain levels, and use of medications.

Your participation in this study will last for approximately 5 months and will require at least nine visits to the study center so that the study doctors and nurses can monitor your health.

Is your child aged 13 – 17 diagnosed with

ADHD?

You may be eligible to participate in a research study of an investigational medication. Symptoms of ADHD include difficulty remembering information, difficulty concentrating, trouble organizing or completing tasks and procrastination.

Qualified participants may receive study-related psychological evaluation(s) and may also receive compensation for time and travel.

DO YOU HAVE TYPE 2 DIABETES?

Consider Volunteering For a Clinical Research Study

You may qualify if you:

- Are at least 18 years of age
- Have lived with type 2 diabetes for at least 6 months
- Currently on Metformin 1500mg/day or more

Currently On Treatment For BIPOLAR I DISORDER?

If you're being treated for bipolar I disorder and still feeling depressed, you may qualify to take part in a clinical research study. If enrolled, you will receive:

- Investigational medicine
- Study-related care from a local doctor
- Compensation may be available for your time and travel

To qualify you must: Be 18 – 75 years old
Take medication for Bipolar I disorder

Compensation and transportation may be available for those who qualify. Health Insurance not needed.

our kids can go to trade schools. We have health insurance for our members. I'd rather have health insurance than nothing at all. We have social programs for kids and elders, a sports complex, and we are building homes. Some of these things were here already, but the casino enhances them."

Smith says that the disenrollments were difficult but necessary. He dismisses the allegation that he threatened to remove Freeman's children from the tribe. He says it was just something that had to be done. His wife is a cousin to the Brittain descendants, but her relationship with family members remains intact.

"My wife was fine with it," Smith says. "She knows the truth. They were never supposed to be enrolled in our tribe to begin with. It was a difficult thing to do, but the council had to do what the council had to do. And now we need to move on in a positive way for the tribe. It's what the tribe wanted. They don't belong."

* * *

"Robert Smith will tell you that the tribe wanted us gone," Paul Johnson, former member of the Pala band, tells me over the phone.

"The truth is, our family is the most well-documented bloodline in the entire tribe. It's a double standard. No other family has been required to document their bloodline like ours has. That's because we are opponents of the Pala executive council. They've spent years consolidating their power. They've disenrolled their major opposition, which is my family."

Johnson is heartbroken and angered to see his family in dire straits as a result of their disenrollment. He is angered over the reaction to their removal by current tribe members.

"I am dismayed by the kind of comments I hear — that we are lazy and only want the money — while they gloat over the increase they received when we were disenrolled. They say that we are mostly white, when of course all Indians are mixed blood. Chairman Robert Smith is ¼ German. His great-grandmother and my great-grandmother were sisters. These claims about not being tribal and Indian enough are really only a form of discrimination."

Johnson lives in the state of Washington but has plans to return to the Temecula area to be closer to other disenrolled members of his family.

"I decided eight months ago to move back down. I need to get more involved in tribal politics and support my family. We have the most horrible role models right now serving as our tribal officers. We need people that will lead our tribe into the future. I want to show the rest of the tribe that the descendants of Margarita Brittain are a vital part of the people, and that our ancestors would be dishonored should the antipathy continue."

Johnson and his seven siblings were part of the second wave of disenrollments. Two of his brothers — and many cousins, aunts, and uncles — still live on the reservation. Family allotments are arranged side by side, so Johnson's family members all live in the same general area.

that area and have to deal with other tribal members, there is discrimination. It is very uncomfortable. My cousin walks down the street with her children, and people snicker at her, saying, 'You used to be in the tribe, but not anymore.' We are all very upset that the other tribal members aren't standing behind us."

When asked whether he views the casino as a curse to his tribe, Johnson says he still wholeheartedly supports Indian gaming.

"Native Americans have endured a lot of discrimination. When it comes time to finding jobs, or getting medical care, or education, we've had second-rate all along the way. We need [Indian gaming]. A lot of people don't understand that we have our own culture. We don't feel comfortable in the white society. White people consistently undermine us. They enacted a policy of genocide. They suppressed our language and our culture. Historically, they have herded us onto areas of land they didn't want or need, that they thought was useless. Now we have an opportunity to do something. [The executive committee] has turned it against us. The casino itself should be a boon. It should be something that could have made life good for all the Indians in our tribe. It still could be. So, no, I do not see the casino as a curse at all."

According to Johnson, the corruption of the executive committee runs deep. He believes that Robert Smith and other members have been corrupted by lawyers.

"The Pala Executive Committee has been reaping huge amounts of wealth out of the casino. There is supposed to be 15 percent of casino revenue invested so that we don't have to depend entirely on the casino for our income."

Johnson says his family knew there were problems. They regularly challenged the executive committee about financial information during general council meetings.

"The executive committee always reports tribal investments as 'lost.' We said, 'Wait a second. How can every single investment [the tribe] makes be a bad investment?'

We asked for full financial disclosure, and they said it was private information. We said, 'How can it be more private than the tribe?' Johnson claims that certain members receive extra benefits for their support of the executive committee.

Johnson is optimistic, however, that he will eventually be reinstated as a tribal member. He is among a large group of the disenrolled who have sought legal action to be reenrolled. But each time former Pala members have filed a complaint within the United States federal court system, the cases have been dismissed due to tribal sovereignty.

On March 1, Johnson and 27 former members of the Pala band appeared in Southern California District Federal Court over a filed complaint against the six members of the Pala Executive Committee. They sought monetary damages and declaratory and injunctive relief. Their claims included: conspiracy to interfere with civil rights; deprivation of equal rights under the law; conversion; tortious interference with prospective economic advantage; defamation; and civil conspiracy.

In court documents, the disenrolled's accusations against executive committee members include alleged illegal activities concerning the propriety of tribal elections, the executive committee's financial dealings, and their motives for entering into certain contracts on behalf of the tribe. They object to the defendants' personal use of tribal assets and to the construction of a raceway on the reservation that was not approved by the general council.

The judge dismissed the case and it is now under appeal.

Johnson says, "[We were] very disappointed over the outcome. There was an opportunity for the judge to rule in our favor, and he chose to take the path of least resistance. We hope the [executive committee]

Type 1 Diabetes?

Up to 70% of people with diabetes develop nerve damage.

Diabetes nerve damage can affect the legs, feet, or hands, causing numbness or loss of sensation. But since this nerve damage comes on gradually, many do not even realize they have a problem - until it leads to more serious complications.

Doctors at Advanced Metabolic Care and Research in Escondido are conducting a research study of an investigational medication that may help reduce nerve damage for people with type 1 diabetes. If you choose to participate, you will receive a no cost, non-invasive test to help determine if you have early signs of diabetes nerve damage. You will also be compensated for time and travel.

get overconfident and do something stupid. We will be there to gather up evidence and use it wisely.”

In Robert Smith's opinion, the disenrolled are wasting their money every time they take the executive committee to court.

“Congress has no jurisdiction over the tribe. This is a group of people that can't get what they want, so they go through the courts. Most of these people have never worked a day in their lives. They should do what most Americans do and get a job.”

According to tribal member Mary Young (not her real name): “Fighting Robert is worth every penny I spend.” Young's children were disenrolled February 1, 2011, but she remains a member of the tribe. When she speaks about her children's removal, she gets wound up enough to weep. “What people don't understand is that it would be like someone telling you that you are no longer American enough to be a United States citizen. People have a hard time feeling sorry for us because they say all we care about is the money. But our heritage is being ripped away.”

Mary says that when Robert Smith first became tribal chairman, she saw him as a good man who wanted the best for the tribe. She believed his intentions were pure. But somewhere along the line, she says, he became clouded by the money.

“In the beginning stages of the casino, Robert wanted to help the tribe. Then, slowly, he started to change. I thought the idea of the casino was great.

We have insurance and an education fund, but unfortunately it brought corruption.”

Ken Jones (not his real name), another tribal member and a descendant of Margarita Brittain, says, “We have more right [to be members] than any of them. We are the Cupeño Indians. They are the Mexicans and the outsiders. The United States government has allowed a bunch of Yaqui Indians and a bunch of Cahuillas to come in and take over our tribe.”

According to Jones, in anticipation of disenrollments, the executive committee lowered per capita income to members by $500 per month. After the disenrollments, per capita income was bumped up by $1000 per month. It was later lowered by $500, bringing the total back to the original amount and leaving the illusion that a raise had been awarded. Jones wonders where all the money went. With 17 percent of his tribe gone, they certainly should see a spike in the per capita.

* * *

San Diego County has the largest concentration of Indian reservations in the nation; it is home to 18 federally recognized tribes. Ten of the tribes host Las Vegas-style casinos.

A report commissioned by the California Nations Indian Gaming Association estimates Indian gaming at a $7.5-billion source of annual economic activity in California.

In recent years the Pechanga tribe, Jamul Indian Village, and the San Pasqual band have all disenrolled members. All host or intend to host casinos. Beginning in 2004–2008, the Pechanga, who operate the most lucrative casino in Riverside County, eliminated 20 percent of their tribe. It is estimated that their monthly per capita subsequently jumped from $15,000 to $40,000.

In 2005, the Jamul Indian Village disenrolled a fifth of their members in anticipation of a yet-to-be-built three-story casino.

In 2011, the San Pasqual band — they run Valley View Casino — eliminated 60 members. Their disenrolled were descendants of Marcus Alto Senior, a man adopted by a tribal couple in 1907 when he was three days old.

"It was so sad when it happened to Pechanga," says Mary Young. "I stopped going to their casino. But never in my wildest dreams did I think it would happen to us."

Roger Adams (not his real name), another disenrolled Pala member, says, "It's happening more and more to Indian tribes. The government isn't going to be able to close their eyes to it. When you start seeing thousands of disenrollments, you have to stop it. Across the United States, so many of our tribes are doing this, and it's mostly the ones with casinos. When money gets involved, disenrollments happen."

Gina Howard, King Freeman's niece and one of the first to be disenrolled, says, "I work at a local casino. I get these Indian gaming magazines sent to me all the time. They always talk about Indian issues, but I never see any articles about disenrollment. It's the big ugly secret that Indian tribes are hiding. Indian gaming has empowered tribes, but it has also brought out the worst in people."

There is a general feeling of hopelessness among many of Pala's disenrolled. Some are optimistic that at some point they will be reenrolled; others have given up hope. Meanwhile, most feel at least some disassociation with their former tribe.

Ken Jones says, "If all powers remain, we won't get our tribe back. The [people on the reservation] don't know how to treat us. They really don't. If they're friends with us, then Robert is going to take action against them, too. They suffer from abused-child syndrome. Robert has been very cunning in the way he doles punishments out. Everyone is afraid of him, because he has the authority to punish and disenroll people at will."

Chairman Robert Smith denies accusation of future disenrollments. "Despite what they say, we are not disenrolling any more members." When asked about the two children removed in January, Smith chalks it up to a mathematical error in their original blood calculation.

Meanwhile, Roger Adams is anxious about an upcoming visit to the Pala reservation to visit his brother. "My own cousins are going to turn their backs on me. The people on that reservation are living in fear. What a sad way to live your life — even with the money. It's a shame to see it happen right before my eyes, between people I have loved, laughed, drank and shared my life with."

Mary Young doesn't see things improving any time soon. She believes that the situation will change only when Smith dies and a new chairman takes his place.

Smith says his life has been threatened. "Not personally. No one has directly threatened me, but on their websites they make death threats."

Two popular websites, Pala Watch and the Original Pechanga, are regularly read and commented on by former and current members. Heated arguments take place in the comment sections, often escalating into threats.

Gina Howard laughs at the notion that tribal meetings now have armed security guards. "Robert is paranoid," she suggests. "He has hired people with guns. He has security follow him around. It's ridiculous. If someone is threatening him, I don't know who they are. It's all in his head. The Indian grapevine spreads rumors. No one in my family has ever threatened him."

Ken Jones says, "Violence has been in the works since day one. We've been good at stopping it from happening. These are people that have lost their homes and everything they have. People kill for less." ■

Little Black Book

It was cold the day police entered the little house on Marquette Street in Oceanside. They'd been called to Cindy Conaway's home because her friends became concerned when they couldn't reach her for several days, starting in mid-January 2012.

Conaway's closest friends knew she was a prostitute and that she brought clients to her rented house. It was only a mile or so from the coast, a tiny place, 630 square feet. One bedroom, one bath.

Oceanside police knocked and called out but got no answer. The doors and windows were locked. The landlords, a married couple, lived nearby, and they were able to let police in. Later, investigators became suspicious. The landlords seemed aware too soon that a computer system and other items were missing from Conaway's rental home.

Police noted the surveillance camera outside, attached under the eaves. But when they entered the home, they could see that the monitor was missing from its wall mount.

Conaway was found dead in her bedroom. There was obvious trauma to her body. A homicide team was called.

Detective Marilyn Johnson collected Conaway's little black book from the bedroom. "The journal was found on a bedside table," she recalled. Inside the book were many names and phone numbers. "There were over five hundred entries." From these, Detective Johnson saw that the victim had used names other than "Conaway."

The detective noticed that "the toilet seat was up."

A medical examiner was requested on scene to inspect the body as it was found.

The Medical Examiner

Dr. Jonathan Lucas said of Conaway: "She was face down, wearing only a shirt." The body lay on the bed, naked below the waist. The doctor found obvious blunt-force trauma to the head and defensive wounds on the back of one hand. From the blood evidence, he surmised that the victim had been beaten to death.

The victim wore a wig on top of her own hair, and Dr. Lucas said that this had blunted the force of the killing blows. The extra cushioning also affected the shape of the wounds, making it more difficult to deduce what kind of weapon had been used in the beating.

Dr. Lucas said that Conaway had started life as a man. "Yeah, that's correct. Genetically, she was born a male. Both testicles were removed surgically. What we call an organ-ectomy." Conaway still had a penis. And breast implants.

It was difficult for Dr. Lucas to determine the exact time of death. It had occurred a minimum of four days earlier, perhaps up to seven days. The doctor took into account the recent cold weather. The day police found the body, January 21, 2012, it was raining in Oceanside.

safe in Conaway's bedroom closet. Inside the safe were costume jewelry and video recordings of Conaway with customers. From the videos, police could see that Conaway had at least three different cameras set up to secretly record her encounters. Conaway was seen on her knees or seated in a chair in her living room, with customers. Detective Johnson said that "numerous different men" had been recorded.

The detective reviewed 20 clandestine recordings and concluded that at least six male customers had been videotaped.

Too Many Suspects

Investigators discovered that Conaway had several safes around her house, perhaps as many as six or seven. One large safe was noticeably missing, the one that usually sat on the floor by her bedroom door.

Detective Johnson spoke to friends of the deceased. Some said they had worked as prostitutes, too, at some point in their lives. Forty-one-year-old Dora said she'd known Conaway since she was a teenager. Conaway had showed her how to survive. She said that Conaway did not use drugs or alcohol herself, but supplied those things for her customers. Cops were aware of Dora's criminal history, and they suspected that Dora may have been supplying drugs to Conaway, who then resold them.

Dora seemed to be the only one who knew that a certain small safe was missing from Conaway's home.

Investigators followed a tip that led them to interview a white male who admitted he'd seen Conaway about a week earlier. He was "just friends" with Conaway; he "bought drugs" from her. The last time he'd seen her, she was getting dressed up to go out, putting on a skirt and boots. It was about 7:00 p.m. on Friday night, January 13; the man said he'd left around that time. Conaway's little dog was there, and Conaway's gold Mustang was parked outside. Police later looked hard at this man's sister, who'd pawned jewelry in the days after Conaway was killed.

Conaway's friends told cops that she was careful and safety-conscious; she would not allow people to drop by unannounced; she had deadbolt locks installed at her home. Conaway told friends she was worried about a certain black Marine who was threatening her.

Then again, everyone seemed to agree that Conaway was a compassionate person. She was known to pick up strangers, or "strays," and bring them home, feed them, and let them take a hot shower.

There was a friend who lived in the same neighborhood who told cops that Conaway "absolutely did not" loan out her car to anyone. This person said she noticed that the Mustang had been missing from its usual parking spot in front of Conaway's home "for several days." She told cops that Conaway had a man's strength; the friend was sure the killer must have been somebody Conaway knew and trusted, to be able to overpower her and catch her off guard, right there in her own bedroom.

Cops found Conaway's Mustang parked about four miles away, in the parking lot of a huge apartment complex, also in Oceanside. It was parked at the farthest, easternmost corner of the lot, in space number 99.

Conaway's Black Book

Detective Johnson reviewed the names and phone numbers in the little black book she'd collected from Conaway's room. She connected phone numbers with addresses; she was looking for persons who lived nearby. One of the names that Johnson came up with was Tyree Paschall.

Cops spoke with Paschall at his apartment on Sherbourne Drive, about six miles from Conaway's home, also in Oceanside.

Police asked Paschall if he knew someone named Cindy. Paschall said, "That's my girl."

Paschall told cops he'd last seen Conaway weeks earlier, on Friday, January 13. He said he'd gone to her home that night and that they "got intimate." He hadn't spoken to her since then. Paschall said he did not have a phone.

A Modern Love Story

Paschall said that Conaway had shown him "the most love of anybody." He had met Conaway right after he got out of prison, in 2010. (In 2005 he was convicted of kidnapping and making a "deadly threat.") Just days after Paschall was paroled, he was walking down the main drag in Oceanside when Conaway drove up in her fabulous gold convertible and offered him a ride.

Paschall was 27 years old, six-foot-two-inches tall, and 176 pounds. Conaway was 44 years old, five-feet-five-inches tall, and 223 pounds.

At first, Paschall didn't want to come to police headquarters to be interviewed. But eventually he agreed. The recorded conversation went on for almost three hours. Paschall's version of things changed over the interview; for example, at first he denied taking Conaway's Mustang. Near the end of the interview, however, he admitted taking the car. He accurately described where police had found it and remembered the number of the parking space. The parking lot where the car was recovered was between Conaway's home and Paschall's apartment.

At the end of the interview, Paschall was arrested for a parole violation. He was not charged with murder — yet. As of January 30, 2012, Paschall was back in custody.

persons coming and going from Conaway's home during the week that her body must have been lying dead on her bed, before police found her.

A neighbor said it was early Saturday morning, January 14, and still dark outside, when an "unidentified black male" left Conaway's home, got into the Mustang parked out front, and sped off. This same neighbor said he also saw a white male leaving Conaway's home later the same day.

Another neighbor said there was a white pickup truck parked near Conaway's home on January 13, 14, and 15. The pickup truck was supposedly owned by a handyman Conaway knew. Police interviewed this person and confirmed that he'd installed the deadbolt locks in Conaway's home. He denied that his truck had been parked there for three days.

On Sunday, January 15, at about 2:00 or 3:00 p.m., a neighbor said he went to knock on Conaway's door. The neighbor remembered the day and approximate time because it was after church. He told police he heard movements inside the home when he approached but that the noises stopped when he knocked. No one answered the door and he eventually left.

A Jailhouse Snitch

While Paschall was being held in jail on the probation violation, investigators pursued the homicide investigation.

After some weeks, the girlfriend of another inmate approached the district attorney's office. This inmate wanted to trade information to make a deal. The inmate claimed that Paschall had blabbed about a murder. Paschall spoke about his lover, a "transgender," who'd become dissatisfied with him. This dissatisfied lover was the moneymaker, and she wanted Paschall to get a job; she told him he was freeloading too much. Paschall also blabbed about a scheme to make money by uploading porno videos to the internet, the snitch said.

Paschall said he'd decided to kill his lover because he would not be disrespected. Paschall "wasn't gonna be played in such a manner." He resented that his lover was "kicking him to the curb." Paschall described a beating, the snitch said.

Paschall told the snitch that he preferred 10 or 12 years in Patton, a state mental hospital, instead of life in prison without parole. Paschall had a plan to "play crazy." He smeared feces on his face and pretended to eat his own feces. According to the informant, the guards put Paschall into isolation while they awaited arrival of a jailhouse psychiatrist.

Jailhouse-snitch stories are considered unreliable because criminals will concoct fake narratives in an effort to make a bargain for themselves. But this particular snitch had one piece of information about the crime scene that was not widely known: the dog in the freezer.

Paschall had talked about putting a "very small dog" in the freezer.

Investigators found Conaway's pet dog, a long-haired Chihuahua-mix, in her freezer. There was urine near the frozen dog's tail. A veterinarian said this probably meant the dog had been alive when it was put into the freezer, and that it later suffocated or froze to death.

When they interviewed Paschall, police asked about Conaway's dog. Paschall said he knew the dog and he liked the dog. He described it as "lively" and "happy-go-lucky."

Investigators found Paschall's DNA on drinking glasses and a water bottle in Conaway's home. Paschall's fingerprints were on a bottle of spray-cleaner next to her bathtub. In Paschall's shorts' pocket, they found a key to a bank safety-deposit box rented by Conaway.

Last month, Paschall, now 29, confessed to second-degree murder and felony animal abuse. In a plea deal, a separate case in which he'd been charged with passing forged checks and possession of stolen property was dismissed. The sentence for killing the dog will run concurrently with time given for killing Conaway.

Paschall expects to be sentenced to 20 years to life on May 2, 2013, in San Diego's North County Superior Courthouse. ■

Silverstein says all IRI assets were sold last year and the company is no longer in business, but he personally owns ten courses. He says the most courses IRI ever owned was 23, although some media reported it owned more. He has been in course ownership for several decades. He made money in the early years but concedes that he has lost "a lot of money" in recent years. He won't comment on a report that he lost $30 million in the last few years. He now bases his golf business in Charlotte, North Carolina, and La Quinta, in Riverside County.

"The crash, as painful as it has been, has let everything reset," says Silverstein. A course built or purchased for $10 million, and that is now worth $4 million, "has a completely different pricing structure. Stability at a lower level is what we all are hoping for." ■ the city's hotel magnates on the eve of a meeting that may spawn yet another legal war against the Democratic mayor by San Diego's old-line GOP tourism establishment:

"I have had enough of the whining and complaining from the wealthiest hotels in America. It was only days ago that they submitted a bill! We will issue their money when they hold up their end of the bargain. For example, approving payments to the Balboa Park Centennial... The City of San Diego will not be held hostage by such antics."

As previously reported, in February the city's top three hotel moguls (C. Terry Brown, Bill Evans, and Richard Bartell) teamed up with U-T San Diego publisher, fellow Republican, and luxury-hotel magnate Douglas Manchester, to lead a charge against the Democratic mayor in the form of a lawsuit and media campaign to force Filner to sign a lucrative city-funding deal negotiated by Republican ex-mayor Jerry Sanders, a major beneficiary of the hoteliers' campaign money. When the lawsuit failed, the moguls reached an accommodation with Filner, a key part of which was to use some of the fee money to fund the Balboa Centennial.

But the truce appears not to have held. The latest turn came late today with a threat by the fee-supported tourism marketing agency to shut its doors because of what it claimed in a U-T story was a failure by Filner to release its city money.

And now the so-called Tourism Marketing District board, chaired by Brown and which allots the cash collected by the city, appears it may be preparing to sue Filner once again.

Apparently the hotel people are not accustomed to not getting their own way. Is the hotel group's Brown saying they spent all the money and now don't have "enough" to comply with their promise for the park centennial? Game playing, pure and simple.

Wetlands project a winner

Port, partners awarded for restoration efforts

San Diego — A 300-acre marsh and wetlands restoration project has garnered a Coastal America Partnership Award, presented at a ceremony yesterday to a long list of participating groups, including the Port of San Diego, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, California State Coastal Conservancy, National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Association, San Diego Bay National Wildlife Refuge Complex, Ocean Discovery Institute, Southwest Wetlands Interpretive Association, San Diego Audobon Society, and the Coronado Rotary Club.

The project, which took place along the southern edges of San Diego Bay between September 2010 and March 2011, involved area cleanup, removal of nonnative invasive plant species, and replanting of native species. The newly created wetlands have provided habitat for endangered birds, including California Least terns and western snowy plovers, as well as sea turtles and several fish species.

"There are 90 different species benefitting from this work. This is a celebration," said Rowan Gould, deputy director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in presenting the award. "It takes people with a vision to see this (land) as an asset. When you can celebrate the accomplishments of many people working together, it's a good day."

Top beach? Not anymore

Local shores fall off the nation's top-ten list

Coronado — While locals

may be inclined to disagree, San Diego can no longer lay claim (officially, at least) to one of the nation's best beaches, at least according to Stephen Leatherman, the self-styled "Dr. Beach" — America's Foremost Beach Expert.

The beaches of Coronado have been ranked fifth or better in Leatherman's list of the country's ten best since 2008 and have made the list every year since 2004. The local shoreline has fallen out of the rankings entirely after earning the number 1 spot in 2012.

Leatherman has been publishing his beach rankings every Memorial Day since 1991, using a set of 50 criteria to rate various locales, including this year's winner, Main Beach on Long Island, NY. Coronado, on the other hand, joins several others to fall off the list after taking a win to make room for newcomers.

Dave Rice, May 29

Visduh May 29 @ 7:48 a.m.

If you don't brag about landing on such a list, then you don't have to try to justify falling off it the following year. Meaningless is the word for such rankings, which are done to sell magazines or subscriptions.

A cap on war chests?

City considers limiting party campaign contributions

San Diego — Political parties in San Diego might have to look for other ways to funnel cash to candidates.

On June 4, city council members will discuss whether to adopt an ordinance that would cap the amount that political parties can donate at $20,000 for citywide candidates and $10,000 for council candidates.

That's quite the blow, considering that during last year's election the Republican Party gave former councilmember Carl DeMaio $800,000 in campaign contributions while Democrats gave mayor Bob Filner $237,500, says a report by San Diego's Ethics Commission.

The commission also found that the county GOP forked over more than $1 million in "member communications coordinated with a mayoral candidate," compared to $700,000 from the Democratic Party.

But political parties are not out of options if they decide to fight the ordinance. The voters will have 30 days to strike down the ordinance by referendum, says deputy city attorney Catherine Bradley in a May 28 memo to city council.

"...The ordinance does not relate to the actual conduct of an election. Instead, the ordinance relates to campaign finance laws, only indirectly related to elections. Accordingly, an ordinance amending the Municipal Code relating to campaign finance may be passed by the Council not less than 12 days after introduction." Thereafter, the ordinance is effective "not less than 30 calendar days" from final passage. "This will preserve the power of referendum to the people as required by the California Constitution..."

The 30-day waiting period will, however, also provide the parties with time to give cash to candidates. Next year's election cycle begins one day before the council hearing.

Not with my tax dollars...

Group to spend $100K+ on "Director of Homeless Outreach"

Downtown — The Downtown San Diego Partnership is looking for a person to fill a newly created $110,000-a-year position as "Director of Homeless Outreach" for the Clean and Safe program, also known as the Downtown Property and Business Improvement District.

The new post will be the eighth salaried position for the Clean and Safe program. Some downtown residents say the number of employees is just another example of the Downtown Partnership running wild with taxpayer funds. According to the PBID's annual budget for this current fiscal year, approximately 38 percent of revenues are spent on salaries; that 38 percent, or $1.53 million, is without the salary of the director of homeless outreach.

Kathy Casey has been a longtime critic of the Downtown San Diego Partnership's management strategy.

"It's fine if the Partnership wants to hire another full-time homeless outreach worker, just don't pay for it with tax dollars," writes Casey in a May 18 email.

Nonprofits in charge of management have come under fire in recent years, locally and in cities throughout the state. Last year, residents in Golden Hill and South Park were successful in dissolving an illegally formed MAD in their community. In that case, a judge questioned the difference between general benefits versus actual benefits for those residents paying the tax. And just last month a judge in Los Angeles dissolved a business improvement district for that same reason.

When asked about the decision to create a director of homeless outreach, local attorney and open-government advocate Cory Briggs replied, "It is totally illegal."

but ended up partially funding a $117 million settlement. He had personally unloaded $487 million worth of stock during the time the fraud was under way.

Then there was the case of SDSU's football strength coach David Ohton, who got a $2.7 million settlement from the state university system in February 2011. In a lawsuit that cost taxpayers more than $1 million in legal expenses, the Union-Tribune reported, Ohton's attorneys charged that Roush had covered up alleged excessive drinking by head coach Tom Craft to avoid yet another public scandal in the university's troubled athletic department.

Roush was also at the center of the Jeff Schemmel controversy. He was hired by the university as athletic director in July 2005 despite a thousand-page investigation by the University of Minnesota fingering the former U of Minn administrator in a big academic fraud case. "We were very thorough in the whole matter," Roush told the Union-Tribune. "I think what made the difference for me was my discussion with Jeff — his personality, his genuineness, his commitment to compliance, and how he handled the (Minnesota situation) once it happened."

Four years later, Schemmel departed SDSU under a cloud after allegations came to light that he had used taxpayer funds to pay a visit to his mistress in Alabama. SDSU president Weber announced that as a parting gift the university would forgive Schemmel's $20,000 home loan, pay $116,000 in settlement fees, and write a letter of recommendation for him. Two years after that, in October 2011, Schemmel turned up as the managing director of JMI Sports LLC, a college-sports consulting outfit owned by none other than John Moores, who was Schemmel's main champion during his time at SDSU. Some expect Roush to soon join him there. Roush did not respond to a request for comment left with her assistant.

to think of him with his "ugly face," his altered demeanor, the face that drugs and living on the streets has given him.

He is no longer welcome in our home. My husband and I cannot trust him any longer. We have bought him cars, trucks, insurance, groceries, paid his rent. I have paid for him to attend various vocational schools, because he dropped out of high school when he was just 16. He always has a reason why he cannot work.

When he left high school, I objected so strongly; I told him that he would ruin his life if he had no education. I told him about how much potential he had. I told him that he should not quit, that if he quit, he would be quitting for the rest of his life.

He has been arrested four times in San Diego County for various crimes — mostly drug-related, once for grand theft. He is now a Prop. 36 probationer. I have drawn the line at providing attorney fees. He uses a court-appointed attorney when he has to appear.

Like I mentioned before, I have never given up, but I am very weary, like Mrs. Chang. I think I know how she must have felt when she told her son that she was moving away. I, too, have tried geographical changes, hoping to escape, but I could never escape my past.

It was so very sad and scary to read about Sherry Chang's murder. She must have been so scared, so unbelieving. Sons are supposed to love their mothers, aren't they? Sons are not supposed to murder. Whatever happened in his mind? Whatever caused him to snap? Mental illness, drugs? She still loved her son, no matter what. Whether his mental illness was chemically-induced or genetic, he put his mother through hell when she was alive, and while he was murdering her. Her waking life sounded so familiar to me: work, pay his bills, work more, earn more money, pay him more, no peace, no sleep, constant worry.

I pray every day: Dear God, make my son well, give my husband and I some peace, give us one day free from worry, free from crisis, free from chaos.

I can identify with Mrs. Chang. I think I know how tortuous her life must have been. I can only speak for myself, but when I gave birth to my only son, I never imagined what a monster he would turn out to be.

I hope that now, finally, Sherry Chu Chang has found peace.

"Our trip [around Cape Horn] took two weeks, and no ships sank."

Cape Horn, Chile

By Richard Cuthbertson

This is a place of extremes. The name alone brings to mind images of explorers and traders in tall sailing ships working their way against horrendous seas and hurricane-strength winds.

Set on its own small island, "Isla Hornos," Cape Horn is part of the Tierra Del Fuego archipelago and considered the southernmost tip of the South American continent. The history, the wildlife, the weather, all make it a special place for a Southern Californian to see.

From the time Europeans began trading across the world until the opening of the Panama Canal, Cape Horn was a necessary evil and a dreaded rite of passage for sailors. Ships heading west to Asia and the Pacific had to fight confused seas head-on in terrible weather, all the while dodging uncharted rocky outcroppings — often with zero visibility — to reach Asia and the West Coast of the U.S. Then, after their trade was done, they had to do it all over again on their return trip.

Many didn't make it. Some, like the infamous Captain Bligh and the HMS Bounty, gave up heading west completely and went the other way around toward Africa, which added a month and 10,000 miles to his trip to Tahiti.

We weren't trading or exploring; we just went to see. Our trip took only two weeks and no ships sank, nobody was lost, and there were no cases of scurvy (reported).

It was my second visit here — this time aboard a small cruise ship passing through the Strait of Magellan, down the Beagle Channel, around the cape, and back. It's very much like Alaska, with snow-capped mountains and glaciers that funnel into deep fjords.

Being February, it was considered fall, and we had good weather — by "good," I mean 15–20 foot seas under angry gray skies. There were brief periods of sunshine when the clouds parted, but then there was also a slanting icy rain that littered the deck with ping-pong-ball-sized hail and then stopped as quickly as it had started.

The weather didn't seem to bother the hundreds of albatross, petrels, prions, and shearwaters whizzing around in the wind or just sitting on the water. Nor did it bother the various whales, dolphins, or fur seals who roam around feeding on whatever the colliding Atlantic-Pacific currents bring to the cape. And we saw other wildlife, mostly interesting birds: steamer ducks, kelp geese, imperial cormorants, and one of the largest birds in the world, the Andean condor.

On the island, one can see the building that houses the Chilean caretaker family that lives there year round, with their national flag and small chapel.

From offshore, one can also see the monument to all the sailors who have lost their lives sailing around the horn, put there in 1992 by the Chilean Navy. It's a large bronze sculpture about 25 feet high in two pieces, their outline forming the shape of the albatross. Beneath it is a plaque with a poem written in Spanish that reads:

I, the albatross that awaits for you at the end of the world... I, the forgotten soul of the sailors lost that crossed Cape Horn from all the seas of the world. But die they did not in the fierce waves, for today towards eternity in my wings they soar in the last crevice of the Antarctic winds.

What you don't see are all the ships that sank. The worst recorded year for shipwrecks at Cape Horn was 1905, when 53 of 130 sailing vessels that attempted to pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific went "unaccounted for." Which probably means they sank. We tried to imagine what the ocean floor would look like around this place if it were drained — what possibly remains over time in such a harsh environment?

Unlike them, we completed our rounding successfully. We took our photos and drank a glass to the ghosts of sailors gone, and headed back the other way.

MIRAMAR RESERVOIR

Water birds on the lake and chaparral vegetation on the slopes make this a pleasant walk.

Distance from downtown San Diego: 17 miles. Allow 25 minutes driving time. (Scripps Ranch) From I-15, exit east on Carroll Canyon Rd. and keep left (north) as the name changes to Scripps Ranch Blvd. Turn right (east) on Scripps Lake Dr. and then left into the parking lot. Restrooms, chemical toilets, water, and picnic areas. Wheelchair accessible. Gates open from 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Hiking length: 4.92 miles around the lake. Difficulty: Easy and level on either paved road or dirt trail near the shore for a portion of the walk.

California adolphia found at Lake Miramar is an endangered species.

The 4.92 mile paved service road has a variety of walkers, joggers, and bicyclists circling the reservoir seven days a week with cars allowed on the road Saturday through Tuesday. The dam and reservoir were finished in 1960 and are owned and operated by the City of San Diego. It is part of the second San Diego Aqueduct project, with water from both the Colorado River Aqueduct and the California Aqueduct. The reservoir's water-storage capacity is 6682 acre feet. Dogs on leashes are permitted but must remain 50 feet or more from the water at all times.

Bring your binoculars to view cormorants or pelicans competing with anglers for bass, bluegill, or sunfish. Mallards, lesser scaups, redhead, gadwall, northern shovelers, and ruddy ducks are found on the lake, depending on the season. Turkey vultures or hawks can be seen catching the wind currents with the sound of European starlings, California towhee, California quail, and wrentits in the chaparral plants.

Chaparral plants include chamise, black sage, manzanita, monkey flower and California sagebrush, plus species that are hard to spot and rare. These include Zeltnera venusta or canchalagua, which is an annual with pink petals and white centers with yellow anthers. Look closely after pollen is harvested and note that the anthers are shaped like corkscrews. Another species called Adolphia californica, spineshrub, or California adolphia is found in San Diego County and listed by the California Native Plant Society as rare, threatened, or endangered in California but is considered common elsewhere. The flower has five triangular petals with small folded petals between each triangular-shaped one.

The name of the reservoir has an interesting history. In 1890, newspaper publisher E.W.

Scripps and his philanthropist wife, Ellen Browning Scripps, purchased land in the area now called Scripps Ranch. With no buildings to obstruct the view of Mount Soledad and the Pacific Ocean, the property was given the name Miramar, Spanish for "sea view." Ellen Browning Scripps supported a multitude of institutions in Southern California, including schools, parks, and hospitals.

Miramar Reservoir is open to fishing and private boats and kayaks from one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

Canyoneers are San Diego Natural History Museum volunteers trained to lead interpretive nature walks that teach appreciation for the great outdoors. For a schedule of free public hikes, refer to the San Diego Natural History Museum website.

Rhyme & Verse

With This New Poem Comes Fame and My Picture on the Covers of Magazines

A poem by Hank Malone

And certain women will run up and treat me like a movie star.

Suddenly, i'll become handsome and witty and perfect, and other men will hate my power.

I'll become a famous victim of jealousy.

And soon a fragrant light will hover around my head,
A great lover, the poet has become a saint!

Later, the universe will change course.
Slowly, it will approach me, and revolve.

It was inevitable that i should die like this,

famous grey hair,
powerful baggy pants.

Hank Malone is a combat veteran of the Korean War and has spent the past many years as a psychotherapist. He has also been an organizer with Saul Alinsky and for ten years was a daily talk-radio host for ABC in Detroit. He writes nonfiction for Gale Research and is also a rare-book dealer. The recipient of two National Endowment grants in poetry, he is currently at work on a book of love poetry. The poet and critic Robert Peters once described Malone's work as likely "the finest love poems since E.E Cummings." Several of his books and collectibles can be found on Finebooks.com.

Robert Parsons, S.J.

...every time we commit a mortal sin, there doth pass through our heart and mind (though we mark it not) a certain practic [sic] discourse of our understanding and will (as there doth also in every other election) whereby we lay before us on the one side the seeming commodity of that sin which we are tempted to commit — that is to say the pleasure that allures us thereunto; and on the other part the offence of God, which is the losing of his grace and friendship by that sin, if we yield unto it. And thus, having, as it were, the balance there before us, and setting God in one end thereof, and in the other, the aforesaid pleasure, we stand in the midst deliberating and examining in a certain manner, the value and weight of both parts. And finally do make choice of the pleasure and reject Almighty God, that is we choose rather to lose the favor of God, together with is grace, and whatsoever he is worth besides, than to lack that pleasure and delectation of sin. Now then, what can be more opprobrious and horrible than this? — “A Christian Directory Guiding Men to their Eternal Salvation,” by Robert Parsons, SJ.

Robert Parsons (1546–1610) was an English Jesuit and companion of English martyr of the Catholic Church St. Edmund Campion (1540–1581), known for his apologetic writings during the English persecution of Catholics. Born to yeoman farmers, through the help of a local pastor, Parsons became Oxford-educated and in 1568 became a tutor at Balliol College. Six years later, with the persecution of English Catholics by Queen Elizabeth I in full swing, he resigned his position due to his Catholic leanings and was ordained a Jesuit priest in Rome a year later. He founded St. Omer School in France — later to become Stonyhurst College in England.

The stomach rules

“We’re working on changing our image,” he says.
“Not that we want to change Oceanside.”

GIT N’ERE.”
That’s what the sign says, so why not? I’ve got time before the Coaster.

That sign’s under another that reads “Pierview Pub.” But inside, a big neon sign above the bar reads “Bub’s.”

“That’s ’cause it’s also Bub’s Whiskey Dive,” says a guy on a stool. “It’s an all-U-can-eat place, as well.”

“Wow,” I say. “All you can eat?”

“Sure, if you like peanuts.”

Everyone laughs. Oh, right...now I see the floor’s strewn with peanut shells. There’re buckets of them for free, tempting you to start an afternoon of cracking, chewing, and drinkin’.

Guess I may as well sit down. Get to talking to this big guy in a pork pie hat. Turns out he’s part of Oceanside’s Economic Development Commission. Ward O’Doherty.

“We’re working on changing our image,” he says. “We never get respect from the rest of the county. Like, we’ve got Genentech here, the world’s second-largest biotech company, but who knows about it? Not that we want to change Oceanside. What it has is special. We’re totally committed to the mom-and-pop businesses. They’re the soul of Oceanside.”

I’m listening to Ward, but I’m a bit distracted. One, I’m hungry, and for more than peanuts. And, two, a moment ago I was so busy staring at the “Bub’s” sign that I missed a big ol’ step dropping the bar down six inches. Man. Recovered just in the nick of time and saved my face by a nose.

“The step? This is how it always was,” says the barman. “Place has been open going on 50, 60 years. So, what’ll it be?”

I ask for a Sprite ($1.50). Gotta work tonight. Plus, I’m really looking for food.

“Do you have any?” I ask.

“Just the peanuts,” says the barman.

“But if you go across the road,” the guy sitting next to Ward says, “they have really good sandwiches there.”

“What’s it called?”

“Pier View Coffee.”

“Same people as here?”

“No. Just happen to be on the same street.”

Okay, hard to tear myself away from the cacahuates and the company. But the stomach rules. Gotta survive the hour’s voyage to the southlands.

So, now we’re on the other side of Pier View Way. And, more signs.

“Caution step!”

“Caution: step up!”

“Watch your step!”

“Caution: Step down.”

The signs glare at you all around the entrance. This is at Pier View Coffee. “Pier View” is two words here, I see. Turns out they have a step problem, too: you have to step up to get inside. A lot of folks must’ve tripped, because I count seven red-and-white signs around the entrance.

Turns out this building is more than 100 years old. It was built in 1908 as a pioneering dry goods store, one of the first stores in downtown Oceanside. But Marysol, the gal behind the counter, says it was empty seven years ago when a father-and-son team, Tom and Matt Bayer, bought it and turned it into this coffee-and-sandwich place.

Wow, 1908. You don’t think of Oceanside as old. Except, oh yeah, Carla says she had forebears up near here in Vista as early as the 1850s.

No surprise that the inside is cavernous. But bright. Yellow walls (plus some dark red) with big art, and Victorian red ruffles over the windows. And large black-and-white pics of historical Oceanside.

Guys — military from Camp Pendleton, I’m betting, just from their haircuts — are drinking coffee and yakking, or, mostly, hunkered over their laptops in big ol’ comfy chairs. At the window counter, a tutor’s trying to teach a gal math. She’s throwing longing glances out the window, like, When will this be over?

Oceanside’s Pierview Pub has an alter ego: Bub’s Whiskey Dive.

Across the street from Pierview Pub sits Pier View Coffee and its barista, Marysol.

No less than four signs warn customers about the step up into the bar.

“What’s Y minus zero?” he asks.

Sam Cooke wails a classic song on the sound system: “That’s the sound of the men, working on the chain... gang...”

The Metrolink roars past, honking its way into Oceanside from L.A.

I get a coffee ($1.75 for a 12-ounce) from the guy at the counter, Rob. Then I check the menu board on the wall.

They have salads, like grilled chicken at $7.45; you can add a bowl of soup for another dollar. Soups — today’s is Tomato Florentine — go for $2.95 for small, $3.95 for large.

But the main deal here is sandwiches. Most expensive is the Beach Club at $7.95. It’s got ham, turkey, and bacon, plus lettuce and tomato on whole wheat. The cheapest is awesome: a peanut-butter-and-jam sandwich for $1. Man, tempted by that. Second cheapest? Grilled cheese on ciabatta, $4.95. The rest (which means most of them) are $6.95. The BLT, the Oceansider (grilled chicken and Swiss), the BBQ chicken breast, the Ocean Rancher (turkey and bacon), the Pier View Special (turkey and Swiss), and the Victorian (ham and cheddar).

Okay. We have a decision. I go for the BBQ chicken breast with “Sweet Baby Ray’s” BBQ sauce on ciabatta. Plus, I get a Pier View Special to take back to the lovely Carla.

This gal Sabrina, who’s sitting outside with her kids and her mom, said that was the best one.

Take my BBQ chicken breast to a window table.

Mmm...BBQ sauce is nice and sweet, the red onions point up the sauce, and that’s one thick chunk of chicken they’ve wedged inside. Also, the ciabatta bread is tender, crisp.

The turkey, when I get it south to Carla, untouched, is good. I beg some, just to see what it’s like...I mean, yes, pretty standard stuff, but good, healthy, and filling.

My only regret? That I didn’t free up another dollar for some tomato soup to combine with the sandwich.

Already planning next time: Start off in the Pier View for chow, then head over to Pierview — Bub’s pub — for some Oceanside Aleworks strong ale, and for sure I’ll shuck a few peanuts, then back here again for coffee, then off to the Coaster.

At all times, watching my step. ■

Taking the monkey by the paw

In February, Monkey Paw Pub and Brewery (805 16th Street, East Village) brewmaster Derek Freese unexpectedly gave notice at the brewpub so he could take a job with Point Loma work-in-progress Modern Times Beer. He gave several weeks' notice, but fortunately for Monkey Paw owner Scot Blair, it only took 24 hours to replace Freese. It was serendipity, really. Blair had spent the weekend leading up to Freese's resignation at Local Habit's crawfish boil in Hillcrest. During that two-day gorging session, he struck up some conversations with Local Habit server and avid homebrewer Cosimo Sorrentino.

The two jived on much of their philosophies on brewing as well as their shared passion for the craft. For those who've never met Blair, his level of passion on this and all endeavors is through the roof, so that says a lot about Sorrentino's enthusiasm. So, when Freese made his exit, Blair asked Sorrentino if he'd like to make an entrance into the professional brewing industry as his new brewmaster.

Sorrentino accepted and has spent the past two months working closely with Blair and adapting to his inherited brewhouse.

I first met Sorrentino two years ago when he was working at Farmhouse Café in University Heights. He offered me samples of his home brew and I was impressed. There are a great many recreational brewers in San Diego and Sorrentino is definitely in the upper tier of that class. His beers exhibit stunning clarity and pointed flavors that match traditional style guidelines. It's good to see him getting his shot (not the first brewing job offer he's received in his time, by the way). Remembering that Freese also made the leap from standout homeboy to pro brewmaster, this would seem the optimal environment for Sorrentino to make his debut.

FEAST!

Recently, I headed to Monkey Paw to taste a wide array of Sorrentino's first-run brews. I was a fan of Freese's beers and was curious to see if Sorrentino could match the good product put out during the brewpub's first year in business. After processing the taste and characteristics of the current house beers, he's not only matched previous batches, but actually raised the bar; something that's a bit tough to do at Monkey Paw, where Blair insists on brewing exotic, esoteric styles of beer that aren't on tap throughout town.

Monkey Paw Pub and Brewery's new brewmaster, Cosimo Sorrentino, enjoys the fruits of his labor.

Case in point, two collaborations currently on tap — a German Zwickelbier called Brain Food that was made in collaboration with local brewers at Green Flash Brewing Company and Gordon Biersch, utilizing yeast from the latter operation to make a lager that's "hopped to the teeth" with Nugget, Falconer's Flight, Amarillo, and hops harvested from the Albert

Einstein Academy in South Park (a dollar from the sale of each pint of the beer goes to the school's agriculture program), and a chocolate-and-orange steam beer brewed with Almanac Beer Co. out of San Jose, California. Blair likens the latter to the popular chocolate-orange break-a-part balls sold during the holidays. It's an accurate assessment, though I also picked up a nice underlying nuttness. Both of the aforementioned beers taste great and, just as importantly, they're different! Also interesting is a Summer Honey Citrus Saison made with blood orange, sweet lime, and Meyer lemon zest, and the same yeast strain used to make Green Flash's Belgian pale ale, Rayon Vert.

Sorrentino's style really comes across in Bonobos, his adapted homebrew IPA or, as he chooses to refer to it, San Diego-style pale ale. With rich but well-integrated pineapple and mango hoppiness, it screams San Diego. Ditto a single hopped pale ale, Hooked On Chinook, that's Monkey Paw's bitter, citrusy take on a style that's becoming popular as a way to educate drinkers as to the singular properties of specific hops. Rounding out the hop-driven beers is Rich Man's IIPA, an imperial IPA Freese used to brew, that's been tweaked to be "more Northwestern" in flavor and, as a result, is a bit more focused than it used to be.

Adjustments are being made along with brand-new beers, but through it all, Sorrentino is making nice strides and quickly finding footing while taking the next step in his brewing odyssey.

Low side of average

I hadn't seen a mandatory service charge at a restaurant in quite a while. Then, I went to the Turquoise Cafe-Bar Europa in Pacific Beach, where a gratuity of 17.5 percent is automatically added to every bill. Unlike some people, I don't categorically hate the service charge. I'm even in favor of it, provided it guarantees exceptional service! With the menu claiming the restaurant refuses to serve people who are "grouchy and in a hurry," I suppose I expected caring service at the Turquoise.

It was okay. My server, while otherwise friendly, forgot to bring the drink order and she was somewhat scattered throughout the course of the meal. Far from terrible, but when the menu specifically guarantees excellent service ("ask about our good service guarantee!"), I feel obliged to point out that the service was on the low side of average.

Now, the glass of white sangria I got for a mere $5 was great. Not only was it enormous, it also had a high enough alcohol content to get me slightly buzzed after just one glass. I can only imagine the $18 carafe would...enliven the spirits, shall we say. The wine list was likewise nice, with $6 glasses of cask wine and $7-$12 glasses of everything else. Plus, $5 sherry for post-prandial chill-out.

It was really too bad about the food. The gazpacho soup ($5) had been slicked with oil in a way that ruined the otherwise bright concoction. The one-note ratatouille ($6) tasted like it had been sweated in a saute pan and served on the spot. Tender greens ($4) were bitter enough that no hint of white wine or almonds could be detected. Calamari ($7) had been cooked hard, to the point that the ringlets of squid emulated the rubber bands used to keep closed the claws on live lobsters.

The only decent dish was the tortilla española ($7), the iconic tapas plate of potatoes, onions, and eggs. The potatoes were nicely poached in oil. Even then, the eggs were a shade overcooked and chewy.

I'll give the Turquoise credit for having a cool atmosphere, at least. A two-man blues band delivered gravelly melodies from the darkened recesses of the interior. The patio was perfectly heated and the inside of the restau would be awesome for a hang-out or a date. All the people in the place seemed classy and/or attractive.

It could be a rad place to get together and lay waste to the liver via inexpensive sangria, just ignore the food since it would only interfere with the alcohol.

Fungi for lunch

Oh, gosh. Carla and me and Diane are in the Republic of Coronado again. Diane's just done Carla's hair, and this Kathy's Place (250 Prospect Place, 619-522-3600), tucked into one corner of the Sharp Coronado hospital, is the nearest place to eat from where Diane is set up now.

I do kinda like this place. Cheery crowd, even though half the people in here must be going through some crisis and the other half have just come from duty in some operating theater, or the wards.

Carla and Diane go for a cheeseburger ($3.39). I wanted a bacon burger, but the cook, Benny, says they're outa bacon. Drat.

"But you could try our special," Benny says.

He points to a pile of seed-topped oblong buns.

"Portobello Rustico," says the sign, "$6.45."

"It has a delicious portobello mushroom in it, no meat," says Benny.

Hmm, pay double for no meat?

But when he hauls out this ginormous slab of black portobello 'shroom, I guess curiosity gets the better of me.

Benny slices the bun and starts loading the bottom half up. Spinach leaves, tomato, two white discs of mozzarella cheese, a tomato salsa (made from blackened tomatoes, garlic, jalapeño and red onion), and the big black slab of portobello mushroom that's been dipped in a vinaigrette.

The girls laugh at me when I turn up at the table with it. And their burgers do look like so much more...well, meaty, till I bite in. Totally delish, garlicky, crunchy, tomatoey, filling without bloating.

This, I'm coming back to. Hey, maybe I'm becoming a vegetarian.

Baked Bear

Some concepts are so foolishly simple they make me facepalm in disbelief at my own lack of inspiration. The Baked Bear in Pacific Beach is like that. The idea is ridiculously concise: custom-built ice cream sandwiches made with fresh cookies, brownies, and waffles. That is the entire menu, and people are lining up for them. I should have thought of this!

The name of the game is "options." You could get a red velvet cookie and a snickerdoodle filled with mint chocolate chip ice cream. Two oatmeal raisins sandwiching butter pecan. Cookie dough ice cream smashed between a waffle and a brownie.

You get the idea.

And it's not even expensive. Cookie sandwiches are $2.95. $3.95 with waffles or brownies. Individual cookies are 75 cents, $8/dozen.

The ice cream isn't the finest, most luxuriant stuff available, more Breyer's than Ben and Jerry's, but that almost doesn't matter when it's exploding out from between a few cookies that are mere minutes out of the convection oven. And, seriously, for three bucks, who cares? I will probably not go to PB again without stopping at Baked Bear. This is a great idea.

After 43 years selling snacks, no customers

Spare a thought for Tomás López. We're just inside Mexico, about 9:30 at night, at the western side, near the pedestrian entrance.

Or what used to be. It's why Tomás has had his coffee, tea, and soup stall here for 43 years. Sells lots of cookies and candies and cacahuates, peanuts.

"You see what they've done?" he says. "Three months ago they closed the pedestrian gates into Mexico on this side of the freeway. Changed it to the other. That's where our business comes from! Visitors, and Mexicans coming home after work. Now they all come through on the east side. Nobody consulted us. Look at all the Yellow Cabs. They're stuck here, too. This is where their parking is. They just strangled our businesses overnight."

I put down a dollar and get a coffee. It's Nescafe and hot water. Thought about a soup (same deal, $1) or one of his snacks, but I've already been eating downtown, near Revolución.

Senovio López Carrellon comes up with his guitar. He nods in agreement with Tomás. "Times are hard. They never tell us what's happening."

I bring out a buck for a coffee for him, and another for a tune. He starts playing a haunting version of "Caminos de Michoacán."

"Even though I come from Guadalajara, Sinaloa," he says apologetically.

Honestly, his guitar work ain't nothing to write home about, but his singing kinda gets to you. 'Specially because he looks as though his eyes are pretty shot.

"Cataratas," he says.

Oh, man. Cataracts.

Jesús Gil comes up.

Epic lunch

Felix's BBQ with Soul, original to Oceanside, has a location on Euclid Avenue in Lincoln Park. It will be a bit out of the way for some people, but there's plenty of parking, and the lunchtime specials are off the chain. The entire place is welcoming: big, light, spacious, friendly, everything you could want out of a soul-food BBQ house.

And, really, like I said, the "lunch box specials" are a showstopper. Served daily until 4:00, each lunch plate is dinner-sized, served with fries and coleslaw, and well under ten bucks. I tried a plate of St. Louis ribs. The enormous, meat-laden bones threatened to tip my plate. I subbed candied sweet potatoes (my favorite) for the french fries, which netted me a 50-cent upcharge that I gladly paid.

I also picked at some red beans and rice (delicious!) and sipped a little lemonade and sweet tea, both of which were also delicious. Foolishly, I ordered a rather expensive cup of gumbo ($7.95), not foreseeing the magnitude of the ribs to come. Worth it! Full of shrimp, chicken, sausage, and zesty gravy.

I am hard-pressed to find fault with Felix's. The service was better than average and the portions on the lunch plates were downright Flintstone-ian. The gumbo should have been five dollars, max, even if it did have a lone, beautiful shrimp nestled on top. I would like to return for dinner sometime, but I don't think I could eat an entire dinner plate if the lunch specials are any indication. It would be a good place to go with a bigger party, picking at some 'cue and sweet lemonade.

Or just go back for lunch and maybe get into the sandwiches: catfish, pulled pork, tri-tip. The list goes on.

Next time, Felix. Next time.

Flying the Flag

"So, Loris," I say.

I've just popped into his Café Paris (455 1 Tenth Avenue, East Village, 619-674-8439) on the way down to Petco Park.

I remember him for his luscious little plates to go with his wines (because this is basically a wine bar).

I wanted to tell Loris how many people say they look for his place but can never find it. Like, cast your eye down Tenth, and nothing says "Café Paris."

And it's true even if you're going past in a bus or a car: if you blink, you miss his little sign in his window.

"I know they say, 'good wine needs no bush,'" I tell him, "but why can't you put a bigger sign outside facing both ways, with maybe a neon French flag flying...that way we would know where you are."

"Well, I had thought about that," Loris says. He talks while he works. Like, it's not as if the place is starved for customers.

"Because I have been negotiating with the city for permission to make a bigger sign. Also, the other day I went online and ordered a giant French Tricolore flag that I could fly out over the sidewalk. Seven feet by four feet! That way you could see it driving down Tenth Avenue."

Problem: Loris says when it came, it was seven by four all right...seven inches by four inches. "I didn't notice it had double quotes, not single quotes in the measurement."

Yes, he'll try again. So watch for it.

Meantime, negotiations with La Ville de San Diego continue.

Eggs and spring chicken

The spring menu at Saltbox showed me a few things: chiefly that executive chef Simon Dolinky is a smart guy. I say so because he seems to think outside the box with his dishes. Not in a wild, Wylie Dufresne kind of way. It's not like they're firing up the anti-griddle at Saltbox. But a lot of the flavors on the newest menu at the restaurant are more clever than I expected.

Take the hamachi crudo ($16), for instance. At first glance, it's yet another fish tartare. But the mixture of vanilla, olives, and fresh citrus that trimmed the dish beguiled me. My friend called it “complicated,” and he was right. It was also unexpected, subtle, and showed a great deal of lateral thought, melding that uncommon trio of flavors together.

More conventional cheese and charcuterie plates ($16–$18) showed that Saltbox’s kitchen is more than capable of curing meats and procuring cheeses. The lomo (dried pork loin) was of particular interest, being a meat you don’t see on every menu. Perhaps most intriguing were the green almonds that came on the cheese plate. You don’t see these very often. They’re unripe almonds, picked before maturation and split open for easy access. The nutmeat inside is like an almond crossed with a lychee. Very cool.

Equally clever was the use of eggs. They may be the most provincial of ingredients, but a smartly used egg makes a dish stand out. Roasted asparagus ($8) came with a soft-boiled egg, chilled and split down the middle so that the yolk pooled in the hemisphere of white, available for spreading around the roasted spheres. A similar dish of peas, chorizo, and soft-boiled egg ($14) was a hodgepodge of roasted veggies piled inelegantly in a bowl, but concealing some rich, earthy, herbal flavors that weren’t immediately apparent.

The spring-chicken dish was expertly roasted and served on a panzanella salad. Up in SF, at the Zuni Cafe, they get $48 for a dish like this. Saltbox’s is $21 and makes use of a zesty watercress chimichurri sauce on the side. This is a good, fresh way to eat roast chicken.

The grilled yellowtail, which can easily fall into unremarkable ubiquity, managed to disguise itself as a sort of puttanesca dish, resting atop a pool of spicy tomato sauce, briny olives, and poached fennel. Clever!

For a hotel restaurant owned by a major group (Kimpton), Saltbox’s menu was remarkably subtle, breaking with convention in the right places and following the rules with equal sense. Like

I said, it looks like chef Dolinky is a smart guy.

A ghost named Wanda

Hauling up Cedar out of Little Italy, past the Pioneer Hook and Ladder (hey, didn’t that used to be the firehouse museum?) and crossing Columbia when — whack!

Thar she blows! Former assemblywoman Lori Saldaña’s old HQ. Nice old house. They’ve been refurbishing it. Dust and dirt for months.

But, now, lookee here! This is six at night, and the newly planted garden is bustling with people, sitting at tables, eating, drinking...an old-old washing machine is stacked with coals and burning like a tableside fire pit.

Up along the porch, people stand, laugh, shout, chow, like... what’s that famous French painting? Oh, yeah. Renoir, Luncheon of the Boating Party.

That’s what it feels like. “Queenstown,” reads the gold lettering on the window.

“Community,” says another window. We’re at 1557 Columbia Street, where it meets Cedar (619-546-0444). I head up the front stairs and into this crowded room with a bar on the left with a backboard that goes up to the second level. An Indian-style canoe hangs down the wall. So cool.

Manage to grasp the last available stool. Gal named Angeline comes to take my order.

Gosh. Just missed happy hour. But I get a nice dark beer, a Port Brown, for $6, and check the menu.

First thing I think is: These people are going for the Craft and Commerce crowd. Same vibe, same simple-but-not-that-cheap fare. Oh, I’m seeing what look like New Zealand Maori words etched on the backboard mirrors. I knew these guys renovating this house were part of the Bare Back Grill gang. So, bottom line, you know they’re going to deliver Kiwi-style grass-fed beef and organic everything because that’s what their rep is based on. Nice to know. But it costs. Like, a kinda lamburger goes for $13. The “Sheila’s Cracked” burger with fried egg is $11.

But eating light tonight anyway. Check the apps. Hmm... Veggie skillet ($8), chicken on a stick ($9), soup and sammie (“tomato basil soup served with pine nut and cream garnish, mozzarella and American grilled cheese,” $9)...

Talk to Todd and Jennifer, on stools next door. He’s just getting his “Queenstown Favorite” burger ($10), and it does look wicked. Big patty with edam cheese all crumbled on top. She just has the mixed-greens salad with strawbs and pine nuts ($8). Looks great. Plus, they have a bowl of sweet-potato fries with blue-cheese crumbles on top ($3.50 for the small, $6 for the large).

Chris, one of the waiters, brings out a giant pretzel on a plate with jalapeño cheese and mustard for somebody nearby. But that’s $9. Think I’ll get more with the soup and sammie.

I order that and it slurps down great: sour cream in the middle, with plenty of liquid to dunk the crustless cheese sammies into.

Love the atmos. Turns out the house has been here since 1905. “Any stories about it?” I ask Angeline.

“Well, there’s the ghost, named Wanda...” she says confidentially, just before she whips off to a crowd of new customers.

Salvation Alley sliders

“This joint is dedicated to the memory of Jake Blues.”

It’s a gold-lettered sign above this bar, the B.B. Blues Bar.

Jake Blues?

We’re in the belly of the beast here, the venerable (okay, only eight years old in San Diego) House of Blues (1055 Fifth Avenue, at C Street trolley stop, 619-299-2583).

Happy hour, natch. Troops of black jean/black tee/black shades musicians stumble by, hauling their amps and axes and skins down to the lower music hall, or maybe the upper. Or one of the lounges. It’s a labyrinth.

Sitting at this bar around six at night, and Eric the barman has brought me a $2 Bud Light. Deal. People here seem to be eating before they go watch one of the bands. I see they’ve got Turbonegro on tonight. No, not Latino rock. Uh, Norwegian death punk.

Think I’m in Salvation Alley right here. Heavy Spanish lanterns, Frida Kahlo mural, another featuring Ray Charles at the piano, and, live and in living color, at the Voodoo stage, a DJ named Mike White, who’s corralling a bunch of songs that go from the Beatles to Anthrax, sounds like.

So, I’m checking the happy hour menu: it’s a nice surprise. You’d think they’d rip you off for the privilege of being here in the company of Turbonegro. But, no. Chef Aaron Sanchez starts his HH specials with $2 french fries or cole slaw. Three bucks buys sweet-potato fries or mashed potatoes, $4 gets grilled cheese with fries or chicken tenders without. I know. Cholesterol city. But this is the kind of place you let your belt out a notch anyway. A Lincoln buys you cornbread with maple butter, a dip and chips, or a quesadilla (but $3 extra to add chicken, $4 steak).

The real stuff starts at $6. Chicken tenders with fries, chicken wings with coleslaw, or pulled pork sliders. Ah... Now we’re talking. Top dollar ($7) gets you “hand-stretched” flatbread with basil pesto and tomato, no meat. Or two meatball sliders.

Really no contest. Sliders or sliders. Pulled pork or meatball.

“Pulled pork,” I tell Eric.

“I’ve had the burger here,” says this guy at the next stool. Al. Wearing a Stars and Stripes bandanna, ID tag, belt, and shades. I’m figuring him for a band member. “No,” he says. “I come for the music and the burgers. Ask for well done. When they’re pink, I get zits.”

So, next I get a red cloth napkin and flatware, and then Brian, Eric’s assistant, brings me my two sliders.

Uh, okay, first glance is a little, like, “Honey I Shrunk the Kitchen,” because the buns are about 2½ inches big. But, turns out, they’re delicious and surprisingly filling. The sliced pickles help.

Plus, seems like I’m in famous company, chowing here.

“Everybody comes after their show,” says Eric. “From Billy Idol to Britney Spears. Also, we have good acts right onstage here after seven. Free most nights. Especially early in the week.”

So, guess the trick is to get your chow and grog right before seven, happy-hour prices, then linger while one of these shows pops up on the Voodoo stage.

Oh, and Jake Blues? I totally wilt when Eric tells me what I shoulda known: “One of the Blues Brothers. John Belushi. Died in 1982.”

D’agh! “Actually Dan Aykroyd turns up here every now and then,” Eric says. “He came down on his bike, with bikers from Oceanside, for the opening here eight years ago. He’s a really nice guy.”

Gotta go. I raise the last of my glass to Frida, over there on the wall. “You and Diego would dig this scene,” I say.

Radio king. Is former Padres owner John Moores about to squeeze the music out of a local radio station?

Since he sold the Padres for a reported $800 million, Moores has jumped feet first into local radio. In January, his investment capital company, JMI Equity, adopted a more mainstream approach last year, the two stations are competing for the same listeners. FM94/9 is currently in 16th place among all listeners countywide, while 91X is in 18th place.

While it is unclear what Moores would do with either

An attempt to get a response from Moores through his assistant was unsuccessful, but Mike Shepard, head of programming for BCA, says that Moores is in fact in the hunt for other local stations. “He is bullish on radio,” says Shepard. Executives at Local Media San Diego (91X) did not respond to a request for comment. John Dimick, who oversees radio for Lincoln Financial (FM94/9), said, “No comment.”

Moores may not be the only person looking to make a move in radio. Other insiders wonder if former radio exec John Lynch, who was lauded as a visionary in the '80s when he created 91X as a modern-rock station and brought San Diego its first all-sports station (XTRA Sports 690), is hankering to get back into radio.

Lynch is the right-hand man for U-T publisher Doug Manchester. “I think Lynch knows that this UT-TV thing is a major flop. No one is watching,” says a radio insider. “Plus, he just pulled the plug on [daily Temecula/Murrieta newspaper] The Californian and fired the whole staff. He just bought it last year. That’s a major failure. I’m sure he misses being a radio king.”

Pantsless in the streets.

“We wanted to have something that represented chaos and congestion that is often the life we live, with the diverse traffic of our everyday lives,” says Mad Traffic singer Blaise Guld of their new City EP, which sports a cyberpunkish cover rendering the band’s logo as a mechanized urban cityscape. “The cover art was digitally rendered by our as people and as a band. The true test of friendship is being crammed into a van together with a bunch of musical equipment for a week straight.”

Mad Traffic interviewed by Playmate of the Year Jessica Hall friend Tony Washington, who designed artwork for Lady Gaga and the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles franchise.”

The group was recently interviewed by former Playmate of the Year Jessica Hall on the new SiriusXM show Playboy’s Happy Hour. “Our lawyer Jeremy Evans went to high school prom with Jessica,” says Guld. “He gave her a call, and we were interviewed at Playboy Studios in Los Angeles. We played a few songs and told some raunchy stories.”

Such as? “Some funny X-rated backstage tour stories. They’re not appropriate for the Reader.”

The road reminiscences Guld is willing to share for print begin with their first SXSW appearance last year in Austin, Texas. “That trip changed the way we looked at each other, us he couldn’t pay us because nobody showed up. Boo!”

Mad Traffic appears at the Harley Davidson dealership in El Cajon on June 15, and at Mother’s Saloon in Ocean Beach on June 22. “We’ve been pounding away in the studio and plan to release a new single every month until late this year,” says Guld.

Yello aspirations.

(Charles)Book&Record’s Zack Wentz is stoked at the possibility of meeting Yello’s Boris Blank. Wentz describes the process of entering a contest for which the grand prize is “a trip to Zurich to hang out with Blank”:

“Shelby [Wentz, his wife] and I are longtime fans of Yello — possibly our favorite band. Although I don’t own a cell phone, I was excited to see they had created a smartphone app for making music. I let Taj and Shelby know, and they downloaded Yellofier and started playing around. We then saw that there’s a contest for tracks made with Yellofier, so we took one of the more polished jams Taj had built in Yellofier, tracked vocals over it to make it a (Charles)Book&Record song, and submitted ‘Bodies Out Back.’ It’s a surrealist nursery rhyme from the perspective of a child hitman.”

"The fellow with the most votes seems to be complaining that we tracked material over Yellofier-generated music, as if that shouldn't count. But there's no direct indication in the rules that this is the case. They basically say, 'Make a song with Yellofier, and be sure you don't use anything you didn't generate yourself.' In other words, they don't want to get sued for promoting music that contains un-cleared samples."

Rookie vamp. Encinitas resident Nathan Young is part of So Say We All, a collective he describes as a "writing group that's blown ourselves out of proportion." On the final Thursday of every month, the group hosts a storytelling showcase called VAMP at the Whistle Stop in South Park.

Adam Gimbel is a veteran performer in another sense. For years he has fronted San Diego bands such as Geezer and Rookie Card, so he is no stranger to manning a mic in front of crowds. After watching some of his friends performing at VAMP, Gimbel decided to take the plunge and soon learned this is no open-mic night.

According to Young, potential storytellers must submit their ideas to the collective, who then choose the six to eight best offerings to run through their vigorous critiquing/refining process. "Performers" then particular importance, according to Young.

"We really feel like this is what sets us apart," Young explained. "We don't want our performers standing up there with their head down, reading thought I knew what to do, and I knew I wouldn't be able to do it for one person. That's always harder than a room full of people reacting. I found it hard to 'perform' for one person, but hearing me reading so poorly for my coach made me painfully aware of how I should be reading. I might not have rehearsed it out loud otherwise, and it would've been a disaster."

Gimbel feels that the pressure of this type of reading surpasses that of the typical rock show.

"It was definitely more nerve-racking. I'm usually either hiding behind a character or a loud guitar, and it felt deathly quiet to have that many people, packed into that small of a space, all listening intently."

— Dryw Keltz

VAMP man Nathan Young will get you ready to perform, not just read off the page. We want them onstage with their head held high, giving a well-rehearsed performance."

"I thought dealing with a performance coach was going to be annoying," Gimbel tells the Reader. "I've been performing onstage for a very long time. I

This Week In Music

Thursday 6

A leggy lovely in a sequined cocktail dress with a Flying Vee around her neck...uh, if that's not enough to get you off the couch, brah, check out the chops. Grace Potter & the Nocturnals will blues-rock your socks off. And with their latest, The Lion the Beast the Beat, GPN show they've got the boogie down, too. Thanks to the Black Keys' Dan Auerbach digging in up to his elbows on this one, the Nocturnals stretch out from their comfy country-blues roots to explore some instrumental Hammond jams and unleash Potter's Joplin-topping vox to toe-curling effect. They will take the stage at Humphreys by the Bay on Thursday, kicking off this summer's hummers out on Shelter Island.... From Austin, Texas, Bloodshot recording artist Wayne "the Train" Hancock rolls into Soda Bar. The king of juke-joint swing this year released a pretty personal set in Ride, following the breakup of his longtime band. But even the low-down blues, like on the track "Low Down Blues," have got that inimitable Hancock hoodoo. San Diego's own Screamin' Yeehaws open the show.... Else: Def Jam rapper YG ("Toot It and Boot It") will be at House of Blues behind this year's full-length debut, Im 4rm Bompton...CityBeat scribe Peter Holslin's disco-sludge trio Bruisecaster will be up the Fifth Ave. hill at Tin Can Ale House with Vaginals and Invisible Path...and industry dealio "Sunset Sessions" moves into Belly Up Thursday through Saturday. The only band on a long-ass list of bands that jumped out at me was Detroit electro-pop duo Dale Earnhardt Jr. Jr., which drifts in on Saturday.

GRACE POTTER & THE NOCTURNALS AT HUMPHREYS BY THE BAY

Friday 7

"The Dwarves Are Still the Best Band Ever" is the first track on the Dwarves' 2011 comebacker The Dwarves Are Born Again, an 18-song set that finds the SanFran thrash-punk band as intent on debasement as ever. But it's cathartic, as Blag Dahlia and company continue to cut through to the primordial ooze inside all y'all. The last song's called "The Band That Wouldn't Die." Can't beat 'em, might as well join 'em at Soda Bar, after Fuzz Bombs and Coda Reactor.... What Happens in Hell, Stays in Hell. Haunted psychobilly trio the Nekromantix hits Casbah (619-232-HELL!) Friday night. Dave broke down the show in this week's Of Note, so flip or click to that for more on them. The Silver Shine, a punkabilly band from Budapest, touring in support of their brand-new record, In The Middle of Nowhere, and like-minded locals Gore Horseman will open the show.... 'Round town: Up at the Tin Can, Black Sands, Kenneth Brian Band, and Mrs. Henry fill a country-fried bill on Bankers Hill...from San Antone, punk-metal four-piece Evil Come Evil Go visit their "Iron Maiden-meets-Misfits" mayhem on Midway hideaway the Shakedown...and Zero 1, featuring TV personality Hal Sparks, will be at Brick by Brick with Tool tribute Spiral Out. There's a Tool tribute?

THE DWARVES AT SODA BAR

Saturday 8

Catching up with Big Black Delta, I came across a linked tidbit that in 1975 David Bowie was on Cher's variety show and they performed a duet of "Can You Hear Me" off of Young Americans. I did what I had to do and took the "Klondike Five-Seconds to Glory" challenge by watching that weirdness on YouTube. I kicked its ass, bitchachos, going 26 seconds. That's when Cher and her hairdo come in. I didn't fair as well with Big Black Delta's Big Black Delta. But it's supposedly really good. And good for you. The space-rock act will be at Casbah Saturday night. Tiny Telephones and

BIG BLACK DELTA AT CASBAH

Okapi Sun up first. (I also looked up Okapi because I knew you'd want to know. It's an animal. Half zebra, half giraffe. I want one).... Best of the rest: psych-pop San Diegans the Donkeys clop into Soda Bar after the Cat Burglars (up to 75 Likes!)... Groovie Ghoulie horror punk Kepi Ghoulie plays Ché Café with Dog Party and the Maxies... '60s hit machine the Beach Boys wash up where the surf meets the turf, headlining opening night at the Del Mar Fairgrounds... while northa town, Stray Cat Lee Rocker will be slappin' de bass at Ramona Mainstage.

THE FLESHTONES AT CASBAH

Sunday 9

"Pardon us for living, but the graveyard is full." From New York, New York, CBGB garage-rock alums the Fleshtones appear at Casbah Sunday night. After 35 years, the storied quartet is still touring and recording, for the past decade on the prestigious (read: oldster) Yep Roc Records label. The Fleshties' I.R.S. debut Roman Gods stands out and still holds water if you need an intro. And they got a new one due in 2014, which they'll probably preview. Bart Mendoza's pop-rock throwbacks True Stories and sci-fi garage-rockers Shake Before Us open the show.... Best of the rest: House of Blues and Club Mercy host a "Back to Basics" hip-hop event, featuring Dilated Peoples, People Under the Stairs, Del tha Funky Homosapien, the Visionaries, and more...a '90s style pop-punk trio from Rock Springs, Wyoming, the Shocktroopers, will take down the Shakedown after Dago's '70s-style bangers Sculpins and the Last Years...while out at Tower Bar, Teenage Burritos, the Trashies, Stalins of Sound, and Kids in Heat fill a fun punk'd bill under the City Heights steeple.

Monday 10

Casbah's Anti-Mondays have got O.C. alt-pop act the Steelwells through June. This week, Miss Americana Nena Anderson and her Mules and will set it up. These things are freebies, by the way.

Tuesday 11

Wu-Tanger GZA, takes the mic at Porter's Pub at UCSD Tuesday night. For his upcoming solo set, Dark Matter, "The Genius" raps about rocket science, yo, spelling out the Big Bang on a scholastic level. In a recent PBS special, GZA told a group of Bronx high school students that his new record "is inspired by science...it's all about the universe." The hip-hop hit intends to "use hip-hop to teach everything from biology to physics." I think that could work. Like, mnemonics.... Miss the door to that, go check out JC Brooks & the Uptown Sound at Belly Up. The Chicago-based "post-punk soul band" released one of this year's essential sets with Bloodshot record Howl. Local backyard-to-barroom rock-rollers Grass Heat fire it up.... Or if you're in the mood for some Fair food, one of Rolling Stone's 100 Greatest Guitarists of All Time, Dave Davies of the Kinks, will be at the Del Mar Fair. Davies's I Will Be Me dropped last Tuesday and features a pissah list of guest artists — Jayhawks, Anti-Flag, Dead Meadow...

Wednesday 12

Couple three good ones Wednesday night, as borderland goth-pop band Dancing Strangers, Seattleites Import/Export, and local up-and-comers Bulletproof Tiger fill a synth-rock bill on Bankers Hill at the Tin Can Ale House...the Void stages Night Owl Massacre with Dark Globe, which, damn, where have those guys been?...and Llamadors play a CD-release set at the Soda after noisy twosome Late Night Racket, Flowerthief, and, put your flip-flops on, Hot Sands.

NOTE

BY DAVE GOOD

"Murder for Breakfast?" Oh, hell yes. The Nekromantix are making the rounds, still touring behind 2011's What Happens in Hell Stays in Hell, and they have a stopover planned for San Diego. The Danish-American psychobilly power trio goes back to 1989, when an ex-submariner and drummer named Kim Nekroman switched over to upright bass and started the band based on what he was hearing from the States: Stray Cats and the Cramps. But Nekroman went dark with his band vision in the way that norsk musicians often do, and better so than most. For example, Nekroman made his own double bass using a child's coffin, a standard upright bass neck, and a crucifix. Haunting and memorable in a celluloid sort of way, the band wouldn't have survived this long on such borrowed trouble and assumed roles unless they had substance. "Who Killed the Cheerleader," for example, sounds horror-movie trite, until you come to learn that the song is really about loneliness, alienation, and the dark sides of pop culture — presumably American. Do they even have cheerleaders in Denmark? No. Probably not.

Since the Nekromantix are Nekroman's vision, it makes sense that he is the only consistent member of a band who has a long list of ex-members with horror-flick stage names, such as Troy Destroy, Wasted James, and Grim Tim Handsome. Yes, it all does sound pimply and geeky, but 1994's Brought Back to Life got a Grammy nomination. Return of the Loving Dead, released in 2002 on Hellcat Records, and as such a bit late for the rockabilly revival, still got this band their first major U.S. distribution and thereby opened them up to a wider audience. Forget about the nonsense — behind the props and shock song titles is an entertaining trio of roots rockers. In a word? Frantic.

NEKROMANTIX: Casbah, Friday, June 7, 8 p.m., 619-232-4355. $16 advance/$18 day of show.

EVERYONE'S A CRITIC

Comedown Machine

By Andrew Malmuth

When the Strokes released Is This It in 2001, it wasn't uncommon to hear them proclaimed as the saviors of modern rock 'n' roll. Their sound was gritty and focused but also loose and catchy.

Now, over a decade later, the Strokes have released their fifth album, Comedown Machine, and while they still have the ability to write captivating songs, their sound has taken on new, sometimes awkward, dimensions.

"All The Time," "Partners in Crime," and "Happy Ending" have some of the qualities that coursed through their early material: driving, energetic guitars; bouncy bass lines; and wry, witty lyrics from frontman Julian Casablancas.

Some of the other songs, however, dabble in atmospheric melancholy ("80's Comedown Machine," "Call It Fate Call It Karma"), new-wave synths ("Chances," "One Way Trigger"), and aggressive punk breakdowns ("50/50"). This makes the album a sometimes off-putting blend of styles; yet, Comedown Machine has its moments, and it is largely a fun listen from start to finish.

The Strokes' new one is a blend of styles but a fun listen from start to finish.

Music Reviews from Our Readers

Gaslight Anthem brings the '59 Sound to Belly Up

By Johnny Caito

"You can tell Gayle if she calls, that I'm famous now for all of these rock and roll songs," sang Brian Fallon. "And even if that's a lie, she should've given me a try."

The Gaslight Anthem's performance proved singer/songwriter Fallon's deceit to be more truthful than not, as evidenced by the sold-out crowd hanging on every word and singing the lyrics to their favorite songs.

The 22-song set opened with tunes from their 2008 release, including "High Lonesome" and the album's title track, "The '59 Sound." The high-energy performance also featured fan favorites "American Slang," "Great Expectations," "1930," and "Mulholland Drive." Slower tracks were peppered into the set list, showcasing Fallon's vocals on tunes such as: "Mae," "National Anthem," and "Here's Looking at You, Kid," before closing with the hard-rocking "Backseat."

Slower tracks showcase frontman Fallon's vocals.

Epic in the Flesh

"We are your chosen people... can't you choose someone else?"

Lamb's Players' Fiddler on the Roof is one of the best shows they've ever done. Ever.

The title comes from a wall painting Marc Chagall did for the Moscow State Yiddish Theatre in 1920. He did several previous fiddlers — hatted heads tilted, overcoats, bow-legged knees — on various Russian roofs. For Lamb's, designer Mike Buckley's whole stage is a Chagall: buoyant, squiggly clouds on a white-mottled blue sky; roofs floating over Anatevka (or are they rising — or falling?). Even the floor has squiggles like the sky, as if the stage picture could, in fact, be upside-down.

Tevye, the harried milkman, explains: "In our little village...you might say every one of us is a fiddler on the roof, trying to scratch out a pleasant, simple tune without breaking his neck. It isn't easy." Buckley's inventive set makes for a fragile image of a Jewish shtetl on the cusp of change.

Lamb's added another rinse: Jerry Bock's score has many klezmer inflections, based on the Jewish folk music that originated, many say, in Romania. Klezmer's modeled on the human voice and ranges from laughing to weeping. Fiddler's usually performed with a regular orchestra. Lamb's music director G. Scott Lacy uses a six-person klezmer band: accordion, trumpet, clarinet, cello, percussion, violin. The sound's as distinctive as hearing Robert Johnson or Blind Willie McTell strumming Delta blues on 12-string guitars.

The capper: in most versions, the "fiddler" is faking it, hand-synching the bow while a violin does the playing from the pit. At Lamb's — and his first appearance was a wonderful surprise — Ernest Saucedo plays the instrument beautifully and moves around the stage like a sprite.

And he's always there in time of need: the one constant, like a slender through-line, in a village doomed to extinction.

Tevye's become such an icon, he's often played as an epic in the flesh (à la Mostel, Topol, Bikel). Compared to these legendary performances, what Sam Zeller does looks almost too humble at first. His Tevye's just a man: put-upon, torn between certainty and chaos, more than a mite irreverent, a lousy biblical scholar, but with an abiding humor (much more, in fact, than Sholem Aleichem's original, who doesn't make the transition).

"We are your chosen people," Tevye kvetches at his Maker. But once in a while, "can't you choose someone else?" Like a mailbox repeat-of no return when she runs off with a non-Jew). The outside world collapses as severely. A burly actor who tows his heavy cart like a tired ox, Zeller gives Tevye a (well-earned) resilience and adaptability. His weighing of factors (“on the other hand”; “on the other hand”) is a delight. If such a being were possible, he comes to resemble an impish Job.

Robert and Deborah Gilmour Smyth co-directed this feast for the eyes and ears. The original Fiddler set (1964) used a revolving platform. Under the Smyths’ direction, a large cast — at least 25, maybe more — moves as if on one, and as buoyantly as Chagall’s clouds. So does Colleen Kollar Smith’s choreography: from hardy Russian bottle-dancers to Hassidic dervishes. And when the script calls for an over-the-roof image, as in “Tevye’s Dream,” the show delivers.

Tevye’s oldest daughter, Tzeitel (Charlene Koepf), must marry wealthy Lazar Wolf (gruff John Rosen) but is in love with Motel (Brandon Joel Maier), a poor tailor. When she convinces Tevye that love must trump tradition, he fears what his wife Golda (the excellent Deborah Gilmour Smyth) will say. So he falls asleep and dreams — nightmares, actually — that Wolf’s first wife, Fruma Sarah, rises from the grave and condemns a marriage with Tzeitel.

Next thing you know, the floor opens behind Tevye and Golda’s bed and up floats Sandy Campbell, and up and up, maybe 15 feet in the air, wearing a long white judge’s wig, trailing a tattered, grave-gritted white train, and singing a freaky-funny prophecy (the dazzling scene’s almost a parody of Angels in America: “Ancestors in Anatevka?”).

From individual voices to impressive choral effects, the production’s a treat throughout. Nowadays, when audiences leave a musical, they often complain there’s no song to hum on the way home. Fiddler’s the opposite: there are too many. People exit Lamb’s crooning hybrid-songs: “Sun-rise, Sun-set, swiftly flow the TRAW-DEE-SHOAN!!!”

FIELD NOTES

1. The image of a fiddler on a roof reflects Marc Chagall’s own life: son of poor Hassidic parents, he came of age near Vitebsk, a shtetl in Tsarist Russia. Fiddler is set in 1905 (when over 100,000 people died in purges; many of them Russian Jews). In 1907, Chagall left the village to study art at St. Petersburg. His religion taught that one could commune with God through music and dance. The fiddler allows access to the divine.

2. Jews marrying outside the faith. Back in the 19th Century, a Czech nobleman fell in love with a Jewish woman from the shtetl in Prague. Their parents vowed to disown them if they married. They did. She died giving birth to a daughter. He died soon after, they said, of a broken heart. The daughter, raised by a poor teacher and his wife in the shtetl, was Marguerite Rosenberg, my father’s mother. ■

THEATER LISTINGS

Theater listings and commentary are by Jeff Smith. Information is accurate according to material given us, but it is always wise to phone the theater for any last-minute changes and to inquire about ticket availability. Many theaters offer discounts to students, senior citizens, and the military. Ask at the box office.

The Dinner Detective

Performers are dressed just like everyone else, leaving all of the guests to suspect who is a part of the show and who is not. At the end of the night, prizes are awarded to the Top Sleuth who solves the crime. Each ticket typically includes an interrogation reception, a four course meal, the interactive Murder Mystery show, music, prizes, and more. Accomplice: San Diego

Your group follows clues and seeks shady contacts in the La Jolla Playhouse’s site-specific/walking mystery tour of historic Little Italy. I’ll keep mum about specifics, except to say you will see the world differently, since everyone on the street or in a restaurant’s a suspect: are you our next guide, are you for real or an actor? The trip, in the end, is a goodly hike (and an eye-opening look at Little Italy). Success will depend on individual groups and their willingness to work together to solve puzzles, some quite tricky, and set a criminal even freer. Per-

MIXTAPE, The Greatest Hits of the ‘80s

Jon Lorenz and Colleen Kollar Smith, creators of this revue of 1980s music, say that favorite songs “mark your memories.” miXtape is performed with rampant energy and polish by an eight-person cast. Memory-triggers zip past:

Pet Rocks, Pac-Man, Nelson Mandela, AIDS. Most of the songs are actually song-bites. But backed by Andy Ingersoll’s versatile band and under Kerry Meads’s feisty direction, miXtape is always entertaining — and memory-provoking. (Note: Lamb’s Players has extended the run several times) 619-437-0600. HORTON GRAND THEATRE, 444 FOURTH AVE., DOWNTOWN SAN DIEGO. 619-234-9583. 7:30PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 8PM SATURDAYS, 4PM SUNDAYS, 7:30PM WEDNESDAYS, THROUGH JULY 28.

Seascape

In Edward Albee’s evolutionary comedy, Nancy and husband Charlie did everything society demands: married, had children and grandchildren, worked hard — and now face the unknown. Enter Leslie and Sarah, human-sized sea creatures with the same dilemma. In the long second act, the quartet learns to face tomorrow. Director Kim Strassburger gives the production a much-needed balance between the real and the absurd (though the characters do go on). Wearing Shirley Pierson’s excellent costumes, Justin Lang and Amanda Morrow excel as the creatures, their movements most of all. As Charlie, Jack Misset could abandon a foggy, James Stewart voice. Dana Case plays Nancy with gentle persistence and pitch perfect deliveries. Although the visuals are a delight, there’s less here than meets the ear. Worth a try.

NEW VILLAGE ARTS THEATRE, 2787 B STATE ST., CARLSBAD. 760-433-3245. 8PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 3PM & 8PM SATURDAYS, 2PM SUNDAYS, THROUGH JUNE 9.

Shakespeare’s R&J

Joe Calarco sets his play in a repressive, all-male boarding school where the students aren’t just brain-washed, they’re brain-dried by rules and regulations. The only way they can express their spring awakenings — including for each other — is by performing Shakespeare’s verboten tragedy. Calarco’s text(s) pushes actors to extremes: both physical and verbal. Cygnnet’s opening night had the theatricality down pat. Director George Ye moved his four actors with speed and grace. But the acting varied. Lines got delivered at a Morse-code clip. Scenes were stronger at the beginning than the end. The quartet showed signs that they would settle in. And Dave Thomas Brown and John Evans Reese, in multiple roles, were already there. Worth a try. CYGNET THEATRE, 4040 TWIGGS ST., OLD TOWN. 619-337-1525. 7:30PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 3PM & 8PM SATURDAYS, 2PM & 7PM SUNDAYS, 7:30PM WEDNESDAYS, THROUGH JUNE 16.

Spamalot

The 25th Annual Putnam County Spelling Bee

OnStage Playhouse presents the musical (by Rachel Sheinkin, music and lyrics, William Finn) about the “championship of a lifetime.” James M. McCulloch directs. ONSTAGE PLAYHOUSE, 291 THIRD AVE., CHULA VISTA. 619-422-7787. 8PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 8PM SATURDAYS, THROUGH JUNE 8.

The Divine Sister

Diversionsary Theatre presents Charles Busch’s “homage to every Hollywood film ever centered on the convent. No nun, whether singing or flying, is spared.” DIVERSIONARY THEATRE, 4545 PARK BL., UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS. 619-220-0097. 8PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 8PM SATURDAYS, 2PM SUNDAYS, THROUGH JUNE 30.

Write Out Loud: Food for Thought

Write Out Loud, the popular theater troupe, specializes in bringing literature to life by reading it “out loud.” “Food for Thought” presents “classic and contemporary stories about our relationships with food.” Authors include M.F.K. Fisher, W. Somerset Maugham, and Wallace Stegner. Worth a try. OLD TOWN THEATRE, 4040 TWIGGS ST., OLD TOWN. 619-337-1525. 7PM MONDAY.

Thames travel

A monumental achievement in cinema-as-time-travel. Writer, director Julien Temple (Absolute Beginners, The Filth and the Fury) and his frequent editor, Caroline Richards, availed themselves of the opportunity to boil down 800 hours of sparklingly restored archival footage into a chronicle of modern-day London. The duo fling wide “the Gate of God,” starting with the birth of cinema and refusing to come up for air until 133 minutes later, when their variegated wild ride through a culture in which luxury and corruption too frequently go hand-in-hand comes thundering to a halt. Too many nonfiction filmmakers cheat their audience by passing off clips from silent narrative cinema as documentary fact. Temple and company gleefully — and with a tremendous degree of style and wit — acknowledge the illusory basis of their undertaking, depicting the past as only the lens of a camera can capture it. Narrated by Michael Gambon. Hurry, the show closes at the Digital Gym on June 9.

REVIEW: WISH YOU WERE HERE

A must to avoid for those planning a trip to Southeast Asia, Wish You Were Here is bound to impact weekend get-aways to Phnom Penh in much the same way Midnight Express put the kibosh on Turkish tourism. At least this time, we're allowed to suffer in style.

In their pursuit of oblivion, four friends vacationing from Australia (Joel Edgerton, Felicity Price, Teresa Palmer, and Anthony Starr) party the night away at a remote Cambodian holiday destination only to wake the next morning with big heads, minus a chum, and unable to recall the events of the previous evening.

“A holiday to remember became a trip they would never forget.” Even the tagline reeks of a lifetime of Lifetime Channel one-offs, right? And yet... The best way to describe the film in commercial terms is The Hangover for people longing to be challenged mentally, not the other way around. Not only are the female leads allowed to develop beyond their cup sizes, there is more virtuoso storytelling at work in the exquisitely elucidative opening credit sequence (don't come late!) than you'll find in many of this summer's thrillers combined.

It's not an implausible whodunit — that's why God gave us Now You See Me — nor is it a conventional mystery. The complex flashback structure — designed by first-time writer/director

Kieran Darcy-Smith and his wife, leading lady, and co-author Felicity Price — skillfully (and succinctly) weaves in and out of time frames and locations without once having to rely on intertitles to clutter its path. We don't begin to learn the “how” or “why” until well over halfway through the picture, and by that time we are so caught up in the lives of others that our raison d'être has all but evaporated.

Like a pair of veteran Vegas dealers, Darcy-Smith and Price cut and shuffle the exposition, doling out just the right amounts of clarification to keep audiences on their toes. In terms of box office, this gnawing thriller will never

PRODUCT PLACEMENT IS SO YESTERDAY

Let's just cram the films into our commercials!

If you've been to the movies lately, you've probably seen the Star Trek-based Esurance ad where a Starfleet ship gets into a fender-bender with an alien vessel. It was cute, right? A little Trek riffing right before the real Trek? That split-second jolt of "Hey, it's the movie!" before you realized that it was just a commercial?

Apparently, that just wasn't commercial enough. I mean, it didn't utilize Kirk's devil-may-care sex appeal, nor Spock's smarter-than-thou advice, nor Scotty's tech genius, nor J.J. Abrams's judicious CGI and orgasmic lens flares. To say nothing of Benedict Cumberbatch's Cumberbatchiness. Seriously, what was the point?

Which is probably why I saw a Chevron Star Trek ad before a screening last week, hawking the minimart/gas station's new instant-win game. "Don't walk," it commanded in between actual clips from Star Trek into Darkness, "or even run." Instead, "Warp to Chevron!" The final tagline? "Be logical. Play today." (If they had posted the actual odds of winning after that last bit, that would have been funny.)

Look, I know that Star Trek as a pop-culture entity has been hawking crap since forever...DIRECTV, MCI phone plans, even Kentucky Fried Chicken. (For some reason, Apple never got around to bringing them onboard, even after Scotty's delightful "Hello, computer!" scene in Star Trek IV. But I guess what bugs me here is the fact that STID is still in theaters, and bits of actual film footage are showing up in Chevron commercials. It just feels a little...invasive.

Of course, it could be worse: Monsters University appears to have lent its footage to Lowe's Home Improvement before the film is even released. (I'm not even going to mention Swiffer here.) The whole thing feels crass. So, to celebrate, I'm going to start suggesting that every new release find a way to incorporate itself into a Durex condom ad. Durex knows from crass. Star Trek is easy, what with Kirk's tendency to bed girls who aren't just strange — they're aliens. She's got a tail. Who knows what else she's got? Go boldly, but always use protection. Durex.

And while it may be a Disney film, Monsters University is still a film about college life. Just with monsters. Is what you just woke up next to a little scary? Good thing you wore a Durex!

And, of course, the upcoming Man of Steel gives us a very bulgy Superman. Just because you're the Last Son of Krypton doesn't mean you want to become a dad. Durex.

MOVIE LISTINGS

All reviews are by David Elliott, Matthew Lickona, John Rubio, Scott Marks, and Duncan Shepherd. Priorities are indicated by one to five stars and antipathies by the black spot. Unrated movies are for now unreviewed. Thousands of past reviews sorted alphabetically, by year of release, and by rating are available online at SanDiegoReader.com.

After Earth — The single star is because the setup is fine — almost great, even. Estranged father and son (Will and Jaden Smith) survive a crash-landing on a hostile planet. Dad's injured, and so it's the son who must retrieve an emergency beacon from a distant chunk of wreckage. Technology will keep them in contact and allow Dad to see what son sees. Time is against them, along with everything else. The elder Smith assumes an affecting stoicism; he's a hero because he doesn't feel fear, but he doesn't appear to feel much else, either. So much for the good stuff. The rest is absurd emotional outbursts from the unready younger Smith, absurd anthropology (fear is not, in fact, a choice; the response to fear is a choice), absurd anthropomorphism (Mama bird!), absurd expositional visions, and Signs-style alien hijinks from director M. Night Shyamalan. A dimly shot, poorly scored misfire. 2013. — M.L. ★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Before Midnight — Late in the proceedings of this, the third installment of Richard Linklater's relationship gabfest, Jesse (Ethan Hawke) gets a mid-argument chance to make a list of his beloved Celine's (Julie Delpy) flaws. "Well, for starters, you're fucking crazy," he begins — and gets no further. But sometimes, a one-item list is enough. It's Celine's insanity — or at least, her panic over losing herself to the roles of supportive lover and loving mother — that prevents Before Midnight from becoming a detailed, scenic, static portrait of midlife. Aging and raging, she's the motor that makes this a movie. It's been nine years since last we saw the couple; now, they're finishing a summer vacation in Greece. Jesse has just sent his son back to his ex-wife in the States, and he (understandably) wants to be closer to the boy. But Celine has just been offered a job in France. Cue the verbal fireworks. 2013. — M.L. ★★ (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA; LANDMARK HILLCREST)

The Company You Keep — Arrogant rookie reporter Ben Sheperd (Shia LaBeouf) sets out to make history by exposing a former member of the Weather Underground, currently on the run from the law for a murder he allegedly committed 30 years ago. Nick Sloan (Redford) apparently learned more from watching action movies than his time spent as a member of the radicalized anti-war movement. Just when you think the heat has the drop on him, Sloan pops on his cheaters, tugs down the brim of his baseball

Epic — As Pixar gets digested by Disney, Blue Sky Studios steps up and takes its shot at the title for innovative animated storytelling. (The CG animation itself is pretty innovative as well, particularly when it comes to water, sunlight, and facial expressions.) The biggest success is at the level of emotion: a teenage girl's alienation from her crackpot father, a leaf-warrior's grief over the loss of his beloved queen, and even a slug's hopeless pining for a pretty girl are handled with surprising deftness. But the story can't match the characters: when your bad guy's motivation is an arbitrary desire to upset the balance of nature, you've got a problem. The circle of life doesn't really allow for the binary struggle between good and evil. Director Chris Wedge sought to turn author William Joyce's source material from "a quaint story" into "a gigantic action-adventure movie," and the stretch marks show. 2013. — M.L. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Escape from Planet Earth (ULTRA-STAR CHULA VISTA)

Fill the Void — For a moment, Shira's (Hadas Yaron) dream man stands opposite her, a rabbi's son nervously using the tzitzit sticking out from beneath his vest to polish his specs. All this changes when her older sister dies in childbirth and their mother (Irit Sheleg), desperate to maintain control over her surviving grandchild, pressures her ultra-Orthodox 18-year-old daughter into marrying her brother-in-law (Yiftach Klein). The film excels at exposing a patriarchal belief system so antiquated that to this day it calls for women to walk ten paces behind men in public, segregation of the sexes in the synagogue, and arranged marriages. Visually, it's fuzzier around the edges than Shira's angora sweater, and melodramatically speaking, just as soft. The first film from writer and director Rama Burshtein. 2012. — S.M. ★★ (LANDMARK LA JOLLA VILLAGE)

Flight of the Butterflies IMAX — The iconic monarch butterfly is a true marvel of nature. It weighs less than a penny, yet it makes one of the longest migrations on Earth across a continent, with pinpoint navigational accuracy, to a secluded place it has never been. In Flight of the Butterflies, you'll join the monarchs' perilous and extraordinary journey while following an intrepid scientist's 40-year search to find the monarchs' secret hideaway. Featuring breathtaking cinematography, an award-winning production team, a true scientific mystery, and hundreds of millions of real butterflies. (REUBEN H. FLEET SCIENCE CENTER)

Frances Ha — Can we just go ahead and agree that the actress Greta Gerwig is (for better and for worse) our generation's Katherine Hepburn? Adore or despise, she is a force of nature, something to be reckoned with. Here, she makes vaguely misanthropic director Noah Baumbach put down his torturer's tools in favor of something positively humane. (Maybe it helped that she co-wrote the screenplay.) Mind you, Baumbach still puts his heroine through her paces: her disappointments on nearly every front — love, money, artistic dreams, even friendship — are expressed by her increasingly unsexy living arrangements. (It's New York City, so where you live says even more about who you are than usual.) But the suffering isn't of the numbing-dumbing variety; instead, it's the threshold that separates the wheat from the chaff. The black-and-white images of the city, the pathology of bad relationships, and Gerwig's awkward glamor will surely recall Woody Allen's Manhattan, but then, there are worse things to recall. 2013. — M.L. ★★★★★ (LANDMARK HILLCREST; LANDMARK LA JOLLA VILLAGE)

Funny Face (CINEMA UNDER THE STARS)

The Iceman — Michael Shannon is incapable of delivering anything but brilliance, and all too often, the success or failure of one of his pictures hinges on a filmmaker's ability to meet him halfway. Ariel Vromen (Rx, Danika) isn't quite there yet, as evidenced in The Iceman, a true-crime mob movie based on the life of Richard Kuklinski. Kuklinski is a one-time serial killer who decides to make cash off his hobby by going pro and joining the mob. We've marched these mean streets many times before, and apart from Shannon's ever-present intensity, the storefronts are beginning to look mighty familiar. Little meaningful attention is paid to the relationship between Kuklinski and his clueless bride, Deborah (Winona Ryder); the poor simp never once detected a trace of blood on her hubby's hands? Shannon so far outclasses Ryder as an actor that their scenes together frequently play like teacher and student, rather than co-stars bouncing off each other. Worth seeing, if only for Shannon and Ray Liotta. 2012. — S.M. ★★ (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

Identity Thief — Don't blame the Apatow connection for this one. Director Seth Gordon (Four Christmases, Horrible Bosses) steals a few chapters from the John Hughes playbook as he tries in vain to transform Melissa McCarthy into this generation's John Candy. Playing an alcoholic sociopath in a Bozo fright wig, she uses the money she electronically pilfers from middle-class schmucks to buy strangers rounds of drinks in hope of winning a friend. One of her victims (Jason Bateman) gets wise to the con and — for some reason known only to the screenwriter — must cart “Slobbin’ Hood” cross-country to help prove to his boss that he's not a crook. The problem is, John Candy was a dandy comedian, not Chris Farley with a vagina. Per usual, the shameless third act pathos (and the obligatory sow's ear makeover) prove funnier than any of the stuff passing for comedy that precedes it. 2013. — S.M. ● (ULTRASTAR CHULA VISTA)

The Kings of Summer — Two best friends, both in permanent disconnect from their parents, and an ethnic-looking, slightly addlepated urchin positioned to grace T-shirts as this summer's huggable answer to Napoleon Dynamite's Pedro, flee home to spend the summer cobbling together a dilapidated cabin in the woods. More Sundance-sanctioned tripe that never should have left Colorado. From its flat lighting to its stereotypical sitcom authority figures, this Summer reeks of television. As frustrated teen Joe Toy, newcomer Nick Robinson basically reprises his role as the haranged son on the current pass of Cox Cable TV commercials. The only thing flimsier than the narrative structure of this Walden's Kiddie Pond are the sawdust-and-spirit-gum beards the boys sprout to show a passage of time. This marks the first feature for Funny or Die veteran Jordan Vogt-Roberts. With Gabriel Basso, Moises Arias, and the new Wilford Brimley, Nick Offerman. 2013. — S.M. ● (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

London: The Modern Babylon — Reviewed this issue. 2012. — S.M. ★★★★★ (DIGITAL GYM CINEMA)

Mud — Writer-director Jeff Nichols (Take Shelter) treats 14-year-old Ellis and his friend Neckbone to a cornucopia of boyhood pleasures: walkie-talkies, taking an outboard up the river, a deserted island, a boat in a tree, old girlie mags, dirt bikes, chainsaws, fistfights, girlfriends, and looming over it all, a desperate outlaw in need of help. Matthew McConaughey is at his most Paul Newman as the titular Mud, a lovesick killer who draws out superstitious lore through teeth clenched round a cigarette. His plight is tragic, but the real story belongs to Ellis, a young man trying to believe in love despite considerable evidence to the contrary. Not just the romantic kind (though certainly that). The familial kind. The fraternal kind. Refreshing to see Southern folks portrayed as people, rather than trash or mystics. Go-to Southern gal Reese Witherspoon fizzles as the beloved, but the rest of the cast is perfect. 2012. — M.L. ★★★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Oblivion — A throwback piece of good-looking sci-fi, starting with the gorgeous and haunting image of a shattered moon, its debris stretching out into orbit. Happily, we are spared the resultant catastrophes; the emphasis here is more on Tom Cruise's self-discovery than his badassery, and hardly at all on saving the world. (Still, a few hectic set pieces do attempt to justify the biggish budget.) He plays Jack, a glorified janitor on a ruined earth, fixing drones and shooin' scavengers away from the water-collectors. But of course, he finds that everything is not as it seems. In keeping with the anxieties of the day, super-technology is not only not fetishized, it's practically demonized. (Does anyone really think drones are our friends?) Yes, we've got gyro-planes and swimming pools in the sky, but all we really want are vinyl LPs and a cabin by the lake. With Morgan Freeman, Olga Kurylenko. 2013. — M.L. ★★ (REGAL OCEANSIDE; ULTRASTAR CHULA VISTA)

Pain & Gain — Oy, Bay! Michael Bay, the Butcher of Burbank, returns, this time with one pound of script in a 20 lb. casing and a refrigerated display case fit to bust with shoulder cut of Mark Wahlberg, prime rib of Anthony Mackie, and filet of Rock. In order to help underwrite their addiction to steroids and dumbbells (and also to impress the bitches), a trio of meathead bodybuilders resorts to a life of crime by kidnapping an unscrupulous Florida businessman (Tony Shalhoub, in a role originally meant for Albert Brooks). Even with a fact-based account to guide them — the film is based on a series of Miami New Times articles — the director and his screenwriters still can't fashion a cohesive narrative. It's all flash and no panache as Bay borrows heavily from the Miami Vice playbook of swish-pans, flash frames, and singed color. With Ed Harris (trying his damndest), Rob Corrdry. 2013. — S.M. ● (READING GASLAMP; REGAL OCEANSIDE; ULTRASTAR CHULA VISTA)

The Purge — A family learns that no good deed goes unpunished when they admit a stranger screaming for help into their home during a government-sanctioned 12-hour legal free-for-all. Is it us, or is the notion of “getting the murder and rape out of your system by indulging once a year” right up there with bloodletting to release the ill humors in the body? 2013. (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Rocky Mountain Express — This IMAX film propels audiences on a steam-train journey through the breathtaking vistas of the Canadian Rockies and highlights the adventure of building a nearly impossible transcontinental railway. IMAX aerial cinematography, archival photographs and maps, and the potent energy and rhythms of a live steam locomotive immerse audiences in this story from the age of steam. (REUBEN H. FLEET SCIENCE CENTER)

The Room (LANDMARK KEN)

Scary Movie V — Those hoping for comic-quality due to the presence of Undercover Brother director Malcolm Lee will be disappointed. Everyone else will simply be depressed. What good is a PG-13 parody of R-rated movies? They bleep profanity, for fuck's sake! When the joke machine sputters, as it frequently does, cue Boots Randolph's “Yakety Sax,” set the camera to undercrank, and pay tribute to one of pop culture's most horrifying and diabolical creations, Benny Hill. Fans of Lindsay Lohan and Charlie Sheen won't get much more than what was already leaked in the trailer. Other celebrity day workers — Usher, Heather Locklear, Mike Tyson, Snoop Dogg, Katt Williams, Sarah Hyland, etc. — are on hand to pick up a paycheck and hot bowl of soup. Alas, our narrator, who plays “The Voice of Morgan Freeman” and turns in the film's sharpest, most satirically honed performance, receives no screen credit. 2013. — S.M. ● (ULTRA-STAR CHULA VISTA)

Scatter My Ashes at Bergdorf's — The most popular women's shoes at Bergdorf's sell for $6000 a pair. They can't keep them in stock. If just reading that fills you with egalitarian rage, then you will probably not enjoy this documentary profile of what is arguably the world's greatest department store. But if you can stomach the notion of fashion as wearable art — and department-store windows as art in the service of commerce — then there is much to glean here, and even a few things to enjoy. Director Matthew Miele tries to give his loving portrait a bit of narrative drive by showing us those fabulous windows from concept to completion. It's fun, but the real pleasures here are the personalities who make the retail magic happen. “What would you be doing if you weren't a personal shopper here?” he asks a longtime employee. “Probably drinking,” comes the quick reply. 2013. — M.L. ★★ (READING GASLAMP)

Sightseers — In order to escape an oppressive home life (complete with a dead dog), a guileless young woman (Alice Lowe) unwittingly takes up with a charismatic serial killer (Steve Oram). Badlands, it's not. Scripted by its two leads and the aptly named Amy Jump, director Ben Wheatley's infantile black comedy has one original idea going for it: the goal of reducing human emissions makes the couple cinema's first eco-friendly spree killers. It's a good concept, and one that is promptly done away with in a throwaway line. In its place flow a cascade of character inconsistencies. Oram's killer initially sees red over litterbugs and scenery-debasing graffiti, only to later turn on a tourist for demanding that he pick up after his dog. In hindsight, this forlorn road picture could have been considerably more tolerable had the couple simply stayed home and killed her mother. 2012. — S.M. ● (LANDMARK KEN)

The Smurfs — A mysterious vortex transports a race of little blue beings, no more than three road apples high, from their magical kingdom to the streets of Manhattan. Hey, kids, wanna hear some filthy smurfing words? “Plot.” “Pacing.” “Timing.” Four smurfing mothersmurfers are given screenwriting credit. It takes forever for nothing to happen, and when it does, there's no smurfing sign of style, wit, or joy. Raja Gosnell is credited with the direction; with Hank Azaria, Neil Patrick Harris, Jayma Mayes, and the voices of Jonathan Winters and Katy Perry. — S.M. ● (DIGIPLEX TEMECULA TOWER CINEMAS)

Star Trek II: The Wrath Of Khan (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA)

Star Trek into Darkness — Director J.J. Abrams at his most J.J. Abrams-y. A lens flare light show. A Spielberg homage (the opening is taken straight from Raiders of the Lost Ark). Deft nostalgia-mining coupled with equally deft placement of the extracted gems in the crown of his new creation (a Tribble plays a key role!) And finally, a series mostly coherent action sequences, clean execution at the level of character, and a feeling of old-fashioned Hollywood entertainment. Captain Kirk (Chris Pine) is now in charge of his beloved starship Enterprise, but his cocksure attitude gets him in trouble. First officer Spock's (Zachary Quinto) strict moral reasoning, once seen as a stumbling block, assumes the role of crucial counterbalance in the fight against one-man WMD John Harrison (an impassive and ominous Benedict Cumberbatch). Of course, the thing about WMDs is, there's always someone who wants to use one. With Peter Weller, Bruce Greenwood. 2013. — M.L. ★★★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Stories We Tell — Writer-director Sarah Polley turns the camera on herself and her family, revealing along the way that she was born as the result of an extramarital affair. 2012. (LANDMARK KEN)

Swan Lake Mariinsky Live 2D (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

This Is The End (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

We Steal Secrets: The Story of WikiLeaks — Investigative documentarian Alex Gibney (Mea Maxima Culpa: Silence in the House of God) turns his camera on Julian Assange and his crusade to make information free. Assange has denounced the project and refused to participate. Make of that what you will. 2012. (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

What Maisie Knew — A fairy tale of divorce, one that imagines a blissful way out of the trauma brought on by Mom and Dad putting a bullet in the love that gave rise to your existence. Julianne Moore is a comically narcissistic aging rocker; Steve Coogan is her gotta-ramble mate, and Onata Aprile is their sweet and watchful daughter. She's also the best thing about the film, her doe eyes displaying just enough wisdom to keep her from moppet status. The story is not so much about Maisie as it is about parents' ability to shovel bullshit at their kids in the cause of feeling better about themselves, and their kids' ability to pay attention and recognize what it is they're smelling. With Alexander Skarsgard and Joanna Vanderham as the pretty blond things that Mom and Dad marry. Not much more than kids themselves, they at least understand the primacy of children. 2012. — M.L. ★ (AMC FASHION VALLEY; LANDMARK HILLCREST)

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

An estimated 75 to 100 people had gathered at the site. There was a portable generator, strobe lights, and music. Surfers didn't mind the party so much as the broken beer bottles on the trails and the cans, bottles, and litter on the beach. Police found several tents on the cliff bluff, and people were sleeping out in the open in sleeping bags. Some slept in the middle of the trails, and there was a small fire pit there also.

A local gave warning to the violators before calling police; offenders had time to clean up the area and break down their camping gear. Three police officers responded to the call and made contact with the campers. No citations were written because the camping gear had been stowed away. At the request of surfers who stood by, the campers cleaned up their trash.

Since the 2008 beach booze ban at city beaches, Sunset Cliffs Natural Park has become a hangout for taggers, suspected gang members, and others looking for an unenforced area to party. There has been a significant increase in graffiti, broken glass, and empty alcohol containers at the beaches.

School buses unsafe, says Highway Patrol

Bus driver testifies before Sweetwater board on violations

Lawrence Gilly, who has been driving school buses for the Sweetwater Union High School District for 21 years, felt compelled to stand before the board of trustees on May 13 and advise them of the status of bus safety.

A bus driver for 21 years, Lawrence Gilly felt compelled to speak on the safety of buses.

For the second year in a row, Sweetwater's terminal received an "unsatisfactory safety compliance rating" after being inspected by the California Highway Patrol.

The specifics of the report include: "Failure to participate in the DMV Pull Notice Program, failure to enroll all drivers, failure to obtain periodic (up-to-date) printouts for all drivers"; "Motor carrier utilizing unqualified drivers"; "Violations generally spread over all vehicles and/or maintenance violations, which by their nature should have been detected and corrected under an effective inspection/maintenance program."

A spokesperson for the California Highway Patrol said on May 28, "Our job is to ensure and maintain proper working conditions, and we don't fool around when it comes to correcting things. We could come back at any time and inspect them at any time. Generally, the highway patrol likes to do things in a measured way."

IMPERIAL BEACH

A better pier, tax-free "At No Cost to the Taxpayers," reads construction notice

Strollers at the Imperial Beach Pier were recently greeted by a sign at the entrance proclaiming that improvements — mainly refurbishing and replacing worn, warped, wooden planks — are being carried out "at no cost to the taxpayers." The exact verbiage reads: "Another Port District Improvement Accomplished at No Cost to the Taxpayers."

According to port spokeswoman Tanya Castaneda, the bill for what's officially dubbed the Imperial Beach Pier Deck Refurbishment comes to $420,000 and gets paid for strictly from fees that the Unified Port of San Diego collects for rental space and various services, and not from tax revenue; it comes out of a fund called "major maintenance."

How long before construction is complete remains an open question. An estimated completion date of mid-May has come and gone. According to the spokeswoman, progress depends on when the port and its contractor, Kearny Mesa-based Khavari Construction Inc., acquires the lumber required — Douglas fir, cut typically into planks 24 feet long, 12 inches wide, and 4 inches thick. Each plank is said to weigh about 250 pounds.

About 70 percent of the planks on the pier (or about 840 of them) will have been replaced once the project is done. The last plank replacement and refurbishing project at the pier was in 2010.

The restrooms, which opened amid much fanfare last July, had been open 24 hours a day until mid-April, when a private security company began locking it up from midnight to 6:30 a.m. A 30-day trial period ended May 15, but now the city says that time frame was too early in the year to get a realistic idea of how the shortened hours could impact the community.

District 2 city councilman Kevin Faulconer and the city's Park and Recreation Department have agreed to extend the trial period another 30 days, until mid-June.

The extension came as an unpleasant surprise to some board members on May 22 at the monthly meeting of the Ocean Beach Town Council, who want the restrooms closed at night permanently — now.

During the first 30-day period, there was evidence of public urination and a defecation in the area outside the building during closed hours, but no vandalism, Faulconer aide John Ly said.

Park and Recreation favors the restrooms being open 24/7, Ly said, as is the case at the public restrooms at the lifeguard tower south of the Brighton Avenue restrooms. But people relieving themselves outside the building “should be a police issue, not a Park and Rec issue,” board member Jim Musgrove said.

BALBOA PARK

“No” on Monsanto

1000+ turn out to march against seed company

An enthusiastic crowd estimated at over 1000 gathered at the fountain in Balboa Park on May 25 as part of the international “March Against Monsanto.” The event took place simultaneously in 45 countries and 400 cities, according to local organizer Nick Bernabe.

The event's website lists reasons why this and similar protests took place: “Research studies have shown that Monsanto's genetically modified foods can lead to serious health conditions,” it states. “The FDA, the agency tasked with ensuring food safety for the population, is steered by ex-Monsanto executives.”

Jackie, a co-organizer of the event, said a provision of the “Monsanto Protection Act” “allows Monsanto immunity from federal prosecution, even though their crops are thought or suspected to be dangerous to the public.” MoveOn Civic Action has reported that the act “was written anonymously [and] passed in secret.”

“We believe that a corporation should not take over the food supply,” said event participant Elsa, an ESL teacher. “We deserve the right to know what's in our food. We want labels. We want the government to take action and protect the people.”

Mayor Bob Filner was unable to attend, but his statement of solidarity was read at the event.

Three's a Charm

— WIN $100 —

Find somewhere in our features (articles, listings, or classifieds) three instances of the same phrase.

A crossword-style clue to each week's phrase is located on page 1, the table of contents. In one instance the phrase will be in context; the two others will be out of context (they will seem like errors).

Contestants have from Wednesday until Sunday to log on to our contest page (SDREADER.com/charm) and punch in the three page numbers on which the phrase can be found. One winner per week. Contestants eligible to win once every four months. Any week there is no winner, the $100 gets rolled over into a jackpot the following week.
