Does a Target Express store threaten to damage South Park?

Keep big-box stores and their little-box brethren out of South Park, says a petition signed by over 750 South Park residents. The locals have banded together in opposition to a proposal from Minneapolis-based Target to open a Target Express store inside what is currently Gala Foods.

Minneapolis-based big-box chain Target is looking at South Park's Gala Foods grocery store for a new Target Express.

Council president Todd Gloria, the representative for South Park, says that Target does not plan to make major changes to the outside of the building but instead plans to make so-called "tenant improvements" to the inside.

Residents aren't pleased, not only with the idea of a conglomerate moving in but that they may not have any say in the permitting process. As of now, the company is only required to obtain staff approval, meaning no environmental review, no opportunity for public comment, and no traffic studies.

The lack of community review prompted some residents to create a petition to send to Gloria and Target executives.

"I am aware of both opposition and support of the proposed Target Express in South Park and appreciate the ongoing community feedback and suggestions," Gloria wrote in an October 14 statement.

"As I understand, Target Express is at this time proposing only tenant improvements, which do not require discretionary review. I have encouraged company representatives to continue to reach out to the community to provide details of their plans, which should occur in November."

Death blow to community-choice energy ຕົ option averted

Dozens of residents from across San Diego County gathered inside city hall in Solana Beach on Monday evening, October 13. They were there for a presentation by local clean-energy activist Lane Sharman concerning a push to establish "community choice aggregation (CCA)," a method of sourcing cheaper, greener electricity than that currently provided by local energy monopoly San Diego Gas & Electric.

The San Diego Energy District, of which Sharman is a founding member, has been exploring the CCA model locally since 2005. He envisions possibly having a functional system in place locally as early as 2015.

Sharman called a switch to clean power "the biggest change you'll never notice," emphasizing the importance of consumers remaining "on the grid" and within the jurisdiction of SDG&E as an electricity supplier.

Similar community-choice operations are already active in two Northern California locales; in both cases they've been able to increase local energy portfolios to include 50 percent energy consumption from green sources while reducing the electric bills of Pacific Gas & Electric customers. Debate exists as to whether such figures are simply "green-washing"; however, the total energy mix is calculated including credits purchased from out-of-area generators such as wind farms in the Midwest, even though that energy is not actually being consumed by the CCA district.

If community choice is implemented, in 2015 or beyond, consumers will have several opportunities to opt out of the program and continue receiving an energy blend as selected by SDG&E. The utility noted that it expects to source 33 percent of its energy from renewable sources by year end, an accomplishment that would be six years ahead of state mandates for green energy conversion.

Borrego: build a home, lose a farm

By Don Bauder

iny, water-deficient Borrego Springs (population 3500) may be a microcosm of what San Diego will be if the water crisis worsens. Borrego is betting the farm — actually, betting on leveling farms — for its survival. San Diego County may not have enough farms to adopt Borrego's strategy, but it certainly could learn something from the little town in the northeast part of the county.

The only question is whether Borrego's plan will work. For more than half a century, Borregans have said their town would be "the next Palm Springs." But since the 1980s, financially troubled developers and asset flippers have pumped more than $100 million into the town while taking big losses.

Now, Borrego is making real estate developers buy and fallow farmland if they want to build homes. Fruit farms, nurseries, and the like use 70 percent of Borrego's water. Once they have drilled a well, their basic water cost is electricity to pump the stuff out. "These are industrial conglomerates, not mom-andpop farms," says Borregan Ray Shindler. "They came to Borrego in the 1950s and 1960s because they saw cheap water."

So, a developer building a home has to obtain a farm, cut down the trees, restore the desert landscape, and shovel out other funds to make the place presentable. With leveled farms using no more water, there is some available for homes being constructed. So, what do you suppose is happening to farm prices? Zoom! "Farmers aren't dumb. They are smart," says Shindler, pointing to a potato farm that is on the market for three times what it is worth.

On the other hand, says longtime resident Lane Sharman, San Diego Gas & Electric costs are so high "that farming is becoming less and less economical."

Farmers might sell their land at reasonable prices. If there is demand for new development — and that is a very big "if" — Borrego's strategy might work, although Sharman thinks the wateruse ratio of fallowed farms to new homes should be 3 to 1 or even 5 to 1, instead of roughly 1 to 1 or 2 to 1.

"Pardon the pun, but the water-mitigation policy here has been watered down; at one time the ratio was 3 to 1."

According to the United States Geological Survey, the Borrego Valley pumps 19,000 acre-feet of water per year. Only 5600 acre-feet is replaced through, mostly, rainfall. That creates "an overdraft of 13,000 to 14,000 feet per year," says Jerry Rolwing, general manager of the Borrego Water District. At this drawdown rate, big trouble hits Borrego in 50 years, he has "luxury" written all over it.

But optimists are counting on two facilities to power the expected growth. One is Rams Hill, a residential development that has been through bankruptcy twice, with myriad financial problems. The other is La Casa del Zorro, a resort that was closed and is now being resuscitated. Its guests have always played on the Rams Hill golf course, which reopens next month.

In recent years, the championship course has been closed and gone to seed, as winds blew over dead and dying trees. Rams Hill housing values plunged from a 2006 high of $270 a square foot to $63. Prices are coming back, but there is controversy on how much.

In July of last year, Denver developer Terry Considine, who once owned the El Cortez briefly and is a member of a prominent San Diego family, joined with Bill Berkley to buy Rams Hill's 3000 acres, the golf course, and the clubhouse for $842,000. They paid off long-defaulted bonds and homeowner fees, settled a dispute with the Borrego Water District, drilled wells that Berkley says are not tied in with the main aquifer, set up a solar energy system, and brought the golf course back to life. Here's Hillary Former first lady Hillary Clinton has a long-term relationship with San Diego. Back in the 1990s, when husband Bill was president, she spent leisure time with him hanging around with Democratic donor and Hotel del Coronado mogul Larry Lawrence and his wife Shelia. (After Lawrence died, his widow was reported by then-conservative columnist Arianna Huffington to have become more than just a friend of Bill.) This June, Hillary showed up at the BIO International Conference, whose exclusive downtown block party was arranged by meet-

"With over two million supporters and over 50,000 grassroots donors, Ready for Hillary is the vehicle through which Americans of all walks of life are expressing their support for a potential Hillary run," says the group's website.

In May, Politico reported that the super PAC had filed with the Federal Election Commission to turn itself into a so-called hybrid PAC, "It will let Ready For Hillary donate directly to candidates running for House and Senate in 2014 and beyond — and could help bolster key Clinton allies running for office in important swing states or primary states." Under the law, Clinton is barred from coordinating her political activities with Ready for Hillary, but disclosure reports show that the PAC was present and spending in San Diego during Clinton's June trip here. On June 26, the day after Clinton spoke at the BIO event in the convention center,

Ready for Hillary reported picking up a $402.76 tab at downtown's Four Points by Sheraton. The Meineke Car Center on Damon Avenue in Pacific Beach got $365.35. Two days later, on June 28, the PAC dropped $671.99 at the Marriott Residence Inn on Kearny Mesa Road.

Political housing

Ex-city councilman and former weekly newspaper owner Jim Madaffer has turned to a new trade. According to an October 10 lobbyist disclosure statement filed at city hall, he's now peddling influence for real estate developer Douglas Wilson. ...

Mayor Kevin Faulconer continues to bolster his political machine by rewarding campaign contributors with city board posts. The latest is Dorothy Surdi, a commercial real estate broker appointed by the mayor to the San Diego Housing Commission, "Ms. Surdi is a commercial real estate advisor with the Sperry Van Ness network where she specializes in investment sales and leasing representation for landlords and tenants," according to a September 26 memorandum.

City campaign contribution records show that Sperry Van Ness employees gave $1300 to Faulconer's mayoral campaign, including Surdi with $100. Sperry Van Ness employees have also so far contributed $825 to the campaign of downtown lobbyist Chris Cate for city council and $550 to the successful reelection bid of councilwoman Lorie Zapf, both Faulconer allies. . . . Duty Free Americas, the big customs operation run by the billionaire Falic family of Florida, continues its press for a lavish new commercial complex at the border here. On October 13, brother Simon Falic gave $1500 to the 2014 San Ysidro school-board reelection campaign of Jason Wells. Executive director of the San Ysidro Chamber of Commerce, Wells has become a big booster of the Falic project.

"This is parking for my stores, my businesses," he told U-T San Diego in June.

Lack of Smell

The situation regarding the intervention at Valley View Ranch (News Ticker: "Peta Framed Me," October 16) was, among other things, a waste of resources and emotion.

PETA and the Humane Society both do an amazing amount of good in the animal community, but in this case they were duped. Anyone who knows proper handling and maintenance of pet market chinchillas would know that the conditions at Mrs. Adams's ranch were above reproach.

I speak from experience. I purchased a pet chinch some years ago from the ranch and visited every few months to purchase food. Never was there any odor of the animals upon entry, or when in the cage area. That, in itself, was amazing to me since I learned I should have named my chinch Mr. Peebody.

Chinchillas pee a lot, and it's musky. Yet, I never detected any odor [at the ranch]. Cleanliness was evident! Each of the breeding cages had data sheets recording breeding lines — as it was explained to me, "like they do for race horses." I remember the exact words because I was so surprised by the science applied here. They breed for color, gentleness, health, and more, I'm sure.

Frankly, I don't know what to make of the animals noted to be ill because that did not seem to be the norm. I, for one, would stand for Mrs. Adams in the lawsuit — at least as the situation has been explained in the press and it has been very poorly explained, I might add.

McCann's plan a sham? Possible flaws with holiday gift idea

South Bay campaigning has been getting down and dirty, but John McCann, a Sweetwater Union High School trustee who is running for Chula Vista City Council, has chosen another route to the seat, chumming the political waters with promises.

A controversial ten-mile-long toll road, SR125, traverses eastern Chula Vista. On October 13, 10News' Joe Little reported that "The candidate [McCann] wants the San Diego Association of Governments to put a moratorium on collecting tolls on the 125 South Bay Expressway in November and December to boost Chula Vista business and to alleviate traffic on I-805."

Beyond that, the 10News story quotes a San Diego Association of Governments representative as saying, "The tolls are necessary to pay down the $341.5 million price tag SANDAG paid for the 125. Part of the purchase agreement guaranteed the toll road would be self-sufficient and cut off from SANDAG's other revenue sources."

It is ironic that a close associate of McCann's, Dan

Hom, was instrumental in bringing the toll road to Chula Vista.

Hom is CEO of a media relations group called Focus.com. In 2000, in spite of environmental and community opposition to the road, Hom gathered signatures for the road in his capacity as co-chair of Citizens for State Route 125.

ghastly space in downtown Tijuana to Otay. Their new location doubled their space; Barajas can now host more deported veterans and also deported mothers. Varona has been staying in Otay for a few weeks and hosts meetings for DREAMers USA.

I arrive to the new space with a ten-piece box of spicy chicken, which Barajas swiftly takes to the kitchen.

The building, located on the corner of Avenida Tecnológico and Juan Alvarez, is indeed more spacious and comfortable than where the support house was previously located.

Women wearing pink shirts sit around in a circle, a couple kids play games only they can understand while the Little Mermaid plays on a small TV.

"Well, let's start the meeting," says Varona. "For the newcomers, for Matthew who is here reporting, I want to read the purpose of DREAMers Moms of America," Varona continues after a prayer. "We are a group of daughters, wives, mothers and women who are undocumented and not afraid to come out of the shadows to raise our voices to fight for our rights and those of more than 11 million people. The current law has created a moral, political, and economical crisis. We are asking the leaders of the U.S. government to work together and listen to the people of America to work up a solution for immigration reform."

Some of the women begin to share their deportation stories, all on the verge of tears as they speak. A woman from Guatemala suffered not only deportation but domestic abuse from her husband and says she was ignored by governments of three countries. Another has an autistic son (an American citizen) and wants to go back mainly to get the treatment and education for him that she cannot find in Tijuana.

A deported father from El Salvador hasn't seen his kids (American citizens) or wife (illegal Mexican) in years. The American government put his children in foster homes when he and his wife were deported. Since then, his wife (from Veracruz) has crossed back illegally. He is thinking about doing the same soon. This time, he just wants to get his children back, even if he gets deported with them

According to Varona, "Every single one of us is here because we have sons or daughters who are American citizens. We have been separated from our family and the place we call home. We are here to keep each other informed of the new laws, to support each other, and to fight together to go back."

POST TITLE: WTF at Tijuana's "The Kitchen" POST DATE: May 20, 2014

In the 1930s, artists Diego Rivera and Frida Kahlo were in the vortex of the "Mexican Renaissance," surrounding themselves with an inner circle of intellectuals and creatives such as Trotsky and Andre Breton. The group asserted some influence on society with regard to their views on socialism and liberal politics, giving Rivera the leverage he needed to paint as he desired and include images of communist leaders in his mural work.

tro and Karla Navarro have combined their powers of art and cuisine to bring together their own circle of influencers from the worlds of business, art, music, education, and media. Prompted by Castro's need for space, a former Avon cosmetics warehouse in Zona Centro at 7th & Constitución was rehabilitated to house the Kitchen and other businesses desiring new space for restaurants, galleries, and shops.

Recently, 12 "hedonists" gathered around a table at the Kitchen for a clandestine meal, drinks, art, photography and some stimulating conversation about the evolving reinvention of Tijuana. El Gringo was privileged to be invited to the event, called WTF (for Where's the Food?). Other guests included local business people, artists, musicians, educators, and members of the media. All 12 of us enjoyed 12 courses of amazing food prepared by Karla Navarro, a kitchen staff of three, and an attentive wait staff.

All of the courses were based on Baja California classics such as locally sourced fish, ceviche, quail, shellfish, Puerto Nuevo-style lobster, and oxtail. The meal was accompanied by Valle de Guadalupe wines, Tijuana craft beers, and a mezcal from Oaxaca that had been made for one of Tijuana's top chefs. Everything was delicious!

Although WTF really stands for "Where's the Food," there were a few WTF? touches around the Kitchen. Most prominent were Josue's large portraits of Baja California chefs grittily photographed in black-and-white with an S&M motif (he's currently working on this series). Another WTF? touch was the hostess, a silent, masked model in a black bra and tutu who served hors d'oeuvres and drinks as we mingled before the event. Josue had also set up a corner of the room with lights and black paper to photograph the hedonists with the model, as well as with Karla. He explained the concept to me, "I'm a hedonist. I like beautiful women, good food, good wine, good music. And the Kitchen is a place where they all come together."

During the meal, Josue took time between courses to further explain his vision for the Kitchen, Zona Centro, and Tijuana's image in the U.S. media. "When people think of Tijuana in the U.S., they think of migrants, drug dealers, prostitutes. Those are a part of Tijuana, like most major cities, but not all of Tijuana. There are a lot of people in the community here that are working very hard to improve the image of our city. Galleries, businesses, restaurants, all of us working together. TJ is a cool city, and we want people to know that."

Genaro Valladolid, a real estate agent for the property at 7th & Constitutión, waved his hand across the spacious outdoor balcony at the Kitchen, indicating the neighborhood before us. "If you look around Zona Centro here in Tijuana, all of the buildings are old. There's been nothing new built here for a long time. The lofts here represent the first new development that's happened in Zona Centro in 60 years."

"Tijuana is constantly changing," Josue told me. "In fact, the next time you come back, there will be something new, different, exciting. The Kitchen is a part of that."

At the end of the night, we hedonists parted ways, exchanging abrazos, handshakes, and business cards. We headed out into the night unafraid, inspired, and hopeful for Zona Centro, Tijuana, and the people who are living and creating here, trying to bring about a "Tijuana Revolution," as Diego and Frida did so many years ago.

Navy Initiates "Hey, Sailor!" Recruitment Campaign in Effort to Stem Tide of Sexual Harrassment on Ships

Navy spokesman Brett Pupdek: "It was bad enough when we had to boot Capt. Greg Gombert off the U.S.S. Cowpens after he made his onboard sweetheart, Lt. Cmdr. Destiny Savage, the 'acting commanding officer,' whatever that means. I guess it's like when a husband gives his wife the remote, except the remote is a Ticonderoga-class guidedmissile cruiser. But now, just a few months later, we're having to relieve Cmdr Luis Alva from his duties on the U.S.S. Vandergrift for playing grab-ass with a petty officer's wife! I guess it really is like what that Smithers character on the Simpsons said: 'Women and seamen don't mix.' Unless maybe the seamen are interested in seamen. Anyway, we're going to give this "Gavy" thing a try and see how things go. It's not like people haven't been saying it about the squids since forever."

Some Kind of Help

Ex-Mayor Filner Expresses Support for Embattled Carl DeMaio

Former San Diego mayor Bob Filner made a surprise appearance today at a press conference organized by congressional candidate Carl DeMaio. Reporters had shown up expecting to hear DeMaio respond to allegations of sexual harrassment made by a former staffer, Todd Bosnich. (DeMaio's campaign has denied the claims from the get-go, but questions continue to swirl over the circumstances that led to Bosnich's departure from the campaign, with each side accusing the other of egregious falsehood.) Instead, they got an earful from a man who was himself run out of office after a string of women claimed he sexually harassed them.

"I know that Carl and I have had our differences," began Filner. "Heck, we even ran against each other for mayor! I won, of course, but even so, I knew Carl had a bright political future ahead of him. Looking at him, I saw something of myself: the same passion, the same urgency, the same drive to make things happen, no matter who said no. Carl DeMaio is a man who knows what he wants and who has the cojones to go out and grope it. Grab it — I mean grab it. To see all that talent and promise jeopardized by unsubstantiated claims of sexual harassment that, I must add, have never been proven in a court of law — well, it's just tragic. Speaking as the victim of a similar campaign of smears and unsubstantiated allegations, it seemed like the least I could do was to speak out on Carl's behalf.

"Bob — stop helping!"

Write this down, world: Bob Filner is proud to stand with Carl DeMaio on this one."

As he left the podium, Filner flashed his famous grin at the struggling candidate. For his part, DeMaio was clearly moved by the gesture of support, at one point pausing to wipe a tear from his eye.

Droids Not Drones

General Dynamics inks historic brand partnership with Disney for line of Star Wars—themed unmanned vehicles

WHERE THE MAGIC KING-DOM MEETS THE EVIL EMPIRE, SOMEWHERE BETWEEN HERE AND BURBANK — "The problem with drones has always been largely one of perception," says General Dynamics Head of Brainwashing Dan Vader. "People love the Roomba, which is essentially just a vacuuming drone. And the selfdriving car is still a cherished American dream: so much more time to text! But send a remotely operated plane out to defend American freedom around the globe and suddenly everyone starts screaming about deathbots and the rise of the machines. We realized that we needed to tap into the public's unspoken — perhaps even unrealized — love of robots, androids, what have you. And then it hit us: C-3PO and R2-D2, the iconic droids from the Star Wars films. Everybody loves them. And the good people at Disney were only too happy to strike up a mutually beneficial relationship with the Department of Defense. They really understood what we were about in terms of global influence for good. Of course, Threepio and Artoo turned out to be pretty useless when it came to combat and reconnaissance applications. But we watched the films a couple of times and found several droid models that should prove more than satisfactory. When the Viper Probe Droid (pictured, right) shows up in some Syrian neighborhood, we expect it to provoke nothing but good feelings and fond memories."

Fears About Memory

Many fear things, like taking tests, visiting their doctor or even changing jobs. In spite of whatever people anticipate the problem to be, they usually find out that they are not as bad as they imagined.

Testing your memory may be a daunting thought, but ultimately can provide helpful information and actually alleviate some fears about your memory. Pacific Research Network is conducting several clinical trials examining investigational medications for memory. Come in for a no-cost assessment and learn if you are qualified to participate. We evaluate your memory and save the results for comparison to future assessment. You may also qualify for a study and want to participate. All physicals, labs, and study medication are provided at no cost and we compensate qualified study volunteers for time and travel.

We are one of the largest, dedicated memory research centers in the Western U.S.; if you are interested in our evaluation, call and make an appointment to have your memory tested

by Barbarella

The air remained a balmy 80 degrees when the sun began to dip behind the Point Loma peninsula. The azure sky was festooned with wispy white clouds that hung low over the deeper blue of the ocean. The soft, synthetic lawn was a perfect golf-course green. It was a lovely location for a wedding.

The setting was not only gorgeous, but also exclusive, as it was located on the Naval Submarine Base. My father, a retired lieutenant commander, had tried to score this same location for two of his four daughters (Jane was set on that castle in Ramona, and I eloped), but each time someone else had already snagged their selected dates. As guests began to arrive, I mused aloud to David at how far we've come as a country: from the government's "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy, to a gay wedding ceremony right here on secure military property.

"It's sad for her dad. I feel bad for him. He's the one being deprived today. Most parents just want their kids to be happy, and that's enough. But this guy, he's robbing himself of this moment."

At the rehearsal dinner the night before, Jackie's aunt had told me, "This will be my first same-sex wedding." I could tell by the way she said it that she was excited; not just for her niece's happiness but also for her own edification. I deduced from the awards on the walls and books on the shelves that she had an Ivy League academic interest in the social sciences. "I'm just curious to see how it goes, you know, who says what, and how they handle the vows," she added.

Because I have a number of LGBT friends, I easily forget that most people — regardless of how liberal they may be — don't have direct and regular interaction with alternative lifestyles. I sometimes swim in the mainstream, but I am more often found splashing about in some subcultural streamlet.

I've attended same-sex ceremonies and have many friends who have gotten hitched since it became legal to do so in their states. Just this summer in New York, my Aunt Diane eloped with Susan, her partner of 28 years. For their announcement in the New York Times, Aunt Diane explained her position with heartfelt sincerity and a hint of sarcasm: "After careful deliberation, we decided to get 'married," she wrote. "We want the protection it offers us and another statistic for the historical record. We are grateful to all those who fought the painful fight to make this possible. After 28 years of a loving partnership we hope we can weather 'marriage.'

Jackie and Jill (the spouses-to-be) had asked me to read a poem during the ceremony, an honor I was quick to accept. When my friends Nancy and Carole tied the knot, they both wore white dresses. Jill was dressed as a traditional bride, in a white gown and gossamer veil, but Jackie was wearing black pants, a white tuxedo shirt, and a custom-made, purple and black, corseted Victorian-style vest with a high collar.

When it was my turn, I read the poem the way I'd practiced it, with deliberate pauses and inflection, and then returned to my seat. I had a direct view of Jill's face, and she was beaming. The sun was on her, but it seemed as though she were lit from within, radiating her own light outward.

It was while I was appreciating this visage of happiness that it occurred to me Jill's family was seated on the wrong side, with a clear view of Jackie's face, but not of Jill's. I glanced over at Jill's family, and saw her mother's smile; her brother's attention toggling between corralling his two toddlers and listening to the nuptials; her father seeming to appreciate something on the water, maybe the large container ship that was passing by. But when I glanced back over a few minutes later, I noted that the father's gaze was still fixed on the now boatfree water. It was then that I registered his body language: arms crossed, head turned sharply to the left, while his daughter was reciting her vows to the right. He remained frozen in that exact position for the duration of the ceremony.

Later, as we made our way to the reception area, I pulled my friend Megan aside and asked, "What's the deal with Jill's dad?"

"It's a huge step for him to even be here today," she explained. My heart sank as my fear was confirmed — Jill's dad was uncomfortable with his daughter's homosexuality.

"That's really sad," I said. When Megan began to nod her head, I clarified, "I don't mean sad for Jill. This is a great day for her — she's surrounded by people who love her and support her, and she's obviously glowing with happiness. I mean, it's sad for her dad. I feel bad for him. He's the one being deprived today. Most parents just want their kids to be happy, and that's enough. But this guy, he's robbing himself of this moment; here he has a chance to bask in the fact that his daughter is happy and healthy, but instead he's over there pouting because the things that make her happy aren't the same things that make him happy."

The situation reminded me of that old saying, "Holding on to anger is like grasping a hot coal with the intent of throwing it at someone else — you are the one who gets burned."

"I wonder if he'll live long enough and grow as a person enough to look back on this day and regret what a narrow-minded nincompoop he was being on his daughter's special day," I said.

Megan and I were still off to the side chatting when the DJ invited the newlyweds and each of their fathers onto the floor for a daddy-daughter dance. As I watched Jill lead her father to the dance floor and bring him in for a hug, I realized I had been too quick to judge. Despite his apparent disapproval of this wedding, Jill's father had still shown up. As they swayed to the music, the aging man held his little girl tight, evidence of the love he felt, regardless of whether or not he agreed with her life choices. As the father and bride glided around the dance floor, I noticed that I was not the first, nor the last, to wipe joyful tears from my cheeks. ■ (@barbarellaf) scratch. My husband and I both lost weight and felt better. But it was a struggle to make all that food. I thought, Other people must be in the same boat. So I left my job and started Get Fresh."

Everything on Get Fresh's menu is available in a vegan, vegetarian, or gluten-free version. "We make everything without animal products until the very end." The process "also helps us to cut down on fats used during the cooking process." Even the standard stuff skews healthy. "I might make a lasagna that uses vegetables instead of pasta noodles, and a macadamia-nut cheese instead of ricotta. I've had people without special dietary needs try it and say they didn't realize it wasn't really ricotta!" And the produce comes from Grower's Direct in La Mesa. "They're almost like a farmers' market, except they're open all week. They go and get produce directly from local

Neusch puts together four weeklong menus for use over each 12-week season. "Then we do a six-week rotation. That way, the customer gets a variety of meals and we can incorporate seasonal vegetables. A recent favorite was our Jamaican stew, made with black beans, garbanzo beans, roasted tomatoes, plantains, simmered with allspice and ginger, and served with brown rice. People could add shrimp to it if they wanted to. The portion sizes are generous — about one-and-a-half servings. We have different customers with different calorie needs. Some elderly clients share the dishes or add a salad and get two meals out of it. Some of our more active clients eat the whole thing." All Get Fresh dishes are packaged in BPA microwavable and freezable containers. "We have 'use by' and 'freeze by' dates on the containers. If we send out a quinoa salad on arugula, we'll have a note on there saying to eat that one earlier in the week."

The cost for a week's worth of meals is

"I might make a lasagna that uses vegetables instead of pasta noodles."

"about $100, with a $5 delivery fee. Our range is pretty extensive; we go from Carlsbad to Chula Vista. We deliver on Mondays. Some clients have us bring the food to where they work; we'll put it right into the office fridge for them. Other times, they'll leave a cooler outside their homes and we'll fill it using heavy-duty ice packs. We want them to feel taken care of, just the way I would take care of my friends."

Amanda, community leader and health coach at Fitzee Foods in Liberty Station (619-501-5664; fitzeefoods.com), also offers "fresh, well-balanced, healthy meals using all natural ingredients and locally sourced produce. All you have to do is heat them up. We try to take comfort food revamp it to make it healthier — our and revamp it to make it healthier — our shredded chicken mac and cheese was a favorite. We offer paleo, vegetarian, and gluten-free entrées. 'Paleo' refers to Paleolithic times, where all the food was unprocessed. That means no refined starches, lots of protein, lots of nuts, berries, and vegetables. And we offer international dishes like enchiladas or Thai coconut curry chicken."

Portions are available in four different sizes, with prices ranging from $7.95 to $22.95. (Bulk purchases receive 10 percent off.) "We have a nutrition calculator to help you determine which size is right for you, and anyone here can guide you through the process. You tell us your goals and needs, and we can help you pick out the right entrées. They're all here in-store. And we also have healthy snacks: our Fitzi Bars [$2.99] have 15 grams of protein; they're extremely popular. They can serve as a meal replacement and they come in chewy chocolate chip, coconut almond, and apples and oats."

Fitzee Foods also delivers — nationwide and to 15 local pickup locations. Home delivery costs vary, but pickup-location delivery is just $5. The Liberty Station store also offers free yoga classes, Monday and Wednesday, 6:30–7:30.

ADVICE YOU DIDN'T KNOW YOU NEEDED

ASK A

HIPSTER@SDREADER.COM

Dear Hipster:

As you well know, people accuse hipsters of being terminally ironic. I watched the Onion video you referenced last week, and I felt like the idea of going to Applebee's "ironically" wasn't quite right. The Applebee's commercial hipsters seemed like they were just being condescending and sarcastic when they put down things that aren't cool enough for them. I got zero satisfaction from Googling the subject, as it's too complicated, so please help explain, what is the difference between sarcasm and irony?

— KIMBERLY, GOLDEN HILL

The snarky, sarcastic witticisms that pass the lips of jaded hipsters as they express their disapproval for all things uncool need not feature irony at all. There's nothing ironic about saying exactly what you mean, and folks prickle at thinly-if-at-all veiled condescension for Michael Bay movies, mainstream music, fast food, and business-casual dress. Vitriol over hipster condescension forms the backbone of lambastings that paint the hipster as unable to take anything seriously; as constantly putting anything and -one down; as the solipsistic, self-proclaimed keeper of the cool.

Critics see us hipsters as having a crippling detachment from reality, as if the entire world were a joke and only the cool kids were in on it. If that were true, it would be a kind of dramatic irony, and a very hard one to accept at that, which is possibly at the root of popular resentment over the matter. People need things to matter, to be important, and questioning that which is conventionally important is one of hipsters' greatest gifts to humanity.

Still, many misuse irony when they speak of hipsters and how they seem to approach the world thinking, Wouldn't it be funny if...

Wouldn't it be funny if I wore this T-shirt with a wolf on it?

Wouldn't it be funny if we did "Regulators" at karaoke?

Even, like the Onion video, wouldn't it be funny to eat at Applebee's?

"Oooh, those ironic hipsters, being ironic!" seethe the haters. But, that's not really irony. Irony is a complicated situational, dramatic, and verbal construction whereby the intent of speech or action runs counter to the literal meaning, or where expectations are the opposite of results.

Tell me, what about a 26-year-old in an "ironic" Rainbow Brite shirt is anything other than exactly as it seems? It looks like a grown-up in a kid's clothes, and there's nothing wrong with that. Just plain hipster and proud of it!

Irony need not be funny. Imagine if, in the world of Rainbow Brite (let's just run with it), the happy little critters from Rainbow Land were actually members of an invading alien race who had imprisoned the original denizens in underground forced labor camps. Murky Dismal, the only hope for the original inhabitants, fought a constant battle to liberate his people from the wicked machinations of Rainbow Brite and Starlite the Tyrant Horse....

How's that for a little irony right in the childhood?

Of course, irony and sarcasm cross paths every now and again. Ask a hipster how he feels about the most recent sports bar to open in North Park, and he might say, "More drunken bros fighting and spitting up Bud Lite on our formerly artisanal streetcorners! Just what we need!" There's something of irony in there, as the literal meaning of the words is exactly the opposite of the intended meaning. It may be a base form of irony, but it sure gets the point across.

Tiki said to hell with it.

Let's party.

Tom Ham

good

times

Maybe Tiki god was out of sorts that day, May 14, 1955.

Wigwam, a 30-kiloton atomic explosion set off in the Pacific 490 miles southwest of San Diego, rumbled deep beneath the ocean and surged upward in a formidable column. With unpredicted force, the blast swept over the 6800 sailors deployed nearby on a 30-ship fleet.

"When the light bubble broached the surface, it was a spectacular display of pure uncontrolled hell," recalled chief petty officer R.J. Ritter of the U.S.S. Tawasa, the Cherokee-class fleet tug out of 32nd Street that had towed the B-7 Betty depth bomb into place. The fireball rose to a height of 12,000 feet and generated a 1200-foot tidal wave around its radius, spewing deadly radiation.

"My husband said that after the detonation, for as far as the eye could see, the ocean was covered with dead marine life," recalled

Joan McCarthy, the widow of a Wigwam sailor who subsequently died of leukemia at age 44. Across San Diego County, radiation levels spiked over 30 times normal, a situation that locals weren't told about.

Six decades later, it's happy hour in San Diego at the city's most famous Tiki joint, and Wigwam comes up.

"I don't remember that," says Susie Baumann, Point Loma High School class of 1963. "That probably would have scared the tar out of me." Baumann owns the Bali Hai, the Polynesian-themed drinking and dining emporium on Shelter Island, where she is being interviewed for a story about the soon-to-arrive 60th anniversary of the place.

It's a few miles down the bay to Naval Base Point Loma, headquarters of the Third Fleet and its flotilla of Los Angeles-class nuclear attack submarines.

Tiki bars and America's atomic bomb blasts of the 1950s are bound together in history by the Cross Spikes Club, an improvised grog shack set up by U.S. servicemen on Bikini Atoll during Operation Crossroads, the fearsome first round of American atomic explosions detonated after the end of World War II. Starting in the early '50s, places like the Bali Hai grew famous in the shadow of Cross Spikes for providing liquid courage to ward off nuclear anxiety.

Baumann may not recall Wigwam, but she says she will never forget the Cold War fear that permeated San Diego in the '50s and '60s like a dose of hidden radiation. It was enough to drive men to drink, and more. Some went to church to ask God to spare the world from incineration. Others turned to her father, Tom Ham, who founded the Bali Hai.

For them, Ham was the god of good times.

"Tiki was helping to create a myth and identity for ordinary Americans: a design and style that contained within itself a strong note—at least on the level of fantasy—of sexual liberation, of escaping the Puritan restraints of American life," writes historian Kevin Starr in Golden Dreams: California in an Age of Abundance, 1950–1963.

"The connection between alcohol and sexuality was made explicit on menu cartoons and other illustrations depicting bare-breasted wahines associated in one way or another with elaborately concocted and named (Navy Grog, Cobra's Fang, Vicious Virgin, Islander's Pearl, Scorpion) rum drinks."

The Bali Hai opened in the months before Wigwam. But even after six decades, a bit of Cold War chill lingers over the bar despite the colorful Polynesian tchotchkes and bright sunshine pouring in from the bay just outside the expansive, '50s-redolent picture windows.

"It was a very fearful time," says Baumann, who runs the Bali Hai with husband Larry, a Navy vet whom Susie met after he became a Bali Hai bartender. "They were able to keep things more quiet than they can today."

It's hard not to keep track of San Diego's military-industrial complex from the bar at the Bali Hai. Perched on the east end of Shelter Island, the restaurant has a sweeping view of San Diego bay and its military installations.

"Special Tables for Spies, Espionage Agents to View the U.S. Fleet — Binoculars furnished to U.S. Citizens only," said a 1950s advertisement for the restaurant. Dressed in one of his famously flowered Hawaiian shirts, Ham would work the room, greeting Navy brass and yeomen sailors as they imbibed and watched warship flotillas sail past in the bay and Navy fighter jets arriving and departing from North Island's runways.

"You know," says Baumann, "if you sit at any table up in that dining room almost any day of the week there is a lot going on, even today."

There were Tiki bars before the A-bomb and Cross Spikes, but the 23 Bikini blasts from 1946 to 1958 triggered a frantic yen for escape via Mai Tais and sex. Ham lived the culture and embraced the Tiki dreams with what some later thought was too much devotion for his own good.

"The icon of the style, the Tiki figure, frequently resembling the statues of Easter Island but appearing in other variations as well," writes historian Starr, "was in its multiple meanings either the first man who made the first woman and procreated the human race, a phallic symbol, or the god of art."

Ham's introduction to the mid-century love god came when he was dispatched in 1954 by his employer to assess the chances for reviving a bankrupt establishment on Shelter Island then known as Christian's Hut.

Details of the restaurant's troubled genesis have been mostly lost to history, Baumann says, but they had something to do with its first proprietor, a San Diego woman with the last name of Hudson. And before Hudson, there was Art LaShelle.

Besides what later became the Bali Hai, there were two other Christian's Huts in California and another in Honolulu. Arguably the most famous was on Balboa Island in Orange County's Newport Harbor. Its Tiki and coconut quasi-Polynesian concept had been masterminded by Arthur Gregg Wellington LaShelle.

The Hollywood promoter based the Balboa model on the original Christian's Hut he opened on Catalina Island in 1934 for the cast and crew of MGM's Mutiny on Bounty, starring Clark Cable and Charles Laughton. Like

Later, during World War II, according to legend, LaShelle enlisted in the Army Air Corps in order to fly the "Hump" over the Himalayas to China, but washed out of pilot training and ended up running a swinging officers club at a B-29 base in India.

After the war, highrolling stars of the era were said to have invested their money in Balboa's Christian's Hut, including John Wayne, Red Skelton, and Fred McMurray. They were clients of LaShelle's pal and onetime Catalina partner Bo Christian Roos, a flamboyant business manager known by the moniker "Mr. Deductible" for his tricky tax deals.

A newspaper clipping from 1957 says Wayne and McMurray furnished the money for the restaurant's Hawaiian branch. Two years later, Roos had some bad news for Wayne. Their 1959 confrontation is described by Randy Roberts and James Olson in their biography of the movie hero, John Wayne, American.

""Well, Bo, how much am I worth?' Evasive and worried, Roos insisted: 'It isn't that simple, Duke.'

"Wayne was out of patience. He stood up, slammed his fist on Roos's desk, and screamed: 'For Chrissake, I've given you a goddamn fortune over the years. It's a simple question. What the hell have you done with the money?'

"The charade was finally over. Roos slumped into his chair, put his head down, and confessed: 'It's all gone.'"

(Regarding the dispute, Roos's daughter Carolyn later blamed the Duke for profligate spending and maintained, "It appears that the Wayne organizations owed a lot more money to dad than he owed them.")

Skelton, another client of Roos's Beverly Management Company and a reported Christian's Hut investor, also lost big with the agent, according to Roberts and Olson. When his 11-year-old son died of leukemia in 1957, the comedian discovered Roos had borrowed against the child's $50,000 life-insurance policy. In all, say the authors, "Roos lost more than $10 million of Skelton's money."

North County 710 E Grand Avenue Escondido, CA 92025 being, at least) lost to history. Susie Baumann says all she knows is that a woman by the name of Alice Hudson was in charge of the venture.

A replica of a giant Tiki statue known as the "Goof," which had long stood atop Christian's Hut in Balboa, was hoisted to the roof of the elaborate new "Tiki temple" on Shelter Island, constructed from timbers hauled down from backcountry San Diego mountains.

"I don't know how she had the permission to use the name," says Baumann. In any case, trouble followed.

"It opened in the summer of '53, and by June of '54 it was in bankruptcy court," Baumann recounts, "and when she went to bankruptcy court, she didn't have the proper paperwork."

Shelter Island, 1948. Before the dredging of the bay, it was truly an island.

"Hudson offered the place to neighbor Jack Davis for $60,000 cash," The Log reported in a short September 2003 account of the Bali Hai's history. "'But I couldn't come up with that much cash at the time. Big mistake,' he admits."

Enter Tom Ham, then in the employ of Los Angeles oilman William Kirk, a vulture investor prospecting for new business opportunities.

"My dad came down here simply as an accountant," says Baumann. "He worked for a gentleman who would buy bankrupt businesses. My dad was a public accountant and he would go through the books and usually find the problem."

After Ham endorsed its potential, Baumann

says, Kirk got control of the operation by buying enough of its shares from Hudson's bankruptcy and acquiring more from socalled purveyors, vendors of booze, foodstuffs, and other restaurant essentials, who had been given small interests of the business in lieu of payment. For Kirk, the deal was just another profitable venture. For his hired hand Ham, it was transformational. "He just got hooked on the people part of the business," says Baumann. He was 35 years old and about to embark on a radical change of course.

Ham assumed the title of general manager and struck a deal with Kirk to gradually acquire a majority interest in the property, the name of which Ham changed from Christian's Hut to the Bali Hai. Then he set out to build a legend.

"It took my dad at least ten years, from '54 to '64, to get controlling shares," says Baumann. They were big years for Ham, filled with military brass, movie stars, politicos, and, according to later allegations, sex and booze.

"I worked the front desk and I was really short and looked really young at the time, and I worked that front desk from when I was 14," recalls Baumann. "My dad would make me wear three-inch heels so I would at least look grown up, and you'd be on your feet all night, but I have real fond memories."

Comedian Jerry Lewis, who kept his yacht berthed at another famous Tiki-themed Shelter Island landmark, was a frequent customer. "He had his boat the Pussycat down at the Kona Kai, and when he was in the dining room, the whole dining room stopped," says Baumann. "He was always onstage, and he would entertain the whole dining room."

Political luminaries of the day who dropped by included Richard Nixon and his vice president Spiro T. Agnew. Nixon's friend and San Diego's version of Daddy Warbucks, the infamous financier C. Arnholdt Smith, who later did time for crimes of banking, was also a regular. WHAT IS RINGWORM?

Ringworm (tinea Corporis), a common infection in children is caused by a fungus on the skin. The infection produces red, itchy spots on the body that often appear in a "ring"-like shape. Ringworm can be spread via direct contact — through infected hats, clothes, pets, sports equipment, and even from skin-to-skin contact.

If your child has ringworm: To support the advancement of treatment options, Khruz Biotechnology Research Institute is sponsoring an FDA-regulated investigational study evaluating the safety and effectiveness of a study medication cream for children ages 2 to 17 years with ringworm. This medication cream is already approved to treat adults with ringworm.

What to expect: Participation in the study will last 3 weeks • Your child will receive either the study medication cream or a placebo cream • All study-related costs will be paid by the study sponsor | Compensation for your time and travel may be available • You may withdraw your child from the study at any time helped mitigate, if only for an evening, the hardcharging, relentless pace of modern life.

"Tiki defied the modern, like a Maori warrior wagging his tongue at an adversary. Tiki suggested that cops and firemen could be beachcombers for a night, stockbrokers could be South Seas traders, suburban housewives in leis, muumuus, or sarongs could imagine themselves elsewhere, in a place transformed and magical.

"Tiki said to hell with it. If only for tonight, let's party!"

Ham's party lasted for almost two decades. Then, on November 7, 1973, he dropped dead while doing one of the things he liked best: hyping the Bali Hai and his second restaurant, Tom Ham's Lighthouse, across the channel on Harbor Island. "He had a heart attack right up in the dining room," says Baumann. "He was doing an interview...I think it was with the old Peninsula News." He was just 54.

Baumann says what came next left lasting

"That was a really hard time for my mom," she recalls. "The Lighthouse had been open almost two years. My dad thought that would be an instant success, and it wasn't. Nobody went to Harbor Island. There was nothing out there, and I believe it was that financial pressure that really took a toll on my dad. He watched his dad lose everything in the Depression, and I think that was just what took the toll on him....

"That phone started ringing from the banks before we had buried my dad," Baumann continues, "because my mom had signed — even though it was a corporation - she had signed some personal notes. You know, this was in the day when, as a wife, you signed what your husband put in front of vou. She didn't know that she was personally responsible for this stuff."

Then came another ordeal. Two waitresses at the Bali Hai emerged to say that Ham had fathered a child with each of them. One described his swinging '60s lifestyle, including frequent cocktailing at nightclubs in San Diego and Los Angeles.

A complaint filed against Ham's estate in July 1974 by Arthena Varley alleged that after their son's birth in September 1961, the restaurateur had "agreed to pay support for said minor child in the amount of $100 or more per month from the date of the child's birth until the child reached his majority; and to pay additional sums in the approximate amount of $50 per month to offset miscellaneous expenses of the child."

According to Varley's complaint, Ham, "did in fact pay the agreed child support for the benefit of the minor child from the for child support."

Ham had also given Varley "employment as a cocktail waitress at the Bali Hai Restaurant with a set station to guarantee her maximum tips, as agreed," said the complaint, which added she was fired after he died. The tip arrangement was said to be worth an additional $14,200. The case was dropped in August 1979 after Ham's estate agreed to come up with a $3000 settlement.

Annette Sullivan, another Bali Hai waitress, said she and Ham had had a child together in November of 1968. Sullivan's complaint claimed that before his death Ham had promised to provide Jennifer with $350 in support though November 1986, totaling $54,600, along with an additional $25,000 for college tuition.

When the estate's lawyers questioned Sullivan's claim and sent her a lengthy list of queries regarding her purported relationship with the Mai Tai king, she produced a detailed response, listing

"The only time we ever spent the whole night together was right before or after the opening of the Lighthouse so it would be approximately December of 1970 or early in 1971, and I believe it was the Travelodge Tri-Arc on Harbor Island," wrote Sullivan. (Today the Tri-Arc is a Hilton.)

Sullivan's account of their club-hopping together included some of San Diego's most famous establishments and nightclub performers of the era, many now closed or dead, and mostly forgotten.

They went to the Catamaran on Mission Bay, "when the DeCastro sisters were playing there, sometime in January, February or March of 1973. C. C. Jones sat with us." Another locale was the Airport Sheraton. "He introduced me to the manager and later in the cocktail lounge, we talked with entertainers who shortly after worked at the Lighthouse. Their names, I believe, were Rueda and Sinneti, I don't know the date. Sometime around 1972 and 1973."

There were trips to Don the Beachcomber, another famous Tiki bar. "He took me there several times for cocktails and once we took Irma Williams. That time we saw and talked with Leimomi, a former dancer at the Bali Hai." In 1968 they stopped by a "Mexican restaurant across the street from Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles. Max Oslo was there and Mr. Ham introduced us."

Other respites included Saska's, "for steak and lobster. I don't know if anyone recognized us," and the Saddleback Inn. "Important men from Los Angeles talked with us. I don't know who they were." At the Yacht Club Inn, Sullivan said she "talked to entertainers there who later worked for Mr. Ham at the Lighthouse (Royal Breed)." At Earl's Grotto, "The man who sang there talked to us and his female manager around 1972 or 1973."

Ham had been generous, Sullivan said. He "arranged and ordered that I serve at certain areas of the Bali Hai as well as at special parties, such that the increase in my tips directly attributable to these special functions was in the neighborhood of approximately $200 per month."

But another of Sullivan's requests, Ham told her, was out of the question. "I felt that Ham should be the last name of the child, and I discussed with Mr. Ham financial assistance from him to support the child.

"He agreed to help support [Sullivan's daughter] if I wouldn't name the child after him or do anything else which might embarrass him. This included not pursuing any legal remedy I might have against him for the support of the child." Sullivan settled her case against Ham's estate for $12,000, plus $2500 in legal fees, according to court records.

Ham's widow Patricia died in October 2001 at age 79, having dealt with her husband's alleged mistresses, pulled the operation out of debt, and safely maintained the Bali Hai as an icon of local dining.

Ham's daughter Susie, who with three sons and second husband Larry runs the business today, is philosophical. "I think when you put yourself out there, and you... It's a hard lesson to learn in life sometimes, that... sometimes that comes back to actually bite you."

There have been changes in the 41 years since Tom Ham died. The Bali Hai's Tiki show was shuttered after a key cast member retired from his day job as a mailman. They thought about keeping it, but, as Susie's husband Larry notes, "Thirdparty liquor liability started rearing its head and it wasn't prudent anymore to sit people down and feed 'em tropical drinks that are sweet and go down easy and then kick 'em between the eves."

Instead of Cantonese chicken, the Bali Hai now serves Polynesian haute cuisine, with a fine wine list and entrées including "Miso Marinated Black Cod" and "Mongolian Lamb." When the restaurant handed out buttons saying "Be a Spy at the Bali Hai," federal agents showed up to discourage the idea.

As for family values in the post–Mad Men era, the Bali Hai now boasts an on-premises wedding site. "All six [couples] this weekend get married on property," reports Larry on the Bali Hai's wedding boom. "A lot of young people aren't affiliated with a church." ■ and we're not done yet," says Berkley.

CITY LIGHTS

A full 93 percent of Rams Hill residents, suffering from the steep decline in home values, voted to pay a $1200-a-year special assessment to help run the golf course and the clubhouse. "I would say 70 percent of present homeowners do not play golf," says Berkley — proof of how much home values mean to residents. However, even before the course was closed, few were playing.

Berkley says he has seen some home resale values come back to $170 to $180 a square foot, but, says Joe Tatusko, who joins the Borrego Water District board December 5, "Checking the online home price services, I am not convinced prices are up. It is too early to say."

La Casa del Zorro, the former money-losing Copley family property, was purchased last year by a group including former San Diego city manager Jack McGrory. The resort "still has growing pains" but is going forward and even experienced a profit — a rarity for the facility — in March of this year, says Linda Haddock, executive director of the Borrego Springs Chamber of Commerce.

"Tourism is key for the long-term success of the Borrego Springs community," says Tatusko.

The newly formed Borrego Water Coalition is searching for ways to build a groundwater-sustainability plan, as required by state legislation passed in August.

Berkley is an optimist: "There are probably in excess of a thousand lots that can be built on and sold. So if we can restore the value of those lots by driving demand with a high-quality golf course and clubhouse," the investment will pay off, despite previous failed attempts.

But Borregans "don't have the will power" to put enough teeth in plans to fallow farms, says Shindler. "We're pretty insular."

Says groundwater geologist John Peterson, who warned in the 1980s of Borrego's problems, "We know Borrego will never be a Palm Springs. We have water and access problems. Palm Springs has the I-10. Borrego will never have a freeway, and we don't want it." ■

The two were the highest-paid executives of San Diego Opera bringing in much more than comparable executives at other opera companies. Their inordinately high pay became quite controversial. They divorced in 2012. They have two sons.

Earlier this year, Campbell tried to close down San Diego Opera quickly, claiming it had no financial future. Initially, the board voted with him, but then some board members came forward to try and save the company. That process is now well underway.

Campbell officially left San Diego Opera on May 15 of this year. From the time he tried to close down the opera, it was reported in the Reader that he was planning to live with a female singer in New York City.

Seals and people together at last?

Time for another lawsuit in the La Jolla Cove Children's Pool saga

For those seal lovers who thought the end of the debate over a rope barrier to protect seals during pupping season at Children's Pool in La Jolla was over, think again.

On October 14, Friends of Children's Pool, the group of divers and others who want to see humans and seals have equal access to the beach, filed vet another lawsuit in San Diego Superior Court challenging the California Coastal Commission's August 14 vote to cordon off the beach from December to May each year in hopes of protecting baby seals during

The lawsuit is yet another development in what has been a nearly two-decade fight between those who want to close off the beach to protect the seals and those who say that the beach is theirs just as much as it is for the seals.

pupping season.

In their lawsuit, the attorney for Friends of Children's Pool, Bernard King, says the closing of the beach for the winter violates the state constitution.

The California Constitution ensures that "access to the navigable waters of this State shall be always attainable for the people thereof [Cal. Const., art. X, § 4]." The Coastal Act states that in carrying out this constitutional requirement, "maximum access...and recreational opportunities shall be provided for all the people consistent with public safety needs and the need to protect public rights, rights of private property owners, and natural resource areas from overuse." reads the lawsuit.

Debt-plagued institution's viability questioned

Two publications, City Journal, published by New York's Manhattan Institute, and JDJournal, which specializes in law-related issues. are essentially playing taps for San Diego's debt-plagued Thomas Jefferson School of

The school moved into a fancy new, eight-story building in early 2011. Now it has $133 million in tax-exempt bonds headed for default. says City Journal, and that was "predictable, even inevitable," says the publication. Jefferson's bonds have a junk rating. "From 2007 to 2013, Thomas Jefferson raised its acceptance rate from 45 percent to 81 percent — essentially open admissions — but enrollment still declined," says City Journal.

As the Reader has been reporting, Thomas Jefferson consistently has a very low bar-exam pass rate among California's 21 accredited law schools. "The actual placement rate for Thomas Jefferson graduates in fulltime legal positions within nine months of graduation is [close] to 25 percent," says City Journal.

JDJournal explains that "the school has agreed to give its building to bondholders. The school has already assigned all of its cash assets to its bondholders... the law school is likely to lose its building and cease operations."

Says City Journal, "When the bondholders' forbearance agreement with Thomas Jefferson ends in October, the law school may have to suspend operations if it cannot resume debt repayments...the diminishing viability of Thomas Jefferson's business model makes a happy outcome unlikely."

Phillip Rivers helps further Catholic radio in San Diego

Chargers OB put $1M toward Immaculate Heart's purchase of KCEO

Pro sports figures have long been major players in San Diego radio.

But San Diego's most understated sports/radio heavy hitter would have to be Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers, who reportedly committed $1 million of his money toward buying KCEO AM-1000 in 2012. Rivers and his wife Tiffany spearheaded the local drive to raise $3.75 million so that Sacramentobased Immaculate Heart Radio could buy KCEO and broadcast the Roman Catholic way of thinking.

KCFO and Immaculate Heart Radio are presently coming on as strong as the Chargers.

CITYLIGHTS

Immaculate Heart, which now owns and programs more than 30 stations in six western states, has just purchased former Los Angeles Top 40 station KHJ AM-930 AM and will soon flip it to all-Catholic. It was announced last month that Immaculate Heart will participate in the creation of a state-of-the-art TV and radio broadcast facility in the Crystal Cathedral complex in Garden Grove. which was purchased by the Orange County Catholic Diocese and renamed Christ Cathedral

Unlike many AM stations that "broker" or sell time at an hourly rate, KCEO spokesperson Cy Kellett says outsiders, even if they are Catholic, simply can't buy their way on to AM 1000.

"We try to be exactly where the Catholic Church is," says Immaculate Heart general manager Dick Jenkins.

Rehab Needed

I'm calling in response to the October 9 article, "Not the Israel My Parents Fought For"

If one Googles or You-Tubes Victor Mordecai and the Koran (or Quran), he or she might get some insight into why these Jihad terrorists think and act the way they do. I've seen presidents' policies sympathetic to Islam. The U.S. and the whole world needs to rehabilitate its character integrity, including our politicians.

Head Count

Your article on downtown toilets (News Ticker: "Legal Loos," October 9) failed to mention that six new toilets were promised four years ago, when we had eleven existing ones. That would make the total 17.

Now we have only two of those eleven toilets left, and instead of six more as promised, we are getting only two more. That makes a total of four.

I want to thank the City and the Girls Think Tank for finally getting something going on this but, unfortunately, we poor folks still have to sue for more toilets.

More pressing needs include an expanded storage program. Belongings are again accumulating on the sidewalks, which is unsightly and expensive for the City to legally deal with. We also need a third winter shelter in Ocean Beach. But you probably already knew that.

The big issue, though, is civil rights. We are entitled to 20-percent occupancy of the buildings built with redevelopment money, but all we got is a slush fund to pay for inferior housing in a ghetto neighborhood, miles away. "Separate but equal" got outlawed in the 1960s!

We also demand the right to stay in our home neighborhoods when our "blighted" slum hotels are torn down, and we need a fair definition of what affordable housing really is.

Rattlesnakes do not attack people. However, rattlesnakes will defend themselves if they feel threatened. It seems like the snake warned you of its presence by rattling and then tried to escape the danger you presented. Unfortunately the snake's polite gesture of warning and retreat was not enough to dissuade you from killing it. So, who attacked who in this situation? The rattlesnake or the adult human male with a shotgun?

By Michael G. Starkey, October 8 @ 1:24 p.m. Shame on you! True outdoorsmen know how to respect wildlife and appreciate it from a distance. You are hunting on the SNAKE'S territory and he had every right to be there. This snake was not posing a threat to you. Snakes don't "attack". They will defend themselves, but defensive behavior is NOT to be confused with aggression. Snakes bite as a last resort of defense — they will warn you (like this rattlesnake did) or they will flee (like this snake tried to do), but they will not strike unless provoked. The one positive comment I have for you is that at least you did not waste the meat and skin. Next time you encounter a rattlesnake while hunting, give him a respectful amount of distance and he will return the favor. We can co-exist peacefully with these amazing creatures — there is NO good reason to kill a snake! By Jane Cannon, October 8 @ 1:25 p.m.

Ya'll better listen up! This article is right on the money. For those of you defending that evil snake think about this — what if the snake had arms and could carry a gun? You think it wouldn't do the same thing to him??? Ya'll better recognize!

Enemies of the estate sale Burglars are usually family members

"Dollar-store owners have been stealing our bright orange signs that we spent all night working on," says Jill K., a retired teacher. "We don't have them printed like our competitors do."

Jill says the act of ripping and chucking signage of competing estate and garage sales is pretty common tactic in some areas of town. She has organized estate sales for the past 25 years with the help of her three granddaughters: Kayley, Kendall, and 13-year-old Katrina.

"Grandma, remember when we caught that guy in Allied Gardens with the fake $100 bill?" Katrina yells.

"The gentleman tried to purchase a safe for half price that day, for $32.50," says Jill. "After I noticed the counterfeit, he dropped the safe and skedaddled out of here." She laughs.

At a Del Cerro estate, Jill says she was recently robbed of a $250 opal ring by two girls who distracted her, while the third looted. "The item was kept in a glass case with other high-end items," says Jill. "Shows you how quick these little buggers are."

Jill says she has had to deal with bitter distant relatives gang-busting unannounced or family members who recall a secret stash in the velvet Elvis Presley painting.

"When burglars come in, it's [usually] other family members that heard about 'Aunt such and such' that passed away, and they remember the sterling silver that she had. And they get a key or come in through a window and feel entitled to it

"Most of our buyers are wonderful," states Jill, as she and her granddaughter wrap some porcelain dolls they just sold for $75. "It's just the bad percent that keep us on our toes."

What really happened to the cop car?

Getaway was too easy

Red-faced detectives from the Policía Ministerial del Estado launched a massive police operation in Tijuana shortly after noon on Friday, October 10, when they apparently left a prisoner in their custody unattended and he drove off in a brandnew law-enforcement vehicle, according to multiple press accounts.

The incident began in the El Lago neighborhood shortly after noon and ended with the discovery of the car at around 1 p.m. in the parking lot of a grocery store in the Los Álamos area, according to press accounts.

"There is nothing missing and there were no damages to the vehicle," an unnamed police spokesman told El Mexicano. "The subject fled."

The official version of the incident, according to El Mexicano, is that the detectives left the vehicle to pursue an investigation but forgot to take the keys, and an unknown person walking by saw the keys inside and decided to steal the car.

El Sol reported that police initially gave a completely different account to the press, claiming that the massive mobilization was in response to an armed robbery.

The two newspapers were able to determine what really happened by listening to radio traffic on police scanners, including the initial call for help by the two stranded detectives.

Overlooking the Dead Sea from Israel's Masada, a fortress dating back to the 1st Century B.C.

Modern times in one of the world's hot spots: Israel

By Tamar Fleishman

I was in Israel when three teenagers in yeshiva — Jewish seminary — had just been kidnapped. As I left the country, they were discovered to have been killed, which touched off a firestorm between Israel and Hamas in the Gaza Strip.

While I saw signs that living under constant stress and threat of war has toughened the citizens' personalities — a brusqueness and impatience that people usually attribute to New Yorkers, but I never experienced there — Israelis still show a desire to live and enjoy their lives. In addition to being the world's most important destination for Judaism, Christianity, the Bahá'í faith, and one of the world's most important places for Islam, Israel is creating beauty in modern times.

Get a tour guide. Covering a lot of distance and spending a good deal of time together, you'll want someone who's well-versed and respectful of all the different cultures you'll encounter, plus who will be fluent in English, make you feel safe, and be a lot of fun. Ali, a Bedouin tour guide who says he learned more than five languages by being "clever," is the one people from all over the world flock to.

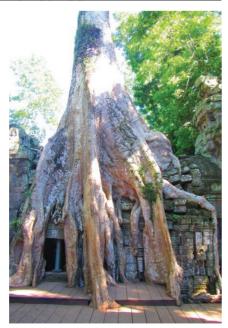

I was shocked how many places in Israel don't accept credit cards! The most surprising was the gift shop for a huge tourist stop — one of the oldest churches in existence. They quietly would take currencies from around the world but not cards that leave a paper trail. I recalled the New Testament admonition to "Render unto Caesar what is Caesar's" in exasperation.

Sure, historic Tsfat is the center of Kabbalistic learning and the highest point in Israel, but they also have a fun and vibrant artists' scene. Here on an ancient pathway, artists man their own booths, selling their creations. As has been true throughout the Middle East for millennia, price bargaining rules the day. (Incidentally, the same is true for taxis, so beware.) I bought gorgeous art created by Vito, a Libyan Jew. He not only accepts credit cards, he gave me a cherry pop

MAST PARK (SANTEE)

Follow a San Diego River trail through sycamores, cottonwoods, and willows to bird-watch.

Distance from downtown San Diego: 18.9 miles. Allow 24 minutes driving time (Santee). From SR-163N, merge onto SR-52E, exiting on Mission Gorge Rd. and turning left (east). Drive 0.7 mile and turn left (north) on Carlton Hills Blvd. Parking is on the right, just beyond the San Diego River at 9125 Carlton Hills Blvd. Hiking length: Mast Park West (toward the end of the golf course), 6 miles round trip; Mast Park (east), approximately 3 miles round trip. Difficulty: Easy, hardly any elevation change, but with uneven surfaces. Facilities include picnic area, BBQ area, playground, and restrooms. River trail is shared with bicycles, horses, and dogs on leash; there is a fenced off-leash area in the park. Wheelchair accessible.

The Mast Park West trail also begins on the other side of Carlton Hills Blvd., at a kiosk and small picnic area near a small shopping center. From both entrances, the trail follows the river west and then runs alongside a golf course. Along here the trail becomes the San Diego River Trail and winds around near SR 52. This is a longer walk than Mast Park.

Beginning at the same welcome sign, the Mast Park trails are off to the left. A portion of the trail is concrete and blacktop surfaces, but another portion of the trail leads down to the river where there is a bridge to walk over. This same portion of the trail can be entered from the nearby Walmart parking lot. Around here, plenty of dog-walkers are out and equestrians like to ride along the river.

Although invasive and nonnative plants grow here, there are ongoing efforts to restore native habitat areas. Cattails and bulrushes filter the river. Among sycamores, willows, and cottonwoods, mulefat and yerba mansa grow. Toyon and blue elderberry grow by the trail as well as Jimson weed or datura, coyote melon, wild grape, and wild cucumber.

Rhyme & Verse

Do Not Weep, Maiden, for War Is Kind A poem by Stephen Crane

Do not weep, maiden, for war is kind. Because your lover threw wild hands toward the sky And the affrighted steed ran on alone, Do not weep. War is kind.

Hoarse, booming drums of the regiment, Little souls who thirst for fight,

These men were born to drill and die. The unexplained glory flies above them, Great is the battle-god, great, and his kingdom — A field where a thousand corpses lie.

Do not weep, babe, for war is kind. Because your father tumbled in the yellow trenches, Raged at his breast, gulped and died, Do not weep. War is kind.

Swift blazing flag of the regiment, Eagle with crest of red and gold. These men were born to drill and die. Point for them the virtue of slaughter, Make plain to them the excellence of killing And a field where a thousand corpses lie.

Mother whose heart hung humble as a button On the bright splendid shroud of your son, Do not weep. War is kind.

A novelist, poet, and short-story writer, Stephen Crane (1871-1900) published his first novel, Maggie: A Girl of the Streets, at his own expense. It received scant attention. But his next novel The Red Badge of Courage (1895) brought Crane international fame and some degree of wealth. Many saw it as capturing the feel of actual Civil War combat, though Crane himself had no military experience. Crane is the author of many short stories that have become classics, among them "The Open Boat" and "The Blue Hotel." Crane was also an actively publishing poet and worked as a newspaper correspondent in both the Greco-Turkish War of 1897 and the Spanish-American War. This bitter poem, "Do Not Weep, Maiden, for War Is Kind," appeared in 1899 in his final poetry collection, War Is Kind. A year later, while living in England with Cora Taylor, the former owner of a Florida brothel, Crane died of tuberculosis. He was 29 years old.

from his cooler when I was overheated. Vito's okay in my book!

Another artist destination is within the walls of Old Jerusalem. Salamon at Petra Souvenir (Shop #1, David Street) will make you laugh with his corny price negotiations, but his prices are very modest and his wares exquisite.

Neveh Tzedek is a neighborhood that predates modern Tel Aviv, filled with funky artists' houses and murals: great for strolling around.

One of the coolest things I've ever seen — worth an overnight trip to Israel all on its own — is the Night Spectacular Show at Jerusalem's Tower of David. Four nights a week year-round, the actual Biblical tower is used as the backdrop for a fierce lightshow that tells the history of Ierusalem.

All my life, my father would shrewdly look at breathtakingly scenic places and proclaim, "They oughta have a jazz fest there." Since he spent time as an opera manager, he would have loved the idea of operas staged in unique settings even more! At the foot of Masada (a UNESCO heritage site), the Israeli Opera Festival performed La Traviata. The desert locale near the Dead Sea was complete with light show, live horse, and fireworks. I was unprepared for the opera having to take a 12-minute break during the local PA system's call to Muslim prayer.

When staying at rural hotels and the Dead Sea is rural — do a Hotel Impossible–style peek of the room before you check in. I experienced one that was not up to global cleanliness standards.

On the opposite end of the spectrum is Haifa's Dan Carmel Hotel Haifa. Along with the outdoor pool, there are rooms with balconies overlooking the Mediterranean. There's also a rooftop club lounge with outdoor seating. In Israeli hotels, you'll find mezzuzim on the doors as well as a mini synagogue onsite.

Hotel Metropolitan in Tel Aviv is a block away from the beach with clean, simple rooms. The beach itself has bars that have no official closing time and offer hookahs.

With most restaurants adhering to strict Kosher dietary laws, I was more intrigued by the bars. Vicky Cristina, a wine and tapas bar in Tel Aviv's Neveh Tzedek area, is part of the open-air entertainment district surrounding the old Ottoman-era train station. Rusty Rails is a nearby outdoor bar part of the same complex. It's pretty tame; I saw a little girl in pigtails there.

Jimmy Who — in a former bank has a tongue-in-cheek take on the Cold War era. They have a secret VIP bar in the basement where the safe deposit boxes were. It's so secret, employees won't even admit it's there!

SHEEP and GOATS

Edward Dawson, SJ

The hour of meditation being come, we may imagine ourselves to be invited by our good angel or by some other saints to whom we are particularly devoted, to appear in the presence of God. Wherefore, having made the sign of the holy cross and sprinkled ourselves with holy water, we may go presently with a kind of spiritual hunger to the place where we mean to make our meditation, and standing from thence a pace or two, briefly lift up our mind to Almighty God, imagine him to be so present to us (as truly he is) that he beholdeth what we are to do and doth show unto us in that very place his most venerable and glorious countenance. The presence of God is best framed in our understanding by making an act of faith, whereby we believe Almighty God to be present, that he compasseth us round about on every side, as water compasseth the fish, and yet is also within us (as he is in all things) somewhat like the water that is entered into the sponge.... -"The Practice of Meditation"

Edward Dawson (c. 1579– 1622) was a Jesuit priest and writer who, during the time of the English Protestant revolt, had twice returned to England after being expelled by royal decree - along with all other Roman Catholic priests. This piece, attributed to Father Edward, appears in a famous English translation of a treatise on the importance of meditation, a staple of Jesuit spirituality.

Kite surfers bite back

The following comes from Facebook and regular website responses to the Oct. 9 story "Kite-surfer knocks out swim*mer's teeth* — why?"

MICHAEL HAMMOND, Hospital sales at Pfizer

Sailboards have been surfing this area since the early 1980s. The conflict here is nothing new. The sailboards and kite boards usually sail in a limited slot from just north of the parking lot to just south of the parking lot. The longboard surfers can surf north or south of this slot and avoid most of the sailors....

SHAUN LAND, Huntington Beach

I've surfed for 30 years and have kiteboarded for 7 years in Huntington. When kitesurfing we need a good wave break just like when surfing. The statement below about just needing wind is inaccurate. Learn to share.

CLINT STERBA, San Diego

Since around 2002 I started seeing kite boarders at Tourmo. It's always been a sign to get out of the water because the wind was picking up. I've always been intrigued by them but felt that the cost of gear was way out of my reach and didn't even know where to look for it or how to find lessons.

In 2010 while out at Tourmo some kiters started rigging their gear and one of the old timers — a PB Surf Club member on her Skip Frye started ranting about how she hated them and how they and people on SUPs should be banned from Tourmo. I had just taken my first kite land lesson and was excited about learning the sport. I asked her why she hated them so much and why she would want to be out in the water when the wind was 15 mph or more anyway. She finally confessed to have taken a kite lesson previously and said that the kite turned too fast and she felt it was dangerous.

AL WILLIAMS. Works at Solar Turbines

Get them out before someone's child is hurt. They lack any common sense.

Water Conditions

SURFACE TEMPERATURE:

VISIBILITY 10'-20'

This week dive visibility should be fair to good, the best Weds-Fri at high or low tide, then decreasing as a NW swell approaches Friday evening. With lobster season now open, boaters should keep an extra eye out for divers near the reefs and channel edges and divers always mark yourselves and area appropriately.

Visibility based on existing conditions and NOAA predicted swell and weather conditions at press time. Check up-to-date daily visibility/ conditions at the San Diego County Lifeguard info line: 619-221-8824

The dorado gave a bigger fight than the tuna

Runners get a medal just for taking part

DAVE HOPPER, Brookdale Community College

They should not be allowed in the surfing area! JAVAJOE25

Seems to me kite (and sail) surfers ought to have an area where they can be free to enjoy themselves, separate from regular board surfers. It shouldn't be too hard to designate such an area as they, unlike regular surfers, do not require good breaks and surf, but merely a good wind, which is everywhere up and down the coast....

DREIDRAGE

What a bunch of surf centered, surf selfish, narrow minded comments. I surf and I kite surf and these days I would much rather be kite surfing. Just like you, kite surfers have every right and should be able to enjoy the ocean just as much as you.

Like an aquarium at feeding time

It was 5:45 a.m., and nine men stood in a group at the counter of H&M Landing. We were there to celebrate the bachelor party of our good friend by chartering a boat to take us out in search of fish.

On the dock, deckhands were pushing up carts loaded with yellowfin tuna and other fish. Our hopes began to rise. I had read of higher than normal yields of fish due to an influx of warmer water that made larger fish come closer to San Diego....

It was like looking down into the top of an aquarium at feeding time, with fish darting in all directions. The fish were fighting one another for my baitfish. Several times, I watched the bright colors of a dorado strike at my bait only to lose out to a quicker striking tuna. The tuna would then occupy a minute or two of my time with an exhausting fight.

After several attempts at drawing my bait away from other fish, I saw the strike. The dorado hit it! The strike wasn't like that of the tuna; it was more intense. The struggle to get him aboard was more difficult and more trying. After fighting a dozen fish, I was exhausted. I reeled him close to the boat several times, but he sped back down to the depths. This went on a few times before I was able to draw the fish close enough to gaff and get aboard.

Surfing Madonna Beach Run

Saturday, October 25th — The splat, splat, splat of running shoes on the low tide sand can be heard this Saturday at 2 p.m. on Moonlight Beach in Encinitas. The runners will be competing in the Surfing Madonna Save the Ocean 5K/10K beach run/walk, touted as one of San Diego's best races last year. $22,000 in prize money will be divided among the top five male and female runners in both the 5K & 10K Divisions, Team Division, Costume Division, and the Pro Beach Volleyball Tournament.

All entrants receive a shirt, a Surfing Madonna medal, free race photos, and a raffle entry. For those needing to limber up, there will be a Zumba warm-up before the race and a yoga cool-down afterward.

This year, the race has partnered with the City of Encinitas Moonlight Beach Fest, where you can explore the Science of Surf and Skate interactive labs or check out the live music, a sandcastle arena and live art, a "just for kids" zone with free arts and crafts. The pro beach volleyball tournament will host 40 professional teams.

There will also be a classic woodie car show in cul-de-sac "C" above Moonlight Beach. The Waterman Lifestyle Expo, from 9 a.m.-6 p.m., will feature water-sport exhibits and representatives from the Encinitas lifeguards and San Diego County Sheriffs. Another attraction will be the landing and takeoff of the sheriff's ASTREA helicopter.

Cost is $5 to $54 for the various race and costume divisions. There is no charge for spectators. Register at surfingmadonnarun.org

Just eat real food

"Well, just look at Noah. When I hired him he weighed 260 pounds. Now he's down to 180."

o GMO. Grass Fed. Gluten Free. Pesticide Free. Hormone Free. No Preservatives. Never Microwaved.

No Artificial Flavors. No Hydrogenated Oils. America's Healthiest Food Truck."

This is the sign that grabs you when you stop by O, the organic food truck

I'm in the back lot of 57 Degrees, the wine place on Hancock Street in Middletown. Tonight's the monthly Third Friday food truck get-together. Sunset skies are collapsing into a rosy fuzz. The Amtrak train goes hurtling by just below the back fence. Now it's quiet for a moment. You can feel the end-of-summer cool in the breeze.

They've got a smaller collection of trucks this month. But the one at the end draws me. It's called the O Truck. Painted bright green, plus orange and sky-blue. Pics of black-and-white cows grazing in meadows on the side. You know "O" stands for "Organic."

"Four at a time," yells the guy through the order hole. "I'm on my own! I have to cook it, too!"

This is when a totally cool white BMW coupe swings up. I see it's a Series 6. And a Dinan. Means it's been re-engineered to zip along. I hear a Dinan tune-up costs tens of thousands.

The driver hops out. "Okay, everybody. We're back in business. Place your orders.'

I notice a slight accent. The guy looks tight and compact and wiry. Like he works out a lot.

A moment later he has hopped up into the truck, and the other guy retires to the kitchen

I join the line. America's healthiest food truck? The menu choices on the side look kind of, well, greasy spoon, even if they are organic.

"O-Burgers: grass-fed beef, turkey or veggie burger, wrapped in lettuce or served on a bun, $9."

Or: "Organic chili dog. Grass-fed beef, cheese from grass-fed cow, scallions & bun, $7.

Most dishes are in the $9-$15 range. Not cheap. But, the more I look, the more interesting

"Grand lobster mac 'n' cheese," the truckside menu says. "Lobster, cheese from grass-fed > cow, scallions, organic pasta (brown rice pasta optional),

Then they have a seared ahi tuna salad for $13. The tuna is blackened, seasoned, and seared and laid out over a Greek salad with goat cheese and things like walnuts and almonds mixed in.

Or a chicken ($10) or salmon ($13) plate with brown rice and Greek salad.

Or, herb-marinated lamb chops ($12 for one, $15 for two) with a Greek salad or brussels sprouts. Plus more what you'd expect from an organic truck: a vegan goulash of black and red pinto beans, peppers, onion, garlic, green beans, peas, carrots ($9). And they even have a California omelet with "free-range eggs, ham, grass-fed cheese, and red and yellow bell peppers." Also nine bucks.

The chili dog at $7 is about what my Fridaynight budget can handle, even though I long for those lamb chops, dang it. But then, just before my turn comes up, I spot another whiteboard menu labeled "Sides."

It lists "gourmet potatoes" served with goat cheese, salsa, and balsamic vinegar ($6); chef's brown rice, with goulash and a scrambled egg ($6); or brussels sprouts sautéed in chardonnay, olive oil, and house seasonings, $5.

So, when Jacek, the Polish owner with that cool Beemer, takes my order, I can't resist asking for the sprouts as well as the dog. Fourteen bucks

While I'm waiting I notice a certificate on the "sides" menu board:

"California Legislature Assembly. Certificate of Recognition presented to Jacek Konieczky, Organic Truck, in honor of: Hard work and dedication to serving delicious food and running a successful business." It's dated August 24, 2013.

The chef, Noah, hands down my two plates from the other hatch. First thing is this dog. It has a really nice sweet tang to it. The chili beans, too. Of course, trying to deal with it standing out here in the parking lot it's a mess, but worth it to get to while it's hot and fresh.

But it's the sprouts. Dee-licious, partly blackened, and winey-tasting. Not your grandma's sprouts. So, I'm just getting into them when Jacek pops down from the truck. He takes a wander among the huddles of customers eating his food in the shadowy lot.

"Did you know organic brussels sprouts are better than Viagra for keeping you, you know, active?" he says when I stop to talk. "But they don't tell you these things. In the U.S., nobody wants you to be healthy. They want you to spend money on their pills and exercise machines. I'm a nutritionist. My rule is just eat real food. Not food that has been pasteurized, processed, pumped with hormones, poisoned with pesticides. I get my lamb from New Zealand, other meats and veggies from organic farms in the area like Julian. I don't use anything that has been interfered with. That's it. I come from Poland. My dad was a super strong guy. He used to pull out his own teeth when he had to. But he died at 44. He always ate bad food. I was 16. I knew I had to change."

Jacek became a champion kick-boxer. Traveled the world. Had his own nutritionist. Learned nutrition, hormonal balance. Moved to the U.S. in 2002. Became a personal trainer. Charged $10,000 per customer for three intensive months. Still has 8000 followers on Twitter.

The benefits list

He says he and Noah work maybe 16 hours a day. "We have bookings going through to 2016 already. We are at Chargers games and vineyards like Orfila. They want us because we're healthy."

How healthy? "Well, just look at Noah. When I hired him he weighed 260 pounds. Now he's down to 180. No special exercise. Just this organic food and hard work. His energy's up, and he says his testosterone's up, too. So something's working."

He looks at me, then my sprouts. "You need to eat these while they're hot. Eat lots of them, because, seriously" — he gives a wink — "better than Viagra, and way cheaper." ■

Ob-la-di, Ob-la-baba-ghanoush

551 J Street — I had just enough forethought to book reservations at Mezé the night of the Paul McCartney concert at Petco Park — and it was a good thing I did, because the sign posted above the hostess stand warned potential walk-ins that they were out of luck.

When I say "just enough," I mean I went looking to get reservations at a couple other Petco Park area restaurants first but was too late. With demand high that evening, I took a chance on this Greek-fusion spot I'd heard nothing about. I guess the family-owned restaurant has been there a couple years, and I'm starting to wish I'd heard about it sooner.

Encouraged by our waitress, we started with the baba ghanoush. I'm always optimistic when I order this dish and yet so often underwhelmed when it arrives. Not this time. The eggplant spread was pure and smooth, the sliced pita warm with a slight char, perfectly suited to capture the garlic-and-sesame-rich dish. Just about worth it at $9. According to the menu, containers of the restaurant's spreads are available for purchase, and I can see picking some up whenever I pass through the neighborhood, as I've rarely had it this good in San Diego.

For dinner, we bandied about a few different ideas - the Fiery Feta mac 'n' cheese with Greek sausage and pita crumbs sounded mighty tempting, but ultimately we opted to share a lamb tenderloin kebab ($28) and combo kebab ($16).

The combo mixed chicken and filet mignon, along with lettuce, tomato, red onion, pickled turnip, and lettuce, wrapped in a pita. It was pretty good — nice and sloppy with hummus and tzatziki, to the extent it fell apart in my hands, spilling tender chunks of meat onto my plate.

Better was the lamb. Beautifully grilled, succulent, and tasty, served with basmati rice, grilled > vegetables, and a side of tzatziki. It's with good reason this is the priciest menu item, as it was delicious. With a menu full of great-sounding, moreaffordable alternatives, I can see most veering away from this lamb — opting instead for the falafel, beef and lamb mixed gyro, or a burger combining ground lamb, beef, pork, and feta. But I wouldn't hesitate to go for the lamb again.

Between the excellent, conscientious service and satisfying dishes, I like to think I was just a tiny little bit happier to be walking into that McCartney show than the other 40,000 in attendance. At the very least, more pleasantly surprised that I'd put together a pretty solid evening in East Village.

Drive — Bouts of balmy weather make outdoor dining that much more enjoyable in San Diego. Especially when the patio comes with a stellar view, as is the case with Tom Ham's Lighthouse. David and I have dined there twice in the past month.

With its waterfront location, giant party rooms, and relatively recent addition of a wedding arch (the Island Arbor sculpture by Christopher Puzio), Tom Ham's caters to as many brides as Bali Hai. So, if you're into looky-looing at wedding parties like I am, make a note.

For starters, between the grilled Spanish octopus and the grilled asparagus, I preferred the latter. There was nothing wrong with the octopus, which was served with a caper and tomato confit, arugula, and pretty, red house-cured olives, I just didn't find it very exciting.

Whereas the asparagus, with its generous char from the grill, drizzle of thick balsamic vinegar, shaved parmesan, and paper-thin prosciutto, was the station at which all flavor trains arrived.

When it came to entrées, I fared much better than my poor love. I thoroughly enjoyed my whole roasted fish — sea bass, topped with a giant scoop of olive tapenade and flanked with a delicious Spanish sofrito, tri-color peppers, tomatoes, garlic, and onion. The fish, prepared in the classic style with slices of lemon and rosemary sprigs nestled in the belly, was juicy. I ended up using very little of the overpowering tapenade, but that yummy sofrito didn't stand a chance.

David wasn't as excited about his bouillabaisse. When I asked him how the Maine lobster, scallop, fish, clam, and mussel mix tasted, he responded,

"It's okay, but nothing special." I'm not a fan of bouillabaisse, so I didn't taste it, but when I asked David to elaborate about his ideal version of what is one of his go-to dishes, he said, "Typically, I'd expect more broth — that's what bouillabaisse is, it's a stew. And I'd want the broth to be complex, with a lot of umami. Also, instead of these croutons in the bowl. I'd prefer a nice piece of grilled bread for dipping."

I was just as pleased with my diver scallops, a much lighter alternative to the roasted fish. The preparation regularly changes, but this one was served with fresh figs (an appreciated, unusual accompaniment that was remarkably successful) and grilled squash atop a nutty, mildly sweet sauce. I savored the succulent textures and earthy/ocean/salty/sweet notes in every bite.

Unfortunately, David was disappointed in his paella. "It's more like a risotto," he said, of the "mushy" rice that he'd have preferred al dente. "Traditional paella is cooked over a fire, and you're supposed to leave it alone and not stir it — that's what makes the bottom crispy, which, for a lot of people, including me, is a treat. They even have a name for that crust: the Spanish call it socarrat. This one was clearly stirred, a lot." In addition to mushy, he also found the rice to be too bland for his tastes. He added plenty of salt and, when eating his mostly leftover rice the next day, spruced it up even more at home with spicy smoked Spanish paprika.

In addition to the asparagus, the one other thing we both enjoyed was the dessert. The malted chocolate crème brûlée surprised and delighted with its exotic-but-compatible flavors, such as Thai chili cherry compote and milk

Curried calamari and a hot-as-hell habanero relish

2100 Costa Del Mar Road — Hanging out at luxury golf resorts isn't exactly my standard scene. But when I had the opportunity to dine at Bistro 65 at the La Costa Omni on someone else's dime, I didn't hesitate to see what I've been missing.

After spending the day lounging poolside, my group headed to Bistro 65 for a bite. We arrived rocking wet hair, flip-flops, and beach cover-ups but were surrounded by guests clad in polo shirts, chinos, and sundresses. The varied dress code seemed lax for the price point but made sense in the casual resort setting.

Bistro 65 embraced the interior design of a typical hotel café but added a few sleek touches that provide a modern and comfortable aesthetic. The white and lime-green color scheme is vibrant while indoor and outdoor fireplaces cast a calming glow. The patio is the feature that makes this venue most memorable, highlighting a lovely view of the sprawling Omni golf course and surrounding La Costa valley.

The menu boasts shared plates such as flatbread and pulled-pork sliders ($12-17),

Several established local roasters have been building out new storefronts this month, giving third-wave coffee drinkers plenty of new neighborhood options going into November.

Dark Horse Coffee Roasters is just about set to open a coffee bar in North Park, sharing a wall with gastropub Waypoint Public. Like its original Normal Heights shop, this Dark Horse satellite will sell beans and serve Hario v60 pour-overs, along with cold brew and French press. It will also add espressos to the Dark

Right now they're looking at a late-October opening, just waiting on a custom-built counter to be finished. Many of the new San Diego coffee entrepreneurs I've spoken to in the past few months have mentioned roaster Daniel Charlson as an encouraging influence, so I'll definitely be keeping up with this new shop as well as his plans to expand his roasting operations to Golden Hill.

The West Bean, which roasts in Mission Gorge, plans to open its first retail shop in midto late-November at 240 Broadway, in front of the Westgate Hotel, Roasters James Rauh and Andrew Karr originally hail from Portland and Seattle, respectively, but have been cooking beans here since 2009 and wholesaling to a growing list of coffee shops and restaurant clients.

This indoor/outdoor location will feature two roasts at a time, giving customers the option to try a brighter, fruitier coffee (think Ethiopian), or something along the lines of a Guatemalan bean for those who prefer something more chocolaty.

The West Bean shop will be making Aeropress drinks and Kalita Wave pour-overs. The Kalita pour-over system differs the Hario in that its cone has a flat bottom with three tiny holes, meant to control the pace of the drip for what its Japanese manufacturer calls an "even extraction" that's less dependent on precision timing and pours than a v60, which features a pointed cone and a single, large opening.

The Aeropress offers an ingeniously simple design that synthesizes the process of a French press and espresso machine. The syringe-like device steeps fine grounds in a tube of hot water, then uses a gasket-sealed piston to pressurize the tube, forcing the water through a disc-shaped filter, resulting in richly concentrated, espresso-like shots.

Bird Rock Coffee Roasters aims to officially open its new Little Italy storefront (2311 Kettner Boulevard) November 3, though it plans to softopen in time to host the latest round of San Diego Coffee Network's ongoing Thursday Night Throwdown, October 23 at 7 p.m. The TNT latte art competition features coffee pros from around and beyond Southern California competing for a cash prize based on their coffee preparation and foam decorating skills.

The network says the last TNT drew 44 competitors. Between the recent popularity of the contest and the anticipation over Bird Rock Coffee finally having a more central location, expect this event to be well attended.

creative spins on conventional salads ($12-19), mains including beef brisket and lamb sirloin ($16-34), and an assortment of vegan and gluten-free dishes ($14-17). Drinks include house cocktails such as the ginger mojito and blackberry honey margarita ($14-15), wines by the glass ($9-24) and bottle ($30-300), and craft, domestic, and imported beers ($6-8).

I couldn't resist starting with the curried calamari ($14), which was served with hotas-hell habanero relish and cool cilantro aioli. The curry batter provided a warm and spicy twist on the appetizer, but the habanero relish was overwhelming and distracted from the flavorful preparation. I stuck to the aioli and found the combined tastes impressive.

The Niçoise salad ($19) was composed of blue lake beans, marble potatoes, soft-boiled eggs, seared tuna, capers, and a basil pesto and lemon oil dressing. All ingredients were fresh and toothsome, with a perfect melding of simple, bright flavors.

The king oyster mushroom tempura ($17) was presented atop a spicy eggplant relish and garnished with micro cilantro and chili oil. I didn't care for the chewy, fibrous texture of the oyster mushrooms and would have preferred a traditional assortment of tempura vegetables. The eggplant relish was more reminiscent of ratatouille, and was the only redeeming portion of the dish. Chopped eggplant was combined with onion, jalapeño, and tomato sauce, which provided an appetizing addition to the monotony of the mushrooms.

An enjoyable meal wouldn't be complete without a sweet ending, so our table opted to share the three-layer chocolate cake. The artful plating included a berry coulis and fresh strawberries and

A day and meal like this has me aspiring to include resorts in my scene. My mother always did accuse me of having champagne taste on a beer budget.

Yes to doogh

9514 Miramar Road — Kolbeh sits in an inauspicious strip of mall on the corner of Black Mountain Road, across from the north gate of Miramar Air Station. Stepping inside, the first thing you notice is yourself, staring back at you from mirrors surrounding the room — it's really more of a mirror pattern, with small squares of reflective glass arranged decoratively on every wall.

I took a seat and watched the lunch clientele file in, mostly men who greeted the host familiarly. I take the sight of lots of regulars to be a good sign, even when a third of them have shaved-bald scalps and mustaches. Or, especially when I'm in a Persian joint.

The chicken kebab won the battle of cravings I experienced poring over the lunch menu, though any number of the mixed-rice polo dishes sounded good: the zereshk polo — basmati rice with barberries and saffron, served with boiled chicken was a close second, and should probably be tried on a return

As it turned out, the kebab and plain basmati rice tasted fine, beautifully cooked, but I would have rather had the additional seasoning to fall back on. Much more interesting, to my limited Persianfood experience, were the bread service and drink.

When the bread service arrived, the following were placed on my table: a basket of flatbread, a bowl of butter packets, and a two quarters of raw white onion. I had to assume these were meant to be eaten together.

I waited, watching other patrons to see what to make of this. Sure enough, I saw men at other tables spreading butter on the very thin flatbread, then wrapping the whole thing around a piece of uncooked onion and taking a bite. So I followed suit.

The combination tasted a little more satisfying than I'd have expected. It helped that the onion in question was relatively mild, and that I did not go easy on the butter. Certainly, it went down easier than if I'd attempted to merely eat a piece of onion by itself.

Feeling emboldened by this, I scanned the beverage menu for something a little more authentic than Coca-Cola, spotting the enigmatic word doogh.

"What is this?" I asked the server when he came to take my order.

"Doogh," he said, pronouncing it with a soft g. "It's a yogurt drink."

"Any special flavoring?" I asked.

"You won't like it," he said, and hurried away to help a less-curious customer. Of course, the moment he said that I had to try it, determined to at least tell him I loved it, Doogh turned out to consist of yogurt and club soda mixed with ground mint leaves, making it quite obvious why he didn't expect me to like it. And it took a few sips to get my head around it. A few more to get my tongue onboard. But paired with the flatbread and onion, and bites of that succulent kebab, it kind of started to make sense. Presuming anything about all this made sense to my palate.

road is home to nearly 100 Korean, Vietnamese, Thai, Japanese, Taiwanese, Chinese, and other Asian-fusion restaurants. David says that one of these years he's going to embark on a project to dine at every single one of them. In the meantime, he settles for hitting up our haunts (Tofu House, Tajima, Yakyudori, Emerald, Dumpling Inn) and occasionally branching out to try something new. On a recent day of errand-running, we craved some Chinese, opted for something new, and found ourselves pulling up in front of Imperial Mandarin.

As with most other joints in this area, Imperial Mandarin is tucked away inside one of the strip malls. It was just past the lunch hour, so we were the only ones in the restaurant, save for a man who was waiting for his pickup order. Google describes the restaurant as an "unpretentious Chinese restaurant offering a seafood-heavy menu and daily lunchtime dim sum." It was the dim sum that drew us in, but I couldn't help but muse over the word "unpretentious" as we took our first look around and spied the dated wood paneling and pink linoleum tables. Quaint and cluttered, it was a quintessential hole in the wall, in the way some of my Convoy haunts had been before they put some money into updating their interiors.

But we weren't there for the decor — we wanted the dim sum. Because he spotted it on the menu, David and I began with one of his classic favorites, the sizzling rice soup. Though we were happy with the flavor and texture of the shrimp, chicken, and snap peas, the broth itself was bland like boiled water. A generous helping of salt and red pepper sauce helped.

I wanted to try something I'd never noticed on other dim sum menus, and that was the deep fried sesame seed shrimp toast. The first bite was pleasantly crunchy, but a moment later it became apparent that the bread had served as a sponge and soaked up all the oil from the fryer it could hold, which left a nasty, unctuous aftertaste in the mouth. We scraped the shrimp from the bread and ate it by itself, which was a much better experience.

The gyoza was great in that "things I crave when I'm drunk" sort of way, with its thick, doughy coating, crisped on one side and nice and chewy throughout. Though it was tasty, it didn't have that "made in house" quality. I'm guessing a good portion of the dim sum was obtained frozen through Cholimex or a similar supplier, as with many other dim sum restaurants (save for Dumping Inn, which in my estimation is the freshest Chinese food to be had on the block).

I enjoyed the bell pepper stuffed with shrimp and pork. The pepper was juicy and crunchy, indicating its freshness, which was refreshing on the heels of the gyoza.

Though the service was prompt and civil (I wouldn't go so far as to say "friendly"), it's the little things that threw us off. I know it's a nearly irrelevant quibble, but David's fortune cookie was not only broken and missing a piece, but on the back, there were all these black spots that kind of looked like mold, or dirt.

He didn't eat his. I took a nibble of mine, just to see, and confirmed that it was stale. And let's talk about the crazy women's bathroom at Imperial Mandarin. In this odd, large L-shaped room are two toilets, one facing the other. No separation between the two toilets. The handle on the door was broken, but a makeshift lock had been added, thus protecting me and my two toilets from the rest of the world. Both toilets turned out to be unusable: they were filled with tissue, and the water was up to the brim of each seat. After taking a long, dubious look at the setup, I decided I could

Just as stains on an airplane's tray tables make one question whether the airline is doing their engine maintenance, the state of the bathroom made me not want to think about what was going on in the kitchen. A broken handle, clogged toilets, stale moldy cookies: to me, these are signs that the owners here don't care very much about the details — things most of us don't notice when they're done right, but are incapable of ignoring when they're done wrong.

Overall, this is not great Chinese food. It's good enough and can be satisfying in the same way a late-night trip to Taco Bell can be. No one would suggest that Taco Bell is the highest expression of Mexican cuisine, but sometimes you're just in the mood for a Gordita.

Bicycle burrito service

Far removed from high-end buffets and trendy concept eateries lays Raíces Cocina Vegana, one of at least three veggie-centric bicycle delivery services in Tijuana.

Active for about four months, Raíces prepares vegan burritos at the Alta Mira house of Iván, a Tijuana local, and Boyd, an Alabama native who has spent time between New Orleans, San Diego, and TJ.

Iván and Boyd are joined by a rotating collective of friends who operate the kitchen, delivery, and finances in an explicitly leaderless, anarchist manner (leftovers are donated to the local Food Not Bombs chapter).

Ingredients are a combination of organic products purchased from neighborhood stores and conventional items from street vendors on Calle Segunda, who source their goods from Mercado Hidalgo, which in turn buys directly from distributors in the south.

"Everything we make is very simple," Iván says as he roasts peppers and tomatoes on the stove. "This is my grandmother's recipe."

The dish — red sauce chilaquiles — is dubbed "Red Monarch" after a Graves at Sea doom-metal tune that blasts from the living room as the sauce is liquefied in a blender.

The menu rotates daily between a handful of other recipes such as apple soyrizo, chilaquiles with mole or green sauce (called "Green Hell" after the Misfits song), and potato/onion/tomato/peppers.

At 25 pesos for two 'ritos, the Tijuana local or day-tripper can place an order by sending a Facebook message before 1:30 p.m. on weekdays.

If you are hanging out at a park or bar near Centro, your food will arrive before 2:00.

The collective is currently looking for a brick-and-mortar location downtown, possibly on Calle Sexta, which is also called Flores Magón in tribute to the brothers behind an anarchist uprising that seized Tijuana and Mexicali for about six months in 1911, precipitating the Mexican Revolution.

As Halloran came and went as PD at other nowdefunct local rock stations. such as KUPR, Flash/92.5, and Y107, he continued to champion adventurous play lists. But it was at the tiny 92/1 station in Carlsbad, in 2000-2001, where he proved that creativity would win out. "We had 580 watts, and we beat 91X, which had 100,000 watts. Although 92/1 didn't last, its David-beats-Goliath legacy caused heads to roll at 91X and convinced the owners of 94/9 to drop oldies and go head-to-head with 91X in 2002. FM 94/9 flipped to rock and hired Halloran as music director and afternoon DJ. He left 94/9 four years ago when that station took a right turn and brought on the ill-fated all-talk Mikey Show. Halloran rejoined 91X three years ago as an afternoon DJ, a shift he says he will keep as PD. He says, however, that he may not have time to host his Sunday night all-local Loudspeaker show.

Over the years, Halloran gave airplay to unsigned local artists such as Jewel, P.O.D., Jason Mraz, and blink-182. He won't get specific about any plans, but says he will "more than likely" play unsigned bands who may not otherwise get airplay.

Not quiet on the set.

Millions worldwide are utilizing smartphones to capture concert footage these days, but few are producing anything worth watching. These clips often capture truncated versions of songs, and the video quality is shaky at best with blown-out audio.

Enter Jeff Brenneman, a senior buyer for a Carlsbad biotech company by day and concert videographer by night. Residing in Temecula, Brenneman is in perfect geographic pole-position to hit either San Diego, Orange County, or Los Angeles shows. As a result, not only has he perfected the art of shooting entire shows, as opposed to quick clips of songs, but he also seems to have discovered the tool for the trade.

"The reason I purchased a smartphone was for [taping concerts]," Brenneman tells the Reader. "Before that I was using the old-style flip phones. We had an upgrade and I asked if they had a phone that would have good video quality and decent sound. The person sold me on a Motorola Droid RAZR M. That particular phone actually has a concert setting. I don't know if it has an internal equalizer or what, but when I watch other videos that my friends post on their phones, they usually sound blown out. The music is too loud for the microphone.

This phone doesn't seem to do that."

Since acquiring the RAZR M. Brenneman has been documenting live concerts

That's another reason why I try to get right up against the stage, usually to the far right or left, because I want to be in a situation where I can between San Diego and L.A. His YouTube channel currently features full sets by artists such as the Meat Puppets, Counting Crows, Pere Ubu, and Camper Van Beethoven. A recording of Kiss' set from the Sleep Train Amphitheatre this summer has attracted 28,000 views.

But Brenneman feels that the club shows are where his recordings shine. He likes to show up early so he can plant himself next to the stage for prime, unobstructed footage and the best sound. Not only does this spot benefit his future YouTube audience, it also benefits the fans at the club that night as well.

"I've been going to concerts for decades. I'm really sensitive to people holding up phones when you're trying to enjoy a live concert.

hold up the phone and not block somebody else's view," Brenneman says.

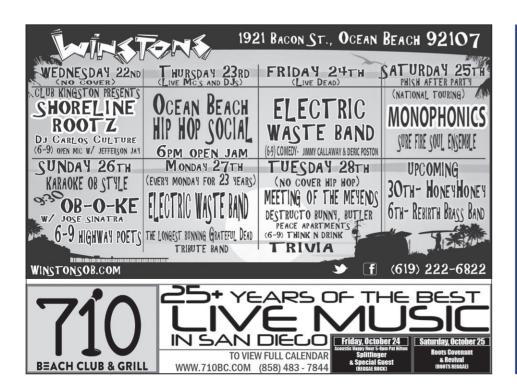

Brenneman claims that he has shot twice as many shows as he has posted because only half have passed his quality standards.

Not only do bands support his documentation of their concerts, says Brenneman, some have actively campaigned to have him attend their shows to capture them on video.

"One band did that at the Whiskey up in Hollywood [where] they require that anyone that's filming pays for that, so the band paid for me to film the show. I think it was $50, and they gave me a cell phone pass or whatever."

Legally Homegrown.

"I left KPRI for a few reasons. The biggest," former Homegrown Hour host Cathryn Beeks tells the Reader, "is that Beeks jumped from terrestrial radio to the web, where guests can cuss like sailors.

I wasn't going to be able to play and represent all genres of our San Diego music scene anymore." Beeks names hiphop and country music among them.

"What I played in the future was going to be restricted. So I decided it was best to move on." She says she thought that her show could better serve the local music community from the internet.

"And, I didn't think KPRI cared about the Homegrown Hour brand, since I'd received little support from the station during my five years there. I knew the show had started on KGB FM, so I didn't think it would be a big deal for me to move it to Listen Local Radio. Well, it was a big deal, apparently."

Beeks is a performer, entrepreneur, and host of audition showcases. Since 2004, she has owned and operated > Listenlocalsd.com, an online resource for bands and singer/ songwriters. During the spring of 2009, Beeks was asked by then-host Astra Kelly to take over as host of KPRI's version of the Homegrown Hour.

"Station owners didn't respond to my letter of resignation expressing my intent to take the show elsewhere for almost two weeks. During that time, I spent over $1000 in rebranding efforts," Beeks says. "I wanted to save the show I had worked so hard on for all those years, but when I learned from my attorney that KPRI was willing to take me to court, I knew I wouldn't be able to afford the legal fight. I decided to have no further contact and just move on, which I have. Moving forward has been very positive."

On the upside, Beeks says Lloyd Pest Control is staying with her as a sponsor. "I couldn't do it without them. I'll be producing a new show

Recorded between fall 2012 and spring 2014 at Earthling Studios by Mike Kamoo, "The album cover is a photo I took of my girlfriend floating off a beach in Thailand, and its title is a reference to a part in Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas, when Hunter S. Thursday "If you didn't see me, then you weren't on the dancefloor." Detroit indie-rock s/ ash electro-pop duo Dale Earnardt Jr. Jr. make a pit stop at Belly Up behind their new two-song set of drunken discotheque, "James Dean" and "Revela-tion Blues." Sure, it's silly and soulless, but the Earnhardts do move a room t'groove. Great date show! Just leave the ballcap at home, ya jamoke. Hit up the clip of "James Dean" we've got streaming on the Crawler show this week and we'll see you in Solana Beach. Up-and-coming Brooklyn band Miniature Tigers get it going.... drew from all corners of alt-rock nation for this one, including desert-dwelling stoner players from our own backyard (QOTSA) as well as Midwest math rockers (Chavez). The ragtag group followed Dulli down R&B street but never quite caught up to him. Beast has hits and misses and rarely attains that inimitable Whigs swagger. According to professional rock writer Stephen Deusner, "If [Dulli's]

Sure, grunge is long gone, but the grungiest of them all, a sludge-metal band that many consider to have been the musical point of detonation that created the grunge movement. never got that memo. The Melvins are still making records and filling nightclubs. How? It's possible that bands claiming to have been influenced by the Melvins (namely Nirvana. Mudhoney, and Soundgarden) sound so different as to have rendered the Melvins immunity from the winds of change that spelled doom for all

The Melvins play slower and louder than anyone I can think of at present. They remind a listener of the 1960s band Vanilla Fudge, but with song structures seemingly left to chance and the occasional stab at humor: "Gotta word that's coming up coming up my throat/ It's a long ass word, gonna make me choke." A Melvins show is a dress-down affair that rolls outward from the stage in sheets and waves of modal doomsday electric guitar propelled at glacial speed by an otherwise earthshattering rhythm center.

They first appeared as a high school power trio. With the exception of membership changes over the years, the addition of a second drummer, and founder Buzz Osborne's 'fro going gray, little has changed inside the Melvins camp. Career highlights have to include some of the interesting talent they have invited along for the ride over the past 31 years: more than once. Gene Simmons of Kiss. who is possibly the worst (albeit best known) of rock bassists gigged with them. Then, there was Lorax Black, daughter of 1930s star Shirley Temple, who played bass as a bona fide band member off and on for five years. The band is now touring behind Hold It In. not only their 22nd studio album, but a primal toast to longevity.

Dream Your Life Away Vance Joy

By Marcus Perez

After hearing the catchy, upbeat song "Riptide," fans of Vance Joy have been awaiting the Aussie's debut album. Dream Your Life Away will please followers of his four released songs that have been circling the internet and radio stations everywhere.

The sounds are saturated with acoustic guitar and Vance Joy's sweet, pensive voice. "Riptide," even with its Michelle Pfeiffer reference, will not win over anyone with its lyrics, but it rides on its strength of delivery and easy harmony.

Upon viewing the video and interpreting the lyrics for the track "From Afar." we learn of an adolescent male enamored by a companion of the same sex. "You told me, 'Boy look the other way'/ You told me, 'Boy hide those hands'/ But I've been living on the crumbs of your love/ and I'm starving now," illustrating a rapt love for another human being.

VANCE JOY

STATE AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

Aussie's full-length debut lives up to the promise of his hit singles.

The album does not sit with the pop culture that the hit "Riptide" does. With "Georgia," Vance Joy shifts up rhythms in just under four minutes, delivering the unexpected highlight of this impressive debut album.

Music Reviews from Our Readers

The Baseball Project squeezed in a San Diego show before the end of the regular 2014 MLB season. While the group obviously belongs to gunslingers Scott McCaughey and Steve Wynn, REM's Mike Mills was planted centerstage for the show. Mills took his placement in stride, cracking jokes between songs and requesting a round of beer and tequilas for the band. It was fun to see Mills removed from his understated presence in REM. It's obvious that playing clubs is a pleasure for the veteran rocker. Besides providing backing vocals, Mills took a turn singing lead on "To the Veteran's Committee," one of the standout songs of the night.

Veteran rockers singing songs that delight baseball fans and music nerds.

The crowd was a mix of baseball fans and music nerds. It took a bit to get everyone moving, but "The Day Dock Went Hunting Heads," "Hola America," and "Monument Park" managed to do the trick.

BEER NEWS

Baja beer tour of Mexicali

My tasting tour of Imperial County's southerly neighbor began at 7 p.m. and 105 degrees Fahrenheit. Fortunately, the majority of Mexicali's indoor spaces are air-conditioned, as was the beer-centric BC Gastro Bar at Hotel Calafia, where I was hosted by Juan Gonzalez, who distributes brews from San Diego businesses Coronado Brewing Company and Green Flash Brewing Company in Mexico. His mission was to show off his local brewing brethren.

First up, was a clean, toasty red ale called Carrito Rojo from Juguete Cerveza Artesanal, a fledgling operation producing 25 gallons at a time out of three styles from the friendly confines of his house. Domestic brewing on a professional scale sounds odd to Americans — it's illegal here — but in Mexicali, it's the norm. So, too, are plastic kegs. Only two operations (Cerveza Urbana and Cerveceria Fauna) have enough money to get their hands on the steel variety.

That night, I tried the first beer from a new home-based interest called Cerveceria Faisan. It's helmed by Mexicali's youngest pro brewer, Hector Padron Osuna. His textbook porter, with good roast in the finish, was my favorite beer at the tasting. Also impressive was Fauna Lycan Lupus, an IPA that was probably the most widely available beer of my three-day stint in Baja, and a rye IPA from Amante Cerveza Artesanal — gentle but fruity in its hop character.

The owner of Amante drove us to a house on a dark street off the main drag. We entered into a large, beautiful backvard with multiple sitting areas, a gazebo, and brick oven. It was downright luxurious, and I thought it easily one of the nicest domestic entertaining areas I'd ever encountered. The house was home to Cerveza Urbana, one of Mexicali's most wellknown breweries. Take that with a grain of salt.

The entire brewhouse and fermentation tanks fit into a gutted kitchen area revamped (with drainage and everything) into a production facility. The entry area abuts the brewery and has a branded bar setup with taps and a freezer unit that's been converted into a cold box equipped with additional taps. According to someone who helped with the project, it was done on a weekend with a how-to YouTube video as the sole instructional guide.

The Baja brewing scene has elements of the makeshift and gumption to it. They are proud of the steps that lead up to their beer, especially the trials and tribulations they tra> verse using imagination and elbow grease. Considering the balance and quality of the duo of Urbana beers I sampled — a low-alcohol blonde ale well suited for high-temp Mexicali, and a prototype of a roasty dark ale with intense yet balanced flavors and a drinkable texture — they're deserving of a pat on the back. There are brewers in San Diego working with much more sophisticated equipment whose beers don't rate as well as those from these McGyver-esque guys.

I'm not saying everything we had in Baja was perfect or even outstanding. Beers tended to be on the more pedestrian side, aiming to be to-style instead of outlandish or groundbreaking. But, the beer is good and getting better at a rapid clip.

Bright Star

The world premiere of Edie Brickell and Steve Martin's new musical has the makings for a down-home un-Broadway show The bluegrass/country score, by Brickell, has an all-Americana feel But the book stumbles over itself. And the combination of music and double-plotted text don't always iibe. Billy Cane comes home from . World War II. Wants to write for the prestigious Asheville Southern Journal, whose acerbic editor renounced joy 20 years ago. Something will happen, eventually. Production values — Walter Bobbie's excellent direction, Eugene Lee's minimalist set — are tops. With much needed rethinking, the book could get there too. A must see. "Quirky" doesn't describe Sarah Ruhl's characters in this 2004 Pulitzer Prize finalist. And "magic realism" doesn't quite cover the style, which blends the fantastic and the gruesome. Put it this way: Matilde (who's trying to write the perfect joke) is young enough to have good skin, but old enough to worry if her skin's still

Fool for Love

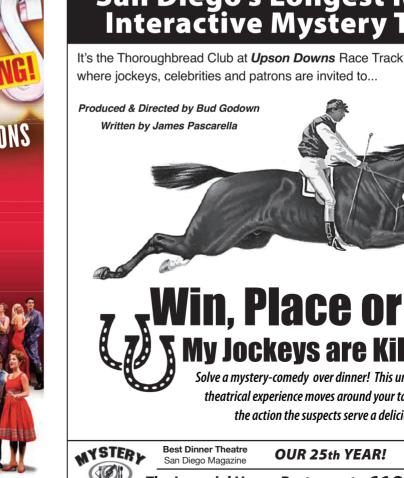

May's life is looking up. And all would be fine if her stepbrother didn't miss her neck. He missed all of her, he says, but he drove 2480 miles because her "neck kept coming up for some reason." And that, almost by definition, is what it means to be a "fool" for love. May and Eddie are so inseparable she can "smell his thoughts" before he thinks them. They love and hate in the extreme. Cygnet Theatre's opening night was technically proficient, Director Sean Murray's set had the bleached out feel of an old dusty motel (where the slamming doors reverberate surrealistically). Veterans Manny Fernandes and Antonio TI Johnson turned in fine work. And Carla Hartig and Frances Gercke were capable as May and Eddie. They had the moves, and the attraction/repulsion down, but felt somehow apart from each other. There wasn't a palpable sexual attraction or the kind of menace just having the two together should incite. They had yet to become fools for love. Note: The play runs in repertory with Shepard's True West. For days and times, call the box office. Worth

The Royale

Take away the spectacular theatricality and Marco Ramirez's pugilistic drama would be a thin-ish script that makes some important points. But add the clapping hands and stomping feet — that hit like punches — and stylized boxing matches and the play becomes a ritualized conjuration of an era we should never forget. Jay "the Sport" Johnson (based on the legendary African-American, Jack Johnson) wants to be World Champ. He must beat a white man to win the crown. But if he does, African-Americans will pay dearly (as they did when Johnson won in 1908), many with their lives. Brilliantly directed by Rachel Chavkin, the five-person cast is a 100% committed ensemble of actors and, it turns out, percussive musicians. Robert Christopher Riley's Jay Johnson and Montego Glover's Nina stand out as foremost among equals. Nicholas Vaughan's woodslatted set turns the White Theatre into a prizefighter's pit. Denitsa Bliznakova's costumes and Austin R. Smith's lighting capture the period, especially Smith's light bulbs with old-time zig-zag filaments over the house seats. Critic's Pick.

She-Rantulas from Outer Space in 3D!!

Phil Johnson and Ruff Yeager world premiered their "fartire" ("a combination of farce and satire") last November. A spoof of B-horror movies of the Fifties, the script was at times hilarious but long-ish. The revised version now runs 140 minutes, with an intermission, and makes for a much smoother, and funnier ride. Monster mutants are they tarantulas? — invade Tarrytown, USA, in 1957 and, poor, put-upon Betty (Johnson) must face the truth about evil daughter Suzie and "destroy her web of terror." Johnson's a hoot, as are Tony Houck (Suzie), Fred Harlow (Fred/ Freida), and Andy Collins (Harry/ Harriet). And Melinda Gilb's a special hoot. She plays six (or seven?)

True West

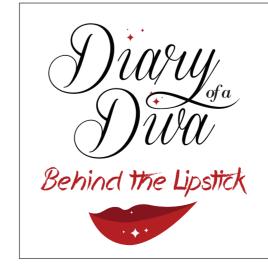

In Sam Shepard's primal comedy, Austin and Lee, brothers, begin as Felix Ungar and Oscar Madison, and end up as Jekyll and Hyde but which one is the good doctor? One of the best features of Cygnet's fine production: how Francis Gercke (Austin) and Manny Fernandes (Lee) play emotional gamesmanship. Each tries not just to top the other but to keep him down, as if they must repress that part of themselves, like kicking a habit. Director Sean Murray treats the play as a period piece (and these days 1980 looks like a foreign country). Shepard loves to skew stereotypes. Casting Antonio TI Johnson, an African-American, as the Hollywood producer Saul Kimmer, shatters expectations. And having Jill Drexler as the brother's semi-ditzy mother is inspired. She gives dimension (and humor) to a vapid part. [Note: True West runs in repertory with Shepard's Fool for Love. Critic's Pick.

MOVIES

ichael Keaton used to be a box-office superstar, in part because he played Batman in two films. Now he's starring in much artier fare: Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu's darkly comic backstage drama Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance). Keaton plays Riggan, a guy who used to be a boxoffice superstar, in part because he played Birdman in three films.

(Art improves on life?) Now Riggan is starring in much artier fare: a stage dramatization of Raymond Carver's short story "What We Talk About When We Talk About Love."

It's a passion project, a late-career bid to be taken seriously again, or at least to be noticed. For Keaton or for Riggan? Well, that's your call, though Keaton certainly comes off better as an actor. Riggan is a man on the edge: everything, absolutely everything, is going wrong in his life. Plus, he's routinely haunted by his feathery, famous alter-ego: rumbling about past glories and present humiliations, urging him to become the superhero he once was and maybe could be again. It's tough to portray a man like that without slipping into manic mannerism; Keaton is up to the job.

The action covers the preview performances running up to the show's premiere, and its devotion to show-> biz types and clichés is positively wondrous. For a while, I tried to write them all down, but it got distracting. Besides, they didn't bother me much, mostly because Innaritu (who also co-wrote) seems so sweetly fond of them. He's having fun as he winds his camera through the labyrinthine bowels of the theater like a starstruck fly, and he wants you to have fun, too. Just try not to grin when star actress Naomi Watts talks about still being the little girl who always wanted to be an actress, or when troubled daughter Emma Stone lays into Riggan about the folly of his artistic self-importance, or when genius actor Ed Norton says that the only time he can be himself is when he's onstage. Or, or, or...

Birdman: Keaton returns, but don't call it a comeback

Besides, the clichéd action isn't the point. The point is the artist and the self he is forever attempting to express, the war he is waging on his own brief insignificance, his mighty struggle to slip free of history's obliterating grip and soar toward heaven and immortality. It's a hoot. (Mostly, anyway. There are some draggy bits that even the thump-a-drum score cannot enliven.)

REMEMBERING MY FIRST, "HEY! SHUT UP AND WATCH THE MOVIE!"

You never forget your first time.

The week after Christmas, 1970. Friend Beyda and I hopped the Howard El to go watch Jennie die. This was before the multiplexing of America, a time when major blockbusters would open exclusively in one centrally located picture palace and gradually make the crawl to outlying single-screens. Television coverage showed lines snaking around the side of the Chicago Theatre. I opted to wait a week before hazarding the crowd.

Erich Segal's smash best-seller, Love Story, was a hundred-page, large-type, set-'em-up-to-watch-'em-die. Boy (Ryan O'Neal) meets girl (Ali MacGraw), boy and girl fall in love, girl contracts inoperable cancer, girl dies. The end.

Segal had been a fixture on every talk-show couch, and I was curious to see what all the commotion was about. The book was a present from my aunt on the occasion of my 15th birthday. It took a little over an hour to read. I closed the cover and reached for a Kleenex to blot away tears. Tears of laughter.

That's it? Erich Segal owed the world an apology for his quickly spreading literary malignancy. I couldn't wait to see what Hollywood was going to do with it.

Segal would script, of course. The genius of Arthur Hiller stops at his hair. Who better to direct? When the casting call went out for two physically perfect specimens with little or no acting ability, O'Neal and MacGraw rose to the occasion.

Throngs of white-gloved honeys flocked to attend this movie. The theater was surprisingly empty when we arrived for the weekend matinee. Of all the 3500 seats to choose from, two blue-haired birds — fresh from a luncheon at Marshall Fields' Walnut Room — pull up in the row behind us.

The film contained some of the novel's profanity. Ethel and Virginia would have none of it. "What a filthy mouth on such a pretty thing," Virginia observed. After every PG curse word, Ethel would stomp her foot and say, "Did you hear what she said?"

There had been dirty looks and "Shhhs!" that came before, but this was the first time I summoned the nerve to verbally admonish a pair of strangers for talking during a movie. What was there to lose? They were pushing 80, and I could lick the both of 'em together in a street fight.

After one "Did you hear what she said?" too many, I turned and said, "Yeah. She said 'shit.' Now would you kindly shut up for the rest of the movie?"

Ethel looked aghast as she let out a "Harumph!" while Virginia muttered, "Well, I never." The two got up and repositioned themselves at the back of the house.

It worked! What a sensation, as if discovering fire or summoning the ability to fly. Therefore rejoice, ye multiplexes, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the talkers and texters! For the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short running time.

Don't allow others to spoil it for you. Remember, love means never having to say you're sorry to idiots who choose to talk during movies.

JACK BENNY IN CASABLANCA?

There's not a doubt in my mind that the body hanging from a tree in the background of The Wizard of Oz is that of Don Wilson. But Jack Benny in Casablanca?

It all began, as so much does nowadays, in mid–social networking. I'll surrender my Facebook password when you pry it from my cold, dead hands. The social-media organ allows users an ability to stay in touch with friends, family members, and former students without once having to spend time in the same room with them.

The nonconformist in me is loath to "Like" fan pages. For the most part, fan groups are composed of like-minded enthusiasts who bring little to the table beyond an initial interest in the subject. I've probably quit more clubs than I've joined. Not true of the International Jack Benny Fan Club, a group of learned Benny-ites whose ability to share knowledge on their subject is anything but miserly.

Jack Benny was a ubiquitous presence during my nascent years stationed before the black-and-white Philco. In addition to his weekly television program on the CBS Network, Jack made guest appearances on other shows. He died the day after Christmas, 1974. The Jack Benny Program never made the syndication rounds like The Honey-mooners or I Love Lucy, and for over 30 years, with the exception of an occasional movie revival, television rerun, or rental of a muddy VHS tape, his genius was withheld from me.

A lot has changed over the past decade, thanks to the sagacious programming at Antenna TV, and, more recently, JLTV. Dozens of dupey DVD compilations exist that basically recycle the same 30 or so installments. (The show ran for 15 seasons and produced over 250 episodes.) Laura Leff, founder of the Jack Benny Fan Club (she was ten at the time), as well as Facebook's IJBFC, was instrumental in unearthing 18 longunseen shows for the indispensable three-disc collection, The Jack Benny Program: The Lost Episodes.

One brazen admission: A little of Dennis Day's baby-faced blarney goes a long way. I scan through his musical numbers.

For one playing Benny catch-up, there was no better place to start than the IJBFC. Since joining, my knowledge of and passion for the man has increased tenfold, placing him #2 behind Groucho in the pantheon of hilarity. In gratitude for the awareness the page brings, I post any and all Benny-related e-phemera unearthed during the course of my internet scavenger hunts.

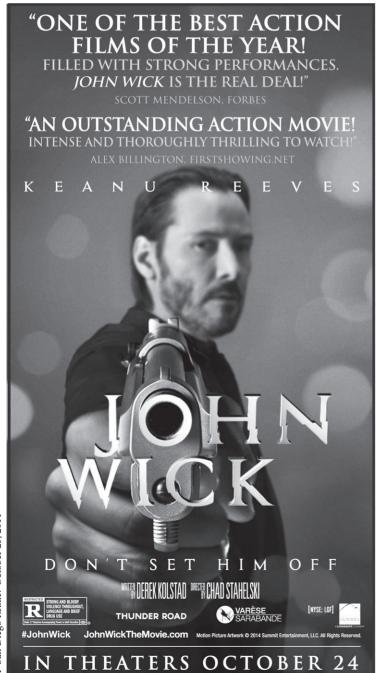

Dave Sikula started the "Bennyblanca" ball rolling by posting a link to Mark Evanier's News From Me that raised doubts over Jack's appearance in the film. Evanier cited four possibilities: (1) Jack was in the film, but impossible to spot. (2) The scene in question was left on the cutting room floor. (3) A studio PR flak decided the story would make a great promotional tool. (4) Gossip from a misinformed publicist.

Evanier tracked down a vintage newspaper ad challenging patrons to spot Benny, and still he remained unconvinced. The article closed with the author asking readers to join him in the assumption "Jack Benny was not in Casablanca."

Two days later, Evanier posted screencaps purporting to show Jack's cameo in the movie. For all I knew it could have been Alan Mowbray or George Jessel as the waiter waltzing through the soft-focus background of Rick's Cafe.

Casablanca is an established classic and, as such, a film I feel no pressing urge to revisit. We'll always have Turner, so if the need for another look feels in order, it's doubtful there will be much waiting time for it to recycle.

Having no way of scanning a disc in search of Benny treasure, I did what any good researcher in the age of the internet would do: consult YouTube. Sure enough, the footage in question — all 16 seconds of it — was filed under Jack in the back, and as of this writing has attracted a whopping 33 views. In the time it took to hunt down the video, a link to it had already been posted on the IJBFC page along with an article that pretty much corroborated the story.

As reported by "Buck" Herzog on page 8-A of the January 28, 1944, Milwaukee Sentinel, "One day during the making of the picture at Warners, the funster visited the Casablanca set at the time a café scene featuring Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman was being filmed. There were about 50 extras seated at tables, with a number of waiters scurrying around. There's where you'll see Benny, among the waiters: He borrowed a white coat and appears in the background in the scene."

There's not a clear shot of his face, but even in the glaucomatous background, Jack's swishy gait was unmistakable. Jack's daughter, Joan, has also gone on record as saying she believes it's her dad.

If it isn't Jack Benny, it should be.

I'm sold, but left wondering how many other unbilled celebrity cameos exist in classic movies. Maybe that was Bob Hope warming up the crowd in Triumph of the Will.

Birdman — Reviewed this issue. M.L. ★★ (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

The Blue Room — Director, co-writer, and star Mathieu Amalric (Venus in Fur) serves up a short, slight, somewhat Frenchie crime story. Meaning: the runtime is 76 minutes, the interest comes mainly from the chopped-up-and-scrambled timeline, and there's a little ooh-la-la arthouse nudity at the outset to catch your interest. Everyone involved in this affair-gone-sour — overwhelmed, uncertain husband; devoted, unstable mistress; wounded, unwanted wife — is dull enough to be thoroughly believable, but that doesn't make them any less dull. If anything, it's a backhanded testimony to the plodding effectiveness of detail-minded detective work and the slow grinding of the bureaucratic justice machine. (There's a fine shot of the lovers' case files: one laid atop the other, like the lovers themselves.) Unless it's precisely the opposite. Ambiguity is something of the

raison d'etre here. 2014. M.L. ★ (LAND-MARK LA JOLLA)

The Conformist — The enormous suspense potential of the Alberto Moravia novel, about an Italian Fascist whose yearning for normality and acceptance has brought him the assignment of murdering his former professor, remains buried beneath the hot-shot gimmickries and smart-aleckries indulged in by Bertolucci the shuffled time sequence, the overly choreographed snow-white insane asylum, the mountains of walnuts piled high around a bureaucrat's office, the virtuoso handheld-camera scramble through the forest, and the like. With Jean-Louis Trintignant, Dominique Sanda, Stefania Sandrelli. 1970. D.S. ★★★ (LANDMARK KEN)

Dear White People — It's hard to be funny about race. This is a film about that. Also other things race-related. 2014. (AMC OTAY RANCH)

Dracula Untold — aka The Lightly Fictionalized Rehabilitation of the Historical Vlad III "The Impaler" Tepes of the House of Draculesti, Prince of Wallachia, Former Hos $tage\ of\ the\ Ottoman\ Empire,\ and\ Defender$ of His People against Same, aka Maybe They Do Make Em Like They Used to, Sometimes. (The "lightly fictionalized" part involves a deal the desperate prince strikes with an ancient vampire in a mountain cave.) Just an all-around solid B-picture about the dangers of embracing the darkness in order to defend the light. Don't go looking for horror, gore, or vampiric sexytimes; this here is an old-fashioned tragedy that just happens to involve a guy who can turn into a cloud of bats. Everybody (especially star Luke Evans) brings sufficient sincerity to anchor the melodrama, the boys in Special Effects show a measure of restraint in every department except sound, and Charles Dance's too-brief turn as the Master Vampire manages to blend Max Schreck and Christopher Lee to excellent, unsettling effect. 2014. -M.L. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Fury — The title refers to an American tank that started out WWII fighting Germans in Africa and is now pushing towards Berlin as the enemy makes its last stand. Its crew — Evangelical Shia LaBoeuf, brutish Jon Bernthal, pragmatic Michael Pena, and lordly Brad Pitt, perched above them all — is muddy, weary, and suddenly saddled with newbie Logan Lerman, eight weeks in the Army and delivered unto them by mistake. Except, assures Bernthal, the Army (like God) doesn't make mistakes. Ours is not to reason why, or even to fret about right and wrong. Ours is to kill Germans. As Pitt puts it: "Ideals are peaceful. History is violent." No sense complaining. Speaking of God: talk about Him and His unsearchable ways pervades the proceedings, even as the carnage, cruelty, and carnality threaten to swallow all. It's almost enough to make you think that writer-director David Aver (End of Watch, Training Day) is saying something about violence at the heart of religion. Or vise versa 2014 — M.I. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Gone Girl — A long and twisty argument for the notion that somewhere along the way, talented, high-style director David Fincher stopped liking people: the characters onscreen, the souls in the theater, even the abstract mass of humanity. Pathology still interests him, though, and so we get toxic parents, toxic lovers, toxic siblings, toxic friendships, and a toxic cultural swamp in which they can all go about the nasty business of living. The story tells of a below average guy (Ben Affleck, hulking and yet expressive) whose wife (Rosamund Pike, lean and impassive) goes missing "under suspicious circumstances," intertwined first with the tale of their gradually curdling romance and then with an account of "what really happened." Fincher's chief delight seems to be in playing with genre conventions: what looks like an especially moody whodunit morphs first into a psychosexual thriller and then into what might just be straight-faced (and utterly black-hearted) satire. With Tyler Perry as a surprisingly human celebrity lawyer. 2014. — M.L. ★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Hiroshima. Mon Amour — Even with extreme caution. Resnais's first feature can be called one of the most influential movies ever made. It had critics grasping for Proust or Bergson, and filmmakers grasping for the scissors, much more often, in the cutting room. And yet Resnais has afterwards managed to top this achievement with regularity. The grandiosity of design, of subjects touched, of effects attempted, of styles mingled (the lyrical, the surreal. the documentary, the newsreel), permits frequent leaks of dreadful stuff, particularly in the past-time sections. And Pauline Kael has mercilessly exposed its gauche tuggings on liberals' heart-strings or puppetstrings. It is a forbidding task to attempt to cover the basic narrative situation in one sentence, but it has to do with a French actress reliving, out loud, her memories of a traumatic affair with a German soldier during the Nazi occupation, and meanwhile, in present time, going through a peculiarly parallel affair with a Japanese architect in the rebuilt city of Hiroshima. As film scripts go, Marguerite Duras's is a major work, with continual poetical sweets and delicacies; and as film performances go, Emmanuelle Riva's is also a major work. 1959. D.S.

★★★★ (LANDMARK KEN)

John Wick — Who among us wouldn't go on a 90-minute killing spree if someone murdered our adorable beagle pup? Anyone not on board? Okay, what if the beagle pup was a posthumous gift from your beloved wife, your one opportunity to "grieve unalone" for the woman who rescued you from your life as a soulless killer? Now we're talking. Bearded Keanu Reeves sets out to resurrect the '80s R-rated action film, complete with rip-roaring guitars, multicolored lights, snappy one-liners, and an endless parade of shootable, stabbable, chokable bad guys. Utterly formulaic, but still compelling, thanks in part to a fine villain (Michael Nyqvist), clever story touches (a hotel for killers where violence is forbidden), and clear-eyed direction from David Leitch and Chad Stahelski. And Reeves puts on a helluva physical display for a half-century man. When Wick declares that he is indeed back in the game, it's tempting to hear the actor speaking for himself. 2014. M.L. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Kill the Messenger — San Jose Mercury News investigative reporter Gary Webb sparked furious debate when a piece he wrote alleged that Nicaraguans, hired by CIA-supported Contras, smuggled cocaine into the U.S. which was later transformed into crack and distributed in African-American communities. (The story broke in January 1998, but was overshadowed by headline-grabbing news of Monica Lewinsky and a cigar.) Michael Cuesta (L.I.E., 12 and Holding) brings Webb's story to the screen in the style of a briskly paced '70's political thriller. Jeremy Renner, who also produced, stars as a beleaguered crusading journalist who falls victim to a malicious witch-hunt. (The real-life Webb was later found with 2 bullet holes to the head; his death was ruled a suicide.) The pace slackens a bit in the third act, and scenes of Webb and his son bonding over a motorcycle hammer home our heroes earlier-established Everyman status. Still, I wasn't bored for a second. 2014. — S.M. ★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE

Life Inside Out — Were it not for Laura's (Maggie Baird) inability to fit her faithful guitar in a Goodwill box, the 46-year-old housewife and mother of three might never have reignited her passion for music. With her youngest, most outwardly troubled son, Shane (Finneas O'Connell), in tow, Laura begins making the rounds of local open-mic nights, where the singer with the "little voice" manages to attract an audience. Here's a film where dialog and performance are woven together with such candor and insight that moments pass where it felt like eavesdropping through an open window. First time director Jill D'Agnenica and her outstanding, albeit unheard-of cast skillfully skirt the pitfalls inherent in the Lifetime Channel material. With so many films out there about parents and children bonding through sports, I'm thrilled to recommend one in which art is the great unifier. Without your help, this low key, independently financed labor of love won't find the audience it so richly deserves, 2013. — S.M. ★★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

No Evidence of Disease — As is customary with awareness-raising health documentaries, expect heart-wrenching patient testimonials, statistics stamped across the screen, and even a race for the cure. Director Andrea Kalin's added twist is a six-doctor band that rocks out against gynecologic cancer. A cry of, "Breast cancer has a ribbon, but GYN cancer has a rock band," kicks off the concert. What's with the competitive divisiveness? You may as well just chant, "My charity is better than your charity!" Cancer is cancer, and sadly there's plenty to go around. At the risk of sounding like a callous Charlie, my job is to champion visual storytelling, not causes. There is no evidence of cinema in this 94-minute public service (cervix?) announcement aimed at bringing some noise to "below-the-belt" cancers. In this case, your time would be better spent getting a checkup than at the movies. 2013. S.M. ● (DIGITAL GYM)

Ouija — I'm actually really surprised that this movie didn't get made 30 years ago. Anyway, Parker Brothers' wicked attempt to cash in on communing with the dead finally gets the scary movie it so richly deserves. 2014. (IN WIDE RELEASE — SEE SHOWTIMES)

Tattoo You

Send us a photo of your tattoo and win $25! Describe why you got the tat, what it means to you, plus where you got it, where you live, your age, and job. Visit sdreader.com/tattooyou for details.

techchick9: My name is Ashley, and im 26. When I was 9 years old I told my grandfather I wanted to attend USNA aka Annapolis and become an RN. 18 years later I am not attending Annapolis as I promised my grandfather but I am pursuing my career goal to be an RN. Currently I am a registered In home Care Provider, attending school. The stars on my leg represent my grandfathers time in the military as a Naval Petty Officer, my hero. This tattoo was done by Terry, in Vista Ca. reside in Escondido Ca juggalo760: My name is stephen im 18. I live in vista ca. i got this tattoo cause its the best city in the world.and i had to add the charger bolt.

kellkins: My father passed away on Easter Sunday 2010. I got this tribute tattoo from Hidden City Tattoo in Escondido CA because my family and I would always vacation together in Kauai and my father and I would sit out on the balcony and watch for whales, surfers, clouds etc. I love the tattoo and it is a constant reminder of the times we shared together

LEAD STORIES

— Up-and-coming Sicilian mobster Domenico Palazzotto, 28, was outed in August by Italy's L'Espresso magazine as the owner of an ineffectively pseudonymous Facebook page showing off his muscled, bare-chested body and perhaps recruiting members. One fan asked, "Do I need to send a [resume]?" "Yes, brother," came the reply. "We need to consider your criminal record. We do not take people with clean records." Palazzotto operates out of Palermo and listed among his "likes" the singer Kenny Loggins.

— Similarly young, body-obsessed Egyptian jihadist/gym member Islam Yaken, according to his postings on Facebook-type social media sites, is a law-school graduate fluent in English, French, and Arabic, allowing him to describe the particular viciousness that he and his brothers and sisters will wreak upon infidels.

Yeah, Baby

— The first "pheromone party" is said to have been staged in New York City in 2010, but the concept was revived recently in London, with men and women bringing three-each used, unwashed, un-fragranced T-shirts in plastic bags as the price of admission (along with the equivalent of $25). Guests sniff the coded bags one after another until genes kick in and signal the sniffer that a certain shirt belongs to Mr. or Ms. Right. At that point, the sniffer projects a cellphone selfie on the wall and whoever brought that shirt sees the sniffer, at which time things return to normal; i.e., deciding if the sniffer is sufficiently good-looking.

— The Italian news agency ANSA reported in July that Italy's San Vittore prison in Milan is scheduling regular "happy hour" socials for its female inmates — catered, with alcohol, and with "external" guests welcomed, to the displeasure of the prison guards' union. The deputy director of the prison service was quoted by ANSA as approving the events, leading union representatives to complain to the ministry of Justice.

Least Competent Law Enforcement

— The Clay County (Florida) Sheriff's Office twice this year arrested the wrong Ashley Chiasson — in January (for grand theft) and in May (writing bad checks) — despite three years, five inches, 20 pounds and distinctive middle names separating them (Ashley Odessa, the suspect, vs. Ashley Nicole, the innocent victim). ("Odessa" spent five weeks in jail before deputies admitted their mistake.)

— James Jordan Sr. died in Brooklyn, New York, in 2006, but NYPD officers have barged into his family's home 12 times since then — 4 in 2014 alone — seeking him on various charges. His widow, Karen Jordan, even taped his death certificate to the front door, but that failed to deter the officers, one of whom shouted during a recent raid that they "know" Jordan is hiding inside somewhere. Karen recently filed a lawsuit against NYPD for the raids, which include "turning out drawers, looking in closets, harassing my children."

Can't Possibly Be True

— A jury's murder conviction, and the 15-to-life sentence it carried, against Daniel Floyd in Brooklyn, New York, for a 2008 killing went for naught in July when the Brooklyn Supreme Court ordered a retrial (with witnesses forced to testify all over again). The sole reason the court cited was a decision by the trial judge on the first day — to seat the potential jury pool and not Floyd's mother, who, because she was temporarily left standing that first day, argued successfully that her son's right to a "public" trial had been violated.

Two age-30ish men knocked on the door of a Sebastian, Texas, woman at 12:30 a.m. on Aug. 3, asking for water and if they could please come inside to charge their cell phone — and the woman apparently cheerfully invited them in, later offering them use of her backyard shed to grab some sleep.

She did not learn until a short time later, when a law-enforcement manhunt widened into her neighborhood, that they were wanted for murdering a U.S. Border Patrol agent. Officers arrested the pair inside the shed.

— A team of researchers from the University of Texas at Arlington announced recently that they had developed a prototype of a wind turbine that might deliver electricity in tiny bursts to devices like smartphones — since it is about half the size of a grain of rice. (Tiny solar backpacks already exist.)

Solutions to Non-Problems

— Chung-Ang University in South Korea announced in April that its traditional-sport Department of Sport Science would begin accepting — as legitimate "student athletes" — video gamers.

— Also in April, Berlin's Lutheran Georgen Parochial cemetery inaugurated a 4300-square-foot area of its grounds as reserved exclusively for lesbians — for women who, said a spokesman, "want to be buried among other lesbians."
