Sunroad slurry to ooze through court

Reduced park space, environmental and safety concerns to be addressed

Sunroad Enterprises and the city will be heading back to court to fight yet another lawsuit over the developer's Sunroad Centrum development in Kearny Mesa. The city will be right alongside, defending their decision to allow Sunroad to proceed with major changes to the Centrum project without public review.

Evolution of Sunroad Enterprises' Centrum project plans, which proceeded without public review.

On May 8, Cory Briggs, the attorney for San Diegans for Open Government and CREED-21 (Citizens for Responsible Equitable Environmental Development), filed a lawsuit challenging the approval of large-scale changes to Sunroad Centrum, such as a reduction of 704 parking spaces, an increase in building height, and fewer feet of open space. In addition, claims the lawsuit, the developer will be allowed to go from a studio-oriented residential development to a multifamily residential building.

City staff first approved of the changes, without conducting any additional environmental studies, in January of this year. Since then, Briggs, on behalf of his clients, has made the rounds, appealing the decision to the planning commission last month, to no avail, and then to the city council, again to no avail.

The complaint states city staff and the planning commission, both nonelected entities, violated the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) by giving final approval to what amounts to a complete redesign of the development.

Controversy has surrounded the Sunroad Centrum project since May 2013, when the developer gave the city $100,000 in exchange for two nine-foot-wide strips of city-owned property adjacent to a Kearny Mesa park. The donation, received by then-mayor Bob Filner, came to light in a memo from the city attorney's office and soon made headlines and has since landed both the city and Sunroad in court.

That's where the two parties will remain, forcing the city attorney's office to direct additional time (read: taxpayer money) to defend giving away public land and allowing a developer to make substantial changes to a project at the last minute.

Who's the South Bay political mafia supporting?

You might've seen these ads on Facebook Ads for a San Diego County candidate for the state board of equalization favored by Republican publisher and real estate mogul Douglas Manchester and retired Democratic San Diego South Bay state senator Steve Peace have been popping up on web pages, thanks to online media buys by Peace's Independent Voter PAC.

Former Chula Vista mayor and GOP exassemblywoman Shirley Horton got $6000 from Manchester on April 21. The U-T has been particularly kind to Horton with friendly coverage due to what is said to be a discrete news and editorial relationship that has paid off with unusually strong support from Manchester writers.

Now, a group calling itself the Independent Voter PAC has weighed in with an online ad campaign for Horton. A November 8 filing with the California secretary of state's office shows that the PAC bought $3500 worth of Facebook ads on May 7, and more buys may

In November 2012, the Independent Voter PAC, then being managed by former Peace aide David Takashima, got major money from several of the state's big business and union interests and spent it on direct mail pieces on behalf of GOP state-senate candidate George Plescia as well as Proposition 30, the tax-increase measure favored by Democratic governor Jerry Brown.

In a telephone interview, Peace said that the PAC's goals this year are to support candidates who back the adoption and defense

Orange County-based Beatles impersonators the Fab Four are the closest you'll see to a local act at the Del Mar Fair this summer.

Non-locals only at the county fair

By Moss Gropen

f you want to sniff an Encinitas-grown rose or pet a Ramona-bred goat, come on down to the San Diego County Fair. But if you yearn to grab an earful from the county's best musicians, don't mosey over to the grandstand stage, because you won't find them there.

In fair-speak, the grandstand shows are known collectively as the "2014 Toyota Summer Concert Series on the Heineken Grandstand Stage." As of late April, the fair had booked 21 headliners. Three types of performers predominate: ersatz country-pop singers, rock and pop has-beens, as well as purveyors of regional Mexican music in ranchero/Tejano and related styles. Toss in acts characterized as "hip-hop," a gospel gaggle, and an a capella ensemble, and that's pretty much the lineup. But unless one counts the Fab Four (Beatles impersonators from Orange County) or Los Angeles-based Voz De Mando, San Diego area musicians, if they appear at all, will largely be relegated to obscure stages.

In some ways, the San Diego County Fair, with an emphasis on local crafts-

> Whatever the reason for snubbing San Diego pickers, singers, rappers, and rockers, the fair has little compunction when it comes to tossing around greenbacks. According to documents reflecting the contracts approved at the fair's March board meeting, money appears to be no object; the fair has agreed to dole out $1,243,500 for the first 17 acts secured alone. Individual fees range from $41,000 for Zendaya, a 17-year-old rap/hip-hop sort from Oakland who lives in Los Angeles, to a cool $200,000 for Hunter Haves, a Louisiana-born, Nashville-based baby-faced, candy-country-crooner who's been dubbed the "country Justin Bieber."

> By contrast, over at the Adams Avenue Street Fair, there's no difficulty in finding San Diego talent that will play — and play for a fraction of the fair's choices. According to Steve Kader, who books the 90 or so acts who played Adams in late April, almost all (90–95%) have a county connection; pay tops out at around $1000. Kader says, "I think the fair sticks with the 'tried and true' acts they think will draw. If I were doing it, I'd take a chance with some San Diego bands. They do an admirable job at the fair, but they're not big-money lobbyists and campaign contributors have gotten the nod from mayor Kevin Faulconer for high-profile city development positions. Donna Jones, a land-use partner at the downtown powerhouse influencepeddling law firm of Sheppard, Mullin, will continue to sit on the board of Civic San Diego, the redevelopment replacement commission. According to her law-firm bio, "She has obtained approvals for construction or expansions of everything from commercial buildings to resort hotels to shopping centers to landfills and, of course, residential — including master planned smart growth communities such as Del Sur." A regular campaign money player since 2007, the lobbyist has given a total of $23,670 to city candidates, including $1250 to fallen Democratic mayor Bob Filner and $2050 to the failed 2012 mayoral campaign of GOP district attorney Bonnie Dumanis. In the same race, she gave $1000 to Republican city councilman Carl DeMaio and $500 to then-GOP assemblyman Nathan Fletcher. Last year Jones kicked in $2500 to Fletcher's mayoral race but made her biggest contribution, $4000, to the ultimate winner, Kevin Faulconer. Covering all the bases, she forked over $1750 to losing Democrat David Alvarez.

Jones is to be joined on Civic San Diego by Ted Shaw, "a Senior Land Use Consultant at Atlantis Group with more than 25 years of experience," according to Faulconer's memo. Shaw, who used to work at Latitude 33, has given a total of $3501 to city candidates, records show, including $500 to DeMaio for mayor and $300 to Faulconer's 2010 city-council race. Lobbyist Marcela Escobar-Eck, whose client list includes Kilroy Realty, developer of the proposed One Paseo project in Carmel Valley, runs Atlantis. He's married to planning commissioner Susan Renee Peerson, appointed in March 2012 by GOP mayor Jerry Sanders. That cozy connection set off a ruckus among One Paseo opponents last year. "Mr. Shaw's employment at Atlantis which acts as a registered lobbyist for Kilroy Realty has a direct bearing on the decision that his spouse Ms. Peerson has to make on the proposed One Paseo application at the Planning Board," wrote Carmel Valley resident William Bibb. "Mr. Shaw makes considerable money at Atlantis. As his spouse, Ms. Peerson has a substantial community property interest in this compensation — tens of thousands of dollars." Peerson subsequently agreed to recuse herself from hearings and voting on the matter.

Oxymoronic

I had written a letter to you in answer to David Child's letter (April 24) suggesting a nonreligious column in addition to your religious section — I, as an atheist, without belief, to promote my nonbelief. David wrote back, shorting me out with a ridiculous speechmaking letter, which I had answered.

Now, you've published a letter titled "Self-Wrongeous" on May 15 by Dorothy Casey where she tells me that I am not an atheist. ending her disagreement with all that I had written even though she said what I had said, in her own words.

I see the problem as one where the definition of the word is defined by each of us relative to our own wants. Putting an "a" in front of the word, to be a part of that word, reverses the meaning, which says that an atheist believes there is no god. In other words, there is no sapient being answering our prayers and deciding who are its favorite people. She agreed with that as if she was correcting me.

The problem seems to be with the word "belief." Of course atheists have a belief! There is no sapient being out there. Agnostics also have beliefs, but on this topic they don't know or care about it, as Dorothy has said the same thing in her own words. My statement that atheists don't believe was based on the supposition that we were talking about God. She says an atheist has faith in their opinion, and therefore they have a belief, which is a knee-jerk reaction to my letter. "Faith" in this context should not be used in reference to both atheists and agnostics. It is, to me, oxymoronic.

Because she sent her letter via snail mail, I assume she is without a computer and cannot look up thepp. org and be educated on many more subjects she probably agrees with; she iust doesn't know it.

Lindy's Nazi Antics

I would like to comment on the topic of Charles Lindbergh and the Nazis (Under the Radar: "Faulconer Funder Nails Top Airport Spot," April 24, and "Gleason a Miscreant," Letters, May 8).

Lucky Lindy clearly had a clear affinity for Nazi Germany. He established a residency there. He constituted nuptials there, while still married to his American wife, and fathered several German children. Lindbergh was also popular in Nazi social life. At Hitler's order, Hermann Goring presented him with the prestigious German Eagle medal.

With regard to Colonel Lindbergh's World War II record, his pro-Nazi antics disqualified him for service in the U.S. Army Air Crops. President Roosevelt personally pulled his ticket. By the war's closing years, flying for private contractors, it is true that Lindbergh sortied alongside American fighters.

The degree to which these experiences favorably impressed him, however, remains unclear. His wartime journals harshly criticize American troop behaviors in Japan; in 1970 he published arguments contending the U.S. had lost the Second World War.

Lindbergh's bigoted views also render problematic his legacy. Interested readers should skim through his 1941 Des Moines, Iowa speech. Clear thematic overlaps connect his lan-

Oceanside top-cop salary to jump 13 percent

"We need someone really special"

Following an unsuccessful national search for a qualified replacement, the Oceanside City Council voted 4-1 on May 7 to keep Frank McCoy on as police chief for another two years.

Frank McCoy agrees to remain police chief until Oceanside finds its guy.

McCoy officially retired last October but had agreed to fill in as interim police chief, earning an hourly wage until a successor was found. The position was advertised this spring and included a base salary of up to $194,000.

McCoy said he planned to spend the next two years working to lower crime rates in the city, to implement technology that will help officers do their jobs, and to ensure the police department's efficiency.

Councilman Jack Feller said McCoy had done "an exemplary job" as chief and rehiring him was a "solid decision."

"The decisions made by the police chief are pretty critical to how the city's moving forward and we are making great strides in reducing crime," Feller said. McCoy will receive a 6.5 percent increase in his annual salary each year, which will drive his base salary up to $208,304 this year, according to a council staff report.

Deputy mayor Esther Sanchez, who cast the dissenting vote, said although she believed McCoy was responsible for lowering the city's crime rate, the 13 percent raise was a concern, that a 3 or 4 percent increase would have been more acceptable, considering rising healthcare and living costs and the city being unable to afford most employee raises.

Councilman Gary Felien said that although he shared in the frustration of taking on the added expense, he saw it as the price of staff development that would lead to an in-house hire.

City manager Steven R. Jepsen requested the two-year extension so McCoy could be involved in succession planning and staff development, in hopes that a qualified member of the Oceanside Police Department could be promoted at the end of the term.

"We are a very, very special community here, and I think it takes somebody really special to be our police chief," Sanchez said. "I do think that there are a couple of candidates internally, and perhaps they're not ready yet."

ENCINITAS

The Roundabout Capital of California

Is this an accident waiting to happen?

Caltrans has announced future improvements to the Birmingham Drive/Interstate 5 interchange in Cardiff by the Sea — roundabouts, rather than traffic signals.

The Birmingham Drive exits are the last remaining I-5 interchanges that don't have traffic signals. Motorists have to practice their rights-of-way knowledge when quickly getting off either the northbound or southbound off-ramps. During the morning and evening commutes, drivers are delayed while awaiting their turn and traffic backs up.

Birmingham Drive/Interstate 5 interchange

Rather than expensive signals, which lead to increased congestion (a problem compounded by the southbound off-ramp location of the Encinitas fire station's signals), Caltrans put forward last week the idea of installing roundabouts as a possible solution.

Following its reputation as the "Flower Capital of the World," Encinitas is becoming known as the "Roundabout Capital of California." Three roundabouts are already in use: two on Leucadia Boulevard and one off Santa Fe Drive, with five more planned on Coast Highway 101 from A Street to La Costa Avenue.

Interviewed on May 8, local motorists at the exits' three gas stations commented on the roundabout plan for the heavily used Birmingham Drive. One described it as an "accident waiting to happen."

Others said they felt most drivers do not know how to use roundabouts. That may be true, as the DMV did not include roundabout driving rules in the California Driver Handbook until 2010.

Fires require evacuation of Helen Woodward Animal Center

When fire evacuations were ordered in the Fairbanks Ranch and Rancho Santa Fe areas the afternoon of May 13, the staff at the Helen Woodward Animal Center sprung into action.

The center's evacuation plan called for the small dogs and puppies to be taken to the Petco store in Encinitas. Some larger dogs were taken to the Rancho Coastal Humane Society and other sites around the county. Shannon, a Helen Woodward staff member who was coordinating at Petco said, "The center planned for this emergency. The evacuation went well."

At 4:15 p.m., Heidi from Encinitas put out the call for volunteers on Twitter and Facebook to all of her friends, and also listed on several another social media sites. Others did the same.

In its live-TV fire coverage, at around 5:30 p.m., KUSI also put out a call for volunteers. By 6:00 p.m., enough volunteers had arrived at the Petco to cuddle, calm, walk, feed, and clean up after each of the 30 or so puppies.

The puppies were going to spend the night in the store's training room — several volunteers had planned to spend the night with them. However, at 7:00 p.m. it was announced that Petco arranged for the pups to be moved to the Pooch Hotel in Mission Valley at no cost to the animal center.

hat are you going to do today?" It was a simple question. It begged for a simple response, something positive, something short, along the lines of how one might answer — at least in polite society — the similarly innocuous query, "How are you?"

But this was not polite society. This was my bedroom. And I wasn't even wearing pants; it doesn't get more casual than that. Not that it mattered. My mind doesn't do "simple" in any setting. The question David asked me, however innocently, had triggered an exceptionally complex, Rube Goldberg-style machine in my brain, whose sole purpose is to elevate the level of cortisol in my blood.

"What am I going to do today? What are you going to do today?" I whipped my head around from the closet doorway to lay my glare at the source of my sudden torment: my poor husband who had, a moment before, been safely browsing the headlines on his phone from the comfort of our bed.

David had the look of a man who'd made it halfway across the meadow before noticing the DANGER: MINEFIELD signs posted all around him. "Sorry," I said, wincing when I remembered that he'd repeatedly asked me to stop saying sorry so much. "Sorry for saying sorry. Shit, I can't...just, you know," I said.

David's face relaxed and he raised his brows at me, the signal that he was ready for an explanation. Countless times he's told me there is never any subtext in his questions. That I should know his "What are you going to do today?" was not some kind of test; he wasn't waiting for me to answer so he could pounce with, "Why are you going to spend your time on that and not this other thing that's way more important?" David wouldn't do that. But I'd think it, and I'd assume he was thinking it, too, no matter how many times he told me he was not.

I took a deep breath and sat beside him on the bed. Remembering a communication technique I learned as a teenager (the time my parents put the whole family through the 12-step program for codependents), I was careful with the phrasing of what I said next.

"When you ask me something like, 'What are you going to do today?' I start freaking out in my head because, well, first of all, I have no idea, and that scares me. But, mostly, it's because whatever it is I'm going to do, I'm worried it's not going to be what I'm supposed to be doing. So I got defensive and snapped at you, but really I was just frustrated with myself."

David laughed, and this time it was he who apologized. "I'm not trying to diminish what you feel, love, it's just that — come here," he opened his arms and I joined him

"It's okay, you can laugh," I said. "I know I'm being ridiculous. But it doesn't change how I feel. I have a hundred things I could be doing, but I don't know what I should be doing."

"I never think of what I'm supposed to do, I think of what I want to do," David said.

"Yeah, but you have to have priorities," I argued. "I could sit and read all day, but then I won't be able to pay my bills. And it's not like I dread the work. It's not like I have to scrub toilets. I enjoy doing all the things on my to-do list, so I feel bad even complaining. But it's, like, if I start working on one project, I feel guilty about all the other ones I'm not working on. I'm having difficulty prioritizing my shit. It's all equally important to me."

I stopped short of saying that I sometimes longed for the straightforwardness of my old day-job. There's a sort of liberation that comes with limitations. That's why David insists on taking just one lens when he goes on a photography excursion. Instead of fussing over lens choices, he's free to think only about the composition of his shot.

As a freelancer, I shift from one project to another and often juggle several at once. I find the constant challenge to be both exciting and rewarding, but it can also be terrifying, and never more so than when I'm struggling to decide what to do next.

David made his way toward the shower

while I got dressed and reflected on this pressure I felt for what I'm "supposed to" be doing. According to whom? I mused. Whose intentions am I so eager to act out? My parents'? The Universe's? Another way to phrase "supposed to" is "meant to," as in expected to, as in destined. But I don't believe in destiny. Luck, sure, but fate? I reject the notion of having — as the people at my father's universal spirit center would put it — a "calling." Then again, if there was no right thing for me to spend my time doing that day, why was I so worried about choosing the wrong one?

I found David in the bathroom. He'd finished washing but was still standing as he does, thinking about the day ahead as scalding hot water leaves a long red streak on his back. "Leave the water running, I'm going to hop in after you." David adjusted the temperature for me and grabbed the towel I held up for him as I took his place in the

As the warm water flowed around my neck and down my shoulders, I remembered what that one psychologist said, the one I stopped seeing because I couldn't tolerate her bedazzled jeans: my daily decisions aren't good or bad, they aren't right or wrong. They just are. Choosing whether to spend five hours responding to email or updating my website was not a moral dilemma. It was a matter of priorities. But what if my priorities are wrong? I rolled my eyes at myself and chuckled. Now I knew how David felt. ■ (@barbarellaf)

Spanos: "Loose Lips Sink [Clipper] Ships"

An audiotape has recently surfaced in which a man tentatively identified as San Diego Chargers owner Alex Spanos chides former Los Angeles Clippers owner Donald Sterling for talking "about anything that matters to a woman."

Longtime owner Sterling was recently banned from the NBA for racially offensive comments he made to his alleged girlfriend V.

Stiviano during a phone conversation that she apparently recorded. Now, the gossipmongers at TMZ claim to have another recording, this one of a conversation between Spanos and Sterling

"It bothers me a lot that you let it get out there that you talk about anything that matters to a woman," says the man TMZ claims is Spanos. "Do you

Sterling says that all he did was talk with someone he's attracted to. "I think the fact that you're attracted to [Stiviano] - I've known her well, and you should be 2 attracted," Spanos replies.

"And I'm just saying that it's too bad you can't keep that to a purely physical thing. And during the next three or four years, be attracted to her — bring her on the road, feed her, fuck her, I don't care. You can do anything. But don't talk to her on the telephone for the world's women to hear so they think they're people. And don't bring her to poker night at the cabin in Vail. Okay?"

Reached for comment, the San Diego Chargers and the NFL were quick to respond. "Women, amirite?" said Chargers general manager Tom Telesco. "Always with the talking. And you see where it gets you?"

"Women are the single biggest obstacle faced by the > National Football League today," added NFL commissioner Roger Goodell. "It's bad enough we've diluted our brand with pink jerseys and crap for them to buy, even though they're constantly pulling true fans away from the

"Bring me the throwing arm of Peyton Manning!"

The Wizard of SpanOz

SOMETHING SOMETHING GASLAMP GASBAG — Fans attending last Thursday night's game between the San Diego Padres and the San Francisco Dodgers might have been forgiven for believing they'd come down with an unseasonal case of Football Fever. No, they didn't hallucinate that they were watching a winning professional sports team in San Diego. Instead, they were treated to a amid a burst of flame and smoke and delivered a booming ultimatum audible to everyone within a mile radius:

"I am SpanOz, the great and powerful! You dare to ask me to remain in San Diego? You cretinous Charger-clinging couch cucumber! Silence! I have every intention of winning an AFC title. But, first, you must prove yourselves worthy by performing a very small task. You must build me a publicly financed stadium so that the Chargers' brilliant play may take place in surroundings befitting its wondrous excellence. Only then will I grant your desperate pleas for vicarious victory. Now pay! But pay no attention to the $450 million, publicly financed stadium full of losing teams behind me! The great and powerful SpanOz has spoken!"

The Padres went on to lose the ensuing game 8-4, dropping their seasonal record to 10-18, and their record since Petco Park's 2004 opening to 807-842.

Sterling to Spanos: "Between the restraints, the booze, the drugs in the pipe, the knife, and her...other equipment, let's just say [V. Stiviano] had ways of making me talk.

Bad Dads? Padres =

"The Donald Sterling scandal has had one good effect," says Samantha Serious, community organizer for Rename All Culturally Insensitive Sports Teams (RACIST), "the first serious, ownership-level discussion about racism in professional sports since the Atlanta Braves were renamed the Atlanta Exploited. Now, at long last, San Diego seems to be ready to take a look at the disgusting history of Western-style colonial patriarchy and oppression represented by its name and mascot: a Catholic missionary priest."

RACIST has been blanketing social media with the collection of photographs, accompanied by the following caption: "Why NO SWINGING FRIAR? (1) Because he represents the worst kind of cultural and political imperialism. He arrives from far away, claiming to be sent by an invisible but loving spirit in the heavens who must be obeyed; (2) He promises great blessings from this spirit (3) to anyone who will listen to him and follow his teachings. He claims to have special magical powers (4) that allow him to forgive sins against the heavenly spirit. Once his authority has been established, he begins to condemn various practices that undermine his control; (5) Finally, he reveals himself for what he is: the first wave of a conquering, invasive military force (6), bent on plunder and dominion. This is the smiling face of tyranny, San Diego. #RENAMETHEPADRES."

Reached for comment, a spokesman for Padres management replied, "I'm just glad they didn't include a shot of the Swinging Friar with some little kid on his lap."

POST TITLE: Inner Simplicity
POST DATE: January 13, 2014

As we seek to refresh and revitalize ourselves, getting to a place where our minds can experience calm and quietness is vital, as it allows us to listen to our inner needs. While it can be a challenge to find your calm in all the busyness, here are a few tips taken from Inner Simplicity [a book by Elaine St. James] to help turn down the outer noise.

Tune out the news: Ignore televised news, newspapers, and gossip magazines more often. Missing out on the latest political argument or celebrity tabloid will free up your own internal energy.

Resist engaging in gossip or complaining: These activities are draining and provide noisy mental clutter.

Spend time in nature: Go for a walk outside, alone. Listen to quietness, the wind in the trees, deeply breathe in the fresh air, absorb some sunlight, experience the calm. Resist bringing your cell phone.

Slow down: Take a break from constant multi-tasking, stop going to places or out with people when you really don't want to. Free up some of your time, and reduce the need to be in a rush.

Challenge: Spend one to two weeks following these tips. Once you gain more mental clarity, start thinking about what you don't want in your life. What areas of your life need less attention? Are you satisfied with the way you spend your time? Are you able to identify ways to turn down the mental clutter? Begin tackling your priorities!

POST TITLE: How to Choose Your Next Self-Help Book

POST DATE: March 9, 2014

Self-help books are common go-to sources of information, advice, and support. With hundreds of millions of dollars in sales each year, it seems reasonable to say that we are dedicated to the idea of self-help. Yet, if these self-help books worked such wonders, we would likely see a lot more happy and content people.

There are two main reasons why our money spent on self-help books does not necessarily amount to money well-spent. The first issue is that many offer information that we can't understand or apply to our real lives. They offer complicated perspectives that sound insightful and intriguing but show us nothing in the way of an actual process for change. Essentially, we get momentary hope and inspiration rather than instruction for real changes. The second issue is on us. We buy the book, feel inspired, and work the plan for a little while; then we get off that train without even realizing it.

When choosing your next self-help book, look for these five things.

- 2. No promise of immediate change Making psychological and behavioral changes is a process that requires sustained effort. Look for books that offer realistic expectations.
- 3. Mention of theoretical/research base Information built upon research is more likely to be reliable and transferable to the reader's situation.
- 4. Specific directions for behavior change Books that only offer the authors' insights or perspectives can be useful but is generally not sufficient in itself to create actual change. Look for self-help books that contain specific and detailed instruction on how the reader should change their behavior. This allows the reader to engage in concrete strategies and transfer the information to their own situations.
- 5. Focus on a targeted problem-area A single self-help book is unlikely to resolve all the concerns in every area of a person's life. Books that focus on a specific area of concern offer concentrated information on that topic and are more likely to be written by an author with expertise in that area.

No self-help book will ever change your life. A book can, however, offer insights and techniques that help you help yourself.

Sport packing

Copper River is "a ferocious river. It's primal.

It's a scary river."

here's packing for an afternoon at Petco Park. Pack for a Chargers game. Pack for a picnic. Pack for camping, for camping in snow, in rain, for camping in the mountains, in the desert. Pack for sleeping in your car, pack for a car trip, plane trip, train trip, sea trip. Pack for hitchhiking. Pack for hiking. Pack for an overnight trip, an out-and-back trip, for a weekend trip, a two-week vacation, a one-month retreat. Pack for a trip around the world. Pack for a trip that has no end. Follows are the stories of three people and how they pack for their trips.

"Got to have a mat I can unroll. I don't want a big sleeping bag." Speaking is Matt Tunney, who, in his 20s and 30s, hitchhiked for, low end, 250,000 miles.

"I'd take a spare pair of pants, two spare shirts, three or four changes of underwear, plus a hooded sweatshirt to keep the wind off my neck.

"Always, a thermos. The thermos would have some kind of cup attached. And something to heat water in, cook in. And silverware. Zippo lighter and some matches. I'd have a Dostoyevsky and a Shakespeare and a notepad. Some food, cheese, bread, and fruit.

"Got to have a towel. When you're hitch-hiking, you're desperate to find a place to shower — can't count on finding a shower and a towel in the same place. For showers, it's best to meet somebody and use theirs. Universities and colleges are always good. Another shower source were hotels. Down in the basement near the employee locker room.

"I'd never carry rain gear. I got myself soaked, but it was just extra crap to haul around. For hitchhiking, packing took 15 minutes. I could be out the door in 15 minutes."

Suzanne Caine is a labor lawyer married to a university professor. They travel overseas nearly every spring and/or summer.

"One of the things we try and do is buy Swiss underwear, because it's very thin, light-knit cotton. I have two skirts, one pair of slacks, one pair of shorts, a very light silk dress, lightweight linen jacket, cashmere sweater, and a nylon rain jacket I wear on the plane.

"We take one of those stretchable laundry lines and a nylon-mesh laundry bag. There are Glad bags. I put the laundry stuff and a sink stopper in one, toiletries in another. We have collapsible silicone glasses to drink out of, a collapsible water bottle, and a collapsible hanger.

"When we first started out, we took a lot of stuff with us." Suzanne laughs hard, "We had a big suitcase, a duffle bag, our backpacks, the two carry-ons..."

It's a seven-hour drive from Fairbanks down to Chitina on the Copper River and its annual salmon run. Robert Dewey has made that trip unto the decades.

"You always have to take an extra net, because the likelihood of one getting bent or failing is considerable. You want various nuts and bolts and mechanical fixtures to put broken handles together or make extensions for the handles you have. And several wrenches that are sized to the nuts and bolts you're using to assemble things. Fire-lighting stuff.

"I take my .44 and ammo for dealing with bears. Twine to repair the nets. Clothing is complicated because you have to anticipate a variety of conditions. You have to dress from really hot to pretty damn cold and wet. Fast-drying pants and Polypro underwear.

"You need hardware for stringing your fish. A stringer is a line you put in the water to keep your fish in good condition after they're caught. You might be getting 90 fish if you have three people. Then, an array of headlamps with extra batteries, because sometimes you're fishing until midnight.

"You'll want a selection of nicely sharpened knives to clean and gut fish. Coolers, you've got to have enough coolers, because you've got to pack a shitload of ice to keep the fish fresh. It's nice to have spoons. I like to use grapefruit spoons for cleaning out fish cavities after the guts have been removed.

"And you've got to make sure you have good rain gear. You need to cover your butt for food. Energy-dense food, because it's a marathon.

"I always take a pair of vise-grips because they can clamp anything. I take a hatchet with a hammer head on it. Life jackets. You do not want to be fishing on that river without a life jacket. If you fall in that river without one you're fucking dead for sure. It's the canyon where the Copper River comes boiling through. It is a ferocious river. It's primal. It's a scary river."

No excuse for bad fashion

For spring break, my family, a few friends, and I drove nine hours to camp among the cliffs and Fremont cottonwoods of Zion National Park in Utah.

The second day we were there, my kid wore a crisp, white button-down and a nice pair of tan-colored jeans.

"You need to change into a T-shirt and shorts, or something. You are going to wreck your clothes."

REBECCA BOLAND AND SAMANTHA CLARK

THE LANDSCAPE SERVED AS OUTFIT INSPIRATION FOR BOLAND AND CLARK.

He let out a lengthy sigh. "Camping is no excuse for bad fashion."

My response? "Camping is the only excuse for bad fashion."

He reluctantly changed into something more sensible.

I had packed a pair of hiking boots, yoga pants, fleece jackets, a wool sweater, tanks, ratty T-shirts, jeans, and my favorite beanie. It was an array of wardrobe items I normally reserve for bedtime or yard work — the kind of stuff I didn't mind getting dirty.

One afternoon we drove out to nearby Bryce Canyon National Park. With my hair in a sloppy pony tail, wearing an old T-shirt and a pair of yoga pants, I hiked the Navajo trail. I ran into Rebecca Boland and Samantha Clark, dressed for the occasion — Boland in an Aztec-themed poncho and sun hat, and Clark in a simple patterned jumper. I questioned my assertion that camping is an excellent excuse for bad fashion. I had serious outfit envy.

"We knew we would be taking a ton of pictures on our hike, so we wanted to dress to match the background," Boland told me.

"We tried to dress comfortably and cute at the same time," said Clark.

"We tried to keep with a Western theme," added Boland.

Boland and Clark were visiting from Toronto and staying at a campground outside of Zion.

"The national parks in the U.S are great," said Boland. "Next year we are going to Yosemite."

I imagine they will wear a whole lot of plaid and forest-green shades for the occasion. ■

This vintage villa was designed and built in 1930 by renowned local architect Richard Requa. He is known for works including the original Torrey Pines Lodge and an update of Balboa Park for the 1935 California Pacific International Exposition, including design work on the park's Old Globe Theatre.

The property boasts nearly 200 feet of direct frontage on the San Diego Bay in Point Loma's La Playa neighborhood. Sited at the end of a private cul-de-sac on over a quarter-acre gated lot, the home itself has four bedrooms and four baths spread across nearly 3700 square feet of living space.

"Panoramic views are enjoyed from most living areas in an open floor plan that flows from one room to the next for easy entertaining," boasts the property's marketing materials, "and family and friends are encouraged to gather by the inviting gourmet's kitchen."

The spacious and secluded master bedroom features two private balconies, a walk-in closet, and "a spa-like bathroom featuring a large Jacuzzi tub and steam shower."

Other amenities include a three-car detached garage, exposed-beam ceilings with custom arches leading from one portion of the living area to the next, windows that open directly onto the harbor, and an elaborately-carved wood-and-glass entry door featuring two egrets along a shoreline.

Outside, multiple patios and terraces feature tropical landscaping. One terrace features an outdoor fireplace that leads to a grassy yard next to the seawall. All outdoor spaces offer panoramic views of the bay and harbor, set against the backdrop of San Diego's downtown skyline.

A staircase leads from the back yard down to the water or, during low tide, a private stretch of beach across from the Shelter Island harbor that provides a walking path to Kellogg's Beach or the San Diego and Southwestern Yacht Clubs.

In November 2013, the city granted preliminary approval to plans to build a full pier and private boat dock at the end of neighboring Owen Street. An artist's rendering of the addition is available on a website created by the property owner to showcase the listing.

Dear Hipster:

Why are all you such pretentious douches? Is it wrong of me to want to hit all of you in the face? What is especially troubling is how you guys are now starting to show up at the "hippie" concerts that I love. Why don't you just keep listening to Mumford and Sons, you have already stolen them from us, and, frankly, we don't want them back.

— IAC

What flavor Haterade are you drinking there? I at least hope the chilling callousness with which you disregard an entire subculture keeps it icy cold! Nobody likes warm bitterness.

FDA approved ingredients

High blood pressure okProstate removal ok

Safe and effective

No side effects

Heart disease ok

Besides, hating hipsters is so mainstream.

You see what I did there? By pointing out how unoriginal your anti-hipster platform is, I deflect your rage. Your anger glances off my Wayfarers as I crash your hippie concert. Did you catch O.A.R. at the BellyUp? I was at a Terrible Ivan house show in South Park that night.

But, seriously, who doesn't hate hipsters these days? There's a glut of blogs, a tumult of Tumblrs, a concussive mass of YouTube videos all vitriolic toward hipsterkind. People go so far as to wish death, or at least collective face punching, upon total strangers. And for what? The common complaint goes like, "those fucking hipsters stole my x," where x can be hippie concerts, fashion, or beverage. An old, but still Google-popular, post from a blogger (the ironically named and notvery-wise, "Unconventional Wisdom") accused hipsters of stealing her favorite beer, Pabst Blue Ribbon. So what if she hadn't even been born yet when Pabst sales experienced their historical peak in 1977? I would illustrate here that people hate hipsters because they perceive us as malignant cultural pirates, carelessly co-opting other people's coolness, thereby robbing said cultures of any "authenticity."

I would ask you this: is x-culture so flimsy that it collapses beneath the weight of gentle homage (and occasional pastiche) at the hands of ironic urban youth? Are the hippie concerts you love of such fragile cultural capital that sharing them with a few mustachioed, fixed-gear-riding baristas could dilute the universal artistic sentiments of smoking weed and not working too hard? Perhaps, instead of being so territorial over your stuff, you and the rest of the hipster haters could just accept the flattery of imitation. We're cool. We like your stuff. Ergo, your stuff is cool. Dig?

Dear Hipster:

What's the best beach in San Diego?

— SARA

O.B. has too many hippies. P.B. has too many bros. Shores has too many tourists. I.B. is in I.B. Mission has too many tourists. Oceanside is too military. Solana Beach is too quiet. Swami's and Cardiff have too many surfers. Torrey Pines has too many tourists. Black's has too many naked hippies. Some of the remaining La Jolla isn't even beach...and it still has too many tourists.

Come to think of it, beachgoing isn't a big hipster pastime. Somebody has to hold it down in the urban interior while the rest of the world flocks to the sea. We're not the kind of subculture that desires a deep, all-over tan. There's a chance that sun exposure compromises the integrity of our tattoo hey go really high, almost to the point where you can't see them anymore, and they come down real slow."

Maybe you've been in the Gaslamp at night and noticed purple lights ascending above the mayhem of partiers and rancorous lines outside the clubs. Those lights are Comet Copters flying, courtesy of Charlie Griffin, who makes a tidy gig-living from the rubber-band-powered contraptions as well as from blowing huge soap bubbles around town.

Griffin, 32, who goes by the self-assigned moniker of "The Bubble Guy of Coronado," has tried a lot of ways to make money, but his role as a dispenser of novelties has proved the most lucrative; he's just moved to Coronado and life does seem to be all (as the quaint saying goes) "Skittles and beer"

"I was having the worst day of my life, a really, really bad day. My friend said, 'Make some bubbles.' I wasn't into making bubbles. I said, 'Fuck your bubbles!' She said, 'Just try it.' She wouldn't leave me alone, so I tried it, and when I did, the craziest thing happened; all the bad, negative energy I had started flying away with those bubbles. By the time I was done, everything was okay. The happiness it gave me... I decided to pursue it. I fell in love with it. And I thought, If the bubbles were able to do that for me, maybe they could do the same thing for somebody else. That was several years ago."

Before his bubble epiphany, Griffin says there wasn't exactly an overabundance of joy in his life as a wage (or commission) slave. "I worked at a gas station and at a Big 5 Sporting Goods, and I've been a car salesman. Just before I started doing the copter thing, I was working as a maintenance guy at a run-down place that used to be a bed-and-breakfast. The owner was a hoarder, so it was pointless."

By late 2012, Griffin, wielding what looks like a divining rod of sorts, was shaping soapy loops five days a week, three or four hours a day, hoping to entice admirers to buy $10 bubble kits. "The smallest one is the size of a big beach ball; it all depends on the wind. If it's windy, there will be hundreds of thousands of smaller ones, but when there's no wind, I can put people inside of them. Summer is better because bubbles are cheaper to make then. I have my own secret recipe, and the ingredients are a lot easier to find during the summer because stores stock them more."

Griffin says that during San Diego's modest winter, he can't sell many bubble kits but can still work birthday parties. "Those are mostly at Spreckels Park in Coronado; I try not to do them inside because it gets messy. I charge $50 for a half hour; any longer, the kids get bored."

Griffin admits that the bubble biz is a dicey financial proposition. "That's where the helicopters come in. When I was doing bubbles one day, there was this guy downtown selling these things you shoot in the air; they have a little light on them and they look cool. He asked me if I wanted to sell them and I thought it would be perfect because once the sun goes down, I can't really bubbles anyway. I started selling the helicopters and it just took off from there. I thought the helicopter business would be seasonal like the bubbles are, but it's not. It's down since last summer, but it's still way better than a minimum-wage job, even if I were to work 50 hours a week. Worstcase scenario? I will not take less than $64 in a day; I won't stop selling until I make that much. Some days I make $400 to $500, other days only $100. But

Mike Davis waits for his next Uber passenger.

I make more money selling helicopters than I ever have in my life, even selling cars."

I asked him about the micro-economics of selling toys to the passerby. "They're one for $5 or three for $10. I buy them at a right price, 75 cents each, so it's all profit."

When I ask, "What about competition?" Griffin answers, "These things are getting more and more popular. There are already a couple of people down there at Market and Fifth. I try not to go too close to them."

Do the Comet Copter guys have territories, turf?

"That would be nice, but unfortunately, it's not like that. One of the guys I brought into the business who was helping me — I don't know if he just can't find his own spot, but every time I go, he shows up and it really frustrates me, and I haven't found a way to overcome it. He lacks courtesy."

While there might not be a lot of busted kneecaps or shakedowns, catering to bubble fans and toycopter buyers does present occupational hazards in the form of local hoteliers and gendarmes. "It was weird," remembers Griffin. "For about seven or eight months, I was making bubbles right in front of the Hotel Del; there's a grassy area at the corner off Orange where tourists cross through coming from downtown Coronado. One time, the hotel people finally said something, told me I needed to move on; but the very next day it was okay."

Was it private property?

"Funny you should ask that. There were bikes left there one night, so I called the hotel and asked for the security department, because bicycle theft is all over Coronado. "They said, 'Call the Coronado Police Department. It's not our property.' Also, let's say I'm in the heart of Seaport Village. The cops will tell me I'm not allowed to sell the helicopters because they aren't 'home-made or hand-made."

Before he hangs up, Griffin tells me, "Right now, I'm setting up at the Kissing Statue. It's gonna be a good day. But just in case...luckily, I live with my girlfriend, who makes pretty good money as an RN."

Unlike the Bubble King of Coronado, "SV" of Imperial Beach doesn't have backup, so she can't afford to let many of the pieces fall through. At 20, she's a San Diego City College dropout, an aspiring actress and dancer who supplements her sparse stage income by writing for blogs and toiling in the occasional parttime job. Neither resigned nor artificially enthused, she's under no illusions.

"I am doing this by choice. I wouldn't exactly say I enjoy it; I mean, I do like it, but mostly because I'm keeping myself doing things that are fun, in my opinion."

SV says that although she's no stranger to 50-hour weeks, there's a lot of fluctuation in hours and pay.

"I audition for parts in plays and musicals at theaters. The blog-writing (mostly political satire) pays me a minimum of $150, up to $500. Right now, I'm collaborating with a few people on a secret project that's pretty much in the alpha stages." She confides, "In a good month I make a little over $2000, but if I don't work too hard, it's $1250 a month. The part-time jobs are mostly in sales or housekeeping. I once had a janitorial job I actually wanted because it was at a movie theater and they let me watch movies for free."

While some San Diegans with patchwork incomes have never entered the full-time workforce, others, like Lisa Sawicki, have bowed ten hours as a manager at a public relations outfit in Vista, as well as a dozen hours as a "certified life coach," some of it counseling on "dating and romance issues" for a matchmaking service, some in private practice. Throw in a few publicity workshops at coffee houses around town, and it's a new-age patchwork. She says, "A lot of my bread and butter is in life-coaching; I charge my private clients $80 an hour."

But what exactly is life-coaching?

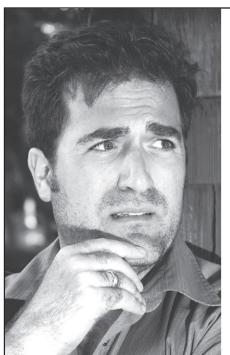

"You gently work alongside clients to find the truth about their needs, issues, upsets. You try to figure out blocks, get them to reframe things and come up with a strategy. It's similar to being a psychologist, but I refer clients for specialty mental health problems. I deal with things like weight issues, bully relatives, unhappy job situations. I have a certificate, but it's really basic, common-sense advice and compassion. It's the job of the coach to illustrate how they sabotage their goals."

Sawicki harps on self-promotion.

"To make this work, you've got to be constantly selling yourself. If you're going to be a freelancer and attract that kind of work, as opposed to going into a job with a salary, you are your own sales representative. You have to be willing to go up to a stranger and pull out your business card, to sell and to close."

"It's constant looking," laughs Franklin, who lives near UTC.
"Here's the dilemma: I'm a hairdresser and there's basically no business, so I'm free to do these gig things. I don't want to do them, I have to do them.

I'm here 40-45 hours a week because I have to keep certain hours, but I'm not paid hourly. There are hardly any customers; maybe ten hours of work a week. I charge $30 for a man's haircut, $100 for a woman's cut and color. Split it 50-50 with the shop."

If Franklin has a gigmétier, it may be his role as a human guinea pig.

"I do a lot of UCSD studies; you can find them in the Craigslist ads. I'm on a cholesterol study right now; been on a couple, because my cholesterol's pretty high. They give you shots or pills and always a monthly blood draw. But you never find out the results."

I asked the disgruntled hair jockey about side effects. "Isn't it a little scary?"

His response displays the calm of the drug-study veteran. "They're pretty rare; it's a double-blind study, so no one knows (the nurse doesn't even know), but if you had side effects, you probably would know right away. You have to be willing to take that risk, but you're talking about a 'Phase 3' [study], which isn't too bad, because it's right before it goes to the public. 'Phase 1'? That's with rats — you don't want to do that."

"I pick up the customer, and the fare is charged automatically through the phone; no cash changes hands."

I ask, "Is it a good use of your time?"

"Oh, yeah; I get $1000 for the cholesterol study."

Franklin also participates in cognitive studies. "They want to know how your brain's functioning; those can be over a length of time, even years. I did a schizophrenia study last summer at UCSD. They need normal subjects for comparison. You spend two hours there, they do a bunch of tests, and then you leave. There are dexterity tests, a lot of memory tests; they'll give you a list of 20 words and make you repeat them. But that's only $50; you'll get a lot more for drug studies or overnight monitoring, like sleep studies. A while back, I did one where they gave me a phenomenal eye exam which lasted something like four hours. Got $200 for that. The exam alone would've cost a huge amount."

But even this king of cholesterol testing gets screened out now and then. "Tried to get into a study in Encinitas. They asked me what my cholesterol was and I said, '260.' They said, 'You're not even close. We're looking for over 500.""

Franklin says, "I just did a law focus group downtown. Took about three hours. They get a group of people together to get Joe Blow to give his opinion on how strong a case is. It's 5:30 to 8:30 in the evening, about 14 other people. Pays $50 cash."

Almost as an afterthought, Franklin mentions, "I've worked for years and years in data entry through Manpower. I go in mornings, eight hours a week for $15 an hour. Also, if someone's moving, I'll help him out; maybe I'll get $50 for two hours. I find them on Craigslist, but there are a lot of scams on Craigslist."

"How do you define a scam?"

"A scam is when anyone is going to pay you money for doing almost nothing. You need a name, a company and a phone number, not just an email address. You know those 'car wrap' things with the ads? Those are all scams."

And then there's the old skid-row standby: blood products. "You just walk in, they see that you're healthy. No screening at all. Blood takes five minutes, but plasma takes an hour, hour and a half.

You're on a machine. Plasma is usually $50 for a pint. The pay for blood varies. It can be $20, sometimes up to $50 or $60 for three or four vials; it depends on what they're looking for."

Answering a question I regret having asked, Franklin sounds a weary note. "I have no choice but to keep doing this."

Patching together a living from multiple sources is often more prosaic than soap bubbles and flying toys that light up in the night. Nonetheless, it seems that in San Diego, many of those who cobble together a living (whether at the subsistence level or otherwise) eschew the grind of oldstyle, multiple part-time employment. There are a few holdovers, however, like Sheila (not her real name), whose dual-job routine combines ringing up spools of yarn in the afternoon and turning on the gas pumps after midnight. If my interviews are any indication, most of the locals who stitch together a living (or facsimile of one, reasonable or otherwise) are ambivalent, if not downright proud, about their day-to-day mosaic.

However, some (notably the older folks) express a sense of near-shame. Sheila, who's 61 and lives near the slough in Point Loma, would rather keep mum, at least with respect to her workmates at her regular job.

"After my husband left, my savings started to dry up. I'd already been working at a large artsand-crafts store around 30 hours a week; they pay me $12 an hour. But I needed extra income. I applied for all kinds of part-time jobs — clothing stores in the mall, that kind of thing. But they told me, pretty much, that I was too old. Those weren't the exact words, but it was obvious they didn't think I could sell lingerie to some cute 20-year-old with her ass hanging out of her shorts."

Eventually, Sheila landed a job manning (or "womaning," if you will) a gas station kiosk in Kearny Mesa. It's a 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. stint three nights a week; it's minimum-wage but you get a free smock. She's not enthused with the ambience. "Gets kind of creepy," says Sheila, "especially around 3 or 4 in the morning. That's when you remember the faces of those sex offenders you see on the internet, the guys who kidnap and rape, chop up bodies."

But Sheila claims she can live with that, as well as with the constant fatigue brought on by all-nighters. "What really bugs me is, the other gals at the store always ask me to join them for drinks after work; there's a lounge close by. I used to go, but now I have to make up excuses why I can't. They're getting suspicious. I just don't want to tell them that I have to work at this dirty gas station."

"I'd done the whole nine-to-five thing for 17 years at SDSU; then I left to work as a grant writer for the Sweetwater school district for 16 months. In early 2008, my brother was starting a community magazine for the City of Chula Vista and he was looking for an editor, writer, and ad salesperson. It was full-time but I got to work from home, two blocks from my son's school. Andrew was having some behavioral issues, and it helped knowing that I was just five minutes away, even if it meant going to the principal's office. His eyes would light up and he'd say, 'My dad's here; how did that happen?"

After three years elapsed, Minjares (seemingly always at the right place at the right time) got an offer to freelance for a public-relations firm and then an invitation to serve as interim director of development at the San Diego Food Bank. "So, by 2012, I was working three

Minjares stresses that being able to work from home, venturing out only for the occasional client meeting or onsite interview, was the key to keeping sane: "I was writing and editing for the community magazine 30 hours a week; freelancing for the PR company maybe 6 or 8 hours a week, and spending another 10 working for the food bank. Made about $55,000.

"The great thing was, I was able to carve out my own schedule. I could work at nights, Saturdays, and Sundays. But at the end of six months with the PR company, I realized that it was too much. I was spreading myself too thin, couldn't do the quality of work I wanted. I still did the other two for awhile."

These days, Minjares has upped his hours at the food bank to 30. Now salaried, he's required to be in the office; his income is down to $35,000-$40,000 a year, but he's fine with that. He's also doing a bit of freelancing again, rewriting a website. So far, he's resisted calls by the food bank to give them more. "The president called me and asked, 'Will we get you 40 hours a week now?"

Minjares admits that without his wife's steady and substantial paycheck, he couldn't have trod this path. "She's made it feasible for me to give up benefits like sick leave, vacation, pension, and medical insurance." In any event, he's confident that he has the option of bailing out at a moment's notice. "After my kids are out of school, I'm sure that I'll go back to a traditional, full-time office scenario. I don't think there will be a problem finding a good position; it's always there waiting for me when I want it.'

Just as there are myriad paths leading to the pieced-together living, there are varying standards of living to be had among its participants. At the far end of the economic continuum from Minjares are folks such as Michael Davis of Escondido.

When I spoke with Davis, he was downtown waiting for his next Uber passenger.

"Right now, I'm parked at the side of the street on Market just waiting for the next one. The application has 'heat spots' showing the amount of traffic. It's dark green here, which means it's busy." Uber, he explained, is one of the new breed of cyber taxis, companies that are filling a niche recently approved by the California Public Utilities Commission. "They call it 'paid ride-share."

"I started on New Year's Eve. You use your own car, supply your own insurance (the company supplies supplemental insurance). It's all done though iPhones. The customer brings up the app on his phone, I pick up the customer, and the fare is charged automatically through the phone; no cash changes hands between driver and passenger." He adds, "I never even see the customer's phone number because it's relayed by Uber." Davis also notes, "The cars are nondescript, not marked; so we can't pick up folks flagging us down on the street."

Born in the San Fernando Valley, Davis spent his teen years in Florida, after which he bounced around between San Diego, Portland, and Phoenix.

"The last time I drove a cab was in Phoenix, in September 2012." It didn't work out.

"Traditional taxi is a dead-end job; I'd be out there 80–100 hours a week and barely make poverty wages because the leases on the cabs are huge. I was paying one of the cheaper leases, $475 a week; some of them are $600–$700. The driver has to pay for his own gas, of course."

And then there are the hidebound hurdles of the old-fashioned taxi trade: FBI background checks, drug tests, and fingerprinting. "By the time you're done with it, you're hardly making any money. Lucky to take in $400-$500 a week. Most of the time is spent waiting for fares, maybe 10 percent driving, and you're stuck in the cab, because if you're not there when a call comes in, you're out of luck." Aiming for $500 a week with fewer hours (he's an independent con-

"There's a trucking company in Santee that occasionally asks me to co-drive a rig for a firm which supplies (what I'll just call) 'medical research materials.' Last month we went to Boca Raton, Florida, and I made $1050. We drove 24 hours a day. There's a bed behind the back seat, and I traded off with the other driver. It took two and a half days to get there, four to get back; they paid for motels on the return to San Diego. On Monday we start off for Minneapolis; I'll take home $850 for that one.

Davis also dabbles in website design. "I've got a business called Southwest Webs, where I'm trying went into service just as the Vietnam War ended. So, that got me out of the to build a small businessnetworking resource. I can get $500-$600 per single website and could do one a week — if I had the clients."

Davis is candid. "I just fell into this stuff; at this time last year, I was in a homeless shelter. I qualified for a new VA program for older homeless veterans; I'm 57, and hustle."

James Bogart "hustles" his voice. Google "voice123.com/jameswax" and you'll find the intermittently remunerative stylings of James Bogart, who relies on television and radio voice-over gigs to pay the bills. A native of Upstate New York, he'd worked back home as a radio disc jockey under the moniker of "James Wax," while his wife Brandie waited tables at a Red Lobster. It was a pretty good living, he says, for a Rust Belt town.

As Bogart tells it, his move to San Diego was "unexpected." After the radio stint ended; after his wife mangled her hand in a walk-in cooler at the crustacean joint; and after a death in the family triggered a nasty feud, it was time to leave Corning.

for 24 months mmediatetoothreplacement.com vou're an Indian and work in a casino or have a 'legacy' job at the Corning Glass factory."

With "Crystal City" long-vanished from the rearview mirror, voiceover projects (along with Brandie's small jewelrymaking business) have kept the Bogarts afloat. But when it comes to using one's larynx for lucre, gigging for a living can be feast or famine. Work is sporadic, and, according to Bogart, the industry's superstars are all hooked up with major talent agencies like Atlas and William Morris. With narv a trace of self-pity he quips, "I'm a bottom-feeder."

Even on the proverbial ocean floor, though, pay is good when calculated hourly, ranging from around $150 to $500 for perhaps an hour of work. Voice-over work, notes Bogart, is all about selling others on the notion that your intonations can help them sell their products or services. To that end, it's essential to put together "demo reels" with samples of one's work. What kind of voice does "Wax" have? Well, what kind of voice do you need? According to the website descriptors, he's a lot of things: "Conversational but edgy, hip, neutral accent; medium tenor, young and sexy, slightly sarcastic, clean, all-American guy-nextdoor, bright, energetic, fun and natural." The site features clips from his work for Michelin, Samsung, Toyota, and other advertisers.

In the interim (and the voice-over biz is nothing if not a series of pauses), Bogart has looked for employment in retail and service settings, only to be turned away, he says, because he can't speak Spanish.

very adventuresome." However, Kader surmises that scheduling and booking complications may be a factor, at least in some isolated cases. "It's possible that contractual restrictions may prevent an act from playing elsewhere in the county during a 60-90 day period before and after appearing at a popular venue like the Belly Up Tavern, House of Blues or Soma." Still, Kader concedes, booking decisions at the fair appear to boil down to drawing power, real or perceived — locals be damned.

No doubt, the hiring of such acts as America, Huey Lewis and the News, REO Speedwagon, and Smokey Robinson is consistent with one criterion: they're all staples of the fair-and-casino circuit where pop acts of yore go (after lineup changes and age have taken their toll) to grab whatever gold dust is left from the remains of their gold records. But for up to $200,000 a pop, one wonders why the fair's 24 grandstand dates couldn't be completely filled, or at least dominated by, entertainers sporting a San Diego nexus.

CITYLIGHTS

And what about the locals? Are they really uninterested in the big stage and the big bucks? When I chatted with Andrea Altona, a San Diego County musicians' union boss, and informed her of the grandiose grandstand contracts, she gasped, "Oh, my God!"

Altona, president of the American Federation of Musicians, Local 325, which represents about 500 area musicians, says that most musicians would love the chance to play on the big stage but, sounding a note of resignation, stated that importing outsiders "is the way it's always been done." She also mentioned that the going rate for county performers for a venue of this type starts as low as $3000-$6000.

The San Diego County Fair is quick to trot out numbers that reflect its status as a big-time attraction. When I pressed Linda Zweig for specifics on the fair's booking policies, I received instead a boilerplate mantra: "The San Diego County Fair draws up to 1.5 million visitors annually, is the largest event in Southern California, and the fourth largest fair in North America. Since 2009 to date, the Fair continues to exceed and surpass attendance and revenue records every year."

Records notwithstanding, Zweig refuses to answer these questions: What criteria have been employed in selecting the grandstand performers and who actually makes the decision for the fair board? Couldn't local performers have been procured for these 21 dates for a lot less money? What local performers did the fair seek, and for what dates? Why were they not chosen? ■

Crime at marijuana dispensary yields thief and proprietor

Hillary is coming to town — awkward!

Special-interest event promises income source for mavor's wife

The 2014 BIO International Convention, to be held at San Diego's downtown convention center June 23-26, has announced that the keynote speaker will be ex-First Lady, former Secretary of State, and presumed presidential candidate Hillary Clinton.

"Her 'smart power' approach to foreign policy repositioned American diplomacy and development for the 21st Century," says a May 14 news release from BIO, a Washington influencepeddling and trade group for biotech special interests.

An email invitation to the keynote says it is "sponsored by Genentech, a Member of the Roche Group."

The Clinton visit follows by just a month a La Jolla stop by Barack Obama, who raised political money at the mansion of Qualcomm founder and billionaire Democrat Irwin Jacobs, who has already announced that he and his wife are backing Clinton for president by giving big money to a group calling itself Ready for Hillary.

So far, at least, no Clinton money-raising activities have been announced for San Diego, but that may change.

The night of Clinton's June 25 speech, BIO International is set to hold a large party in the Gaslamp Quarter, similar to the one it threw during its last convention here in 2008.

Katherine Stuart, wife of GOP mayor Kevin Faulconer and president of Restaurant Events, handled the '08 bash (when Faulconer was a councilmember) and will handle this year's. The company relies on the good will and cooperation of city officials in closing off streets to the public at no charge.

As reported here, Stuart has made big bucks on the block-closing parties, which have been overseen by special-events chief Carolyn Wormser, recently named by Faulconer to take charge of next year's Balboa Park centennial celebration.

California fracking

Anti-mining legislation demanded from governor Environmental activists representing SanDiego350.org assembled downtown on May 14 to confront governor Jerry Brown — here on a visit — and to urge support of SB 1132, which would ban a controversial method of extracting natural gas.

Hydraulic fracturing, or "fracking," involves drilling a deep well into the ground near a natural gas or oil deposit. Once drilled, the well is pumped with a highpressure mix of water, sand, and chemical compounds in order to break up underground rock formations and allow the gas to flow back into the well.

Environmentalists raise numerous concerns regarding the practice. Large volumes of water are required for a fracking operation, and wastewater is often disposed of in a manner that could result in it being released back into community water supplies — oil companies have declined to disclose the exact chemical content of the waste, alleging "trade secrets." Fracking operations in the Midwest have also been tied to increased earthquake activity; seismic shifts were previously considered rare.

"At the April Balboa Earth Day fair I had a woman from Oklahoma City approach me at our SanDiego350 booth," said group representative Nicole Peill-Moelter. "She said she was very aware of fracking because they started having earthquakes of magnitude 4.8 and higher once fracking operations

But it's already happening."

"It's vital to our multibillion-dollar agricultural industry, our health, and wellbeing. Why would we want to allow fracking, which irreversibly contaminates this very water supply?"

The group says other negative impacts of fracking include increased air pollution, contributions to climate change from expanded gas extraction, and a likely decline in property values in areas affected by the mining

Activists said that although they were acknowledged by Brown at coordinated demonstrations in Los Angeles, Sacramento, as well as locally, he was "short on specifics" in offering support for anti-fracking legislation.

Edison exec forecast San Onofre failure

Letter indicates VP was "concerned" about "design flaws'

Information gleaned from a letter between San Onofre Nuclear Generating Station operator Southern California

CITY LIGHTS

Edison and Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, manufacturer of the failed steam generators that shuttered the plant, could prove that Edison intentionally skirted federal design safety review requirements when ordering the new units.

The 2004 communication was released Wednesday by former Utility Consumers' Action Network executive Charles Langley, who has been working with watchdog attorney Michael Aguirre to protest a $3.3 billion charge to ratepayers as a result of the plant's premature failure.

In the released letter, penned by Edison vice president Dwight Nunn, the utility executive notes that "questioning by San Onofre followed by an exhaustive evaluation by Mitsubishi Heavy Industries led to a design revision to address a potential risk to the success of the project."

"Changes in the steam generator design may be necessary," Nunn continues. "I am concerned that there is the potential that design flaws could be inadvertently introduced into the steam generator design that will lead to unacceptable consequences (e.g., tube wear and eventually tube plugging). This would be a disastrous outcome for both of us."

Indeed, federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials eventually concluded that flaws in the reactor's design were to blame for heavy premature wear in hundreds of steam tubes within the generators. though they stopped short of accusing Edison of making the changes without proper review. That non-charge has long been disputed by critics and was repeated Wednesday.

"What all this means is that legally, [San Onofre] was an unlicensed reactor that was being illegally operated by Southern California Edison," says Langley. "They knew those generators were defective. They knew how to fix the problems of the defective generators in advance, but didn't. What's more, the engineers accurately predicted in advance where and how the generators would fail from the expected vibrations... yet [Edison's] executives proceeded to install them anyway."

The reasoning follows, then, that if Edison knew all along about the risks inherent in installing the new generators, and since those risks were quickly realized, shareholders in the parent companies that took those risks (including San Diego's Sempra Energy, which owns about 20 percent of the plant through its San Diego Gas & Electric subsidiary) should be the ones to pay for the utilities' poor decisions, not their customers.

Too much Grand Theft Auto? Reckless driver in speeding truck knocks over tree, runs away Encinitas sheriff's deputies were on the lookout for a silver Nissan Titan truck with Mossy Nissan new-car plates on the evening of May 12. Shortly after 8:30 p.m. they found it, missing a large part of its front grill and radiator coolant.

Just before 8:30, two people talking on the side of Ruthlor Road witnessed a fast-moving vehicle in Cardiff's Poinsettia Heights neighborhood, just east of I-5.

The truck accelerated toward them, turning off its lights. "It's as if he wanted to play chicken with us," said one of the witnesses. The truck sped past them. One of the neighbors tried to give chase to get a license-plate number but was outrun.

The truck was heard going around the block. By the time the truck had almost made a full circle, a resident on Edwina Way was already talking with a 911 CHP dispatcher. Reportedly, the dispatcher said she could hear the squealing tires in the background.

As the truck made a high-speed turn off of Edwina Way back onto Ruthlor Road, he hit a palm tree in front of the home at 1635 Ruthlor Road. As the tree fell, it snagged and brought down the home's cable-TV line.

The truck backed up and again squealed through the seven-street neighborhood before exiting out to Birmingham Drive. One could follow the trail of leaking coolant around the streets until it dried up just before Birmingham Drive. Neighbors speculated that the driver was getting more agitated as he drove around, unable to find his way out of the neighborhood.

The Encinitas Fire Department and sheriff's deputies arrived shortly. The deputies took off quickly after getting a description of the vehicle. They didn't have to drive far. According to one deputy, it only took about nine minutes to locate the abandoned vehicle on Villa Cardiff Drive. An investigation is underway.

As the crowd of 25 watched the fire department disable the cable line and cut up the fallen tree, the best quotes I heard were: "Someone's been playing too much GTA [the popular and realistic video game Grand Theft Auto]," "Must have had a bad break-up," and "It may not be a full moon but it's full enough for crazy."

Fire chief: Stop thieving fire hvdrants!

Most of eastern side of city left without protection

Tijuana firefighters made a troubling discovery on Wednesday, May 14, as they battled Santa Anawhipped flames in the eastern neighborhoods of the city: most of the fire hydrants in the area were useless.

In an interview with the daily newspaper El Sol de Tijuana, fire chief Carlos Gopar Uribe said functioning fire hydrants in the city's eastern sector were already sparse, but thieves have left large sections with no protection at all.

Gopar said fire hydrants are made from valuable materials, particularly bronze, which thieves sell at salvage yards.

The fire chief made his remarks to the newspaper on an unusually busy day, as Santa Ana winds and high temperatures greatly increased the risk of fire. He said firefighters had responded to 125 calls for service on Wednesday and were bracing for even worse conditions today.

The bronze thieves, said Gopar, were making a dangerous situation even more risky for Tijuana residents.

At least ten homes were destroyed by fire on May 14, and flames also erupted at clandestine dumps and in open fields, Gopar said. Smoke caused multiple traffic accidents, while the winds felled trees and caused power outages. At the time of the interview, no lives had been lost and no serious injuries had been reported, he said.

This is a great hike, although I would suggest one try it during a cool spell. It was while I was on the trail above Hidden Spring that I came face to face with the mountain sheep I use for my icon. Big ram. He was coming up the trail and I was going down after exploring Jackass Flats (lots of Indian artifacts). He seemed very calm and patiently waited while I snapped over 20 shots using my old 35 mm Pentax, and then tired of waiting, he just slowly walked off the trail and around me, continuing on his way to the top.

Somebody up there in La Jolla likes me! Unaccustomed as I am to having positive thoughts sent my way, this came as quite a pleasant surprise. Thanks! The thought of non-Jews cast in Jewish roles never once crossed my mind. Years of constant exposure to Charlie Chan pictures has obviously softened my brain. One question: why the cloak of anonymity, Name Withheld? Are you afraid that members of your Congregation might catch wind of your anarchic comments and deny your missus a poolside seat at the mikvah? I wish more Jews would consider how much historical fraudulence and audience manipulation goes into making these pictures before giving them the rubber-stamp based solely on subject matter. Thanks again for the hug. Yours in Holocaust-film denial, Scott By Scott Marks, May 14 @ 9:48 a.m.

Dorothy Casey is mistaken. All an atheist is, is someone who is not a theist. If one answers "yes" to the question, "do you believe at least one deity exists," one is a theist. Otherwise, one is an atheist. That could include a positive belief that no deities exist (the "strong atheist" position), but it could also include someone who has never heard of the concept of deities and therefore could never have formed a belief about them either way.

The a- prefix works like in symmetrical/asymmetrical. One describes the presence of a certain attribute, the other describes its absence. Gnosticism/agnosticism is a whole different question about the limits of knowledge. It's not a middle point between theism and atheism (there is no middle point). It's a completely separate axis, and is not at all incompatible with theism or atheism. Most atheists are also agnostic: we have no positive belief in the existence of any deity, but we also don't believe it's possible to prove that they don't exist. We just think that, like werewolves, barring the introduction of extraordinary evidence to support the positive position, it's reasonable to assume the negative.

> By William R. Dickson, May 14 @ 12:32 a.m.

Self-wrong - I believe in evolution and learning to understand scientific research, intellegent growth and changes so I don't participate or reccomend oppressive organized religions any more. The bible stories are fables; ancient art. There are several other books claiming divinity, still man-made. Spirituality is a whole other apple. Read.

By shirleyberan, May 14 @ 4:10 a.m.

In reply to Dorothy Casey

regarding her letter of response to my "Equal Time" letter to the San Diego Reader of April 24: I don't know where these religious believers come up with such erroneous ideas and claims as she cites. Anything I suppose, in attempts to protect their religions which intrinsically have no evidence nor proof. Dorothy Casey herself awash in her own "selfwrongness": "Some people, called atheists, believe that there is not even one god in the universe....atheists are not unbelievers — they believe strongly that no god exists". Dorothy, you are perfectly wrong in these, your statements. Atheism is not a belief. Atheism is not belief. Atheism is the absense of religious/god belief based upon reason, rationality, logic, and reality so far as we know it. No agnostic or atheist accepts nor adopts any of the common beliefs regarding the existence of any gods, nor do atheists hold their own beliefs in these regards. Dorothy, atheists and agnostics do not believe, they understand facts. They know facts, real facts. Athiesm is a knowledge, not a belief. For example: If tomorrow some proper authority offered up evidence or proof based upon real facts that one or some of the hundreds of gods some people believe in actually exited, then any intelligent atheist would entertain this evidence or proof and appropriately research the information. If found to be accurate/ factual, then atheists and agnostics would know this information as probable or true to some extent (still not believing in anything). Atheists can give evidence and proof in real and factual probability, very significant probability, that there are no gods nor intelligent designer(s) of nor to this life and this world that we know. Finally, It appears only the theists disagree with the San Diego Reader running a bimonthly column devoted to humanism, secularism, agnosticism, atheism, freethinking, evolution and science and the personalities, political, social, medical/health implications of these subjects; In and for an equal and fair opportunity for all 'San Deigo Readers' education, enhanced knowledge, and understanding of said subject matter.

By surfflyer, May 14 @ 11:45 a.m.

surfflyer is mistaken on two points: (1) The word "atheism" was coined by the Greeks, and it was used to refer NOT to lack of belief in god(s), but to a belief that there were no gods. It is only in recent times that professed atheists, in order to make it unnecessary for them to have to prove their position, tried to adjust the meaning of the term so that it could refer to lack of belief. (2) If surfflyer were correct that atheism is a lack of belief, then it cannot also be "based on" anything. Only a belief can be based on something. Atheism can't be a "knowledge" because knowledge is an understanding of facts, and a lack of belief carries no facts. A lack means nothing is there. For example, if I said I lacked a belief in aliens on other planets, this would simply mean that I have never encountered any evidence to suggest that there were. I cannot say I have a knowledge that there are no aliens, because I may not even have studied the subject. On the other hand, if I said I believed that there were no aliens on other planets, this would suggest that I have seen evidence that no aliens exist. I therefore can say my belief is based on something. Therefore, if atheism is a lack of belief, then it is not a knowledge. If atheism is a belief that there are no gods, then it could be a knowledge. As for the Greeks, they used the term agnostic for someone who had no belief, and that is the term best used for it.

¡Bienvenidos! The road from Tecate to the Guadalupe Valley is well paved, with helpful signs.

Wine and dine in Baja's Guadalupe Valley

By Jeannette De Wyze

Recently I went back to northern Baja's Guadalupe Valley. I hadn't been there since the late 1980s. Back then, it was just emerging as a serious wine-growing region, with two giant producers (Cetto and Pedro Domecq) and a half-dozen earnest startups. The area seemed filled with promise. But one distraction after another — personal and geopolitical — kept getting in the way of my returning even once.

So returning 25 years later felt a little like journeying in a time machine. The valley looked very much like it did when I last saw it: quiet, bucolic, agriculturally industrious.

Astonishing changes have also unfolded, however. Instead of 8 wineries, more than 60 operate. Domecq, whose presence once seemed predominant, has been acquired by the huge French brandy-maker Bernard Ricart and is no longer making wine under its own brands. But the giant L.A. Cetto has built its own baronial tasting room jammed with a great variety of labels. A trickle of American cruise-ship passengers who've stopped in Ensenada find their way here, along with some day-trippers from north of the border.

The growers say the vast majority of the wine tourists are now Mexicans. The cracks in the country's drinking culture that were just appearing a quarter-century ago became a seismic shift.

In my earlier research, I'd learned the sad story of why Mexico for so long failed to develop a serious wine culture. By all rights, it should have. Hernán Cortéz had Spanish ships bring vines and seeds to Veracruz almost as soon as he arrived, and he'd ordered all Spaniards with land grants to plant grapevines for five years. By 1554, wine growing was well established at haciendas as far west as the present state of Michoacán, and the first commercial winery was established in 1593 in Coahuila.

But then regulatory catastrophe struck. Disturbed by the shrinking shipments of Spanish wine to New Spain, Philip II decided in 1595 to tighten his country's grip in the trade, and he banned any new plantings. Over the course of the next 200 years, subsequent viceroys even ordered existing vineyards to be destroyed. So it was that Mexico became the land of cactus liquor rather than cabernet.

Yet, excellent cabernet grapes grow in the coastal valleys — as do syrah, tempranillo, merlot, malbec, and dozens of other French, Spanish, Italian, German, and other varieties. (Nebbiolo is said to be particularly well-suited to the Guadalupe Valley.)

On my recent visit, I was traveling with a small group of friends, some blessed with more discerning and practiced palates than mine. While they

BIGHORN AND NOLINA CANYON LOOP

Explore two very different canyons while looking for bighorn sheep

Distance from downtown San Diego: About 85 miles. Allow 1 hour and 50 minutes driving time (Anza-Borrego Desert State Park). Drive to Julian. From the junction of SR-79 and SR-78/Banner Rd., drive 22.5 miles to the signed turnoff for Pinyon Wash, 4.1 miles past the junction of SR-78 and SR-3. Drive south 1.6 miles on the Pinyon Wash dirt road to the junction with Nolina Wash and park safely off the road. Passenger autos usually can negotiate the Pinyon Wash jeep trail, but a truck or 4WD vehicle is recommended.

Hiking length: This is an 8-mile loop hike. Difficulty: Moderate to moderately strenuous. If not for the length of the hike and some boulder-hopping, it would be easy. Elevation gain/loss is 1280 feet. Trekking poles are recommended for some boulder-hopping. No facilities or potable water.

The crossing of Mescal Bajada en route to Bighorn Canyon

This Anza-Borrego desert hike takes an adventure through lightly visited canyons where one may encounter a bighorn sheep, view some fascinating rock formations, and find an array of wildflowers if the rains have cooperated. It is also interesting to compare these two canyons and their washes. While similar, they also have their differences. Ironwood trees are relatively rare in Bighorn Wash

Anza-Borrego

State Park

but common in Nolina Wash, and the yucca relative, nolina, appears to be confined to Nolina Wash. One of the ways that nolina differs from yucca is in having pliant fibrous leaves unlike the stiff leaves associated with the yucca.

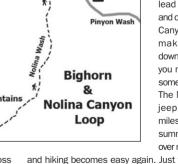

Although the route is obvious, for most of the distance there is no maintained trail, and some boulder-hopping is necessary. From your parked vehicle at the junction of the Pinyon Wash jeep trail and the Nolina jeep trail, start hiking west across the flat, sandy Mescal Bajada. About 0.3 mile from your vehicle, begin tending southwest and continue until Bighorn Canyon is visible ahead, which you will enter after covering about 1 mile. The canyon gradually narrows as you hike south through scattered catclaw acacia, rabbitbrush, agave, barrel and fishhook cactus, two kinds of cholla, Mormon tea, and occasional juniper trees. Blue Spring, on the north-facing slope of Pinyon Mountain, is 3.75 miles from your vehicle, if you choose to go there. It was developed as a guzzler for the Pinyon Mountain bighorn sheep and is not a source of water for humans. The best chance for seeing the elusive sheep requires remaining quiet and carefully scanning the steep rocky slopes above the spring or near some of their favorite forage plants: catclaw, encelia, sweetbush, and krameria. Their efficient digestive system allows them to maximize removal of nutrients from what can be well-armed dry and abrasive plants.

If you do go to the Blue Spring, reverse your steps until the low pass to the east that separates Bighorn and Nolina canvons is visible. Then go toward it. following the ducks that lead over the pass and down into Nolina Canyon. Take care making your way down-canyon, where you must negotiate some short, dry falls. The Nolina Canvon jeep trail is 1.75 miles from the pass summit, Scrambling over rocks ends here and hiking becomes easy again. Just follow the jeep trail through soft sand back to your vehicle.

Be prepared with at least a liter of water and check temperatures for all hikes for optimum time for comfort level.

Canyoneers are San Diego Natural History Museum volunteers trained to lead interpretive nature walks that teach appreciation for the great outdoors. For a schedule of free public hikes, refer to the San Diego Natural History Museum website.

AMAZING DIABETES

Encouraging study on Type II Diabetes shows the disease CAN BE REVERSED in as little as 1 WEEK!

A free guide has just been made available to Type II Diabetics detailing an approach that appears to be more powerful than any drug known to modern medicine. The free diabetic guide explains in plain English how many diabetics have been able to reduce and eliminate their drugs and insulin injections, lose weight without exercise, reduce and eliminate the risk of diabetic complications, restore pancreatic function, and even become non-diabetic. The free guide also reveals rarely used diagnostic testing that is helping doctors understand potential causes of diabetes beyond weight gain, genetics and lack of exercise.

still sneer at the produce of Temecula and Ramona, they were respectful and impressed by a lot of what we sampled in Baja.

We only scratched the surface, staying for two nights at Adobe Guadalupe. As a lodge, it's tiny (only six guest rooms), but as a winery it produces a respectable 7000-8000 cases per year. (For added charm, the owner also breeds show horses that are sold to buyers around the world.)

Over the course of two days, we tasted wine at Adobe Guadalupe and three other wineries, including a newish one called Las Nubes. Almost more impressive than the wineries was the food

Some superb examples of Baja Med cuisine are being practiced in the valley. One dark night we drove through plantings of grapes to get to Corazón de Tierra. The seven-course tasting menu there made it clear why it was included recently in a list of the top 50 restaurants in Latin America. But our three-hour lunch the next day at the well-established Laja was even more dazzling. A roasted bone-marrow amuse bouche, creamy corn with local sea urchin, and pork head with sun choke purée were among the standouts — but in truth, every bite of virtually everything was sublime.

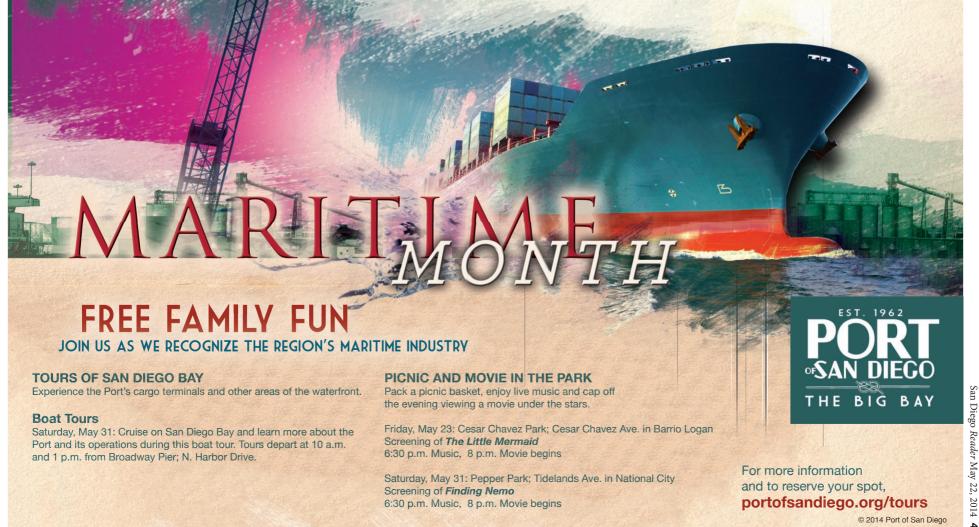

Such pleasures seemed a million miles from narcocriminal terrorism of the sort that still makes so many Americans afraid to venture to Baja. The recent collapse of the toll road to Ensenada (said to be months away from being repaired) would seem to be yet another impediment to getting to the valley.

But not if you go through Tecate, as we did. It's an easy hour-or-so drive from central San Diego to the border crossing there. We breezed through and enjoyed a quick lunch in the charming town, after which the drive to the wine country took another stress-free hour or so. Even coming back through Tecate seemed a throwback to a simpler, kinder time: the wait was less than five minutes.

Knowing what I now know, it certainly won't be another quarter century till I go back.

Come, My Celia

A Ben Jonson adaptation of Catullus

Come, my Celia, let us prove While we may, the sports of love: Time will not be ours forever; He at length our good will sever. Spend not then his gifts in vain. Suns that set may rise again; But if once we lose this light, 'Tis with us perpetual night. Why should we defer our joys? Fame and rumor are but toys. Cannot we delude the eyes Of a few poor household spies, Or his easier ears beguile, So removed by our wile? 'Tis no sin love's fruit to steal; But the sweet theft to reveal. To be taken, to be seen, These have crimes accounted been.

This poem is a loose adaptation by the great British poet Ben Jonson (1572-1637) of one of the most famous poems of the great Latin poet Catullus (c. 84-54 BCE). Jonson, who spent a few years in prison for the murder of a fellow actor in a duel, eventually became the leading figure of the British Cavalier poets. "Come, My Celia" was written for Jonson's play Volpone, one of his greatest comedies and one that is often considered his masterpiece, a play first produced in 1605 and then printed in 1607. The context is that Volpone is attempting to seduce Celia, the virtuous wife of Corvino, whose "easier ears" he wishes them to beguile. The poem from which it is adapted is one of many poems by the Roman poet Catullus to his mistress Clodia Metelli, the wife of proconsul Quintus Caecilius Metellus Celer. The love poetry of Catullus, passionate, irreverent, and curiously modern in tone, remains much read throughout the world.

Now all my days with joy I'll fill Full to the brim, With all my heart to [Visnu] cling And only him.

He will sweep utterly away
All dole and care;
And all in sunder shall I rend
Illusion's snare.

O altogether dear is he
And he alone,
For all my burden he will take

To be his own.

Lo, all the sorrow of the world Will straightway cease, And all unending now shall be

The reign of peace.

For all the bondage he will break Of worldly care, And all in sunder will he rend Illusion's snare

From all my foolish fancies now Let me be free,

Tranquility. — Psalm of Namdev

Namdev (c. 1270–1350) was a Hindu poetsaint who made significant contributions to the Varkari sect and is also venerated among Sikhs. Emphasizing the importance of living life in the family context — through marriage and children — Namdev saw the family as a vehicle for achieving release from "samsara," the continuous cycle of death and rebirth which otherwise traps existence.

That sounds good

"Everyone has waited ten years for this," he says. "People said, 'It's I.B. It'll never happen!"

he chat stops. Everybody watches, tries not to blink.

It's that moment again.

The last glowing pebble of the sun has blipped out. The big fish that swallowed it — okay, the ocean — goes from aquamarine to kinda ruffled blue. The horizon clouds get a pink glow. Any moment, any luck, green flashes.

On the other hand, got to take a slurp of this coffee.

I look down, pick up, slurp.

"Wow," says Becky.

"Oh no! Don't say I missed it!"

"What are you all talking about?" says the guy to my left. He's from Ohio.

"Green flash, dammit," I say. "Hey, Becky, did I just miss it?"

"Green flash?" the guy says.

"The green flashes you sometimes get after the sun sets on the ocean," I say. Getting impatient now. "Becky: Did I miss it?"

"I was just kidding," Becky says. "Saw you look down. You'll know when you've missed them. The whole patio breaks out in applause."

Guess I'm in Green Flash Central. Place is brand-spanking new. A Marriott. Pier South Resort

Say what? A Marriott in...I.B.?

Okay, the bar-eatery's got a forgettable name, "Sea180." But, have to admit, you do get a 180-degree panorama of the ocean, from Mexico to the Coronado islands to the I.B. pier and on to Point Loma.

Best of all, they have a happy hour, and it's cool to eat it and drink it out here on the big terrazza. Not like most places, where they corral you in around the bar.

Actually, I sat up to the bar when I first came in, just to get my bearings and catch my breath. Happy hour is on seven days a week, but only goes from 2:30 to 5:00. Raced in with three minutes to spare after running a mile up Palm Avenue.

Sergio the barkeep waits for me to haul my tongue back in, then points out the most popular items.

"Lamb sliders," he says, "the Kobe TJ hotdog? That has bacon and kimchi. And the brussels sprouts are always big sellers."

Hmm... Gotta hurry. See they're either $5, $7, or $9. The five-buck items include an arugula and beets salad, herb fries, and "Fire-roasted Brussels Sprouts with balsamic glaze, house-smoked crispy ham." Mmm... That sounds good.

In the $7 range there's roasted garlic hummus, mac'n cheese, croquetas with ham, potatoes, cheddar, or that TJ hotdog. And for $9, we're talking the lamb sliders, gingered pork empanadas, mussels, or tuna tacos.

Okay. Thirty seconds till the hour and counting. Feeling the pressure. Like George Bush must have felt as "chief decider."

"D'agh, gimme the sprouts and the mussels."

"And to drink?"

Ah. There's the rub. I'm desperate for one. They have beers like Modern Times "Black House" Coffee Stout. And everything's half price, from what I can see, including wines and cocktails. So that'd be $3.50.

Sigh. Night of work ahead.

"Coffee," I say. It's $2.95. "Did we make it?" Sergio looks up from the computer-cash register.

"We made it."

Whew. Now I can relax and start to enjoy this thing

I keep meaning to decamp and set up outside, but I get talking with this other gent on my left, Paul. Works for something scary called the Defense Logistics Agency. The man's a faithful customer here.

"Everyone has waited ten years for this," he says. "People said, 'It's I.B. It'll never happen!' But it did. And now Coronado Brewing is moving in across the road. Things are definitely

Thai-style red-curried mussels with salty chorizo and leeks compel Ed to slurp the sauce at the end. "Of course, when I tip the bowl, it spills over down my face and onto my shirt."

moving here."

He looks incredibly fit, bronzed.

"It's because I play with the Senior Softball league. Top Gun team. In tournaments we sometimes play two, three games out there in a day."

He's just finishing up what I've ordered. The brussels sprouts. "Really, really good," he says. "They cure their own Canadian bacon, ham, whatever. The balsamic reduction and sugar and ham chunks give a salty-sweet flavor under the sprouts. Awesome."

By now Becky's working with Sergio behind the sexy curved bar. Guess I'm staying here because she's layed out the rattan mat and handed me heavy silverware wrapped in a gray cloth napkin.

Then Sergio brings my stuff. Whoa. Big plate loaded with sprouts and chunks of ham. And then a nice big stainless-steel bowl filled with gleaming golden tongues, looks like, sticking out through shiny black shells. The mussels, all clunking around in an orange soup, with two big chunks of french garlic bread laid across the top. Plus another bowl for clanging the shells into.

The sprouts are totally delish, but the roasted black mussels really are extra-delicious, mainly because of the Thai-style red curry in the soup. Plus the salty chorizo. And they have melted leeks in there, too. Interesting combo. At the end, I have to slurp some of that red curry sauce. Of course, when I tip the bowl, it spills over down my face and onto my shirt. Cool.

Whatever, I head out to the Pier View Terrace with my coffee. Must have been here a couple of hours already. Because it's green-flash time. Folks out there say you also see dolphins and sometimes whales spouting in the early evening. And once or twice, even a shark fin.

So, yes, with tax, I have just spent $18.31. But I think of it as an investment for a night of romance under the stars with the lovely Carla.

Uh, okay, better make that an evening watching for green flashes.

Gotta make sure it's happy hour. ■

Spaghetti and meatballs in Poway

13305 Poway Road — I've eaten lunch in Poway a lot over the years and have even walked past Mamma Teresa a few times, sometimes on my way to the Five Guys next door or to the Japanese restaurant on the other side. I never really thought to go in because, let's face it, Italian restaurants don't seem that exciting. We all grew up eating spaghetti, and ordering pasta in a restaurant is widely considered the worst bang for your buck because the ingredients cost so little and the results so simple to achieve at home.

That said, pasta makes a great comfort food, so

I finally made my way into Mamma Teresa's last week. Every day since, I've been kicking myself for not going sooner.

What I hadn't realized is that this is a legit Italian restaurant, owned and operated by friendly folk who learned about cooking and eating and enjoying life back where such things were pretty much invented.

As if their accents weren't enough to lend an air of authenticity, they swear by their ingredients, including sauces, spices, oils, and prosciutto di Parma (thinly sliced, dry-cured ham) shipped across the Atlantic for Powav's enjoyment.

The prices don't necessarily reflect this. An $8 lunch nets you salad, entrée, and bread service — not in huge portions but enough to fill me up. The bread arrives warm and soft, glorious when dipped in a bit of olive oil.

I felt silly and stereotypical doing so, but I had to go with the spaghetti and meatballs. I was here to be a critic, after all, and what better way to judge an ethnic restaurant than to order its most Americanized dish?

No regrets. Not for a minute. Well, maybe for about 15 seconds, when at first glance I thought they gave me way too little pasta to spread around the generous heaps of meatball and what Tony Soprano would call "gravy." Then I tasted it, and by the end of my meal I was spooning up every bit of that sauce.

There's nothing like terrific ingredients to show the error of heavy-handed cooking. I'm always impressed when a sandwich has seven or eight toppings, for example, because my mental calculations insist more is bound to be better. But the truth is, if you build a dish around one or two really delicious things, the results are unbeatable.

> This meatballs and tomato sauce dish just needed a couple herbs to produce some of the best Italian food I've encountered in San Diego, and certainly for the price. Thanks to Mamma Teresa for bringing a little Italy to Poway.

Sandwich, soup, and a smile in Sorrento

9254 Scranton Road #103 — While running errands recently, I followed a craving for a good salad to Croutons. It's a small restaurant in the Sorrento South Corporate Center serving up made-to-order salads, daily soups, and panini.

I ordered the Napa Valley salad ($7.95 for a regular/$6.95 for a small). The combination of romaine and spring-mix lettuce, roasted turkey breast, smoked bacon, red grapes, swiss cheese, toasted almonds, and herb croutons intrigued me. It comes with celery and cabernet vinaigrette, which I asked to replace with herb-mustard vinaigrette. You can have your salad dressing mixed into the salad or served on the side. I chose the latter. I fear overdressed salads. The only way to get the perfect lettuce-to-dressing ratio is to dress one's own salad.

Never in my life did I think I would order anything that had kale or quinoa in it, but the Super Chicken soup ($3.75/cup) looked so yummy in its big shiny pot behind the display case that I could not resist.

When I arrived at 11:00 a.m. on Thursday, there was only one person in front of me in line and one couple seated in the restaurant. I grabbed a seat, and by the time my food arrived four minutes after ordering it, there was no available seating in the dining room and a line out the door.

When I took the lid off the soup container, I got a mini facial from the steam. It was that fresh and hot. The broth contained large shredded chunks of white meat chicken, kale leaves, tons of quinoa, carrots, onions, and bay leaves. I got some of everything on each spoonful, and the flavors married well. The sweetness of the carrots removed the bitterness of the kale, and the quinoa added a hearty texture. The onion and bay leaves complemented the seasoned chunks of chicken

Although the restaurant was busy, the staff was super friendly. Someone forgot to put a spoon on my tray before delivering it to me. When I went back up to the counter to get one, the cashier, Monica, was very apologetic and quick to get me a spoon, all with a smile. Thank you, Monica.

My "regular" size salad could have been split by two people, though I ate it all by myself. I love sweet-and-salty flavor combinations, and the red grapes and bacon delivered, complemented well by herby crunchy croutons and Swiss cheese cubes. The roasted turkey got a bit lost in the flavor fest.

The total bill came to only $12.64 for a large salad and a satisfying cup of soup. It's worth another trip. Or three.

Gumbo on the run

1735 Hancock Street - What's the difference between gumbo, jambalaya and étouffée? Tonight I've got a chance to find out. This is at 57 Degrees' monthly food-truck gathering and the last truck in the row in the parking lot turned out to be the New Orleans food truck.

Doing good business, too. I join the line as dusk gathers and check out their menu. Ah, perfecto. They're doing all three, plus a shrimp-and-corn bisque ($5 small, $8 large), and an actual crab-cake burger ($8), and sweet-potato fries ($5). So when my turn comes, have to ask the big question.

They have a proper chef aboard, with toque and white tunic, and a menu that checks all the right boxes when it comes to New Orleans chow.

Chef's name is Bobby Beigné and the guy taking the money

So, okay, what is the difference between gumbo, jambalava, and étouffée?

"Talk to Bobby Beigné," says Jaime, at the order hatch. "He's the expert."

Bobby leans down so he can see through the serving hatch.

"Gumbo is the soup made with roux. Jambalaya is the spicy rice with sausage and chicken or beef. Étouffée is more like shrimp or crawfish with gravy."

I'm still trying to get this straight when the guy ahead of me in line recommends the gumbo. "It's a soup, but it's so thick you can just about eat it."

So I go ahead and order the $8 bowl (could have had the same size choices for jambalaya and étouffée) and add a basket of Cajun fries (sweet-potato version). Two minutes later Bobby hands down this waxy paper pot brimming with the brown gloop, white rice sticking up, chunks of chicken, slices of sausage, and a slice of French bread to dip into it. Next to it, this paper plate of almost scarlet-red fries steams

The gumbo smells of...okra, I'm gonna guess, paprika, tomatoes, and the onions, bell peppers, and celery. The Cajuns call that the "holy trinity" when they add garlic. For sure it's the full holy trinity in this mix. In texture it kinda reminds you of the muddy banks of the mighty Mississippi. Whereas jambalaya is a kind of paella.

Turns out the name "gumbo" probably comes from Africa, from "ki ngombo," the Bantu word for okra. But it just might have come from "kombo," the American Indian word for the Choctaw spice, filé, ground from dried sassafras leaves.

So, a heckuva lot of history to each bite here. My favorite part is dipping the bread into it. Something about the bread and soup taste combo is magic.

But, bottom line: this gumbo from the land of the mighty Mississippi is mighty mighty filling. Guess I'll have to come back for the jambalaya and étouffée some other time.

Beer ambassador. "It's been a real odd position for me, as it blurs the lines from artist to marketing and advertisement guy," says Falling Doves frontman Chris Leyva of his side-job as SoCal music-brand ambassador for Sapporo Beer. "I there to meet [performers], exchange words, and pack their car with beer. We also secured beer for the dressing rooms of the Grammys, and I got to go to the Beatles 50th anniversary CBS special...it blew my mind. I sat behind Tom Hanks and his

Leyva recently found himself backstage at a private performance event

It's a gig with envious perks, representing the brand at events such as Fashion Week L.A., at the Playboy Mansion, and for the 94/9 Sapporo House at Coachella this year. "I was in Fullerton for Duesenberg Guitars, though all he knew in advance was that Tom Petty's longtime guitarist Mike Campbell would attend. "I was invited to help with beer endorsement and promotional materials."

He describes a surreal preshow tableau that began with bumping into Alice Cooper. "Steven Tyler is velling on his phone, Marilyn Manson was peeling the label off his beer, Mike Campbell was deciding what guitar he was gonna play... I've only seen these people from a distance, or on TV, so I felt like I was in a movie. I wondered at what point I was gonna get found out, or kicked out. So I pop a beer open and there was Johnny Depp."

Thus was born a rare photo op. "The security guy goes to let Mr. Depp know his car is waiting, and I think he thought I was in the backing band. So this press guy goes, 'Can you get in the picture?"

Being mistaken as a performer is actually part of Leyva's job description. "My contract states that I need to perform at least once a month. To maintain my position believable, I need to be firsthand on the scene as a performer and industry dude. If I'm not playing, I'm no different than a radio promotions guy or an ad man. So far, I've performed over 40 shows for them, promoting beer from the stage and behind the scenes."

Falling Doves will debut a new CD on May 30 at Mother's Saloon in O.B.

Heavy Glow Hauling Co.

It's been over a year since Heavy Glow has played a local show. But it's not because the psychedelic/metal trio doesn't like to play. up, we won't be in a hole financially. This way it's sure the tour pays for itself and then some."

Although they've been compared with Queens of the Alt-rockers Heavy Glow will move you — literally.

"We did five tours last year," says singer/guitarist Jared Mullins. Their next local show at the Soda Bar kicks off a tour celebrating the release of their second full-length album, Pearls and Swine and Everything Fine.

Most bands rely on selling merch to make ends meet on the road. Heavy Glow has found another way. They call it hauling.

"Some bands sell drugs or whatever to make ends meet. We're not into that. We've found people who want to get something hauled from point A to point B and fold that into the money we get from that tour. We've hauled everything from a Porsche, somebody's apartment [contents], tractors, lawnmowers. It ensures if we go to a place and play and nobody shows Stone Age and Soundgarden, Mullins says he most deeply respects the metal trio the Melvins.

"Those guys are all in their 40s and 50s. You don't hear them on the radio, but they've influenced everybody. They release records the way they want to. If they have an idea, they aren't afraid to record it."

Pearls and Swine was coproduced by Michael Patterson (Trent Reznor, Beck, Black Rebel Motorcycle Club) and Nic Jodoin (BRMC, the Morlocks, Nightmare Air). "We recorded it at Studio 9 in Hollywood the same time BRMC was recording their album. We had to tiptoe around their gear."

Together for six years, Heavy Glow is basically Mullins and his bassist Joe Brooks. "We go out on tour with different drummers. We'll probably bring in a full-time drummer in the next couple of months."

Heavy Glow appears June 4 at the Soda Bar.

American export — tribute bands! "People think finding an Anthony Kiedis impersonator is easy." It's harder than it seems, says Red Not Chili Peppers founder/bassist Jonathan Savage. "Over-doing the impersonation is common among fake Kiedeses. The real Anthony Kiedis has a nasally sound, and he also has a lisp, all of which combine to create this unique, unmistakable voice."

Without a convincing Kiedis impersonator, Savage shelved the Red Nots, a Chili Peppers tribute started in Ocean Beach five years ago. He moved to Japan and took a job as a civilian contractor for the Navy in December. But what he saw there helped change his mind about the Red Nots.

"There were Japanese tributes to AC/DC, Jimi Hendrix, Queen, Metallica, Britney Spears, the Blues Brothers, and more, but the tribute scene in Japan is still incredibly young."

He saw potential for his band in the Asian tribute market and contacted the San Diego-based agency that handles some of their bookings, Music Zirconia. He asked them to send Red Nots business cards ("Japan is one of the few places in the world

It's not easy finding an Anthony Kiedis impersonator — he's pasally and lisps where business cards are an absolute necessity.") to the an agency that produces tribute shows in Japan, Legends of Rock, owned by Takashi Okabe. Savage arranged a meeting. "He brought along his top Michael Jackson impersonator to translate."

Savage and Music Zirconia made arrangements to bring the businessman to the U.S. to witness the tribute festival at Gexa Pavilion in Dallas this June. Savage likewise thinks this could open the door for American tribute acts being invited to Japan. "Okabe would like the Red Nots to be the very first U.S. tribute band to tour Japan, and he's already begun making arrangements for us to tour in September."

Savage returned to the U.S. in April. In the meantime, based on the strength of a new singer/impersonator > from Los Angeles named Justin Pierce, he'd begun to put the Red Not Chili Peppers back together while still in Japan, and he booked a string of U.S. dates. So far, the Red Nots have played Texas, Chicago, Virginia, and Los Angeles.

"After that first audition [Savage says it was 'a nonstarter'], Pierce would keep sending me new recordings of his vocals every week." He says the singer kept improving. "And by the time February came and I heard his latest auditions, I realized this guy without question had transformed into one of the best Kiedis impersonators in the world."

THE ROSALYNS AT CASBAH

Thursday

The all-star garage group the Rosalyns (featuring members of the Loons, the Schitzophonics, Gore Gore Girls, New Kinetics, and Chinese Rocks) will headline sets at Casbah after Diddley Daddies, Grim Imperials, and Two Wolves, Debuting at Ugly Things magazine's 30th anniversary weekender last year, the Rosalyns pay tribute to girl groups of the past with a blast of present-day amplification and a little bit of garage-punk bitchiness, which I type with lots of r-e-s-p-e-c-t, ladies. Oh yeah, and they look amazing in their matching retro dresses! The Rosalyn's debut EP, Hide and Seek, is now available (on vinyl with a fine fullcolor picture sleeve) via Ugly Things Records, "featuring truly fabulous versions of 'Der Hund von Baskerville,' 'Dream in My Mind,' 'Destroy That Boy,' and 'Hold On.'" They'll be available at the show, or you can order them online at webstore. ugly-things.com. Mike Stax over at Ugly Things informs us that the Diddley Daddies were specially formed for this EP-release show and is made up of husbands of the Rosalyns: "Pat Beers of the Schitzophonics on guitar and vocals, me on bass and vocals, and Brian Reilly of the New Kinetics on drums. We'll be serving up a set of punk R&B with an emphasis on Bo Diddley and the Pretty Things." This'd be the gig to see Thursday.... But if you miss the door on Kettner, Soda Bar sets up SanFran psych-pop bands Papercuts and Blank Tapes...the artsy, ethereal San Diego band Ilya's at Seven Grand...and Til-Two fills a hard-rock bill with Archons, Thrones (ex-Melvins, High on Fire), and Cryptic Languages

The Brotherhood's touring in support of this year's luke-warmly received Phosphorescent Harvest. According funny and frightening and an artfully economical rock, Protomartyr gains comps to pioneers the Fall and Joy Division and contempos like Parquet Courts and Tyvek. All great, imo. Fans of the brand, I'll see you in City Heights.

Lube will loosen the room for ex-Beaters Viv Vates.... Best of the rest: folk-pop singer/songwriter Suzanne Vega ("Luka," "Tom's Diner") plays Belly Up behind this year's Tales from the Realm of the Queen of Pentacles.. West Coast rapper Too Short has the mic at Fluxx...while Hornblower's Inspiration boat lands Designer Drugs. They'll never make it out of the harbor.

BY DAVE GOOD

Not a bad way to begin a career in the music business: three years ago, the debut album Cerulean earned Album of the Year Honorable Mention recognition from Pitchfork. The A.V. Club liked the CD, too, a lot, and Southern California Public Radio labeled Will Weisenfeld, who is said to have recorded Cerulean in about two months in his bedroom in Chatsworth, "L.A.'s big new electronica musician." Weisenfeld goes by the shyly uncomfortable stage name of Baths. But that's an improvement when one considers his previous stage identity: Post-foetus, under which he actually released a few albums.

Baths' music has been likened to an oddball genre called chillwave, largely for Weisenfeld's content and swirling ambience and the use of menacing little noises in his recordings. A listener hears abrupt vocalizations set against a mechanical throb disturbed by clicking sounds made from pointy things like pens or scissors, or the rustling of bed-sheets. His gig is a deejay set in which he uses laptops and sequencers and a host of devices to deliver the goods. The stuff is primarily instrumental, but when he sings, Baths can hit a clear and authentic falsetto. But not an operatic falsetto or a castrati like '80s hairmetal dudes — no, Baths sings more like what I'd imagine an anime mouse from Hong Kong might sound like. Really creepy, truly childlike, and therefore wonderful.

Yeah, it's borderline odd (consider the "interests" Weisenfeld posted on his Facebook page: "water, bathing, voyeurism, escapism, hype"), but odd in a California sort of way, and we're used to that by now, yes? And Baths' music is every bit as undeniable as were the Beach Boys' studio attempts to capture whatever vibe was rambling about in Brian Wilson's psyche in the '60s. As Danny Elfman's soundtracks enrich Tim Burton's films, I'm thinking Baths and David Lynch are a match made in heaven — or hell, possibly.

Young Fathers and P. Morris also perform.

Ready Steady Go! Drake Bell

By Andrew Hamlin

The Kinks' "Sunny Afternoon," with its grousing about the taxman taking "all my dough," might refer on the sly to Drake Bell's ongoing bankruptcy, just as sardonic observations elsewhere on the glitter life sound like a 27-year-old celebrity blessed with only bankruptcy as his biggest problem. He wants the rockabilly groove with the Beach Boys mixed in for richness, and thanks to Brian Setzer among others, his dreams come true. The male uncannily like Brian Wilson and Company; the female vocals sound full and earnest, at least.

He doesn't quite have the vocal presence or dominance to pry the betterknown songs away from their originators, although swapping out saxophone for guitar on Billy Joel's signature song "It's Still Rock and Roll to Me" makes for a bracingly strange new texture. The non-classic fare gives Bell better wet cement to imprint. "Runaway Boys" has all the bristle and righteousness of a lad on the loose but acknowledges in surprising frankness that the kid won't be able to work, will run out of guarters, and after that there's nothing for him but the streets and/or crime. "Give Me a Little More Time" finds that same young man old enough to drink but still nowhere to go, no one to confide in except the bartender, who's probably got a stiff neck from nodding and smiling. Growing gives pains. But pain reminds you you're still in the game.

Bell's rockabilly dreams

St. Vincent converts a full house

By Robert Lang

St. Vincent took the stage in darkness, a reverberating sound boiling in the air above the crowd. and then a computerized voice: "Greetings, fellow analog creatures Please refrain from capturing your experience tonight digitally. Thank you, St. Vincent." From that voice introducing the night onward, much of St. Vincent's stage presence, flourishes, and banter delivered the same push-pull tension of this year's self-titled record.

Music Reviews from Our Readers

Accompanied by a synth player, drummer, and multiinstrumentalist. St. Vincent's performance heaved a heavier helping onto what some call the restrained/restricted rhythms of her studio work. St. Vincent has become recognized as one of the power-quitar players in modern indie music, juxtaposing her serene singing and angelic interludes with rat-box revving improvisation. From the lush lullaby of "Year of the Tiger" to the palpitating pulse (and stage-diving!) of "Krokodil," St. Vincent kept the crowd on their toes throughout.

Harrah's flush with craft beer

Anybody entering a casino is taking their chances. But this luck-pressing should not extend to patrons looking for a quality beverage. Such is the thinking behind Corked, a new bar at the recently renovated and expanded Harrah's Resort Southern California (777 Harrahs Rincon Way, Valley Center). Beverage director Will Burtner is a certified sommelier, but when not on the clock, it's not out of the ordinary to find him in one of the brewery tasting rooms near his home in Vista Corked provides the opportunity for Burtner to give casinogoers a taste of his favorite craft offerings. Many are selected from San Diego County brewing companies, but there is also heavy influence from Burtner's old Northern California stomping grounds. A recent visit turned up offerings from Ballast Point, Stone, Mother Earth, and even the delectable AleSmith Speedway Stout in large-bottle format.

In the end, it was an old favorite that won me over — Iron Fist Velvet Glove Imperial Stout, produced by Iron Fist Brewing Company (which is two blocks from Burtner's residence). This time around, it tasted a bit different. The dark-chocolate overtones that come across so nicely were fully intact, but there were added notes, similar to tobacco, and reminiscent of the "tinder box" nuances present in certain

Rip Current alert for North Park

There's something about North Park. Over the past several years, a number of breweries situated in more distant parts of San Diego County have established more centrally located tasting rooms in San Diego proper. For most, this has meant laying down stakes in North Park. Belching Beaver Brewery did it, Modern Times Beer is in the process of doing it, and the first of Stone Brewing Co.'s six satellite tasting venues was installed in nearby South Park in 2011.

The future home of San Marcos-based Rip Current Brewing Company's satellite tasting room and kitchen on 30th Street in North Park

Yet another far-flung operation has its sights set on North Park, San Marcos-based Rip Current Brewing Company just signed a lease on a building at 4101 30th Street. Located across the street from the beer-centric Ritual Kitchen & Beer Garden, the 3542-square-foot venue will be divided into two parts, with most — including a good-looking corner entrance — devoted to a tasting room. The remaining 550 square feet of the space will house a kitchen and a sit-down dining area.

In addition to serving roughly 20 Rip Current draft beers, bottled beers from other breweries will also be offered along with mead, cider, a limited wine selection, and nonalcoholic beverages.

The kitchen and food menu will be managed by James Limjoco, owner of North County's Sublime Ale House and Sublime Tayern restaurants

Rip Current owner and brewmaster Paul Sangster says he and business/brewing partner Guy Shobe are hoping for an autumn opening. To prepare for increased supply, they recently ordered a pair of 30-barrel fermenters, which will raise their total fermentation capacity to 120 barrels.■

South of the Border issue release Party!

Just a little shindig for some Reader insiders

Only the most mature people were invited

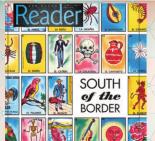

Dos Pistones Cervecería helped out by bringing some brews

It was a good party all around! Thanks, Puesto and Roger Clyne's Mexican Moonshine Tequila!

Our coolest new rep. Jessica

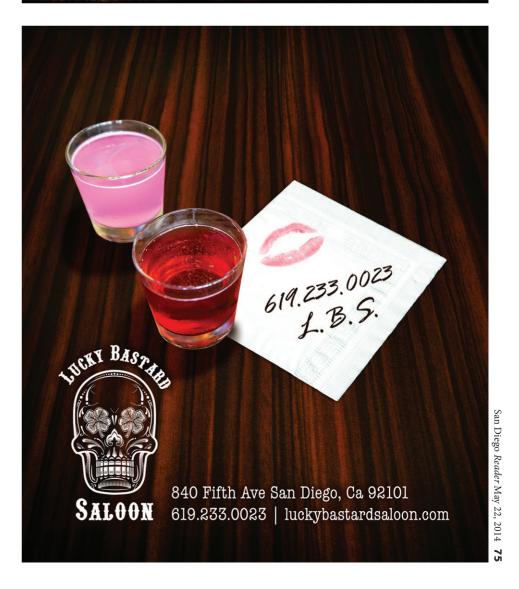

This is the first time we've done a special issue for our neighbors to the south so we wanted to go big! Puesto helped out by providing the stunning location, food and, booze. Roger Clyne helped out by bringing his Mexican Moonshine and Dos Pistones Cervecería showed up just for good measure. Start getting all set for Fiesta Del Sol and Santee Street Fair in two weeks! We'll see you at one of thems.

Set 'Em Up, Joe! BY JOSEPH O'BRIEN

BRETT WINFIELD Seven Grand 3054 University Ave., 619-269-8820 sevengrandbars.com

The Seven Grand's bar manager Brett Winfield wants to give it to you straight. But before he does, you better have a cocktail — or, as he calls it, "a Whiskey Delivery Method."

"We don't consider ourselves a cocktail bar but a whiskey bar that does cocktails," he says of the Seven Grand. "Our sales are about 80 percent whiskey. We definitely take the most pride from our whiskey selections. But, unfortunately for a lot of people, you can't just serve straight whiskey, so the cocktail is a way to get them interested in whiskey with the hopes that they will be ready or care to drink whiskey neat."

With 530 whiskey labels on the wall in hand's reach behind him, Whitfield recommends that those starting out on the amber waves of liquid grain see the forest for the trees with one of his favorite WDMs — the Sherwood. Named after Robin Hood's playground, the Sherwood is an herband-spice-laden spin on the Sazerac.

"We call it the Sherwood because it's kind of piney and kind of herbal — kind of like a forest," Whitfield says. "So, Sherwood is the name we came up with."

According to Whitfield, the Sherwood builds off a bosky trunk of bourbon whiskey with a complex branch work of a house syrup while rooting it all a Chartreuse wash.

"On your first sip, you get a rich oaky, bitter taste," Whitfield explains. "It's like the fall spices you would get in an apple pie — it's not going to taste like apple pie, but you're going to get the same sort of spice you taste in one, which works well with the bourbon. Then it finishes on a bright citrus note with the bitters and the forest piney notes from the chartreuse. It has a really great nose to it — like you're walking through a forest."

SEVEN GRAND'S SHERWOOD

- 2 oz. Breaking and Entering bourbon whiskey
- ½ oz. homemade apple and pear fall-spice syrup*
- 2 dashes Angostura bitters
- 1 dash green Chartreuse rinse

Put whiskey, syrup, and bitters in a stirring glass, add ice, and stir for about 25 seconds. Strain into a chilled rocks or Old Fashioned glass rinsed with green Chartreuse and garnish with an orange twist.

*Boil one part fresh apple juice, one part sugar and dash of cinnamon until dissolved.

Old Jews Telling Jokes

"My wife likes to talk to me during sex," says a character in this joke-revue of classic Jewish humor. "Yeah. She calls up and says 'Nathan. I'm having sex.'" G Bartell, Byran Charles Feldman, Rhona Gold, Allison Spratt Pearce, and John Rosen, obviously handpicked by director John Anderson, perform with obvious relish for the material. The jokes are old, rarely new, often borrowed, sometimes cobalt blue. There are groaners, misses, and the occasional F-bomb, but hits, more often than not. Also monologues, musical numbers, skits, and at least one gag for each of the show's 80 minutes. Old Iews covers various topics. It moves from youth to old age, and saves some of its best punchlines for silver citizens. As in: "Doc I can't pee." "How old are you? "92." "Then you've peed enough!" Worth a try. LYCEUM THEATRE, 79 HORTON PLAZA, DOWNTOWN SAN DIEGO, 619-544 1000. 2PM & 7PM THURSDAYS, 8PM FRIDAYS, 2PM & 8PM SATURDAYS, 2PM & 6PM SUNDAYS, THROUGH

Thrill Me: The Leopold and Loeb Story

Stephen Dolginoff's two-character musical recounts the grisly tale of Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb, the "thrill killers" who murdered 14-vear-old Bobby Franks in 1924. The uneven, 80-minute piece wavers between facile explanations (control issues; all for love, an unbelievable reversal) and an eerie escalation from innocence to evil. The best scenes happen after the crime, as the "boys" bond breaks down. Diversionary Theatre's production, backed by Tony Houck on piano and showcasing Conor Mulligan's excellent lighting, has occasional slips into camp (they're in the script), but overall is a solid effort with a tricky piece. Scott Nickley and Michael Parrott sing well, and do what they can with one-dimensional characters aided by Bret Young's direction and Michael Mizeraney's choreography. Worth a try. The business of lust nstead of surrealist spinnings along the lines of Luis Bunuel's Belle du Jour, spend the four seasons in a suite at the Four Seasons with a high school harlot in Francois Ozon's Young & Beautiful.

The spiky shadow of a sinuous hand that just let loose a pair of binoculars makes a slow, Calgarian squirm up a naked, sunbaked torso. In Hollywood you'd rightly expect the claw to be attached to something frightful, but this is France (they're way ahead out there) and the hovering wing belongs to none other than the bod's voyeuristic younger brother. It's by far the most fervid and fully developed relationship in a picture otherwise preoccupied with restrained emotion.

Parisian provocateur Ozon (Swimming Pool, Time to Leave) again fixes his clinician's gaze on the business of lust to further explore his pet preoccupations of identity and sexuality among teenage adolescents. In Isabelle's (Marine Vacth) case, sexuality is allied with neither money nor feelings. Nor is the privileged schoolkid using it as an excuse to work her way through the Sorbonne. While most 17-year-olds rely on booze or narcotics as a means of self-destructive dissent, our comely heroine's drug of choice is prostitution.

Isabelle views the loss of her virginity as an out-of-body experience. No sooner is the deed done then there's a quick cut to her long legs pounding the plush carpeting of a five-star hotel midway to her "date." We watch as she works several Johns — until her career comes screeching to a halt when one of them dies in mid-rapture.

Nothing is overstated, not even the standard-issue detached cop who lectures her on the physical dangers of the job without ever breaching the topic of STDs. When confronted with the truth, her mother and stepfather, initially quick to chalk up Isabelle's multitude of daily showers as a "girl thing," handle the news in as sensible a manner as you're likely to find in a contemporary melodrama.

Her first starring role calls for Vacth to appear in practically every shot. Even though Isabelle's motivation is never made clear, Vacth's subtle inflections indicate there's a brain at work behind the seductive mask. Credit also goes to cinematographer Pascal Marti for his sensational job of mirroring Ozon mentor Douglas Sirk's highly-reflective surfaces.

It's a case of the ends justifying the means. Isabelle's last "trick" comes as an unexpected doozy, leaving her to question the merits of returning to a life as moony schoolgirl. Why Ozon chose as his framework something as rudimentary as the four seasons is anybody's guess. The real puzzle is why each quarter is underscored with sappy pop tunes that add a thin patina of irony to an otherwise even-handed pursuit.

END THIS TREND: YE OLDE WALL COLLAGE

Remember 2011's Sherlock Holmes: A Game of Shadows? Probably not; it wasn't that good, and it mostly served as a reminder that Robert Downey, Jr.'s wisecracking, arrogant, masterful Sherlock Holmes was not all that different from Robert Downey, Jr.'s wisecracking, arrogant, masterful Tony Stark in Iron Man. Besides, we've had the rise of Sherlock since then: Benedict Cumberbatch taking back to the role for Merrie England, and bringing it into the modern age, to boot. I did enjoy Jude Law's highdudgeon Watson, but Downey's detective still seems bound for the same dusty shelf that holds Jeremy Brett and Basil Rathbone, to name just two of the better Holmeses in history.

But I digress (largely because it's a slow news week, unless you want to celebrate the opening of X-Men Days of Future Past by rehashing the sexual assault allegations against director Bryan Singer, which I don't). So: back to Game of Shadows. At one point, Watson visits Holmes at home and finds the walls of his study covered with newspaper clippings, photographs, handwritten letters, maps all sorts of papery informational bits. In proper cinematic fashion, Holmes has manifested his mental connections between the bits in a visible way: by stringing bits of red string from one to another to another and back again. Why, it's a literal web of conspiracy — ho-ho! And just in case you missed it, Watson actually calls it just that.

The scene was a cute riff on the old standby of the police bulletin board, with its orderly array of photographs and names. Holmes, the one-man police force — the man with so much information in his head that he needs to get it out and see it spread before him, just so he can sort it out. What a treat to see how all those thoughts link together and converge — or at least, to see that they have done so.

Speaking of that old police bulletin board: it was used to good effect at the opening of 1991's Silence of the Lambs. FBI trainee Clarice Starling is called into the office of Jack Crawford, the man she wants to work for someday. He's not there when she shows up, so she looks around the room. And then she stops, and the camera moves in on her frozen face. She's seen the board: photo after photo of Buffalo Bill's skinned victims — young women much like herself. And there at the bottom, a newspaper's front page, with its chilling headline: BILL SKINS FIFTH. Equally chilling: near the film's end, we learn that Bill has a bulletin board of his own, one that features the very same newspaper headline. Hey, media man: the same horror that moves copies also makes a nice keepsake!

But 1991 was more than 20 years ago. Plenty of time for cliché to set in. You know how bad it's gotten? This bad: they used the same goodguy/bad-guy parallel collages in The Amazing Spider-Man 2, a movie that poured every drop of its creative juices into visual effects. (Early on, Spider-Man quips, "You can call me amazing...just don't call me late for dinner," which is pretty much the first-draft equivalent of INSERT WITTICISM HERE LATER.) Anonymous schizo genius Max Dillon gets noticed by Spidey, and so develops a creepy fixation on the wall-crawler. And what's a good fixation without a wall collage, complete with radiating red lines? Later in the film, Spider-Man himself starts getting all thinky; naturally, he, too, makes a wall collage, complete with radiating red lines. Collaging: it's what all the cool kids are into.

Except it's not. I know it's hard to dramatize Google searches and feverish keyboard pounding, but collages aren't how people arrange information anymore. They just aren't. Various tablets have pundits predicting the obsolescence of the laptop computer, and you movie guys are still sticking photos and bits of newspapers to walls? In stories not set 25 years ago? (Hilariously, Spider-Man was produced by Sony — a company that should know a few things about the digital age. How on earth did they retain enough shame to avoid having Peter Parker explore the mysteries of his past on his sleek, powerful Xperia Z2 tablet?) It's almost as bad as watching him leaf through photos of his beloved Gwen Stacy — printed photos. That must have been confusing for the target demographic.

Still, at least ol' Pete was looking at those photos in his room, and not, say, in the belly of an airplane just before being dropped into the sky above San Francisco. Hi there, Godzilla! You didn't think we'd forget about you, did you? That's right: hero soldier Ford, just before skydiving over Monster Fight Ground Zero, takes a moment to gaze at a wrinkled photograph of his family. A sly homage to the fact that the original Godzilla came out in the days before soldiers had smartphones? Or just the same sort of epic laziness that gives us brilliant nuclear scientist Bryan Cranston, tracking echolocation data through his computer while surrounded by... an apartment-sized collage of newspaper clippings?

Godzilla trotted out its collage on May 16. Spider-Man on May 2. Brick Mansions beat 'em both to the punch by opening on April 25. At least supercop Paul Walker kept his version tastefully hidden behind a curtain; only he was savvy enough to be ashamed of his cliché.

HOW YOUR CAPSULE REVIEW SAUSAGE GETS MADE: GODZILLA

I usually leave the sparring to my partner Scott Marks — he's got more spleen, and better references, besides. But as I said, it's a slow news week, and I'm feeling spunky. Godzilla came out last Friday, and it's making lots of money, so it must be good. But I didn't much care for it. Here's my review:

"Why do you want to see Godzilla? Is it to see an embiggened update of the famous radioactive lizard? Is it to hear a tweaked, booming, maybe-recognizable version of the famous squeal? Is it to see the big guy breathe his famous nuclear fire? Then step right up! Is it to see awesome monster battles and catastrophic urban destruction? To experience vicarious terror as tiny humans cower and perish before the onslaught of nightmarish natural forces? Well, there's some of that, I guess. Is it to nod in appreciation over an updated exploration of nuclear anxiety in the wake of Fukushima? To delight in the perfectly pitched performances of fine actors like Bryan Cranston and Ken Watanabe in an old-fashioned monster movie? Um, not so much. Anyway: Godzilla is now the only alpha predator besides man who doesn't eat what he hunts. But somehow, he still exists to restore the balance to nature — even if that means saving humanity and its practice of nuclear fission. Bonkers and boring. Oh, well. At least there's a nice lesson about the importance of family."

And here's a comment from Michael Eric Carlson that got 14 likes on Facebook: "Matthew Lickona can lickona my balls. Two thirds of your review were questions...you have the easiest job on the planet and your [sic] awful at it, congrats." John Koser (10 likes) chimed in with. "One of the fucking worst reviews I have ever read. You don't even offer any legitimate criticism in this 'review." Thanks, fellas!

How did I come to produce such a lousy review? Glad you asked. I go to a lot of screenings, and it's superduper rare for an audience to applaud in the middle of a film. For Godzilla, they applauded twice. For a terrible movie filled with terrible scripting and terrible acting and terrible plotting and oodles of stupid exposition and scads of pointless, stupid moments. Amazing! Well, I thought, they must be getting what they came for. So that's how I pitched my review. Hence, the questions that so irked Mr. Carlson. I wanted to let people know that they'd get their iconic moments of Godzilla action, but that the battles and carnage were so-so and the acting and story were just bad and dumb, respectively.

About the dumb story: I didn't want people to simply take my word for it, so I gave an example from the movie. Godzilla is held up as a force of nature, an alpha predator who can be counted on to keep things in balance. Sort of the way lions cull the antelope herds, I guess. But it's a funny sort of predator who doesn't eat what he hunts. Instead, Godzilla seems to act more like a defender of humanity, even though he and his prey have existed since long before humans walked the earth.

Oh, and the nature that Godzilla exists to keep in balance? I wonder how it felt about Chernobyl, or Fukushima, or the BP oil rig disaster, or the Exxon Valdez, or nuclear test bombing, or any of the other stuff humanity has done to the planet. If your mission in life was to preserve the balance in nature, who would you go after: a couple of gigantic bugs who just want to make babies or the species that melted the polar ice caps, chopped down the rain forest, and perforated the ozone layer? I'm a lousy environmentalist, but why does Godzilla hate the bugs and not the people? If anything, the bugs are restoring the balance — by eating all our nuclear waste. As I said, bonkers.

As for "boring" — well, it's an assertion, I admit. But a number of my fellow critics agreed. "Strangely unthrilling" — Daily Mail. "Even the most spectacle-hungry viewer is going to get bored." — Independent. "Bloated and often boring" — People. "Appreciation of a movie like this requires an almost morbid degree of connoisseurship, which may, in practice, be hard to distinguish from bored acquiescence." — The New York Times. The list goes on. And I wasn't kidding about the lesson on the importance of family. Bryan Cranston's character, who has abandoned his role as grandfather in order to prove his theories about a government cover-up, tells his son that protecting his family is all that matters. Isn't that nice? He learned something!

Blended — Wasn't it Chekhov who said, "If a character named 'Dick' appears in the first act of an Adam Sandler vehicle, there must be a dozen penis jokes in the second?" Blended starts in a Hooters toilet and never quite recovers. After a disastrous first date, a divorcee (Drew Barrymore) and a widower (Sandler) are forced to "blend" families for a deluxe African vacation. Maudlinly sentimental even by Jerry Lewis's standards, there are countless embarrassingly unintentional laughs to be found, particularly those involving one of Sandler's daughters, who insists that her dead mother is as real as a six-foot imaginary rabbit named Harvey. Screenwriters Ivan Menchell and Clare Sera's depiction of pop-eyed, subservient natives indicates their knowledge of African culture was fashioned after watching old Tarzan pictures. Once again Frank Coraci (The Wedding Singer, 50 First Dates) is assigned the unenviable task of calling "Action!" "Cut!" and "Anything you say, mealticket!" 2014. S.M. *

Documented — In 2011, Pulitzer Prizewinning journalist José Antonio Vargas "outed" himself as an illegal alien — sorry, "undocumented American" in an essay for the New York Times Magazine. (Changing the language of the debate is a major goal for Vargas; as a journalist, he understands the power of terminology.) Now, he writes, directs, produces, and stars in a documentary about what happened afterward, and also before. The best moments come when Vargas engages regular Americans in conversation, letting them know that he was brought here as a child, that he has flourished here as a journalist, and that he has paid his taxes, to boot. The encounters, especially with those who remain politically opposed, do a lot to keep those on both sides looking human — and looking at each other. Sadly, the drama is stretched like a bad facelift — there's something worth seeing here, but the hand of the surgeon is too apparent, and there is a whiff of vanity about the whole endeavor. 2013.

The Double — The more Jesse Eisenberg films there are, the more I embrace Michael Cera. The fidgety, uni-expressioned Eisenberg tackles the dual role of a secondary government clerk, kicked further to the curb after the sudden appearance of his assured doppelganger in Richard Avoade's adaptation of the Dostoevsky novella. Not since Only God Forgives has there been a film this determined to dazzle an audience with its expressionistic color palette; cinematographer Erik Wilson's burnished mahogany hues beg for a theatrical visit. But the fetch ultimately proves anything but fetching as the dystopian universe Ayoade hatches - oversize technology housed in incommodious subterranean warehouses — has "Made In Brazil" stamped across its bottom. It feels like Kafka, and it looks like Gilliam and Cronenberg, but when it comes to imparting genuine whimsy and/or human emotion, is as wan and nonportentous as its wraithlike lead(s). With Mia Wasikowska, Wallace Shawn, and a piddling few minutes of Chris O'Dowd. 2013. — S.M.

Fading Gigolo — Something very close to a sex comedy for grownups. John Turturro writes, directs, and stars in the carefully crafted, beautifully shot story of Fioravante, a strong, silent-type florist who agrees to do a favor for an old friend (Woody Allen) whose NYC bookstore has just gone out of business. It seems Murray knows a lady who's interested in paying for it, and he needs someone to provide stud services. Fioravante has some fairly profound misgivings, but the money's green and the clients are happy. Things get complicated when Murray introduces him to Avigal (Vanessa Paradis, balancing delicacy and strength), the lonely widow of an ultra-orthodox rabbi. Turturro is thoroughly sympathetic in his portrayal of everyone involved (which is not quite the same as approving), and he makes excellent use of a religious subculture that takes sex very seriously (which is not quite the same as disapproving). 2013. — M.L.  (IN WIDE RELEASE—SEE SHOWTIMES)

Fed Up — From the trailer: "The government is subsidizing the obesity epidemic." Is Big Sugar the new Big Tobacco? (LAND-MARK LA JOLLA VILLAGE)

For No Good Reason — A savage journey into the heart of the artist's dream to change the world by making his mark. Savage in part because of its subject: Ralph Steadman, the pen behind the twisted, spattered portraits that served to illustrate Hunter S. Thompson's immersive gonzo journalism. But the real bite comes from director Charlie Paul's handling of the material. The film follows Thompson devotee Johnny Depp on a visit to the radical artist's staid English estate, and while there are moments of revelation — mostly about technique — the tone is one of quiet despair. Paul is not above using a cash-machine sound effect over a scene of Steadman signing prints of his work and then following it with the artist's confession that prints sap his creativity. Our final juxtaposition: Steadman musing on his meaninglessness, followed by Depp's declaration that the visit has left him inspired. 2012. — M.L. ★ (LANDMARK HILL CREST)

God's Pocket — A neatly nasty cautionary tale about the dangers faced by the artist when he undertakes to speak for the common man. Richard Jenkins (Killing Them Softly) is spot-on as an old-school, Studs Terkel-style newspaper columnist drunk on the notion that his city is universally grateful to be immortalized in fishwrap. (He's also drunk on plain old alcohol.) When he starts poking around in the closed-lipped, closeknit neighborhood known as God's Pocket, he winds up getting more than the story, for good and ill. But first-time film director John Slattery is less assured when it comes to the story itself: the suspicious death of a junior sociopath (a chilling Caleb Landry Jones). Mom (Christina Hendricks) freaks out, and stepdad (Philip Seymour Hoffman) has to figure out how to pay for the funeral. It seems like Slattery is going for black comedy, but here and there he trips over his own empathy for the suffering souls onscreen. 2014. M.L. ★ (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

In Bloom — The former Soviet Union, 1992: A young Turk whisks his high school crush to a clandestine spot and instead of stealing a first kiss, he gifts her with a gun. It's a formidable shock, but one that never amounts to much: all we're asked to do for another hour of this sluggishly paced coming-of-age film is sit around and wait for someone to die. Filmmakers Nana Ekytimishvili and Simon Groß's political and feminist underpinnings tend to focus on the familiar — rebellious teen smokers puff away. and in Russia's queue system only soldiers are allowed to cut in line - placing most of the heavy lifting on the backs of the two terrific non-professional lead actresses (Lika Bablu-

Million Dollar Arm — Jon Hamm stars in this worked-over true story about a puffed-up, on-the-skids sports agent whose humbling necessitates giving birth to a Susan Boyle-inspired talent hunt for an Indian cricket bowler able to transition into an MLB pitcher. As live-action Disney sports comedies go, this makes for amenable if predictable summertime family fluff (Think Cool Runnings meets The World's Greatest Athlete.) Director Craig Gillispie (Lars and the Real Girl) keeps things moving, adding just enough local (and saturated) color to bolster screenwriter Thomas McCarthy's conclusion that India is a "study in extremes." Lord Alan Arkin apportions more belly laughs catnapping through the first third of his pithy performance than you're likely to find in most feature-length comedies. The fine supporting cast features Surai Sharma (Life of Pi). Lake Bell as Hamm's compulsory love interest, and never enough Bill Paxton. 2014. — S.M. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE -SEE SHOWTIMES)

Neighbors - Quite possibly the mostconventional and conservative comedy featuring two straight dudes engaged in a dildo swordfight you'll see all year. Director Nicholas Stoller's (Forgetting Sarah Marshall) story of a ludicrous "battle" between new parents (Seth Rogen and an uncommitted Rose Byrne) and the freshly transplanted fraternity next door lets cheerful raunch take the place of anything resembling an edge. You'll probably laugh, and you may even squirm, but it's unlikely that you'll pause to think. The real battle, of course, is not between Cool Dad Rogen and Frat King Zac Efron, but between manbovs and the looming, dreaded necessity of growing up, getting a job, being a parent, and all the rest of it. Outrageous message: don't fear the Reaper, just decide that you love brunch. Telling detail: the baby winds up as a pop-culture calendar prop in the final scene. Efron, always striving, makes the most of his role as a surprisingly sensitive stud. 2014 — M.L. ★ (IN WIDE RELEASE – SEE SHOWTIMES)

TiffaniMalner: I currently live in Santee, CA - I got this tattoo in Hawaii @ 808Tattoo by Ronny Yamada- In a 2 week period I made a spur of the moment big decision to leave my friends and family in AZ to move to Hawaii and then later San Diego, CA. I went in with no specific design except flowers that would represent Hawaii, happiness, and my big decision to make a big change in my life - he then drew the whole tattoo free hand. Best decision I have ever made and now every time I look at my tattoo I smile and think about the big change/ decision I made to move and try new things. I couldn't be any more happier living in San Diego.

Send us a photo of your tattoo and win $25!

alisonfigucia: Age: 24 Lives in City Heights. Works at Sprouts. Tattoo by Full Circle. Bees have always been my favorite insect. Without them, we wouldn't have many of the crops that we do today and many ecosystems would be in great danger. We are now at risk of losing our bees due to issues like climate change and Colony Collapse Disorder. I think it's important to do what we can to save the bees. I got this tattoo as a tribute to a small insect with a large impact.

- "The trucks full of paperwork come every day," wrote the Washington Post in March, down a country road in Boyers, PA, north of Pittsburgh, and descend "into the earth" to deliver federal retiree applications to the eight "supermarket"-sized caverns 230 feet below ground where Office of Personnel Management bureaucrats process them — manually — and store them in 28,000 metal filing cabinets. Applications thus take 61 days on average to process (compared to Texas' automated system, which takes 2). One step requires a record's index to be digitized — but a later step requires that the digital portion be printed out for further manila-foldered file work. OPM blames contractors' technology failures and bizarrely complicated retirement laws, but no relief is in sight except the hiring of more workers.

The Continuing Crisis

- In February, officials in Sudan seized at least 70 female sheep that had male sexual organs sewn on — the result of livestock smugglers trying to circumvent export restrictions. (Ewes are valued more highly, and their sale is limited.) Authorities had been treating the inspections as routine until they spotted one "ram" urinating from the female posture.

- Michael Schell, 24, and Jessica Briggs, 31, were arrested on several charges in Minot, N.D., in February when police were called to a convenience store because Schell and Briggs had commandeered a restroom and were having noisy sex. The store is part of the Iowabased chain of 400 serving the Midwest that go by the name Kum & Go.

Democracy Blues

- U.S. Rep. Robert Andrews announced his retirement in February, after 23 years of representing his New Jersey district, and in "tribute," the Washington Post suggested he might be the least successful lawmaker of the past two decades, in that he had sponsored a total of 646 pieces of legislation — more than any of his contemporaries — but that not a single one became law. In fact, Andrews has not accomplished even the easiest of all bill-sponsoring — to name a post office or a courthouse.

- November election returns for the city council of Flint, Mich., revealed that voters chose two convicted felons (Wantwaz Davis and Eric Mays) and two other candidates who had been through federal bankruptcy. Davis never publicized his 1991 second-degree murder plea but said he talked about it while campaigning. (The Flint Journal acknowledged that it had poorly vetted Davis's record.)

Unclear on the Concept

- A Florida appeals court tossed out an $80,000 anti-discrimination settlement in February because the beneficiary's teenage daughter could not refrain from bragging about it — even though the terms of the settlement required confidentiality. Gulliver Proprietary School in Miami had offered the sum to former headmaster Patrick Snay to make Snay's lawsuit go away, but Dana Snay almost immediately told her 1200 Facebook friends that "Gulliver is now officially paying for my vacation to Europe this summer. Suck it." Wrote the court, "[Snay's] daughter did precisely what the confidentiality agreement was designed to prevent."

Least Competent Criminals

 Hernando County (Fla.) Sheriff's detective James Smith happened across longtime fugitive James Dixon, 53, in March and detained him, even though Dixon claimed he was actually one of his own twin brothers, Gary Dixon.

On a hunch, Det. Smith called out to "Gary," "Hey, James!" - and "Gary" quickly turned his head to see what Smith wanted. Smith said "Gary" then put his head down and acknowledged that he was really James. He was held for extradition on a 30-year-old Michigan warrant

Readers' Choice

- A self-described "devil"-possessed Stephanie Hamman, 23, was arrested in Church Hill, Tenn., in March after driving her car through the front door of the Providence Church, summoning her husband on the phone, and when he arrived, stabbing him in the chest for "worshipping the NASCAR race" that he had been devoted to on TV that day.

- Police were called to a Taco Bell in Tega Cay, S.C., in March after a customer became irate that another had audibly belched in the dining area yet had not said "excuse me." The enraged man jostled the burper with a chair and grabbed at his throat, but no arrest was made.
