Atkins returns Spanos money

But not Pechanga or Edison cash With rumors abounding of a possible blockbuster intramural Democratic primary in San Diego County's South Bay state-senate District 39, both candidates in the putative contest have been raising plenty of specialinterest money for what could be a politically ugly showdown next year.

through the end of June, according to data supplied by the California secretary of state's newly unveiled Power Search online campaign lookup tool, designed by nonprofit MapLight. org.

Meanwhile, Block's talked-of foe, Assembly speaker Toni Atkins, who has yet to acknowledge she may make the potential challenge, appears to be letting her even bigger money do the talking, with $735,553 raised through June by her Atkins for Senate 2020 committee.

Mirroring the pay-to-play field of California politics, both Democrats are champion career fundraisers, according to the secretary of state's data, with Atkins piling up $4.446.533 since 2012 and Block exceeding that, with $6,136,781 since 2009.

Empowered by the speakership, Atkins has of late vacuumed up cash from an ever-growing array of sources, including the casino-owning Pechanga Indian band ($8400), health insurer Blue Shield of California ($8499), and power company Edison International ($4200).

She even picked up $1500 from A.G.

Convention center's rosy forecast

Haven't we heard this before?

The consulting firm of Convention, Sports and Leisure International has come out with a $90,000 study telling San Diego that if it builds a contiguous convention-center expansion, it will gain $157.1 million in direct convention-attendee spending.

According to the study (paid for by the convention center, City of San Diego, and JMI Realty — the realty arm of John Moores's empire), annual hotel-room nights generated by the expanded center are projected to rise from an average of 926,000 over the past seven years to 1.2 million. Direct attendee spending will rise from $576 million a year to $733 million.

Here are two examples of the forecast record of Convention, Sports and Leisure. It told Washington DC that if it expanded, it would enjoy 654,632 room nights in 2006. The actual figure was 455,379; last year, it was down to 375,000.

The consulting firm told Philadelphia that if it expanded, its 2012 room-night count would be 786,000; the actual figure was 431,000 and last year it dropped below 400.000.

Accused kidnapper back in custody Jack Henry Doshay, 22, was informed of ten felony charges against him, his bail was doubled to $5 million, and he was immediately taken back into custody on, September 2.

imprisonment, and felony child abuse, in connection with a March 23, 2015, incident. Doshay was accused of taking hold of a seven-year-old girl at Skyline Elementary School in Solana Beach. In that incident, the offender allegedly wrapped tape around a child's face and head and was taking her to a secluded area of the school when the girl was able to break free and run away screaming.

escalating drought, ratepayers have been told to limit water use. At the same time, residents are paying more than ever. A July 5, 2015, report in the Wall Street Journal explained that the conservation that authorities have urged ratepayers to achieve will result in higher water rates for those customers. Because conservation means less revenues for water districts, which in turn forces districts to raise water rates to pay for maintenance, repairs, and, of course, salaries.

Otay Water District's

general manager, Mark Watton, earns $301,000 a year to run the water district. As reported by 10News, Watton also is given 71 days a year in vacation time. Otay Water District spokesman Armando Buelna says such rich compensation has not caused the recent rate hikes.

"Overhead and salaries are not the reason water rates have increased in recent years," Buelna writes in a June 26 email to the Reader. He puts the blame on rising wholesale costs. "...[T]he cost of water has increased more than 100 percent since 2006. We don't want to point fingers at wholesalers, however, water rates have gone up because water suppliers have ects in Imperial Valley, even the new ocean water desalination plant set to come online in Carlsbad later this year. They've also built new reservoirs, expanded reservoir capacity, expanded water treatment plants, and expanded water conservation programs. All of these factors are included in the cost the consumer pays for water." Buelna says

Otay Water Dis-George Janczyn trict has tried to offset those cost increases. "Local water agencies are concerned about our customers and we are working hard to keep costs as low as possible. For example, to minimize overhead costs, Otay has reduced its employee headcount from 174 to 138 since 2008, a reduction of 21 percent. This has resulted in a cumulative savings of $23.9 million over that same time period."

The workforce reduction, says the water spokesperson, has occurred despite increased customers the water district serves. In 2008, each employee for Otay was responsible for 301 custom-

In the case of Lamb and the Vallecitos Water District, spokesman Chris Robbins says his boss's pay is comparable to

UNDER THE RADAR

General Dynamics takes a

Bath There's heavy-duty labor-union trouble brewing at the Bath

Iron Works, the Navy shipyard in Maine run by General Dynamics, owner of National Steel and Shipbuilding here. Last year, as part of a turnaround effort, the Washington-based military contracting behemoth dispatched Fred Harris, chief executive of NASSCO, to simultaneously run Bath. According to an August 22 Defense News report, Harris "attempted to install at Bath techniques and approaches that were successful in San Diego. One oft-reported example was an effort to hire nonpermanent electricians to handle the surge in ship construction." But unlike employees in laid-back San Diego, Maine's union workers have rebelled.

JUALCON

Scott Peters

"FOF' signs began to appear around Bath — a amazo non-complimentary acronym that aimed union opposition personally at the vard president. Street demonstrations appeared earlier this year, and the yard's troubles are being regularly reported in Maine's media. The Bangor Daily News called the problems at Bath the 'company's largest labor unrest in decades."

It isn't the first time Harris has faced controversy. Last year, the shipyard executive spearheaded a high-dollar General Dynamics-financed referendum drive backed by Republican mayor Kevin Faulconer that overturned the Barrio Logan community plan. Harris and his allies, including GOP ex-mayor and chamber of commerce head Jerry Sanders, maintained the plan would hinder shipyard operations and threaten jobs. The campaign was backed by GOP kingpin and then-U-T San Diego publisher Douglas Manchester, whose paper omitted reporting that General Dynamics owns a vast maquiladora plant in Mexico, to which a growing portion of San Diego shipyard work has been outsourced. Depending on the outcome of closed-door negotiations now ongoing between Bath's labor and management regarding achieving a new contract by a May deadline next year, things could get hotter still, says Defense News. "Has it shown up yet in their finances?" the trade journal quoted military stock analyst Byron Callan as saying. "I would say no it hasn't, but I think that's a question people should ask."

Peters picks This July, not long before world stock markets headed south last month, La Jolla Democratic congressman Scott Peters did a lot of buying. According to a disclosure filing with the House ethics commission, from July 10 through 31, Peters loaded up on as much lion worth of equities, based on the price-disclosure ranges provided for under federal law. The congressman did more than a little selling as well, dumping between $500,000 and $1 million worth of military cyber security contractor Telos preferred stock, along with the same value range of Sequoia California bonds. Recent Telos contracts have included a share of $7.91 billion worth of work at the Air Force

Life Cycle Management Center at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Ohio. Peters also sold off between $30,000 and $100,000 in Bank of America stock, the filing says. His buy picks included between $100,000 and $200,000 worth of Amazon; the same dollar value for Apple; and between $16,000 and $65,000 in San Diego's own faltering Qualcomm, which recently slashed its workforce.

Dumping ground Call it the battle of the high-flying San Diego subsidy. Back in June, the board of the Phoenix-Mesa Gateway airport voted to approve an "incentive package" valued at more than $1.3 million to entice Portland, Maine-based Elite Airways to begin regular flights between Mesa and San Diego. According to an account in the Arizona Republic, the six-month deal included "waived landing and terminal fees, cash for marketing and 'revenue guarantees' in which Gateway will compensate the airline for empty seats on flights that don't generate enough passengers." If sufficient numbers of $140 tickets to San Diego aren't sold for the nine weekly flights, the airport would end up forking over about $7000 for each partially unfilled plane. Located about 20 miles outside Phoenix on the site of what was the former Williams Air Force Base, the small airport has also been a "focus city" for Allegiant Airlines. But that company objected to the Elite continued on page 34 San Diego Reader September 10, 2015

Corrections

In last week's cover story, "San Diego Universities Botch Sexual Assault Investigations," there appeared a photo of Francisco Sousa's attorney, Domenic Lombardo, and the following caption: "Attorney Domenic Lombardo says SDSU officials refused to see the boxes of evidence that exonerated his client Francisco Paiva Sousa." This was a mistake. Lombardo said that SDSU refused to let him and Sousa review the investigative file they had against Sousa before their June Title IX hearing.

In the article, the author stated that Sousa and his accuser had a sexual encounter months before the alleged incident. And, that encounter had taken place at the Theta Chi Frat House. This was incorrect. The previous encounter occurred two weeks before the alleged incident at an off-campus house where some Theta Chi members lived.

We regret the errors. Editor

Author's Note

Lucas Taylor (subject of the August 27 cover story in the Reader) passed away on Thursday, August 27. He died in his sleep. His fiancée, Ericka Zesati, called me to say she took him to the emergency room two days earlier after he started experiencing a great deal of pain. He then went to his doctor the following day.

Taylor and Zesati were high school sweethearts and had been dating regularly for the last seven years. They were planning to marry this coming January.

Lucas Taylor wanted the story of turning his life around told. He was very honest and open with me and adamant that the details of what he was turning from be made clear. He hoped he could set an example to others that no matter how bad things might get, there is hope. He was dealing with inner demons well beyond the actions of his earlier life. He made it farther than many in his situation do.

Profoundly Inadequate

Your article ("San Diego Universities Botch Sexual Assault Investigations," September 3 cover story) focused on a couple of campus sexual assault cases poorly handled by authorities at local universities. It concerns me that you write of the Clery reports as if they contained reliable data. Those reports, with very few exceptions across the nation, were, at best, profoundly inadequate.

In 2000, a national survey authorized by Janet Reno, then U.S. attorney general, found that one in five coeds were sexually assaulted every year! That was 15 years ago. Consequently, the Clery reports appeared to be covering another country with often single digits per year on large campuses. So, over a decade and a half, how many thousands of assaults on college women were botched?

Many women did not report assaults for fear they would receive inadequate support and suffer further abuse. Now you report on two or three men whose lives have been tarnished. Few men and some women fail to grasp the often lifelong emotional residual harm from a single rape. These unfortunate men, and your unfortunate writing, will promote that women must be feared for their sexcontinued on page 36

Homeless camp cleanup "Not a cold and callous operation"

Caltrans and the California Highway Patrol cleared homeless camps around the Highway 94 off-ramps and I-5 overpasses next to downtown on Friday morning, September 4.

Around morning rush hour, homeless people gathered downhill from the clearing project, at 17th and F streets and 17th and G streets, many with their possessions in tow.

"We'll go back tonight and start over," said a tall blond man who trotted across stopped traffic to join the group. "My stuff is safe — I moved it to the sidewalk."

All clean where SR-94 meets I-5. "We'll go back tonight and start over," said a tall blond man.

Caltrans and the CHP confirmed the cleanup operation.

"It's not a cold and callous operation. We put up notices three days in advance that we're coming at a certain time and date so people can get their belongings out of there," said Edward Cartagena, a Caltrans District 11 spokesman. "We have a crew out almost every day cleaning out downtown area camps around the I-5, the 163, and the 94." Caltrans sends between two and four garbage trucks and a crew with a CHP escort — to pick up trash and debris left at the camps, which are mostly empty of people by the time they arrive, Cartagena said. MARTY GRAHAM

EAST VILLAGE Tectonic noise Listen to the Pacific plate rubbing against North American plate

On Friday, August 28, Fault Line Park officially opened on Island Avenue in East Village.

The park spreads over 1.3 acres between 14th and 15th streets. It is the first public park to be established in the East Village neighborhood since Park at the Park — the 2.7-acre grassy haven just outside Petco's outfield fence opened in 2004.

Fault Line Park was named for its location above the Rose Canyon earthquake fault line. Despite the fault running so close, it is not thought to be much of a threat.

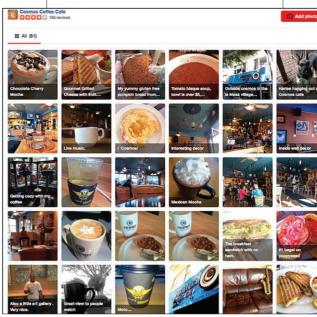

The park has an installation by Hong Kong-born artist Po Shu Wang of Living Lenses. Titled Fault Whisper, the sculpture that includes two chromed spheres will function as fault-movement markers as the Pacific Plate moves against the North American Plate. A modified seismometer embedded in the fault itself will "broadcast" the sound of the movement, according to a YouTube video.

Cosmos disappears Victim of sidewalk improvements

Not a good start to the week for early risers or musicians: on Monday morning, September 1, the regulars at Cosmos Coffee Café in La Mesa arrived to find locked doors and a handchalked sign just inside the popular coffee shop. "It's been a pleasure to serve the community of La Mesa for the last six years," it said. "Cosmos is closed. Please check our website for updates." It was signed "Cosmos Crew."

As of this writing, the Cosmos website is offline.

"I found out about it on Facebook," bassist Sam Johnson says. Johnson's jazz trio (with tenor sax player George Kazas and Alan Worthington on guitar) performed at the coffee shop every Friday afternoon for the past eight years.

"We go way back to the original founders, Patrick and Paul, the two guys that started Cosmos." Ari Bejar has owned the business for the past six years. "I sent Ari a text, and he wrote me back," Johnson says. "He said he was trying to negotiate with the bank."

In July 2014, La Mesa city planners launched a construction project to demolish, and then replace, the existing sidewalks, street lights, parking meters, trees, sewer lines, and amenities such as benches in the downtown area along La Mesa Boulevard from Acacia Avenue to 4th Street. Plans called for work to be performed on alternate sides of the street, one block at a time, with temporary pathways to shopkeepers' front doors installed in an attempt to keep the village open for business.

Free parking was made available as well, but apparently it wasn't enough incentive to keep cash registers ringing per usual through all of the bulldozing and jackhammering; this summer, O'Dunn's Fine Art and Sanfilippo's restaurant, both on La Mesa Boulevard, announced they'd be closing their doors.

hesitated to say the word because I knew I'd catch flak. At first, I just danced around it. "I have a person coming," I'd say, or, "I'm waiting on a friend...who's also going to help me out a bit." But while on the phone with my sister Jenny, I finally let it slip, in an apologetic tone: "I gotta go — my intern will be here soon."

"Wait — intern?" Jenny laughed. "I'm sorry, that just reminded me of the Real Housewives of New York City. You know, how everyone's always talking about Sonja Morgan's interns." No, I told her, I didn't know. So, after giving me a disclaimer about how watching the show is a guilty pleasure, Jenny explained, through giggles, that this Sonja chick's ever-present entourage of young assistants is an ongoing wonderment, both to viewers and the "housewife's" fellow reality stars. "She's always got three or four

"You want every person who works for you in any capacity to be able to make the same kind of intuitive decisions you would make, and you're absolutely unrelenting when they don't." of them just following her around, and no one knows why they're there or what they do for her," Jenny said.

After hiring my intern, I joked online that I felt like Kramer in that one episode of Seinfeld. In the episode, Kramer hired an intern from NYU under the auspices of his corporation, Kramerica Industries. The joke was that Kramer didn't have a "real" job, so the "corporation" was nothing more than one kooky man trying to breathe life into some of his entrepreneurial ideas (such as a rubber bladder for ships that would help contain oil spills, or selling ketchup and mustard in the same bottle). It might have seemed insane at the time, as most normal people had office jobs, but re-watching the shows on DVD, Kramer just seems like an eccentric freelancer. I lose track when trying to count how many of my friends and colleagues freelance.

Even though working from home is more common today, and even though I have worked from home for over a decade, the idea of having someone else work from my home along with me blurs the clear black line in my mind between "guest" and "employee." In an office, I'd have no problem asking an assistant to get me coffee. But sending someone into my kitchen to grab one of my mugs from my cupboard and make me a cappuccino using my machine is just weird. At least, it is for now.

When we first met, David was seriously considering hiring a butler. "I don't want someone to wait on me hand and foot," he explained. "I just want, like, an executive assistant or a personal assistant, someone to take care of all life's miscellaneous details, like groceries, laundry, and dust. Someone I don't have to explain every little thing to. I want a Jeeves." The cost for what was essentially a valet (not the guys who grab your car, but a full-on manservant) turned out to be prohibitive. So, David made do with work-related only, and not personal, assistants. He's gone through four in the time I've known him.

"I'm not good with interns," David said on the day ours was supposed to officially start. Well, not really "ours" so much as "mine" — I'm the one who signed all the paperwork for Grossmont College's Internship Program.

"You're not good with any type of employees," I said, smiling to let him know I meant it as a fact, not an insult. David nodded; no sense in denying what he has said on multiple occasions. To clarify, I added, "You just have high expectations. You want every person who works for you in any capacity to be able to make the same kind of intuitive decisions you would make, and you're absolutely unrelenting when they don't."

"The problem is I want them to be like a mini-me, and they never are," David said, sounding downcast. "I feel like, if I have to show people how to do things and then supervise them — if I have to micromanage them because they're not doing it right then I might as well do it myself."

After firing his last assistant, David gave up on the idea of ever getting good help. That was ten years ago. When I asked him why he sucked so much as a boss, David said, "I lack social skills. I'm not good at praising people, I just want them to come and do the job well for its own sake. It's not that I think they're undeserving of praise, I just wish I could praise them, you know, like you do."

"Well, you know I live for praise," I said. "That's probably why I'm so good at it. I say the things I wish someone would say to me."

Of course, it's much easier to praise someone when they're doing great work. I've had trouble with a few assistants in the past, mostly because they were young and inexperienced. Instead of freeing up my time, they siphoned it away with their questions and confusions. Like David, I found that it was cheaper and faster to do things by myself. The trick, I now realize, is to find people who are awesome and make sure they're not only well compensated but also know they're appreciated.

Most interns are college kids who trade their assistance for the experience and college credits. But, unlike the interns I used to deal with at NBC studios (who pretty much just stood out of the way hoping for an osmosis miracle), my intern, the one I now have, is a bit older and more experienced. He's a veteran going back to school with the help of the G.I. Bill. Having been militarytrained, he's punctual and efficient, and because he's transitioning to a career that excites him (media production), he's extra attentive.

The only problem is, as I grow more comfortable with the art of delegation, I find myself contemplating what life might be like with a butler. ■ (@barbarellaf)

ADVICE YOU DIDN'T KNOW YOU NEEDED

ASK A HTPSTFR HIPSTER@SDREADER.COM

Dear Hipster:

I had the strangest dream the other night. In the dream, I was at a restaurant with friends and we were all ordering absurdly named cocktails from a waiter in a plaid tuxedo. He took my friends' orders, but when it was my turn, he asked to see my ID, which I couldn't find. When I couldn't produce my driver's license, he frowned and said, "I'm afraid I'm going to have to ask you to leave." I protested, but that just made the waiter angry. He snapped his fingers, pointed at me, and all of a sudden a handful of armed security guards in the uniforms of UN Peacekeeping troops (blue berets and everything) rushed out from hiding, assumedly intending my arrest. At that point, I woke up unable to sleep anymore, so I arose and went about my day. I don't usually remember my dreams, but this one stuck with me for some reason. Maybe because it was crystal clear. I'm not a socially anxious person, and frankly most women over 30 are amused and sometimes even flattered when waiters card them, but I can't for the life of me figure out if this dream means anything. What do you think? - MELISSA

Lucky for you, my graduate degree in advanced hipstering from the Ferris Bueller School of Righteous Dudeness required an intensive seminar in dream interpretation as part of my concentration in the obscure arts and sciences, most of which you've probably never heard of before now. Among hipsters, dreams can inspire never-to-be-completed film projects — the kind that sound so rad over beers with friends - or ambient noise rock concept albums. It's said that the idea behind the maple bacon donut came to a hipster in a dream, and that the dream journal of an unidentified early-2000s Bay Area hipster (accidentally left in a Starbucks and discovered by a middle-school janitor) was almost published as a novel before the discoverer confessed under pressure from his scrupulously hon-

In my opinion, your dream reveals little more than a perfectly normal anxiety over one day waking up and realizing that you've lost touch with current trends, thus leaving yourself susceptible to expulsion from polite society. All of us hipsters feel at least partway like this all the time, and it can be a healthy motivation for staying on top of your cultural game. Of course, I may have deceived vou about my qualifications for dream analysis. I have, from time to time, stood accused of being somewhat arch, so take what I say with a grain of smoked artisanal sea salt. Sometimes, dreams are just freaky.

Dear Hipster:

Do you think birds enjoy flying? I know I would!

- DANNY (AGE 10), SOUTH PARK

If we're anthropomorphizing (ask your parents), I'll go out on a limb and say that birds regard flying the same way a I feel about composing elaborate pop cultural similes that complicate otherwise simple explanations: it's serious business and a necessary part of life. Regardless of whether or not they're पुँ capable of finding joy in flight, as long as the birds in question don't start "enjoying" the Kings of Leon, they are $\tilde{\aleph}$ all right by me.

Almost factual news

Overlooking, Not the Overlook

Local tribe seeks to monetize sacred ground without arousing evil

n September 3rd, the La Jolla Indian Reservation opened what is thought to be the longest zipline in Southern California. For $99, campers at the reservation campground can soar through the air for over a mile over lands believed to contain the bones of generations of Native Americans. And in fact, those bones are a big part of the reason why the La Jolla tribe decided to make ziplining its big tourist draw.

"If there's one thing we learned from The Shining, it's that you shouldn't build a vacation attraction on top of on old Indian burial ground," savs tribal spokesman Wayne Calumet. "There's a reason that all that blood came out of that elevator. The shaft goes all the way to the basement, down among the bodies of this land's indigenous people, slaughtered by the white man on his quest for power and pleasure. And let me tell you, there are a lot of burial grounds on our reservation. We weren't about to desecrate our heritage and open a supernatural wound that would lead to madness and carnage just to slap up another casino. On the other hand, the white man's dollar is as green as anybody else's. So we said to ourselves: if we can't build on the burial grounds, maybe we can build above them. Happily, this was one of those cases where the teachings of our ancestors just don't have anything to say on the matter. So we think that, piety-wise, we're on solid ground. Or, rather, above it."

Calumet provided SD on the QT with rough drafts of the tribe's planned promotional campaign, a riff on the difference between the excitement and fun of ziplining and the creeping dread of The Shining's Overlook Hotel.

The Godzilla El Niño: Which Godzilla?

Locals hope for something with a "classic feel"

California Monstereologists have cited the recent invasion of Southern California's beaches by thousands of monstrous pelagic crabs as a likely sign of an impending visit from Godzilla El Niño. "Time and again," says UCSD researcher Ishiro Honda, "the arrival of monsters from the sea has been the occasion for Godzilla El Niño to once again display his might while humanity looks on in helpless awe. This year should be no different. I only hope we will have the foresight to make adequate preparations."

♂ "The old ones were just more fun, you know?"♀ explains Godzilla El Niño fangirl Liz Storm. "They

Contiguous Calamity Curtailer? Mayor Faulconer pushes for convention center expansion despite lawsuit

A recent report from Conventions, Sports, and Leisure International claims that San Diego will reap a maximum return on investment if the convention center is expanded in place, as opposed to building a separate facility some distance away. But mayor Kevin Faulconer says money isn't the only reason for keeping the center contiguous, which is why the plan should go forward despite a lawsuit challenging it on the grounds that it would prevent coastal access," says Faulconer. "But that's a mistake. Remember, if you have access to the coast, then the coast has access to you as well. Global warming is a fact, folks, and it seems to be connected to the increasing commonality of extreme geological events. How much longer before San Diego, a city with a downtown right on the water, faces its own tsunami? And when that happens, what's going to be more important: coastal access or a contiguous convention center built to withstand and divert all but the most powerful of wave events?

"Some people think that all I care about is money, but that's not true. I also care about the people who make, possess, and spend that money. And a lot of those people live and/or work in the downtown area. It's my job as mayor to protect those people and their money, and also our valuable urban real estate developments. This convention center plan is simply the most effective way to do that, and I'm not about to let some faux-populist lawsuit stand in my way."

POST TITLE: Are Whiskey Stones Worth It? POST DATE: January 22, 2015

Whiskey Stones are 1" cubes of soapstone that you keep in the freezer and drop (gently) into your glass of whiskey to chill it without diluting it. One package gets you nine little rocks, and it costs $20. I get asked about Whiskey Stones a lot, all versions of the same basic question: are Whiskey Stones worth it?

This is not one question, but three: (1) How much cooling power do they have? (2) Is chilling without dilution something you want? (3) What is it like to use them? 1: How much cooling power do they have?

power do they have? I'm going to save you the suspense: almost none. You would think that 2 oz. of whiskey stones and 2 oz. of ice, both straight from the freezer, would have a similar effect, no? While that indeed does seem intuitive, you'd be wrong.

Without getting too much into it, the fact that ice is cold isn't why it's so good at chilling liquids. It doesn't take much energy (aka chilling power) to take ice from 31°F to 32°F, or water from 32°F to 33°F. But it takes a ton of energy to turn 32°F ice into 32°F water. Like, 80x more. It's the melting, called the "heat of fusion," that makes ice magic.

So, what does this mean for whiskey stones? In the marketing materials, they say they used soapstone because it has "unique ability to retain temperature for extended periods of time." And that's true: compared to most stones, the specific heat of soapstone is high. But comparing it to ice is like comparing a foot massage to oral sex: it ain't the same league, it ain't even the same fucking sport.

In my trials, 2 Whiskey Stones in 1oz. of whiskey, which is not much, brought the temperature down a measly 10.3°F. By comparison, a frozen glass (very thin) chilled it 14.9°F, ice chilled it 22.5°F, and a frozen glass (thicker) chilled it 25.2°F.

Conclusion: Whiskey Stones don't chill for shit.

2: Is chilling without diluting something you even want?

Experiment time: I tried 1oz. of 45% whiskey, side-by-side, 5 different ways, and took temperature readings after 5 minutes: neat, at room temperature (66°F) whiskey stones (56°F) frozen thin glass (51°F) frozen thick glass (41°F) ice (44°F)

Because so much of this falls to personal taste, I tasted with Vikki and we both silently jotted down our favorites. I like my Japanese whiskey neat, but when it came to chilled whiskey, our rankings were identical: frozen thick glass, then ice, then frozen thin glass, then whiskey stones. The frozen thick glass perimenting with whiskey chillers was the coldest, and while the cold temperature did suppress some of the more delicate flavors, it also suppressed some alcohol burn. It also added silky viscosity, which we both loved. I wouldn't always have whiskey so cold, but for casual drinking, it was great.

As for our old friend ice, we both loved it in the beginning, as a little dilution of a 45% spirit does release and stretch out some flavors. But after a while it became too diluted and therefore gross. Get bigger ice or drink faster.

Why did we love the frozen thick glass but not the frozen thin one? I can only guess the thin glass made the spirit cold enough to suppress flavor but not enough to add texture, and seemed to be in some weird middle ground, neither as flavorful as neat nor as silky as actual cold.

3: What is it like to use them?

And, finally, Whiskey Stones. Our least favorite, by far. The temperature change was negligible. The threat of taking a rock to the teeth, however, was not. Drinking whiskey, or really doing anything at all, doesn't exist in a vacuum; atmosphere and aesthetics matter. Temperature-wise, the stones didn't really do anything but disappoint me. But beyond the disappointment, and beyond the constant specter of dental injury, I ultimately found it a weird bit of superfluous pageantry to drink with actual rocks clunking around in my glass. So, are Whiskey Stones worth it? No.

They're not.

Every year I make Patrick clean the grill, and every year he complains.

Brandon Methey, owner of the BBQ Doctor mobile service (619-333-0540) spends most of his time cleaning, repairing, and installing high-end barbecues. "The grills I work on range in price from $1000 to $15,000." (Below that, he notes, the $200-$300 cleaning fee doesn't really make financial sense.) "Lynx is one of my favorite brands. They're really well made, parts are readily available, and their service department is on point."

Methey begins by taking the grill "completely apart. First, I take off the hood and remove the cooking grids. I even take the burners apart. Then I degrease and clean from top to bottom. The cooking grids are usually the worst, but it really depends on how long it's been since the grill was cleaned. I soak the internal parts in a tank of hot water, and 99 percent of the time, hot water and elbow grease are all I need for the rest of the grill. But if it's really bad, I'll use a mild degreaser. My tools are razor blades, steel wool, and special grill bricks. I even made some custom tools of my own. The only thing I can't get off is rust."

The advantages of a clean grill are not merely cosmetic, he says. "Number one, it's good to get all the carcinogens off of your grill. People think you can just burn it off, and it does make food debris all ashy. But the ash just falls below the cooking surface, and you're still cooking that into your food. And people don't like to hear this, but it helps with rodent control. Rodents love barbecues.

At least half of the barbecues I work on have rodent droppings where the burners are, and/ or nests, and/or actual rodents inside. People are cooking rodent droppings along with their food. And, lastly, if you clean your grill on a yearly basis, it will last much longer — two to three times as long."

In between cleanings, he recommends keeping the grids clean by "shutting the barbecue off as soon as your food is done. Then, when you go to cook again, turn the grill on high and let it heat for five to ten minutes. Then take your grill brush and clean the grids. Leaving grease on the grids between uses helps protect them from rust. Also, keep the top closed, and if possible, keep a cover on the grill." "People don't like to hear this, but it helps with rodent control."

Repairs run $85 an hour, plus parts. "Usually, an igniter doesn't work or there's trouble getting good gas flow. I also remove old grills and install new ones for $200. That means I install it, test it, and put a polish on it. If you've already got a grill island, I can do modifications as needed for $85 an hour, or a consultation for $50."

Jim Gordon, owner of West Coast BBQ Grill Repair and Service (619-328-5590), also prefers to work on higherend grills. "We mainly work on brands like Lynx, Firematic, DCS, Twin Eagle, Al Fresco, and Weber. When we clean, we like to take off the hood. The briquettes are usually ceramic and can be cleaned with water and a brush. I don't use any chemicals on them, because they would come off when you started up the flame. Sometimes, the cooking grids are set at a weird angle, and you can't clean them with a straight stroke of a tool. In that case, I'll use a briquette to clean the grid." Cleaning

When it comes to repairs, "igniters wear out, and spark modules go out. Those parts take a beating. Sometimes briquettes get old and crumbly, so we replace those. We also do varmint protection. If the grill is in an island, I use a little bit of rabbit wire in spaces around the grill, and I'll even plug holes with stainless steel wool." Repairs run $85 an hour. Gordon also does grill installation and haul-away, and he recycles old grills and patio heaters (call for quote).

2 "When I'm contacted about grill cleaning, I ask about brand, control knobs, and size of unit," says All About Fire (855-397-7877) owner George Brown, Jr. "Then I can give a good price-range estimate for cleaning. Most range from $225 to $300. We also offer repairs [$85 an hour] and gas hookup. We do natural gas-line hookups as well as bolt propane, where the grill is hooked up to a large propane tank on the property."

Don't worry about that water leak

CHRISSY SEIGLER NOTICED A LEAKY WATER MAIN VALVE ON THE SIDEWALK IN FRONT OF HER POINT LOMA HOME.

The water was seeping out from the lid and dribbling down the street.

In early June, Seigler called the emergency hotline on the City of San Diego Public Utilities Department website to report the leak. Seigler claims that "four or five days later" a repair crew came out to her home and fixed it.

"It was working okay for just a month or so, but then it busted again," Seigler says.

Again, she called to report the leak and the public utilities water workers came back out to Seigler's home. "They looked at it and they said, 'It's not just gushing out, it's just at the top," Seigler says. "I said, 'Yeah, but look, it's on the street.' He said, 'It's on our side. It's okay because it's not that serious of a leak.'" The man heading up the work crew told her not to worry about it because she wasn't being charged for the water waste and then they left without fixing it.

According to a staffer at the public utilities department, waterleak reportage has increased in the months since Governor Brown declared a drought state of emergency in January. Although she does not know the total number of leak reports that come in to the department as a whole, she estimates that she takes five to six leak reports per day.

"There's a lot more people calling and taking pictures of leaks that are happening from sprinkler heads and runoff," she says.

In an email to the Reader, Arian Collins, senior public information officer with the City of San Diego, wrote, "More people reporting leaks is helpful. Whether they are leaks on the City water system or from private property, or if it's a case of water waste, the City wants to know in order to respond and fix the issue."

The public utilities worker claims that whether the property where the leak originates is commercial, private, or city-owned makes no difference.

"The worst leak possible first," she says. "The leaks are prioritized based on the type of leak it is. Main breaks, of course, are first, and then water calls. And leaks are prioritized based on workload. They have to follow up within 24 to 48 hours to make the initial investigation, and then it's up to them or their supervisor to determine which property gets serviced first."

In his email, Collins explains that

This water valve behind the Vons on Midway Drive has leaked over 1000 gallons since early July.

although the city wants to be made aware of all leaks, not all investigations will result in repairs by the public utilities department. Some are determined to be "property site issues" that must be fixed by the property owner.

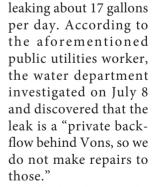

"Most calls are about legitimate leaks," he wrote, "however, not all leaks are from the City's water system. Some are from private property, and some are the result of over-irrigation drainage."

"When they did the investigation they said it was a property site issue," she says. "They said they left the findings, so they did [alert] the address at the property. They made them aware that there's a leak at the backflow, so it is now their responsibility to have that fixed."

On September 7, the leak still ran. Since it was first reported to

Other reports are more questionable and less clear as to who is responsible.

Also on July 7, a citizen reported a leak at Dana Middle School on Narragansett Avenue in Loma Portal, where an irrigation valve box stood filled with water and the ground around it was a soggy mess.

According to the records the staffer pulled up, the public utilities department investigated the issue and found that the standing water was not the result of a leak but rather was from irrigation runoff at the school.

Sometime at the end of July or early August, the leak was repaired and the site is now dry.

Regardless of where other investigations in her neighborhood have led, Chrissy Seigler remains baffled as to why her leak was left to run after it was investigated. Although the public utilities workers tried to assure her that she need not worry because she wasn't being charged, she remained concerned.

Seigler was so concerned by the "don't worry about it" response that on July 6 she called to report the leak again. But this time, she decided to raise the stakes.

"I threatened them that we're going to get it on the news," she said on July 7, "and they're out today, they're repairing it. They came out pretty fast." ■

When your Airbnb guests won't leave

It's a steamy afternoon in August, and Kristen Lang sits, frazzled and deflated, on the patio at Ponce's, hoping to cool her exasperation with a margarita.

When her husband moved out two years ago, leaving Lang (a stay-at-home mom) with no reliable income, she started renting out a room in her home through Airbnb. The experience had been positive, until now. Her most recent guests have refused to leave, and for the past two months, Lang's life has revolved around trying to extricate the two women from her guestroom. "I don't want to fight about money, I just want them out of my house," she tells me. "I feel like a prisoner in my own home."

It began back in January, when a couple whose Airbnb profile is listed as "Alfred and Sharon" contacted Lang through the online community marketplace about her room for rent. "We are signed up for Airbnb but we are looking for a month's stay for our daughter and her girlfriend who are moving to San Diego and will be looking for jobs," the message began. Their intention was to pay for their daughter Lori, 38, and her girlfriend Jesse, 30, to stay for one month, "to help them out."

Lang checked out Alfred and Sharon's profile, and saw only positive reviews from past connections made through the site. "I thought, okay, they seem like standup people."

The guests arrived on February 7. "They seemed nice," Lang recalls. "They were both applying for jobs, and I had two cars that were running at the time, so I loaned them my Jeep so they could drive around and find work. In exchange, I asked them to pick up my child from school every once in a while when I was working." Lang has a 12-year-old son. She and her now ex-husband assumed guardianship of the boy when his mother — Mr. Lang's sister — died from breast cancer.

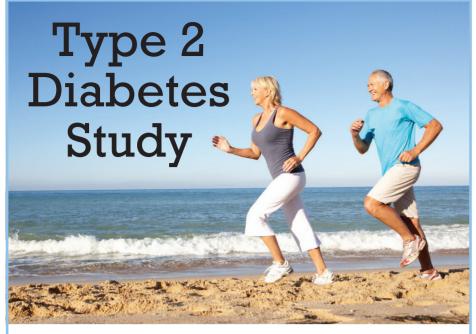

When the originally agreed-upon month was up, Lang says, "Alfred and Sharon asked to avoid the Airbnb fees and just pay the $975 directly." On April 7, Alfred and Sharon sent a check, along with a note that they would no longer be paying for their daughter, whose stay was already a month longer than anticipated. "May rolls around, and I get an envelope, late, with only $700 cash in it," Lang says.

Lang says that Lori had managed to get a job as an Aflac insurance agent, but in order to do so, she'd had to hit up her parents for money to cover multiple fees (insurance license, business cards, etc.). This is why, they claimed, when it came time to pay at the beginning of June, the women were empty-handed. "They apologized profusely with their heads hung low in my living room," Lang says. "And I'm, like, um, okay. What's going to happen here? What are you going to do? And they say, well, 'Jesse's trying to get disability for her back." Then the women suggested what Lang considered to be a scam. They said, "If vou write us an eviction notice, we'll tell the welfare office that we're going to be evicted, and they'll give us money."

Lang doesn't own her house in South Park, and her landlord of 11 years was unaware that she'd begun subletting one of the rooms. When she told him about the situation, he did not want to get involved. "He said, 'I'm so sorry, Kristen, but I told you to put people on the lease.' He scolded me like a dad, but he's worried about me, he cares about me."

Because the women were subtenants, and the agreement was made with Lang and not her landlord, it was her situation to resolve. She was still on do to make up rent, and I got no response. They were hiding in their room."

Unsure what to do next, Lang wrote to Alfred and Sharon through Airbnb. The message, dated June 13, reads, "Please call

"A 'guest' who refuses to cooperate and leave is often protected under California law."

friendly terms with her guests, but their request for her to go through the motions of eviction for the sake of extracting money sounded a lot like fraud. Lang says that when she expressed this concern, Lori and Jesse stopped talking to her. "I would ask them what they were going to me, Lori has had some psychotic break. They won't pay rent and want me to commit welfare fraud. Please get them help and a new place to live. I have a child in my home and can't live with the hostility. Please convince them to leave peacefully."

Lang went on to explain that Lori and Jesse said no, they would not leave if Lang agreed to file for eviction; they would live in her home for "as long as it takes for me to have the sheriff throw them out."

The eviction process can be costly and arduous. First, the landlord must give notice (in Lang's case, notice would be 30 days, because the agreement was month-to-month). If notice doesn't work, the landlord must file a complaint (which costs around $240), after which it could

INTERESTED CALL 619-521-2841 www.mccresearch.com by way of a carefully crafted attorney-type statement: "It is not uncommon for homeowners and tenants alike to become involved in landlord-tenant disputes related to 'guests' that have overstayed their welcome. A 'guest' who refuses to cooperate and leave is often protected under California law and an unlawful detainer lawsuit (i.e., eviction) is required in order for the 'guest' to lawfully be removed from the property."

Several of Lang's friends wondered why she didn't just throw Lori and Jesse's belongings outside and change the locks. But, as Lang says, who has what rights in these disputes is a "sticky wicket." Gonzales says, "Changing locks and removing property without complying with the law or a specific court order is unlawful and can lead to serious consequences." Lang did not want to risk breaking the law, mostly to protect her young ward. Even if she wanted to change the locks and thought she had legal ground to stand on, her unwanted guests had adjusted their movements so that one of them would be inside the guestroom at all times.

Hoping to avoid the drawn-out hassle of the eviction process, Lang continued to implore Lori's mother for help. In one message, Sharon attempts an explanation, "I think Aflac tricked us and her [Lori] as we paid to get her license to sell insurance and several other fees. She has not made one cent. She also borrowed money from someone to pay rent last month." The following day, on June 14, Sharon wrote, with finality, "I spoke with Lori this morning. She asked me to tell you to communicate with her through writing and not involve us anymore. I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful."

The friendly terms were at an end. Lang changed the Wi-Fi password, and the women "lost their minds," she says. "They're addicted to World of Warcraft." In a text to Lang, Lori wrote, "We see that you turned off access to the internet for us this morning. This is also illegal. We view your actions and conversations as hostile, please be advised that any further verbal conversation with us will be recorded via audio/video." In a separate text, she said, "We do not want to live with you, but we will exercise our rights to the full extent of the law." To which Lang responded, "You should be ashamed of yourself. Not all Step-Mothers are Wicked!

The inspiration behind this book is to share with all moms that being a step-mom is actually as important and awesome as being a biological mom.

We have been raised with the knowledge that the idea of a "step-mother" carries a negative stigma in our society. Yet currently, the statistics for step-mothers in families is very high and continues to grow as it becomes the "norm" in our world today. Blended families are not easy and sometimes step-parenting can feel fruitless.

However, love begets love and love is all inclusive, it changes things.

tage of someone who was so generous to you."

A glance at her Airbnb profile would seem to confirm Lang's generosity. There are 22 reviews, all of them glowing, with the guests' sentiment of being "welcomed like family" echoed throughout. In October 2014, a guest named Andrew wrote of Lang, "She went out of her way to help my girlfriend find a job."

As if in retaliation for losing Wi-Fi, Lori and Jesse called Child Protective Services one day while Lang was at work. "They let the CPS agent into my house and opened every door that wasn't locked. They told the agent I beat [my son] with a rolled-up newspaper. Sure, once I smacked him on the head with it when he didn't turn in his homework, but like this." Lang demonstrates a light tap with the flick of her wrist. "I had to pee in a cup in front of a nurse at a clinic, where they made me wait. I got dirty looks from everybody. They had to interview [my son]; he had to lift up his shirt so they could look for bruises."

"I'm worried about Kris," Lang's friend Julie Peckham told me. Peckham is an educational therapist and academic coach who works closely with Lang's son. She has met both Lori and Jesse on multiple occasions. Because she also volunteers at the LGBT Center in Hillcrest, Peckham has access to many resources, and in the first few months of their stay, she also tried to help Lori and Jesse find jobs and a place to live. She says things started to change in May, when, without explanation, the women suddenly stopped saying hello to Peckham. Now, Peckham says, "They're nuts — they're calling CPS, making up all these stories about how [Lang is] abusive, and they will not leave." Peckham stresses to me that Lang is a good mother. "This kid sails, goes to theater camp, takes music lessons, piano, baseball — Kris is a damn fine mom, she busts her ass." Regarding why Lori and Jesse would call CPS, Peckham says, "Obviously something is broken in these people - their morality or sense of reality, whatever it is. It's broken."

In July, Lang sought the help of attorneys, and learned representation would cost anywhere from $3000 to $5000. A friend who is an attorney agreed to help her with a phone call on July 15, during which he got Lori and Jesse to promise to vacate the premises in 30 days.

But 30 days later, when the women gave no indication of leaving, Lang sought assistance from the Legal Aid Society of San Diego. On August 17, the day we sat on the patio at Ponce's, Lang told me, "They have until midnight tonight to vacate the premises without me going to court. I doubt they're going to do that. I think they're going to have to be dragged kicking and screaming from my house." Lang had sent her son to stay with her exhusband until the situation was resolved.

Lang's friend Liz Rayon was particularly empathetic, as she'd had experience with squatters in Detroit a few years ago.

"It was a common problem in Detroit, because they were so bombarded with cases and so shorthanded that sometimes squatters lived in the places for over two vears before you could get them out." Rayon says houses listed for sale were targeted. "They'd see a house for sale — they were usually drug addicts — and they'd break in and move in and have mail sent there, and start stealing copper pipes. As soon as they got a piece of mail sent there, they were living there, and they had squatters rights."

The problem became so prevalent that in September 2014, Michigan passed three new laws aimed at squatters, one of which makes squatting a crime that could land the squatter in prison for up to two years with fines up to $10,000. Rayon says it took one of her friends 15 months to get squatters out of a Detroit home the friend had been trying to sell.

On August 18, the day after the women had agreed to vacate, Lang filed a complaint. On August 21, Jesse posted a note outside the guestroom door, informing Lang that she and Lori would be moving out the following morning. Lang had to work that day (she is a stylist at a salon), so she asked Rayon to supervise the move and make sure nothing was destroyed in the process. Of Jesse, who had been collecting disability checks, Rayon says, "The one who's supposedly disabled was carrying most of their stuff, and she's the one who drove the U-Haul." She said things went surprisingly well, though the women seemed uncomfortable by the presence of Rayon's boyfriend, as evidenced by the fact that they stopped to take photos of him while he waited in the car. "As they were leaving, Lori thanked me. She said, 'It was nice working with you, thanks very much.' I'm, like, are you delusional? Not once did they say, 'Sorry it turned into this."

A few days after the women left, Lang says, "Honestly, I'm still kind of in shock. It doesn't quite seem real. I wake up, still afraid to talk in my house."

When asked if she'll ever use Airbnb again, Lang says, "Probably not. Not just because of this, so much as some of the new laws I've heard, like vou have to have a bed-andbreakfast license now to rent through Airbnb."

Just a few weeks before, Lang learned of a woman in an adjacent neighborhood who was fined $25,000 for operating through Airbnb without a permit. "Will I use it to stav somewhere else? Absolutely." Lang had contacted Airbnb directly about her squatters and she was happy with how the company had handled it from their end. "They sent me a message saying they've spoken to Alfred and Sharon, and they told me their new policy states that if anybody stays longer than they're supposed to, they charge double the price."

Lang holds Alfred and Sharon accountable for their daughter's actions.

"In hindsight, Lori and Jesse never would have gotten into my home without the parents. They weren't on Airbnb; their parents were. To get on Airbnb, you have to have certain criteria — a driver's license, Facebook account, credit card. I don't even think they have a credit card to get a hotel room." Lang never made an agreement in writing and chides herself for being so trusting of others. "In hindsight, I'm, like, Oh, I'm so stupid. I just feel stupid."

Numerous attempts were made to contact Lori and Jesse for comment. They did not respond. — Barbarella Fokos employees, and an agency that serves a population of 97,000 people with life's most essential element," Robbins writes in a July 22 email. "The fact that we are in a drought/crisis increases the need to acquire and maintain qualified professionals and executives. A $300,000 annual compensation and benefit package for an individual with the experience and skills necessary to successfully run an organization and having those responsibilities, particularly in times of crisis, is not high. The market for CEO's with the talent necessary to run our size organization is competitive and our compensation package is commensurate to market."

As for Lamb's $45-amonth cell-phone allowance, Robbins says the policy has saved the district money over the long run.

"The phone allowance replaced the practice of providing phones and paying for and administering the phone plans for employees to conduct District business. The $45 saved the district money, represents only a partial reimbursement for expenses incurred on behalf of the district, and has never been adjusted."

Local water activist George Janczyn runs a blog on San Diego County's water issues. According to Janczyn, ratepayers have few options when trying to rein in rising salaries.

"The main way ratepayers or residents can exercise power over salaries is probably via lobbying the board members of a given water district. In the case of cities, like San Diego, then it's trying to engage the city council and mayor's office. Lawsuits might provide another means. [Ratepayers can also write] letters to the editor. In other words, they have very little power." CITY LIGHTS

"While a move to Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport is likely at this point, the decision has not yet been made, and we will be sure to inform the public if and when a decision to move is made," said a company email to the East Valley Tribune. Elite's service to San Diego is expected to start sometime this month. Other of its routes include Branson, Missouri, to Denver, as well as flights between Newark, New Jersey, and Rockford, Illinois.

According to a complaint filed with the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Texas, the six passengers, who were sitting together on the plane, were disruptive and did not comply with instructions. Hillary's felonious San Diego darling

Emails show Clinton tie to imprisoned La Jollan's law firm

La Jolla developer Doug Manchester, Republican kingpin and publisher of the conflated *U-T San Dieg*o, used his newspaper to attack Democratic presidential frontrunner Hillary Clinton.

"It could not be more obvious that foreign governments are attempting to buy favor with former President Bill Clinton and possible future President Hillary Clinton," stormed a March 11 editorial regarding contributions to the former president's nonprofit foundation.

On May 21, Manchester sold the U-T to Chicagobased Tribune Publishing — the biggest single stockholder of which is Los Angeles billionaire Bruce Karsh's Oaktree Capital Management — and there was a sudden course correction.

An associate of L.A. billionaire Democrat Eli Broad, Karsh has been a longtime contributor to the presidential hopes of Hillary Clinton and a major donor to the Bill Clinton foundation so often trashed by Manchester's U-T.

In addition, the paper's new publisher, Austin Beutner, is another Hillary Clinton supporter, close to billionaire Broad, and a Clinton administration veteran.

Though the paper has insisted that its editorials are still crafted in San Diego by former Manchester-era staffers, Clinton bashing has abruptly ceased, replaced with kinder, gentler words.

"People want something different. But they also want that something different delivered with ferocious attacks on the other party," says an August 19 editorial.

Meanwhile, more of Clinton's controversial State Department emails have been released, revealing details of other relationships she and her husband have had with San Diego bigmoney Democrats.

A February 23, 2009, memo from the office of Bill Clinton to the State Department's Jim Thessin sought a "conflict of interest review" of the financial sponsors of events the former president was scheduled to attend.

On the list was a closed one-hour speech and a halfhour "photo line reception" that September 9, put on by the downtown San Diego law firm of Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman & Robbins LLP.

Not mentioned was Democratic money man William Lerach, formerly chairman of the firm, who departed in 2008 to serve two years in federal prison after copping a plea to kickback-related charges.

Other veterans of Coughlin Stoia later formed Robbins. Geller, Rudman & Dowd, which last September 4 paid Hillary Clinton $225,500 to speak at a private event here, according to a federal disclosure filed this May.

Street-Smart Feminism

Re: "San Diego Universities Botch Sexual Assault Investigations," September 3 cover story

"After the great victory won by the insurgent, pro-sex, pro-fashion wing of feminism in the 1990s, American feminism has amazingly collapsed backward again into whining, narcissistic victimology. College campuses are hysterically portrayed as rape extravaganzas where women are helpless fluffs with no control over their own choices and behavior. Colleges should confine themselves to education and cease their tyrannical surveillance of students' social lives.

"If a real crime is committed, it must be reported to the police. College officials and committees have neither the expertise nor the legal right to be conducting investigations into he said/ she said campus dating fiascos. Too many of today's young feminists seem to want hovering, paternalistic authority figures to protect and soothe them, an attitude I regard as servile, reactionary and glaringly bourgeois. The world can never be made totally safe for anyone, male or female. There will always be sociopaths and psychotics impervious to social controls. I call my system 'street-smart feminism.' There is no substitute for wary vigilance and personal responsibility. "

Those words aren't my own, but paraphrased from a fairly recent interview with feminist Camille Paglia, a well-needed voice of common sense in modern academia — although the seas of perpetually outraged professional victims plaguing college campuses today wouldn't think so. Not an Island

Re: Neighborhood News, September 3: "Island Community Plans for a More Crowded Future"

An island is a tract of land completely surrounded by water. Coronado is not an island. Coronado residents can put up a sign calling it an island, and delude themselves into thinking they live on an island, but that doesn't make it so. It's fine if the Reader wants to quote a resident calling it an island, but the writer shouldn't incorrectly refer to it as an island as well.

Lawsuit Forthcoming?

To the person who reviewed Carl's Jr. and their All-Natural Burger ("Single-Patty Commitment," September 3, Feast!). You have been fooled by deceptive advertising. The burger is not "all-natural."

Checking the website for ingredients, you can see that the bun that contains hydrogenated oils and monoglycerides. These are transfats. Transfats have been proven to lead to heart disease and breast/colon cancers. I am surprised there has been no lawsuit filed yet.

HOA Good News

The article, "Fruit from Grapefruit Groves in Temecula Pays Homeowners' Fees," was excellent (SDReader.com, Neighborhood News, September 1). I work with homeowner association boards and understand the challenges. It is nice to hear good news about HOAs. There are many good board members and homeowners in HOAs.

Thanks again for the great article.

Under the Radar "Flack-Wielding Flacks" Posted August 19

Why did this article suddenly start talking about their salaries?

— James Sprague

No idea how PR staff salaries are releated to an exstaff member being cut off from IT infrastructure.

Seems like a Smear campaign... can we get the Readers top salaries? Also, salaries are the type of information that USC does not have to release, since it's 'private' but living on Government funding.

— David Valentine

Matt, how about some similar scrutiny of the USC flacks? That school has been very good at self-promotion for decades. We can suppose it has a staff of wellpaid, heavy-hitting publicity gurus, too.

This sort of public fight can do nothing but increase skepticism (or cynicism) of academia and medical research in particular. Someone here definitely violated the usual compact that governs the handling of big-stakes contracts. It's hard to be certain, but USC's hands don't look clean. But then again, it is awfully hard to follow some of the events on the UCSD campus and see that school as the one in the white hat.

The most interesting thing about Carson is the clapping sound at night, like its neighbor to the north, Compton. But it's not a thunderstorm, it's gunshots.

By the way, the movie "Straight Outta Compton"

Ask a Hipster "Small, Local Business on Notice" Posted August 19 I quit patronizing the local farmer's market in my area, after two bad experiences. The first time, I paid $6 for a brown paper bag of oranges, nice fresh ones on top, the old, dried-up ones were on the bottom. Months later, a different vendor sold me bruised, half-rotten persimmons. No thanks, I don't have money to throw away.

I don't understand why someone would by anything from a farmer's market in a "brown paper bag". If you can't choose your own, then just keep walking. Only seems like common sense to me.

The Bottoms Up section of Zion's Narrows hike is ten miles round-trip and suitable for the whole family.

Into the Zion Narrows By Joshua Cox

In my ten years on this earth, the Grand Canyon had been the most beautiful spot I had ever seen. That is, until I hiked the Narrows. If you haven't heard of the Narrows, you may have heard of Zion National Park in Springdale, Utah, where this spectacular hike is located.

When you visit Zion, the Narrows is an ideal spot to cool off on a hot summer day and enjoy the beautiful scenery. You can bring the whole family like we did. My mom, dad, and two sisters, ages 11 and 13, all came along. I was 9 at the time. The hike should be comfortable for most families with children who are decent swimmers.

We hiked the Narrows in August. Zion was hot, as it usually is this time of year. We started early and took the free shuttle to the Temple of Sinawava stop. A brief hike leads to where the Narrows begins at the Virgin River. The canyon walls here can be up to 1000 feet tall and only 20–30 feet wide.

We reached the start of the Narrows hike about 7 in the morning before the crowds arrived, bringing along plenty of water and lunch to keep us going. There were only about two or three other hikers. We were all in in our bathing suits and shoes.

Expect to get wet. You'll be hiking through streams during much of the hike. At the beginning, you can walk either alongside the river or in the river itself. Eventually, you'll be in the river. The water was refreshing — especially in the scorching heat of the early afternoon.

There were lots of hiking sticks available at the beginning of the hike, all free of charge. At the start of the hike, there's a place along the river where hikers who have finished the journey leave their sticks for others to use. There's no need to come with one.

The scenery was impressive from the beginning, but after 45 minutes the canyon became narrower and the view jaw-dropping. The light-brown sandstone canyons surrounding the path were as high as skyscrapers.

AVEL STORIES AND TIPS FROM OUR READERS

We saw and got splashed by two waterfalls. The coolest waterfall was at the start of the hike. The water cascaded from the top of the cliff. The water was a beautiful blue-green. After about an hour hiking, the water came up to my neck and I felt almost like I was swimming. Eventually, we had to walk along the side to get across because the water was very deep in the middle. If the water gets too cold, there are other trails you can hike to take a break from the water and stay dry.

At one point, the trail splits into two paths. Our family also temporarily split up to try both paths. Fifteen minutes later, the paths converged and we met.

The rock formations are extremely tall, blocking the sun during most of the ten-mile hike. This helped keep us cool. At one point, we found a patch of sun and warmed up. At the turnout point on the Lower Narrows, the rock formations widen a bit, allowing for the sun to shine down on the water and trees to grow.

As you hike farther into the canyon, the scenery gets even more spectacular. The canyon gets darker and the path gets narrower. There are also shady trees along the way that offer resting spots. We hiked about two hours until we found a place for a picnic.

"I think everybody is a little bit tired now, so maybe we should head back," my dad suggested. We all agreed.

On the way back, we ran into crowds of people that got a later start continued on page 44

FRY CREEK TRAIL (CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST)

Hike through a forest thick with oaks and conifers.

Distance from downtown San Diego: 62 miles. Allow 1.5 hours driving time (Palomar Mountain). From I-15 N, exit east onto Via Rancho Parkway on what will become first Bear Valley Parkway, then continue on S-6 (E Valley View Parkway then Valley Center Rd.). Turn east on SR-76 for 5 miles, then a slight left onto S-6 (South Grade Rd./Palomar Mtn. Rd.) for about 6.5 miles until the intersection. Turn north and continue on S-6 (Canfield Rd./South Grade Rd.) for 2.7 miles to the Fry Creek Campground on the left, just past Observatory Campground. The campground is closed from December 1 through March 31, but remains open to hikers. Park on the right side of the highway and enter the campground on foot. There is a $5 day-use fee. Hiking length: 1.8-mile loop. Difficulty: Moderate. Elevation gain/loss of 400 feet. The trail is well constructed, adequately signed, and easily followed most of the year, though it might be difficult to follow in winter if covered with snow. Leashed dogs are allowed. It can be enjoyed year round, but the best times to go are in the fall when the leaves of black oaks change color and again in the spring as their new leaves appear.

Don't forget your Adventure Pass for Cleveland National Forest

The Fry Creek Trail is one of the few places to hike on public lands on Palomar Mountain, other than the trails of Palomar Mountain State Park. The Fry Creek trail climbs through a magnificent, dense mixed montane forest that is reminiscent of forests much further north. Since it receives an average of 48 inches of rain each year, it has a lush growth of conifers and oaks, as well as an understory of manzanita, California lilacs, coffeeberry, and other shrubs.

The name "Palomar" means pigeon roost or pigeon home in Spanish and Palomar Mountain is home to the band-tailed pigeon, as well as the acorn woodpecker, Steller's jay, golden eagle, and mountain quail. This is a good place to look for birds that may not be seen or rarely seen in the chaparral or desert environments.

The trail begins near the information boards about 100 feet or so from the campground entrance. After climbing up a small hill, the trail turns to the east, passing near campsite #1, and continues above the entrance road.

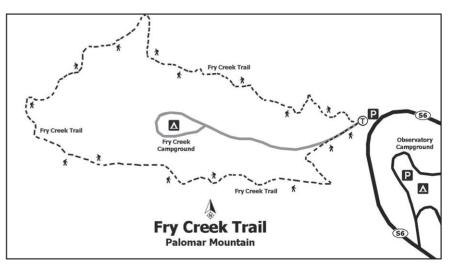

Soon the trail makes a hairpin turn and proceeds up the south-facing Fry Creek slope, leaving the campground behind. From this point, the hike is through a dense forest of canyon oak, black oak, coast live oak, Jeffrey pine, Coulter pine, big cone Douglas fir. and white fir. Although there is evidence of recent fires, most of the trees survived with only blacked bark. After hiking about 0.77 mile, there will be a dirt road to cross with the trail continuing on the other side. This will go up to the high point of this trail, in a saddle at 5240 feet of elevation. The saddle is the divide between Fry Creek and an unnamed canyon leading down to Upper Doane Valley in the state park. There used to be a trail leading to the state park from near here, but now it is completely overgrown and is not recommended. An area of planted Coulter pines, known as Penny Pines, lies just off the trail.

Rhyme & Verse

Four poems by David Mason

Security Light

The glow outside our window is no fallen star. It is futility itself. It is the fear of night a neighbor burns with, nightmare of a stubborn child.

I dreamed of chasing crows in a dark of sea fog and no wind, the chill smell of kelp and changing things, knowing the sea's edge and the sand met where the fish lived.

I saw the waters running out to meet the water coming in, the small crabs lifted off their claws. I saw the trysting place of cormorants, the cliffs of guarded nests where eagles watched like sated kings alive, alive at the moving sand clock of the sea where all's dissolved, where earth itself is taken down.

Frangipani

Cut blossoms floating in a bowl of water are what they are. Someone saw and gathered the pale white and yellow stars and leaned intimately down. To know the fragile blooms with breathing color is to be reborn astir, astray and happier than before.

They float to survive now, a mystery like the dead wake up to in the cradle of the night, flesh of frangipani sweetening the bed between the mown grass and the Southern Cross, and if the memory bleeds at such a loss it's only the cost of living with desire.

So let the sphinx moths hunting nectar there where none exists be go-betweens for life, purposefully duped. Let the perfume rise.

The Great Changer

Without a song to find a lover by, some days she floated like a driftwood log, beached at high tide beneath a dismal sky.

She was not Echo, nor was she Talking River.

She was not Thunder and she was not ever

She was not Milky Way. She was not Moon.

She had to move a mountain with a spoon

When change came it was a gradual dying.

She was not Owl Woman. This was not flying.

But she was Fox and found her gnawed off limb

The baby's bawling and the old man's laughter rise from the center of the same I am.

Say it to windows, doors. Say it to rafters on rivers of light. Say it to the breaking dam.

and the Great Changer came. And she welcomed him.

and never ask forgiveness of the sun.

In fact, it is a deep subject as to why kayak-fisherfolk flock to La Jolla.

Why kayak fishing got going in La Jolla

The La Jolla submarine canyon runs east to west, beginning a few hundred yards off the sandstone bluffs that feature the caves and the La Jolla Cove. From the La Jolla Shores side, the ocean bottom slopes gently out to sea where the reefs keep the waves minimal, making this an ideal entry point for divers and kayakers. Not far offshore, the bottom takes a sudden plunge over 400 feet deep into the east end of the canyon. The canyon then stretches out to sea west-northwest and reaches depths of 600 feet within the reserve boundary at a half mile off the beach.

About a mile offshore along the north edge of the canyon, Scripps Canyon joins La Jolla Canyon and extends almost due north to 200 yards past the pier and ends less than 100 yards offshore. The abrupt drop and abundance of marine life in and around the canyons help to explain why La Jolla is such a popular fishing and diving spot. As the sport of modern-day kayak fishing aboard sit-on-top vessels was in its infancy, La Jolla was the best place to launch. The first La Jolla kayak-fishing tournament was organized late summer of 2002.

The tournament ran through 2011 and ceased in 2012 due to time and commitment restraints of the organizers. This year, it is on again and will take place on Sunday, September 12, at La Jolla Shores.

Anglers may launch anytime after midnight on September 12th from La Jolla Shores and the final weigh-in will be 1 p.m. at Standley Park, 3585 Governor Drive in University City.

Water Conditions

SURFACE TEMPERATURE: LOW HIGH 72°F 72°F VISIBILITY 10'-20'

Flat conditions are predicted by the weekend for the La Jolla Cove and with the abating 2'-3' SSW swell outside and light onshore breezes, the cove should have great visibility for snorkelers and divers. That said, the moderate 4' tide flux and subsequent current may cloud it up a little during peak flows. Boaters should keep an extra eye out for divers near the reefs and channel edges and divers always mark yourselves and area appropriately.

Visibility based on existing conditions and NOAA predicted swell and weather conditions at press time. Check up-to-date daily visibility/ conditions at the San Diego County Lifeguard info line: 619-221-8824

Despite the signs indicating San Elijo's protected status, one paddleboarder (not pictured) believes, "The effects of human activity here is nil."

Stay out of San Elijo Lagoon

For decades, kids and families have made recreational use out of the front channel of the San Elijo Lagoon's mouth, between Coast Highway 101 and the railroad tracks, south to behind Restaurant Row. It's less crowded than Cardiff State Beach across the street. The water is warmer than the ocean and is generally wave-free (except for larger than normal tides).

Because the lagoon intake is part of the San Elijo Ecological Preserve, it has been state-protected water for years. Now, due to increased regulations, using the area could be considered trespassing — a misdemeanor.

Marine Protection Areas, established in 2012, affect approximately 2351 square miles of ocean, estuary, and offshore island waters from Point Conception to the Mexican border. Fifty new or revised areas have been implemented. The San Elijo Lagoon is now part of a new overlay of environmental protection, one of a few new categories. Known as the San Elijo Lagoon State Marine Conservation Area, the new category offers multi-agency protection by state Dept. of Fish and Wildlife game wardens, city, county, and the nonprofit San Elijo Lagoon Conservancy.

So, who put up the new signs recently, under the Coast Highway 101 bridge at the mouth of the lagoon on Cardiff State Beach, advising that it is now against the law to enter the lagoon's front channel? State beaches North Coast superintendent Robin Greene said, "It wasn't us. Our jurisdiction ends at Coast Hwy. 101."

Department of Fish and Wildlife's Lt. Scott

Bringman, a wildlife game warden, visited the site and reported, "DFW didn't post them, but they are correctly worded for the [area]," he said. He explained that the signs probably came through a collaborative effort of area agencies.

Other signs have recently been posted up and down the coast, both educational and regulatory, including at Encinitas' Moonlight Beach, for the Swami's marine area that extends down to Seaside beach. Fishermen and kayakers have in the past railed against expensive trespassing tickets in area lagoons; areas that previously had not been posted. It's the old "ignorance is no excuse for breaking the law" story.

On August 29, I asked folks using the lagoon channel if they saw the new signs that restricted access. None did. Twelve-year-old Christine from Encinitas said if a warden told her and her friends to leave, they would, but, "The same animals they are trying to protect also are on the other side, in the ocean," she said.

Renee, from O.B., who has a degree in biology, was going paddleboarding in the channel with friends. "The effects of human activity here is nil," she said. "Of course we respect the need to protect our resources, but surfers and water people are very environmentally conscious."

Lt. Bringman said he encourages his wardens, if needed, to give just warnings. "Realistically, someone would have to be doing something pretty egregious for a warden to write a ticket [in the San Elijo channel]," he said. Should that come to pass, as of January 2016, the misdemeanor citation will become only infractions, something that would not stay on one's record, said Lt. Bringman.

YELLOWS ON THE BEACH!

Inshore: There were some thrills for kayakers as a couple hammerhead sharks were spotted just offshore. The sand bass tapered off a bit last week though they are still being caught on the flats in 50-80 feet of water. Calico bass are still in the kelp and eating the plastics and bait voraciously in anywhere from 20 to 80 feet of water. Bonito and barracuda are still cruising just off the kelp with a few local yellowtail in the mix.

Outside: Warm water and plentiful bait has the pelagic species moving north steadily. Yellowfin, skipjack and bluefin tuna are being found all over the chart outside. Whether on kelp paddies, dolphin or under working birds, odds are, if there is activity, there are tuna, dorado or yellowtail feeding. Striped marlin and shortbill spearfish are still being caught within one-day range of Point Loma.

8/30 - 9/5 Dock Totals: 6,552 anglers aboard 259 boats out of San Diego landings caught 13,610 yellowfin tuna, 583 bluefin tuna, 1,483 yellowtail, 4,660 dorado, 2,844 skipjack tuna,1 white seabass, 1,043 calico bass, 272 sand bass, 6 lingcod, 208 barracuda, 518 rockfish, 20 sheephead, 8 halibut, 2,824 bonito, 4 sculpin, 2 whitefish,

8 Spanish jack, 1 cabezon, 5 striped marlin and 3 shortbill spearfish. Freshwater: The old saying goes, "When summer turns to autumn and leaves begin to fall, that's when you hear the big cats call". Mackerel, chicken livers, night-crawlers and even hotdogs are working well on the "whiskers" in most area lakes. Largemouth bass are feeding in 10 to 30 feet of water off points during the day and up on the edges in the late evening. Try the plastics on the drop shot when the sun is high and the shallow running rattletraps or Rapala-type lures near dusk. The next scheduled catfish plant is 1,000 pounds on September 11 at Santee Lakes.

Ocean Pacific Grille

Executive chef Charles Andres brought his Filipino heritage to Ocean Pacific Grille, but definitely pushes the boundaries. Starters gear toward the traditional favorites, fall-offthe-bone tender Adobo Style Baby Back Ribs have a pungent sprinkle of garlic gremolata, Salt and Pepper Calamari sit atop tangy yuzu aioli, and the outlier Pork Belly Bao Buns are a sticky, savory treat — the house pickled pepper garnish cuts the rich pork and sweet hoisin glaze nicely. Kare Kare, a meat and vegetable stew, customarily uses oxtails, but here Andres chose the more diner-friendly short ribs. Slow cooked in a peanut sauce with tender eggplant, it's nestled next to beautifully sautéed baby bok choy and long beans. Exotic fruits rule the dessert menu — my favorite is the Chocolate Passion Fruit Dome, layers of passion fruit gelée and coconut milk based haupia are enrobed in a dark chocolate dome, resting in a pool of white chocolate ganache.

Eating Brazilian? If you're thinking swordloads of mesquite-barbecued beef and chicken and lamb, save up your Washingtons and head for Rei do Gado in the Gaslamp. If you want genuine Brazilian street food, come a few blocks east. Samba serves the rice and black beans and tapioca wraps that working Brazilians (and the maybe 30,000 Brazilian students in San Diego) can afford. Here, go for coxinhas (potato croquettes stuffed with chicken, cream cheese), or pão de queijo (little cheesebreads), but mainly the "house Specialty," bread or tapioca wraps loaded with any of 15 combos of meat and veggies. Seven bucks. And at lunchtime you get a really good-value sampling with the daily buffet.

Bracero Cocina de Raiz

1490 Kettner Boulevard, 619-756-7864 LITTLE ITALY Javier Plascencia made Tijuana a culinary destination promoting Baja Med cuisine. Little Italy's sidewalks were already stacked deep with trendspotting foodies when he opened Bracero in July, but it leapt immediately to the top of the hot list, a concrete and steel triumph of Mexican fusion's success. Inventive crudo and small dishes include oyster topped by beef tartare and a huitlacoche (corn smut) tamal. Tantalizing lamb and pork entrées slow roast in a custom built caja china. It's enough to make tacos sound boring. Until you try Bracero's tacos. These fantastic creations are instantly in contention for the city's best.

crisp buttered toasts and garnet-hued pluots offer texture and tangy-sweet balance. Cauliflower Tempura is well executed and stays crisp under drizzles of tangy blue cheese and beurre rouge. Fried Chicken is a popular choice, and it's easy to see why. The crust is deeply caramelized and flavorful, the chicken is juicy and tender, the spicy aioli adds a creamy, piquant counterpoint.

Harbor Breakfast

Two reasons I love this place: it looks like the kind of joint a tugboat skipper would hang out at, and their Hangtown Fry is awesome. Okay, expensive at $15, but still an authentic hark back to Gold Rush days. This is the dish California gold miners would order after they'd struck it rich. Combo of crunchy-coated oysters, eggs, bacon, green onions, King Oyster mushrooms, plus thyme-soaked rough toast, and interesting fruit like persimmons. Tons of other breakfast-lunch choices. Most basic item, two eggs with toast, home fries/hash browns or fruit, costs $8.

Zgara Greek Grill

1730 Garnet Street, 858-272-2600 PACIFIC BEACH Processed, mystery meat gyros need not apply at this tiny shop tucked into a corner of Pacific Plaza. Everything but the pita is made in-house. The standards, such as souvlaki and the kebabs, are good, but it's the pork gyros that stand out. Folks who have been to Greece know: thinly sliced, marinated pork stacked on a vertical spit topped with a knob of fat to baste the meat as it cooks, is how it's done there and at Zgara as well. The pork is sliced off, a mixture of tender meat and crunchy bits, the flavor not overpowering, working in harmony with the tzatziki, lettuce, tomato, and onion. For those averse to pig, a chicken version is available. The owner is from Rhodes, so you can chat about places like Lindos and Stegna as you eat. —KIRK K

AR Valentien

11480 North Torrey Pines Road, 858-777-6635 LA JOLLA

A feeling of great ease makes this Lodge at Torrey Pines hotel restaurant the quintessential San Diego fine dining experience. It starts with the serenity of tree-lined Arts & Craft architecture overlooking greens of the famous golf course and blues of the Pacific below. It's echoed in the food, which puts the focus on fresh, high quality ingredients rather than showy technique or the elaborate fusion of ideas. From the amuse-bouche through the intermezzo course and on to dessert, each dish is deceptively effortless, whether a housemade pâté, prime meat, or hand-rolled pasta. Wine pairings are a must. —IAN ANDERSON

That's why you'll see folks in suits at one table and a family in flip-flops at another. All the steaks are high-quality, but the Wagyu skirt steak has an especially nice flavorto-chew ratio. The sweet corn in a spicy butter is an excellent side — just pops in the mouth. The blueberry muffin bread pudding is a great way to end the meal.

Tracy & Trixie's Twisted Truck Stop

978 Garnet Avenue, 858-230-7626

What started as food truck "It's a Dog's World" is now a brick-and-mortar snack shack on Garnet. The joint focuses on hot dogs, sliders, po' boys, and breakfast dishes with an emphasis on Southern-style seafood and fresh vegetables. But an unexpected highlight comes in the form of a Portobello and sweet potato jambalaya, which is sautéed in a spicy tomato sauce. The balance of soft potato and chewy mushroom give the appetite something to latch onto without risking the meat sweats in summer heat. Anyway, try the andouille sausage, a smoked Louisiana dog with sweet peppers and marinated cabbage.

Market Restaurant and Bar is, at most pay grades, a special occasion place. That's fine — James Beard–award nominee Carl Schroeder knows how to make food pretty special. Curried Coconut and Lemongrass Soup only sounds pedestrian. Studded with succulent pieces of Maine lobster and shrimp, it had the freshest, cleanest lemongrass flavor I've ever tasted. The Blue Cheese Soufflé and Pluot Salad was a wonderful contrast in flavor and texture, the shower of cumin/corian-der-scented almonds shows nice attention to detail. Old school Wiener Schnitzel gets an update by placing the perfectly golden brown cutlet on a bed of braised artichokes, sautéed sweet corn, and heirloom eggplant purée; a sunny-sideup egg sits on top. Break that yolk and indulge. My dessert love is the Chocolate Butterscotch Trio: intense chocolate

The most noticeable difference between Maine lobster and California spiny lobster is that the Maine lobsters have claws. Some lobster lovers argue that the tender meat found in the claw, and the overall "cleaner, sweeter" flavor of coldwater seafood makes Maine lobsters the preferred species to eat. Yakitori Taisho

5185 Clairemont Mesa Boulevard, 858-752-0468 CLAIREMONT The formula is simple: fire, meat, and salt. It is executed to perfection at this 14-seat shop in a strip mall off Clairemont Mesa Boulevard. The chef trained in Nagoya, famous for its chicken, so it's not surprising that the bird is front and center. Start with the Teba (Wings), Tsukune (meatball), move on to the Kawa (skin), Hatsu (heart), and the wonderful, somewhat chewy Akahimo (Chicken vein). For a change of pace, try the tender Buta-Shiso, a pork and shiso roll. The karaage, fried chicken with a hint of shio koji flavor, is good, as are some of the specials, like fried squid beaks. Try the Nagoya Teba; deep-fried wings in the style of its namesake city, sprinkled with black pepper and sesame seeds, dipped in a sweet and salty "tare." All the grilled items are prepared over binchotan, a charcoal made from ubame oak. Reservations are recommended.

Boiled tofu may sound bland, but few dishes are more exciting than Tofu House's soondubu jjigae, a simple tofu soup that is spiked with red-hot peppers, pork, beef, veggies, and served to you still boiling in its tiny cast iron cauldron. Before your meal, snack on a variety of pickled banchan (side dishes) that are also great to enjoy with your hot pot of goodness. When the server places the steaming, boiling dish before me, I'm quick to crack one of the eggs provided into the broth, where it quickly cooks.

You'd never think that an industrial park on Morena Boulevard would be home to a charming restaurant. Kitchen 4140 combines new American cuisine with a stylish garden patio that makes the most of its location. Emphasis is on using farm-to-table ingredients, such as heirloom carrots in chili sauce or the heirloom tomato salad with burrata cheese. Imagine a little eatery in the countryside of Japan, with bamboo torches, cloth-flap entrance, palm fringes. Add an island vibe: owner Daisuke loves — and plays — Bob Marley. Value? Check the big small-plates section. Try the five-piece baked green mussels ($5.25), monkey brains (tuna/ cream cheese-stuffed mushrooms) for $5.95, or vakitori: two chicken skewers for $2.95. More value? During happy hour you buy a basic beer, then sake, sushi rolls, and hand rolls; appetizers like fried chicken go for 99 cents each. Also, good bento boxes (around $12), seaweed salad ($4.95), and especially the smokin' Jamaican roll ($8.95).

The champ has to be the meatloaf panini with Havarti and Muenster cheeses, red onions, and big blobs of ketchup baked in, all between a crisp sourdough that has herbs and parmesan added. Speaking of spicy squid

Supannee House of Thai, 2907 Shelter Island Drive #110, Shelter Island. Google describes Supannee House of Thai as a "No-frills Thai restaurant," and having driven past the ho-hum storefront several times without going in, I assumed this was accurate. Sharing a drab shopping center lot with businesses such as Postal Annex and Subway doesn't inspire a lot of confidence.

Walking inside instantly changed my mind. It wasn't like stepping through the back of a wardrobe closet into a magical world, but the spacious, airy, and tastefully decorated dining room is much more than the pale blue siding of the shopping center's exterior suggests. A high, woven bamboo ceiling, twine-ensconced Edison-bulb chandeliers, and a pebbled mosaic wall give the place a modern yet natural vibe, aided by copious light entering through dozens of large windows.

Of course when I got to the menu I immediately drifted to the lunch combos on the back page and felt a familiar hankering for drunken noodles, aka pad kee moa. I didn't put much thought into it. Broccoli, Chinese broccoli, carrots, and red peppers over wide rice noodles topped by a spicy soy sauce blend of chili paste and garlic with a side of salad, egg roll, and watermelon for $9.50 with chicken.

That's where my head goes when I think Thai food, and I have no regrets. The sauce was killer, and the vegetables were lightly stir fried for an al dente freshness. However, based on what I learned after chatting with other customers and the service staff, I could have ordered better.

First off, the vegetables were grown locally.

Specifically, they were grown by the proprietors, Supannee and Alec House. Ordering the chicken was fine, but ordering it with more vegetables might have been a special treat.

But more egregiously I failed to realize where I was: Point Loma. Supannee offers a plethora of seafood specialties, serving fish caught each morning by local fishing boats. Pretty much every other place I eat this close to Shelter Island brings me in with the promise of fresh seafood. I could have tried the coconut seafood curry, choo chi salmon (made with red curry paste), or spicy squid. Speaking of the spicy squid, Google did recommend that. Which begs the question - what sort of algorithm does it take to recognize that spicy squid contradicts the "no frills" designation? Supannee has been recommended to me several times over the past year, and my biggest mistake was ignoring word-of-mouth in favor of drab exterior and web searches. This place just took over as my number-one Thai option.

Old-school delicious pizza

Venice Pizza House, 3333 El Cajon Boulevard, Normal Heights. The nature of journalism, even food writing, is to report "news," not "olds." The result is that foodies and food writers will often focus on the next food trend or new eating spot at the expense of places that have done a good job for a long time.

Case in point: Venice Pizza House in Normal Heights, which has been serving old-school American-style Italian food since 1954. Other than the big-screen TV on the back wall, it looks pretty much what I imagine it looked like when it opened during the Eisenhower era, complete with Naugahyde booths.

When TripAdvisor came out with a big press

release a few years back suggesting that San Diego was the best pizza city in the U.S., Venice Pizza House wasn't mentioned. I understand why. It's not in a trendy area like North Park or a touristy area such as the Gaslamp or La Jolla. Although it's on El Cajon Boulevard with easy freeway access to 805 and 15, no one is going to know about it unless they are driving along El Cajon Boulevard or their grandpa introduced them to it.

But Venice Pizza House's pies are wonderful. The crust is thicker than New York style and thinner than Chicago crust. It's fluffy without being doughy and has a nice crispness. I like that the toppings are put under the final layer of cheese. It allows the flavors of salty pepperoni or anchovy to blend in with the pie. And I like the fact that they serve pies with anchovies — it's true old school.

This is the type of place where Ralph Kramden and Ed Norton might have gone after bowling to split a mushroom/pepperoni pie ($15.65) and a large antipasto ($8.95) dripping with oil-and-vinegar dressing that must be sopped up with the crusts.

There are some concessions to modern tastes. I doubt pesto sauce was on the menu back in 1954. Ditto the fettuccine Alfredo, an old-school dish that had its heyday in 1984.

Sometimes a place that is good at pizza isn't as good at pasta and vice versa. That's not the case here, where the tangy marinara and meat sauces taste like there's an 80-year-old woman from Naples in the back watching over it. This is the type of place where you go if you're craving spaghetti and meatballs ($15.50) or, my favorite, spaghetti and homemade sausage ($15.50). Slightly sweet, slightly spicy, and perfect with the garlic bread.

As late as the 1980s, there was a restaurant like this in every neighborhood. I'm grateful that American taste buds have evolved to appreciate authentic Italian, but Venice Pizza House is one of the few places serving pizza like the good old days. by Patrick Henderson

Hawaii to Hillcrest

Poké Go, 3614 Fifth Avenue, Hillcrest. I'm probably not the only person in town with a poké-salad obsession, which should bode well for a new shop that soft-opened in Hillcrest a couple weeks ago. Poké Go turns the cubed raw-fish salad into reason enough to pay a visit, offering customers a choice of ahi tuna or salmon along with options for shoyu (soy sauce), spicy mayo, kimchi, teriyaki, or wasabi sauce.

While that's not a traditional allotment of choices, I was game for a couple of takes, going for salmon with shoyu and ahi with kimchi. Since I was sitting down for lunch with a friend, I ordered a couple of Poké Platters, each of which included a scoop of rice, poké topped by tobiko roe served with seaweed salad over a bed of simple romaine, a small side of pickled vegetables, and the choice of Kanikama imitation crab or tartar macaroni salads. For an extra buck, I added avocado.

The platters gave us the feeling of a complete meal, rather than just eating a small tub of seasoned fish. Which is fine, and probably for the best, as the veggies were fresh enough. But I probably could have switched the $8.99 platter for a $7.49 serving of 2/3 lb. of straight-up poké and been satisfied.

As the name Go would suggest, everything's built for takeout. The "platters" are served in compostable containers, with small plastic tubs for three sizes of à la carte (large is a full pound). While a Spartan dining room does allow for eating in, the lack of a beer license means you have to take it elsewhere for a beverage pairing.

The poké is not out-of-this-world spectacular, but it satisfied my craving. It's good enough that if parking on this particular one-way stretch of Fifth Avenue was easier, swooping in for a to-go container would be tempting. If it works out that I'm in the CoffeeReview.com. Bird Rock owner Chuck Patton calls it, "One of the highest scores ever for a Salvadoran coffee."

To find such coffee, Patton has made more than 40 sourcing trips to 11 coffee-growing countries, but Pimental is the first to reciprocate with a visit to San Diego.

"This is revolutionary, her being here," says Jeff Courson of Bodhi Leaf Coffee Traders, the broker that facilitated import. Bodhi Leaf sources coffee from around the world. then sells the beans to commercial and home roasters. In this case, Bodhi Leaf brought back a full shipping container — 275 bags of beans weighing 150 pounds each. Forty of those bags were lots specifically picked out by Patton for Bird Rock; the rest will go to customers in other cities.

Whereas most Salvadoran coffee plantations go back five or six generations, Pimental's father bought the 220-acre Finca Loma La Gloria 18 years ago. Built on the slope of a volcano at an elevation between 4000 and 5000 feet, the farm boasts nearly 450,000 trees and supports 60 to 65 employees - up to 250 during harvest.

A self-professed city girl, Pimental initially took no interest in her father's farm. But once she "got bored being behind a desk every day," she started digging deeper into coffee cultivation and began implementing changes to the farm designed to improve on quality.

"Learning to cup has been key to my process," she adds, estimating that as many as 90 percent of Salvadoran coffee growers never taste their beans. By cupping her product, she's learned to make the adjustments needed to attract direct traders like Patton. By any estimation, a smart move. Most coffee is traded on the commodities market, subject to fluctuations in price that neither reflect quality, nor even supply and demand principles — in the past year it's dropped from $2.30 to $1.20 per pound.

Pimental says her coffee costs $1.80 to produce, and for most in her region about $1.45. By selling it at commodity prices, those growers only accrue debt. Bird Rock pays closer to $4 per pound, which allows Pimental to pay her workers 30 percent higher wages than neighboring farms, she says.

Patton is quick to point out, "This is not a charity." He visits growers "trying to find the best of the best," so he can offer higher-grade, exclusive coffees. He insists "the relationship established with the farmer doesn't work if the quality of the coffee isn't there." But by hosting Pimental at his shops, he tells customers he's "Trying to put a face on what you drink every day," and hopes to do so again with other farmers.

neighborhood and a spot is open. I wouldn't mind checking out the spicy or wasabi options.

As for the flavors I tried, I preferred the kimchi to the shovu. The narrow strips of cabbage were only lightly pickled and spiced and paired well with a generous portion of flavorful tuna. The serving of shoyu salmon came slightly less generous and was relatively lacking in flavor. I'm not sure if the serving size is due to market value of the fish or just circumstance, but I do think the shoyu would benefit from added sesame oil.

That could very well happen, as the small restaurant is making adjustments on the fly as they prepare for a grand opening next month, including the addition of an octopus poké. by Ian Anderson

A wannabe Chipotle?

Un Mundo Mexican Grill, 4150 Regents Park Row, Ste 170, University City. San Diego has been the starting point for a few successful restaurant chains -Rubio's, Jack in the Box, and Roberto's to name just three. Un Mundo Mexican Grill is a new spot in University City that has that lofty goal as well. Based on my experience, it could succeed.

The easy description of Un Mundo is to say it's a wannabe Chipotle. It's not inaccurate, but it's not entirely fair. Basically, a customer picks a protein and chooses whether they want it served as a taco, burrito, salad, or bowl. All are $8.95 plus $1.95 if you want to add a second protein.

I chose a salad with grilled chili-marinated steak and lime-cilantro steak. You can add things such as grilled corn, radish, black beans, or french fries to the entrée. The salad was served with a vinaigrette (I added the fire-roasted salsa as well) and topped with a drizzle of chipotle mayonnaise.

I was happy with my surfand-turf creation. The steak was tender, but I preferred the tanginess of the shrimp. For about $11, I got a salad that lasted two meals. That never happens. I eat a lot.

My wife, who is mostly vegan (with the exception of eggs), chose to get a bowl with a vegetable medley and limecilantro rice ($8.95). The veggies were mostly yellow squash that she felt blended nicely with the rice. I tried one of the pieces of squash and felt it wasn't quite cooked through. She conceded some pieces were cooked more than others but was satisfied overall. She had leftovers as well.

My daughter ordered shrimp tacos with avocado and found them tasty and filling. My son usually just gets a bean-andcheese burrito. This time, he wanted to try his favorite with steak. He liked it okav: the beans were puréed black beans, and he likes refried pinto beans. His slight disappointment didn't stop him from enjoying the leftovers the next day.

One of the reasons why we were so full was because Un Mundo has spicy french fries (papas) — ($3.50) as an appetizer, which they serve with their chipotle mayonnaise. Really good. A real signature dish.

I'd like to go to Un Mundo again, but University City is a little out of the way for someone in La Mesa and of course there are a lot of great Mexican options in San Diego. However, if they opened up locations closer to where I live, it could become part of the rotation.

Since Bolt's production maxes out at 30 barrels per week and its distribution is limited, this will be the first opportunity for locals to try its roster of beers without traveling to East County.

Though less than a year old, Bolt has a long history. opened in late autumn 2014, following more than a year navigating city ordinances to set up a production brewery and beer garden. In Little Italy, Rust says the only real holdup was build> ing a kitchen that will serve pizza and salads. Rather than the live music, food trucks, and open air of Bolt's La Mesa location, the new shop features clean, simple decor. Rust says, "Our goal is always a relaxing environment. Come in, grab a beer, grab a pizza.... We're not a party place. We're a come-and-have-a-beer place... That's the kind of people we are."

spot to watch Chargers games — at least during the upcoming season. Rust says that even if the Chargers leave town, the brewery will keep the name, promising, "We'll be the Bolt that'll never bolt on you." ■

El Niño from hell. The seas may have been calm for Wavves in 2014, but the San Diego band is about to hit the West Coast like El Niño from hell, with a new album, V, hitting the shelves on October 2, and a slew of tour dates to support it.

"I think it's a much brighter record all around," Pope explained. "The sound, the energy, and the lyrical content. We had so much downtime, we were excited to get back into the studio and start playing music.... I think most of the songs are way faster, Bassist Stephen Pope tells the Reader that the new disc is more upbeat than their previous release, Afraid of Heights. The band was apparently listening to a lot of Devo and more upbeat, more energetic and fun."

Wavves kingpin Nathan Williams snagged the backing band of the late Jay Reatard in 2009. Pope came in on bass

Wavves' Pope and Williams set to release V, on which, Pope says, "The songs are way faster, more upbeat, more energetic and fun."

Wire when they were putting the songs together, and the pre-release singles, "Way Too Much," "Flamezesz," and "Heavy Metal Detox" certainly wear these influences. and Billy Hayes took over the skins. Pope has been onboard for six years now, while Brian Hill (the Soft Pack) has assumed drumming duties. The band is rounded out by guitarist Alex Gates, whom Pope knew from his native stomping grounds of Memphis, Tennessee. While Wavves started out as Williams's beast, all four members now contribute to the songwriting process.

The band members live in L.A. now but make frequent trips to San Diego where Williams has his roots. Pope says the home of Williams's parents is "kind of one of my second homes."

So, what does the gang do when they roll into town?

"Drink a little bit too much," says Pope, "and no matter what happens, we go through the drive-thru at MXN. Get that, get heartburn, and wake up Nathan's parents at, like, five in the morning banging on the door because he didn't bring a house key. Then I'll wake up hungover and watch his dad play video games. He plays the Final Fantasy games. He's like a sci-fi geek, and I think he's a professor at a college."

The video-game bug apparently runs in the family, as Williams is an avid gamer who has had reviews published in The Fader. Pope isn't as much of an expert.

"I'm terrible at video games," Pope explained. "I have a PlayStation 3, and I got the Grand Theft Auto game because we did a song on that, but I can't get past the first two things you're supposed to do. You're supposed to steal a car without getting caught and I get caught every time. I'm really terrible. I like to stick to Nintendo 64. I play Zelda and Mario Kart."

No glamping at Kaa-

boo. Like La Jolla tennis instructor Rob Hagey, whose love of music led him to launch the San Diego Street Scene (1984–2009) as a musicindustry outsider, Kaaboo creator Bryan Gordon drops into the concert business from the outside.

For his first show, the Denver-based investor thought big: he launched a SoCal music festival that unlike Coachella would cater to an older fan with more mainstream musical tastes. Kaaboo tickets are $329 for a three-day pass or $125 per day to see 100 acts (on seven stages), including No Doubt, the Killers, Snoop Dogg, Counting Crows, and the Zac Brown Band.

Two weeks before the September 18–20 festival, Gordon disclosed that the average age of advance-ticket buyers is definitely older, "37–38, just as we guessed." He would not release any sales figures; he did say that the 2000 VIP tickets that go for $799 are almost sold out. If Gordon was nervous about the success of his venture, he didn't sound it. While some music festivals have turned to glamour camping — "glamping" — as a means to accommodate guests, Gordon says initial plans to offer overnight boo." And from August: "Residents Still Wary of Kaboo." "It is perfectly natural for people who live near the fairgrounds to have concerns and camping on the fairgrounds were cancelled. "We didn't get an early enough jump on it. We didn't feel we could provide a superb enough guest experience."

But Gordon does maintain that all guests within Kaaboo will have plenty of seating and other accommodations once they are inside the event.

"Increasingly, promoters see a market for providing enhanced VIP creature comforts," says Gary Bongiovanni, publisher of concert trade magazine Pollstar. "It's not enough to just put up a stage in a field somewhere and expect fans to just stand there."

I note that the Coast News seemed bent on writing stories that seemed to stoke the fears of Kaaboo. A June headline: "Del Martians Wary of Kaareservations," says Gordon. "We have had many meetings with the community and officials." He says the influx of people will be much less than the opening day of the races or a big day at the fair.

Gordon says there will be no outdoor live music after 10 p.m. and that the EDM music will not escape its building.

Why Del Mar and not Orange County or L.A.?

"Del Mar Fairgrounds is a special place with great architecture and all the infrastructure. It has 350 acres and great general location in beautiful San Diego, near I-5 and the train station. San Diego has a great vibe. We fully intend to have this thing get a life of its own and come back many years to come."

JD Boucharde, Wayne Riker, and former Bauhaus bassist David I. Add to that list of literary locals Kevin Lydy (Vinyl Pirates, Samz Jam, Scott Samuels), who says his new book, Around Every Corner, is "inspired by people and places in San Diego. There are nine short stories in the book, with themes ranging from mortality to love."

The native San Diegan, who self-published via Create Space, says, "The human condition is explored from differing perspectives in all of the pieces. Written near Moonlight Beach, they have a certain amount of the color that life in Encinitas infuses into all of those who call it home. But all of the stories contain kernels of what it is to he alive"

Other local musicians with new and upcoming books powerful magicians in the land of Antropia," he says, "where magic is a way of life, and her battle with the Black Witch Kurolyn and her Dark Magic Clan."

Drew Andrews (Bit Maps, the Album Leaf) has released a short novel, The Shepherd's Journals, while Jon Kanis is preparing Volume 2 of his local-centric Encyclopedia Walking: Pop Culture and the Alchemy of Rock 'n' Roll. "It's a selective anthology of my published writing, mostly featuring articles spanning the time frame of 1994 to 2014," he says, estimating its completion before the end of the year.

Welcome to the Pit. San Diego's newest music impresario isn't even old enough to drive.

"I wanted to promote the music I like," Jack Habegger told the Reader last week on his 16th birthday.

He co-promoted the Burger Revolution in March at the now defunct Stronghold in Barrio Logan. The high school junior also publishes his own music 'zine: It's The P.I.T.S.: Panic in the Streets. Last month's issue featured an interview with Jordan Krimston of Big Bad Buffalo and Mike Rogers of Future Crooks.

Although he lives in San Marcos, Habegger decided to launch his own all-age music series called "The Pit" in Pacific Beach

"I looked everywhere to try and find a space. I wanted to find a VFW hall."

But he says the natural acoustics and the sweet lady he spoke with at a Pacific Beach

Women's Club helped him find what he was looking for.

He says the Pit will be a once-a-month occurrence at the club at 1721 Hornblend Street.

one to think I'm in competition with them," he says about the established all-age venues. "I just want to start a new venue that fills a need."

For his first show at the Pit, Habegger selected the Bassics and two of the bands from the local surf-punk scene, Vito and the Trees and Fake Tides.

"A lot of venues are closing down," says Fake Tides bassist Sal Samano. "We've ended up playing at a lot of house shows. Everyone has a good time

Freddie Feelgood flies again

"I came up with this idea of taking those old songs and redoing them with a current line-up."

r. Tube and the Flying Objects is back in action supporting their first new record since 2006's Listen Up. The local 11-piece continues their tradition of "Mexican funk music" on their new disc, No Wrongs, No Rights.

Actually, as the band would have it, they're carrying on the tradition of playing the Mexican funk music of Freddie Dillinger, an 80-something Chinese chatting, pot-puffing, ex-con train conductor who now fixes TVs and sells vinyl on ting my TV repaired and I asked what the music was that he was listening to because it sounded really cool. He wouldn't answer me...it was kinda weird. So then I went back to pick up my TV and he was hanging out, and he had a little section of old vinyl that I was going through and I picked some out. I started talking with him because the music that was playing was music I couldn't really recognize as being anything...it was kind of familiar and old, but I couldn't really pick out if it was Barry White

Mr. Tube kingpin Pall Jenkins: "I was get-after talking to him for a while, he started saying that he used to play music and that what I was hearing was his old band and his old music. I said that I would love to hear more and he was reluctant about that. I went back two, three, four, five times and kept talking to him, and finally he gave me some music to listen to. Then I came up with this idea of taking those old songs and redoing them with a current line-up."

or Parliament or who the heck it was. Finally,

That was the inspiration — real or imagined — that led to Listen Up and continues on through No Rights, No Wrongs. Jenkins told the Reader that he would occasionally meet with Mr. Dillinger at his TV repair/record shop and gather these old recordings of his various bands.

"A lot of stuff we got was like weird formats," multi-instrumentalist Brad Lee chimed in. "Old formats of tapes that we had to find somebody with that specific kind of machine to play it back. Then when we would play it back, a lot of times it would be some really shitty recording from a bar or from a practice."

Mr. Tube and the Flying Objects: a mere spinoff from a Chinese chatting, pot-puffing, ex-con train conductor.

Jenkins gave this chronology of Dillinger's musical endeavors:

"There was Freddie Feelgood and the Real Good Feeling, and then he had a band called the Objects. Then, he was going under 'Mr. Tube' as well, and that's kind of how I came up with Mr. Tube and the Flying Objects. It's kind of a combination of all of them. Apparently, his ancestry had something to do with John Dillinger, but it's weird because he's black, so I don't really get it. But then he went under 'Freddie Danger' for a while, and then he went to 'Freddie' and his whole band was Freddie Feelgood and the Real Good Feelings, and then he changed that and it was the Objects. But then he had a big falling out with the band and they started a band called 'Just the Objects.' It was a separate band without Mr. Tube. It created a big problem."

Confused? Suspend your disbelief a bit longer: John Dillinger's black ancestor also allegedly spent time in prison for some sort of IRS crime. Never one to let hard time bring him down, Freddie Dillinger formed a band with a collection of his fellow inmates. Sometime after he was released, he married.

"[His wife] doesn't speak very good English," Jenkins explained. "She's Chinese. He speaks Chinese, too. They speak in Chinese with each other. He apparently lived over there for a while, too, but then moved back over here. He had a band in China as well, with all these Chinese guys playing along with him. I think she helped him set that up when they were over there."

Dillinger was forced to leave the country due to his love of smoking marijuana — a love that the Chinese government didn't embrace. At some point after he returned to the United States, he got a job as a train conductor for Amtrak. An amazing feat, considering his drug use and prison record.

"He made this whole recording that was based around train songs," Jenkins said. "That's something that I have been considering getting into. It's really kind of very strange music. Super-rhythmic, but very cool, strange African train music."

Perhaps Mr. Tube and the Flying Objects will tease some of these groovy African train songs at their record-release show at the Casbah on Saturday, September 12. Perhaps the mysterious Mr. Dillinger will come onstage sporting a conductor's cap and yell "all aboard" to an enthusiastic crowd, as apparently the one-time train conductor still "conducts," giving the final yay or nay to the Flying Objects' recordings.

"He's really particular about who's playing his songs. If he hears something in the recording he doesn't like, he'll [say], 'You need to get rid of that guy!' We had to delete some tracks and get rid of a couple people," Jenkins said.

BY DAVE GOOD

From one mom's basement to your ears: the four core members of Twin Peaks (nothing to do with the television series of the same name, they once told a reporter) know each other going back to elementary school in Chicago. They are front man Cadien Lake James, guitarist Clay Frankel, Jack Dolan on bass, and Connor Brodner on drums. The band firmed up and began playing dances and parties while the four were still in high school, which is the best time in one's life to start making music, during the reign of hormones and teen angst and all. Their garage-punk found an eager audience. A DIY demo, recorded in a band member's home, was picked up and distributed by an L.A. record label.

How? Why? Because Twin Peaks songs are built from the perfect arrangement of power chords and melodies, as faultless as anything made by the Rolling Stones during the 1960s, or by bands like the Pixies. And all of it delivered with a cheeky swagger, the kind perfected by Iggy Pop. Rock and roll that sounds as if made for the amusement of the band members and their fans, and not with the hopes of landing on a best-of Grey's Anatomy soundtrack compilation.

Still, you'll want to forgive Twin Peaks' noticeable obsession with Exile on Main Street and the classic-rock genre in general. Humans are an imitative species, and every rock superstar, from Jimi Hendrix to Jimmy Page, clearly showed evidence of all those who came before them in the great pop-music pantheon. It's how the torch gets passed in this business. Now and then Twin Peaks does get it wrong, possibly from indolence or inexperience or both, but

Pageant Material Kacey Musgraves By Ryo Miyauchi

Despite her sweet melodies, Kacey Musgraves wrote about one bleak way of life on her 2013 record Same Trailer, Different Park. The record brought her Grammy awards and with them the pressure to be the new hope for country music. Though she sounds more relaxed on her follow-up, Pageant Material, she continues to hold nothing back. While the traditional country sound of Pageant Material doesn't stray too far from her previous album, Musgraves rocks her established style more confidently than ever. She handles serious talk about societal expectations "Mind your own biscuits, and life would be gravy." like a friendly chat with cheesy humor. "Mind your own biscuits, and life would be gravy" goes the chorus of lead single "Biscuits."

Her puns might bring a chuckle, but that's not to say Musgraves is not one to be taken seriously. A lyric in the title track sums up her mission statement: "I'd rather lose for what I am than win for what I ain't." Her voice may carry the words in more casual speak, but her message on the record is clear and defiant. Not only does she refuse to play by the rules, she makes listeners question why the rules are worth following

Veteran hip-hop duo Blackalicious rocked an enthusiastic crowd at the Belly Up Tavern. Emcee Gift of Gab and DJ Chief Xcel share decades of experience, and their ability to take the audience on a journey through their catalog and through the night is evidence of their dues paid. The Comedy of Errors

The Old Globe's outdoor staging is bound and determined to be a crowd-pleaser. Forget the play (cut to 90 minutes), forget anything resembling a nuance (the cast as a whole shouts the lines with zilch emphases, just push hard for onenote entertainment. On these terms, the Tony Scott-directed production succeeds, helped in large measure by an eye-appealing set (New Orleans), costumes (1920s), and a Dixieland band parading here and there. Worth a try.

St. Germain's play of ideas feels heavy handed at times, but it benefits considerably from the talents of Robert Smyth as Freud and Francis Gercke as Lewis. While Freud's Last Session may not add much to the debate, which has been argued strenuously by both sides for centuries, it makes for a thoughtful, lively, and often funny evening. Worth a try. LAMB'S PLAYERS THEATRE, 1142 ORANGE AVE., CORONADO. 619-437-0600. 8PM FRIDAYS, 4PM & 8PM SATURDAYS, 2PM SUNDAYS, THROUGH SEPTEMBER 27.

Marx madness

ith something like 30,000 shorts and features at my back and a 60-candle birthday cake just weeks in the offing, the time seemed right to gift my audience with this ruminative list of personal bests (and worsts) accrued during a lifetime of service on the frontlines of cinema.

Movie most watched: A line from Paul Mazursky's Blume in Love can be found tattooed on my prefrontal cortex.

When asked why he'd seen Gone With the Wind 11 times, Kris Kristofferson replied, "Because I know it will be good." Five trips to Technicolor Tara were enough — hour four's sacchariferous revolving door of death more than makes up for the three that come before — but there's nothing more beneficial to boost one's spirits than another slice of Duck Soup.

The first of my 128 (and counting) voyages to Freedonia left port on a 2 a.m. commercial television airing. I was 10, and not a year has passed, not even six months, where I haven't sought refuge in its relief-giving madness. At 68 anarchic minutes (and with no harp or piano solos to shovel sand on the tracks) it's quite simply the perfect movie comedy. Why this over the 12 other Marx Bros? Credit Leo McCarey, the man Groucho later called, "the only director we ever worked with."

> Movies most watched in a theater: Pink Flamingos was my Rocky Horror Picture Show. It played Fridays and Saturdays at midnight, and every weekend saw me fourth-row center, sometimes both nights. It's that rare breed of film that best exists at night. Only one of my 50-plus viewings, a 25th Anniversary revival, occurred during daylight hours. It comes in at number three behind Mel Brooks's Blazing Saddles and Robert Altman's The Long Goodbye, for which I gladly forked over 75 admissions apiece to see. Not unlike Pink Flamingos, half the fun of Brooks's hilarious postmortem of the American spoof was watching the convulsive reactions of rookies who at the time had never experienced anything quite like either picture.

There was a seven-year period between $M^*A^*S^*H$ (1970) and Three Women (1977) where Altman could do no wrong. Alas, Quintet and A Perfect Couple soon signalled a quick fall from power. Such was the case of the leftover soufflé that refuses to reheat: if Scorsese is God, Altman was rapidly emerging as a false prophet. Still, the textured imagery and restless camerawork of California Split, McCabe and Mrs. Miller (much of its visual impact is forever lost on TV), and particularly The Long Goodbye 128 viewings?! It was Duck Soup!

— with it's depiction of a hard boiled, '40s schooled Rip Van Winkle gumshoe awakening to the neon blur of '70s L.A. — continue to enlighten. If life imitates art, credit Elliott Gould's chain-smoking gumshoe, Philip Marlowe, with kickstarting a nasty nicotine addiction.

Calendar MOVIES

(Those eager to see what vintage Altman looks like on a screen need wait no longer. The 40th anniversary digitally restored print of Nashville opens at the Landmark Hillcrest on September 29.)

Most number of movies consumed in one sitting: My bar mitzvah gift, not counting a lovely dinner reception held in the small room of the otherwise deluxe North Shore Hotel, was a trip to Los Angeles. It was only by divine intervention than an ad in the show section of Uncle Sam's L.A. Times instantly caught my eye. The name of the venue escapes me, but my mother's cry of "You're not spending the night in a movie theater!" rings clear after all these years.

An invite to act as chaperone was greeted with even further disdain. Guess who won the argument? One stipulation: a roll of dimes was issued along with express instructions to call at every intermission. My cousin

Danny dropped me off at 6 p.m. and was there waiting at noon the next day after the last of the 13 Marx Bros. features — projected in chronological order — had unraveled. First time on a screen for all of them, including a rare, beat to hell 16mm dupe of the then impossible to see (Paramount failed to renew the soundtrack rights) Animal Crackers.

Screen door cinema: I was the first civilian to be entrusted with a set of keys to the University of Chicago's Doc Films vault. For three years, I'd arrive on campus at 8 a.m. Sunday morning to spend the day watching anywhere from two to four features, depending on their running times. Student Orientation Week found me locked out of the main auditorium, as well as the two adjacent classroom facilities, thus forcing me to watch a 16mm dye-transfer Technicolor print of John Ford's Donovan's Reef on the back of the office door. It still beats television!

A riches of embarrassment: Opening night at MoPA found a black tie (optional) SRO crowd packing the newly built Joan and Irwin Jacobs Theatre, eager and curious to watch this au courant outsider strut his stuff. No brainer: let's christen the brand-spankin' new million dollar, state-of-the-art screening facility with a program of first films by notable directors. Unable to track down a print of What's A Nice Girl Like You Doing in a Place Like This?, Scorsese's second student film, It's Not Just You, Murray, was called in as a last-minute substitute. Two things you need to know: (1) There was no direct access to, or means of communicating with, the booth, and (2) unbeknownst to me at the time, the projectionist was a tweaker who sweat 80 proof.

After a duly devout setup, the light hits the screen, and what to my wondering eyes does appear but a reel of Clutch Cargo cartoons not on the hand-printed playlist. (They were being stored in the booth with the intention of torturing future audiences, not a gathering of high-end potential donors.) As I beelined

We were lucky to have escaped with our lives: Mandingo lit the fuse; Drum promised the explosion, and a friend and I were determined to take in a Friday night sneak preview of the detonative sequel at Chicago's State Lake Theatre. Even given the excess, a case has been made that few films present as accurate a depiction of slavery as Mandingo. Not so Drum, an exploitative potboiler that spends 100 minutes of its running time depicting white masters (led with exuberance by Warren Oates) dehumanizing their "property," capped by ten minutes of bloody avengement.

The climactic bloodbath whipped the audience into a frenzy. Chants of "Kill the white m'fers" began reverberating across the once-glorious, 2600-seat picture palace. Being one of only two white faces in the theater, I turned to the other and, in my best Curly Howard, whispered, "Don't look now, but we're white m'fers." Concerned dad would later note, "Nothing happened, but it might have."

Oddest in-theater experience: It's been covered at length. Google, "Scott Marks; Reader; Bronco Billy."

Greatest movie ever made: Here's hoping the thrill still awaits.

90 Minutes in Heaven — Hope lives! Hayden Christensen (Jumper) and Kate Bosworth (Homefront) star in a story about the power of prayer. A man gets into a car wreck and dies. But then he comes back with the news that in the interim, he was in heaven. And then he must recover himself, physically and otherwise. Directed by Michael Polish, based on the book by Don Piper. 2015. (IN WIDE RELEASE)

American Ultra — Having smeared a handful of real-world muck on the practice of giving superhero status to damaged people (orphaned Bruce Wayne, narcissist Tony Stark, etc.) with Chronicle, screenwriter Max Landis sets out to give the same treatment to the amnesiac superspy of The Bourne Identity. Here, he becomes Mike Howell, a deadly government assassin put out to pasture in West Virginia via mindwipe abetted by marijuana smoke. But when a villain — not an evil mastermind, just a douchebag corporate striver — targets him for elimination, forces conspire to jump-start his old abilities. The action-movie absurdity is still in place, but so is Landis' muddy-bloody touch: by the end, Eisenberg's face is a purple, swollen wreck, and rightly so. It's not just gritty, it's grotty. What makes the experience worthwhile is its portraval of voung(ish) people — not coming of age. but growing up. Howell and his beloved (a born-for-the-role Kristen Stewart) are sweetly content in their tiny, private world, but discover they must contend with larger forces and personal baggage if they're going to make it. Sometimes, dying stoned and smiling in your bed just isn't the best option. Nima Nourizadeh directs. With Walton Goggins, Connie Britton, and Topher Grace. 2015. — M.L. ★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Amy — The story is painfully straightforward: a nine-year-old English girl named Amy Winehouse is devastated when Dad breaks up with Mum. She takes up with boys, dabbles in drink and drugs, develops an eating disorder, and begins the slide toward disaster. What makes it noteworthy are the girl's incredible talents, both for casting her awful feelings into words and for rendering those words into astonishingly soulful song. Much has been made of her loved ones' failure to intervene. or at least intervene enough, or sooner. Director Asif Kapadia is certainly ready to point the cinematic finger - especially at Dad, who seems too weak to put his daughter's interests before those of the fame machine. But to his credit, Kapadia allows the murk of recollected events to complicate matters, and everyone gets their say. Winehouse's meeting with musical idol Tony Bennett toward the film's end is especially poignant: the old pro tries to counsel and console, but the wisdom of age can't compete with the calamities of youth. 2015. - M.L.  (LAND-MARK HILLCREST)

Before We Go — Chris Evans and Alice Eve meet up in Grand Central and spend a magical night in New York City. Directed by Captain America, er, Chris Evans. 2015. (READING GASLAMP)

Best of Enemies — Necessity is a mother of an inventor. Because they could not afford gavel-to-gavel coverage of the 1968 Republican and Democratic conventions, the bright boys at ABC News opted for a different sort of spectacle: nightly debates between conservative gadfly William F. Buckley, Jr. (National Review) and liberal author Gore Vidal (Myra Breckenridge, et alia) What followed was not so much a clash of well-articulated ideas as a clash of highly articulate persons who regarded ideas as ammunition. (Ditto insults.) Each saw in the other the embodiment of all that was wrong and danger ous in American culture, and was only too happy to make the point in public. If Vidal started the fight, Buckley was quick to accept the challenge and even up the ante with one of the most famous threats ever made on live TV. Buckley comes off quicker and smoother, Vidal, cleaner and meaner, but Robert Gordon and Morgan Neville's context-rich doc is more interested in similarities than differences. Both men are portrayed as showboating intellectuals who understood the use of television, obsessed over grievances, and polished their legacies - to what avail? It seems safe to say they would both be horrified by the devolvement of TV news into Daily Show gag fodder. 2015. — M.L. ★★ (LANDMARK HILLCREST)

Catch Me Daddy — A Pakistani girl hides out in West Yorkshire with her boyfriend, who is not Pakistani. Her brother and some of his associates arrive in town to seek her out, much to her alarm. Directed and co-written by Daniel Wolfe.

2014. (DIGITAL GYM CINEMA)

Court — Chaitanya Tamhane writes and directs this exploration of art, morality, and maybe justice. A Mumbai sanitation worker is found dead of apparent suicide. Was he inspired by a folk singer's lyrics? Should the singer be held responsible? Could the wheels of justice turn any more haltingly or grindingly? Subtitled. 2014 (DIGITAL GYM)

The Diary of a Teenage Girl - There is a kind of achievement in (graphically) depicting a sexual relationship between an adult man (Alexander Skarsgard) and his girlfriend's 15-year-old daughter (Bel Powley) in a way that makes it feel neither predatory nor twisted, just oddly matter-of-fact. Whether it is a thing worth achieving is another question. The matterof-factness likely has something to do with the fact that the adults — both Mom and boyfriend - are little more than children themselves, all but blind to anything beyond their own immediate needs and sorrows. Hey man, it's San Francisco in the '70s: drugs are plentiful, morals are square, and pleasure is pleasure. He likes having sex with her; she likes having sex with him, what's the harm? She also likes having sex in general - huzzah for female agency? - at least until love starts making things sticky. Funny how that happens. To keep the proceedings from pure conventionality amid the fleshy awakenings, we get flashes of animated artistry, sprung from our heroine's imagination and bound for the pages of her underground comic. Directed with assurance by first-time Marielle Heller, who also adapted the screenplay from Phoebe Gloeckner's novel. With Kristen Wiig. 2015. — M.L. ★ (READING GASLAMP)

Dope — Ferris Bueller's Day in the Hood. Charismatic youngster Shameik Moore plays Malcolm, a brilliant high school senior from Inglewood who loves '90s hip hop but sings in a punk band called Oreo because, you know, he's into white shit, too. The (totally unnecessary and redundant) narration from producer Forest Whitaker will tell you he's a geek, but don't be fooled: Malcolm is a social superhero, capable of navigating any social situation (life-threatening or otherwise) with bashful aplomb. And the girls love him! As fantasies go, it's entertaining and funny enough (though often lazily so). But every now and then, the film decides it's time for shit to get real, which mostly serves to heighten the unreality of everything else. (A minor illustration: Malcolm's friend pauses in his effort to flee a lethal restaurant shootout to snag his to-go order of chili cheese fries. Geeky high-school kids sure do love their snacks!) In other places, it's flat and padded at the same time: a lengthy discussion of who's allowed to say the n-word, an extended riff on a dude's substitution of "b"s for soft "c"s. Points for being different; points off for being sloppy. 2015. — M.L. \star (IN WIDE RELEASE)

The End of the Tour — Remember novels? How about tape recorders? Wait, wait - what about famous writers? In 1996, the writer David Lipsky got Rolling Stone to let him join David Foster Wallace on the last leg of the author's book tour for his Big Novel, Infinite Jest. The article never ran, but Lipsky eventually turned his fiveday running conversation with Wallace into a book. Now, the book serves as the basis for this always talky, often engaging, occasionally fascinating, and sometimes shaggy but never quite boring movie starring Jesse Eisenberg as Lipsky and Jason Segel as Wallace. Interesting mostly for its contrasting Portraits of the Artists as Young Men: Lipsky the arty New York City striver heading into flyover country to write a profile of the genius who just wants to be a regular guy. Their back-and-forth is smart, wide-ranging, and sometimes carefully combative; both men are smart enough to see the danger in dropping their respective guards. The big theme is fame: Lipsky's hunger for its elusive embrace and Wallace's fear of its corrosive power. 2015. — M.L. ★★ (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA; LANDMARK HILLCREST)

Famous Nathan — Director Lloyd Handwerker brings us the true-life American Dream story of his grandfather, made famous by his famed Coney Island hot dog emporium, Nathan's Famous. 2014 (DIGITAL GYM)

The Gift — For his directorial debut, Joel Edgerton weaves a subversive edgeof-your-seat suspenser that will knot stomachs tighter than a sack of White Castle hamburgers. Jason Bateman (assuredly cast against type as an arrogant Republican) and Rebecca Hall play a presumedly happily married couple who are hoping for a baby to make it three, with Edgerton - not content to live his life in soft focus background - emerging as a drip from the past, quietly seeking comeuppance. The ads scream Fatal Attraction, but rest assured theirs is not a typically-minted crime of passion. The Gift doesn't stop giving, right up until an indeed disturbing climax - never saw it coming - designed to haunt and resonate for days after. Crackerjack bread crumb-dropper that he is. Edgerton's path is such that a second viewing will be in order to a) marvel at how he did it and b) catch all of the veiled references to other movies. 2015. - S.M. $\star \star \star \star$ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Grandma — Lily Tomlin stars as a sharp-witted-and-tongued poet looking to scrounge $600 or so for her granddaughter's (Julia Garner) abortion. Because she is not one of the youths, and because the appointment is already set for this afternoon, she does not set up a Kickstarter and/or mount a Twitter campaign. Rather, she sets out with the desperate youngster on a drive around Los Angeles, because road movies are good for this kind of character-driven, character-revealing story. Along the way, the pair stop off to confront Mom (Marcia Gay Harden). Paul Weitz (Little Fockers) directs. With Sam Elliott. 2015. (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA; LANDMARK HILLCREST)

Inside Out — Call it kid-friendly psychology: Pixar's latest begins with a lot of bold (and visually appealing) assumptions: first, that our emotions run the show when it comes to our interior landscape; and second, that those emotions are Joy, Sadness, Fear, Disgust, and Anger. (Whither Envy? Hate? Desire? Best not to ask: most of the film's explorations occur inside the head of relatively undamaged tween girl Riley, and the aforementioned five seem to have things well in hand.) Not that Joy is always joyful or Anger always angry; just that they each take the controls at the appropriate time. But what plucky ringleader Joy (an untrammeled Amy Poehler) doesn't get is why you'd ever want Sadness at the helm - especially when it comes to the formation of core memories, the kind that shape our personalities. So when the family moves from Riley's home in Minnesota to the wilds of San Francisco, Joy kicks into overdrive and tries to put a lockdown on Sadness, who seems to be going haywire. When disaster ensues, Joy and Sadness wind up on a journey through Riley's headspace, trying to sort things out before it's too late. It's not unusual for a film about childhood loss to be this funny while it sets about the work of making you cry; it is unusual for it to be this much fun. 2015. — M.L. $\star \star$ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Trevorrow dumps out his Steven Spielberg Family Thriller Kit and makes sure all the pieces are there: squabbling siblings (young and old!), divorce, kids in peril, endearing childlike wonder vs. the threat posed by self-serving grownups, moral musings on science and nature, and oh yes, dinosaurs. Lots and lots of dinosaurs. But he doesn't seem to have read the assembly instructions, because the result simply doesn't fit together or perform as advertised. (Early warning sign: the swelling, triumphant music played over the big reveal of ... a theme park. Later warning sign: the lengthy, faintly sadistic death scene of an extremely minor character. Why?) There is this bit of cleverness: a pointed indictment of the audience's constant, insatiable desire for "bigger teeth" even as that's exactly what's served up. (The final showdown really is what you're paying for here.) Chris Pratt delivers his hambone dialogue with suitable Natural Man sincerity, and Bryce Dallas Howard's haircut is almost as precise and angular as her cheekbones. Question for discussion after the show: is the militaristic, gutty bad guy (a fantastic Vincent D'Onofrio) proved right in the end? 2015. — M.L. \star (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Learning to Drive — Patricia Clarkson stars as a recently ditched book critic bumping up against the fact that she never learned to drive (She had a husband for that.) Ben Kingsley co-stars as a recently arrived Sikh driving instructor/taxi driver who never learned to love. Together, they have so much to learn, and the operation of an automobile provides so many opportunities for metaphor. It's not Clarkson's fault that Kingsley fares so much better here: her character is called upon to emote in so many directions that she barely registers as a person, while he is allowed to operate at the level of suggestion and suppression. And it's not Kingsley's fault that Clarkson will generate all the buzz, thanks in part to some frank sex talk and in part to her graceful embodiment of the target audience. Director Isabel Coixet (Elegy) is generous in her portrayal of immigrant culture (the scenes in the Sikh temple especially) and indulgent in her depiction brain as the decoder. And just like that, we're reading minds. Cue the private sector. Also the thought police. Also maybe the thought army. It looks and feels like a particularly well-made student film, but the subject matter is rather more interesting and weirdly plausible than the recent spate of big-budget AI films. Or maybe it's just that it's the sort of terrifying invention you can still maybe do something about, short of going back in time to prevent Skynet. 2014 M.L.  (DIGITAL GYM)

Meru — Jimmy Chin and Elizabeth Chai Vasarhelyi's solid sports documentary takes its name from India's Mount Meru, which features a fin-shaped granite peak that has thwarted many of the world's best climbers, including the three-man team of famed veteran Conrad Anker, his protégé Jimmy Chin, and relative newcomer Renan Ozturk. But Anker's desire to conquer the rock that his own mentor never could was only inflamed by the defeat, and despite some frightening setbacks, the trio set out on a second attempt. Outdoor writer Jon Krakauer provides knowing commentary to orient the uninitiated, the mountain provides dizzying visuals, and the climbers' personal and professional lives provide the dramatic drive. Some of the "getting there" footage feels like the padding it is, a little more technical data about the scaling of rock and the hanging of ropes would have been nice, and there are any number of times when you wish someone would ask a probing question or two. But the good parts are really good, and what emerges is a clear-eyed portrait of men driven to achieve, and achieve together. 2015. — M.L. ★★ (LA PALOMA; LANDMARK HILLCREST)

San Diego Reader September 10, Mistress America — A winning, slightly screwball investigation of the fraught relationship between writer and subject, or maybe artist and muse, or 2015 maybe both. The second collaboration between Greta Gerwig (star and co-writer) and Noah Baumbach (director and co-writer) — the first was the cheerfully modern Frances Ha — tells the story of two women at opposite ends of the NYC gauntlet. Young Tracy (Lola Kirke) has just started college in the big city; somewhatless-young Brooke (Gerwig) is rapidly approaching her make-or-break moment on the urban stage. They connect because Tracy's mom is planning to marry Brooke's dad, bond because it's a tough town and there's comfort in (sort of) family, and fall out because Tracy decides to write a story inspired by Brooke's struggle. It's brief, witty, talky, mannered, occasionally loopy, and ultimately poignant. It's also uneven and a trifle slapdash, which is either a drawback or part of its charm, depending 2015. — M.L. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Mr. Holmes — The cutline for Bill Condon's latest reads, "The Man Behind the Myth." It might have been better put as, "The Man Behind the Mind." It's true that the film is driven by an ancient Sherlock Holmes' effort to remember the true story of the case that drove him into retirement over three decades earlier, a case that was rendered as a happy fiction by his literary chronicler Dr. Watson. But it's mind that really serves to obscure The World's Greatest Detective, because it's mind that gave him the title, the reputation, and ultimately, the isolation from the common mass of humanity that leads to his retirement. And cleverly, it's his struggle with mind - the fading, dulling, and decay of his ferocious intellect and memory - that provides occasion for the man to emerge. If that sounds abstract and hifalutin, never fear. Most of the action is occupied with, in the present, procuring nutritional aids to memory, keeping bees, making notes, and managing the help; and in the past, investigating a grieving woman's mysterious activities. A gentle, deliberate exploration of a powerful personality that has to rush a bit at the end, but doesn't quite trip over itself in the process. 2015. — M.L. ★★ (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA; READING GASLAMP; READING TOWN SQUARE)

People Places Things - One year after catching his wife doing a fat guy at their twin daughters' birthday party, a comic book artist/teacher (Jemaine Clement) vacillates between reuniting with his now-engaged ex (Stephanie Allynne) and dating the mother of one of his students (Regina Hall, far outclassing the pack). The kids are cute, as are the situations in this harmless, if not blandly uninspired Sundance crowd-pleaser. Acting even more subdued than usual, a deadpan Clement walks through the part in a constant state of passive-aggressive befuddlement, as if having been stung by a hammer each time director James C. Strouse (Grace is Gone) called "Action!" But there isn't much reason for sticking it out besides seeing what fate befalls our hapless hero: tensions fizzle, civility reigns supreme, and not much happens. If it's an artistic approach to comic book artists that first caught your eye, time would be better spent in the company of two erstwhile comic strip illustrators: Fellini's The White Sheik and Tashlin's beaming Artists and Models. 2015. — S.M. ★ (DIGITAL GYM CINEMA)

stranger to rockumentaries (Stop Making Sense), weddings (Rachel Getting Married), and/or American dreamers (Melvin and Howard), lays out his Sunday best - loose framing, vivid background characters and action, colors that pop — but it's hipster scribe Diablo Cody's (Juno) inert plotting that sets it on the path to nowhere. Here's a flash: Cody can't write a third act to save her life, but for once, her characters don't all speak with the same voice, and a delicately handled confrontation between Streep and her replacement (Audra McDonald) is a definite step in the right direction. Mamma mia, this Streep can rock, but unless under strict orders from the studio to sell soundtracks, there was no call for the drama to play second fiddle to the music. 2015. - S.M. $\star \star \star$ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Steve Jobs: The Man in the Machine - When Apple co-founder/ mastermind/personification Steve Jobs died in 2011, documentarian Alex Gibney (The Armstrong Lie) found himself marveling at the massive outpouring of public grief and love. Why, he wondered, were we so upset that a rich, ungenerous businessman had left us? As the resulting documentary makes clear, he wasn't a nice guy, or even a good guy. From the get-go, he was deceptive, controlling, mean, mercenary, and on and on. (Claiming that he was sterile to avoid a paternity charge seems an especially slimy move.) And while lots of people loved his products. lots of people love lots of products (TV, for starters) without falling for their makers. The answer, built up slowly and quietly amid the praise and blame: in a profound way, Jobs put himself into what he made, and made it easy for a lot of people to follow suit. (It's hard to find it insignificant that he gave a computer the same name he gave his daughter.) Technology was his means for engaging the world and fulfilling himself, and he figured out how to make it ours. 2015. — M.L. ★★ (LANDMARK KEN)

Straight Outta Compton - Something about the ratio between money and problems? Five young African-Americans (played by O'Shea Jackson, Jr., Corey Hawkins, Jason Mitchell, Neil Brown, Jr., and Aldis Hodge) find their way out of variously difficult situations in mid-'80s Los Angeles — police brutality, gang violence, financial hardship, social and racial roadblocks, thwarted dreams, etc. by laving down beats and rapping about them. There's some grit at the get-go, and some thrill at witnessing the development of a musical form. But the drama slows down once the money starts rolling in and the rappers' chief antagonists become each other, and maybe their manager. ("Slows down" may be generous; movies have a tendency to stagnate when everybody stays essentially the same, no matter how lively the events of the day.) By the time the 1992 LA riots explode onto the streets, the members of Niggaz Wit Attitudes are reduced to watching it on TV and driving through the chaos, looking concerned. And by the end, the film drags into straight recent-history fanservice: hey, there's Snoop Dogg; hey, there's Tupac; hey, there's Dr. Dre selling Beats to Apple. Director F. Gary Gray (The Italian Job) makes a helluva music video - the concert scenes here are among the most engaging - but doesn't seem to have much taste for drilling into his characters. Sure, they have warts, but what of it? With Paul Giamatti. 2015. — M.L. ★ (IN WIDE RELEASE) was it really too much to hope that they would just call it The Transporter Recast? Maybe Reskinned? Phooey. Anyway, pouty-lipped, chiseled-face Ed Skrein takes over for Jason Statham (age 48) in the have-car, will-deliver action series. And Camille Delamarre (Brick Mansions) takes over the director's chair from Olivier Megaton (Transporter 3), 2015. (IN WIDE RELEASE)

The Transporter Refueled — Aw,

The Visit — M. Night Shyamalan (After Earth) gets back to his small-scale spook

The Young and Prodigious T.S.

Spivet — An enterprising ragamuffin (newcomer Kyle Catlett) from Montana (by way of the director's The City of Lost Children) takes a road trip. Destination: the lost District of Columbia for a Smithsonian gala in his honor. A halcyon maze, Jean-Pierre Jeunet's shrewdly sweet-tempered surreal fantasyland is an eyegasmic saturnalia of expressive color, orchestrated adventure, doubling-images and, in select markets (not ours!), eveball rolfing 3D. Clearly based on a bestseller. the breeze of turning pages can't compete with a director madly fanning audiences with as many novel approaches to visual storytelling (most of which triumph) as possible. (A generic talk show spoof lands with a thud.) As fine an example as any of a film that uses CGI to advance its narrative, not define it, one that inspires imagination rather than allowing technology to spell it out for you. By all means, bring the kids! With strong support from the ever-inviting Helena Bonham Carter and a nasty Judy Davis as dueling mother figures. 2013. — S.M. ★★★★ (READ-ING GASLAMP) ashmoore55: This is a very important tattoo to me, as it is a memorial tattoo in honor of my late grandfather, Doug. The deer skull is because he was an avid hunter, and the lupine was his favorite flower. The lupine is colored purple because it was one of the few colors he could see, since he was color blind. I got the tattoo in Potsdam, NY at Beyond Tattoos, and it was done by Scott Dafoe. I'm originally from northern NY but I currently live in Oceanside, CA. I'm 23 years old and I'm a bakery clerk at Vons.

Tattoo You

is Andria, I'm 31 and I have lived in SD about a year and a half, working in property management. I got this tattoo this May in honor of my dad who passed away on Christmas Eve 2009. My sister and I went together for tattoos for him ... He was an avid outdoorsman and loved his Harley. After he passed we unfortunately had to sell his bike. I took a strap from it that had this wheel with wings, and got the tattoo of that piece. RIP dad, 1/15/59-12/24/09. I got the tattoo at EC 3 tattoo by Eric at Midway & Rosecrans. :-) Thanks Eric!

Send us a photo of your tattoo and win $25!

Describe why you got the tat, what it means to you, plus where you got it, ers had been slammed by economic hard times, either losing their jobs or agreeing to lower wages and fewer hours. As a consequence, they were no longer able to afford their mortgage payments. Many of them took their families and moved elsewhere, leaving an estimated 2 million abandoned homes across Mexico.

BOB MCPHAIL

TEMECULA Don't touch the grapefruit They pay the mortgage

When Matt Fleming purchased 120 acres in Temecula's wine country five years ago, the land was a dying grapefruit orchard that he envisioned would someday become a community of million-dollar homes. But the real estate market had already dropped from its peak and drowned new-home builders in foreclosures and short sales.

Some may say Fleming is a patient man; others may see him as an entrepreneur with good business sense. Either way, he has harvested the fruit of his investment in the form of a working organic orchard with more than three-dozen homeowners living on it. They live in the midst of "the Groves" with a contract that states the trees on their land will offset their homeowners' association fees.

"When you buy into this property you are also buying into living in a working organic grove," Fleming said.

Each of the 37 home sites that make up the Groves are situated on two-acre parcels within a gated community, with views of the San Jacinto Mountains and minutes away from Temecula's wineries

"Part of my business plan was to just sit back and wait," Fleming said. He paved the dirt roads Pauba and Anza into a two-mile stretch of pavement, which took several years. Then came the sprawling houses ranging from 5000 square feet to almost 5300 square feet.

Some of the lots have more grapefruit trees than others, but the lots' large size allows space for homeowners to do what they want with the remainder of their land. The trees, however, cannot be touched.

"I went through the process of getting the trees organic," Fleming said. "Now we're in our third year of being able to sell the fruit organically, and [they] are creating a profit."

The fruit from the trees is sold to local Trader Joe's and Vons stores, he said. The profit is then deposited in the homeowners' association account and put into a "slush fund" that offsets the fees.

SAN YSIDRO Hey, not everyone is good with numbers

Seat opens up on school board

It's open season for a seat on the San Ysidro School District board for the post recently vacated by Jose Barajas, a trustee who decided to resign instead of face a recall election.

The governing board of the district accepted Barajas's resignation at its August 27 meeting and chose to appoint a new member rather than hold a special election. Barajas wrote that he was stepping down for "personal reasons."

As reported by La Prensa San Diego, Barajas had been presented August 12 with a petition stating that the people intended to recall him because he had "failed" to manage district finances. Nearly 2000 signatures had been collected.

On August 27, the school board decided to call for applications to fill the vacancy, setting a filing deadline of September 18.

Elected in November 2012, Barajas had cast the deciding vote the following March to give then-superintendent Manuel Paul a severance check for $211,347. Paul would later be sentenced to 60 days in federal custody after pleading guilty to accepting cash from contractors. All the while, Barajas had been calling for cuts to teachers' pay.

No parking in the red curb zone

In response to the Coronado City Council's approval of a $475,000 "wayfinding" program, councilman Richard Bailey has launched his own counter-initiative: a signreduction program.

On June 16, the city council approved the wayfinding program in a 4-to-1 vote with Bailey in the minority.

The proposal, which originated in 2003, is designed to help tourists navigate around town and would include approximately 50 new signs and an informational kiosk.

"The feedback we received from that vote was overwhelmingly negative," said Bailey. "That was an indicator to me that we needed to not just stop adding new signs, but to actually reduce the number of signs around town."

Bailey dubbed one of the most "superfluous" signs as a 12-foot red curb with a sign begin" and is marked 12 feet later with a sign that reads "no parking - end."

news of the WeiRD

- Silicon Valley code-writers and engineers work long hours — with apparently little time for "food" as we know it. Eating is "time wasted," in the words of celebrity inventor Elon Musk, and normal meals a "marketing facade," said another valley bigwig. The New York Times reported in May that techies are eagerly scarfing down generic (but nutrient-laden) liquids like Schmilk and People Chow, largely for ease of preparation, to speed their return to work. The Times food editor described one product as "oat flour" washed down with "the worst glass of milk ever." "Pancake batter," according to a Times reporter. (That supermarket staple Ensure? According to the food editor, it's "fine wine" compared to Schmilk.)

Distracted Americans

- Air travelers last year left $675,000 in spare change in airport screening bins, reported the Transportation Security Administration in April. Of the cars reported stolen in 2014, 44,828 were with keys left inside them, according to an April National Insurance Crime Bureau release. American credit card holders fail to claim "about $4 billion" in earned "rewards" each year, according to CardHub.com's 2015 Credit Card Rewards Report.

Our Least Hardy Generation

- Nursing student Jennifer Burbella filed a lawsuit against Misericordia University (near Scranton, Pennsylvania) for not helping her enough to pass a required course that she failed twice. The professional caregiver-to-be complained of stress so severe that she needed a distraction-free room and extra time for the exam but claims she deserved even more special treatment

- Four Columbia University students complained in May that courses in Greek mythology and Roman poetry need "trigger" warnings advance notice to super-sensitive students that history may include narratives of "disturbing" events

- In March, following the departure of Zayn Malik from the British band One Direction, an executive with the Peninsula employment law firm in Manchester told London's Daily Telegraph that he had received "hundreds" of calls from employers seeking advice about workers who were requesting "compassionate" leave because Malik's resignation had left them distraught. (Also, a spokeswoman for the charity Young Minds told the Telegraph she was concerned about Malik fans self-harming.)

Least Competent Criminals

- Alvaro Ortega, 34, was arrested for taking a uniformed police officer's cell phone in the East Coast Catering deli in Bayonne, New Jersey, on May 18. The sleuthing was easy, in that Ortega was the only other person in the deli at the time and admitted the theft

- Seattle's KIRO-TV reported in May that a Seattle couple holding a Powerball ticket worth $1 million still has it, despite being theft victims. Someone smashed open a window in their car on May 14 and stole, among other items, a pair of sunglasses that was resting atop the lottery ticket, but left it undisturbed.

The Continuing Crisis

- Suspended Catholic monsignor Kevin Wallin, 63, was sentenced in May to more than five years in prison for running a meth distribution ring from Bridgeport, Connecticut, where he also operated a sex shop to launder the drug profits. (Though he faced a ten-year sentence, he had a history of charity work and submitted more than 80 letters of support from highranking clergy.)

People Different From Us

- Walter Merrick, 66, was charged with aggravated assault in the New Orleans suburb of Harvey, Louisiana, in March after an altercation with neighbor Clarence Sturdivant, 64, over the comparative merits of Busch and Budweiser beers. Bud-man Sturdivant fired the only shot, but a sheriff's deputy said Merrick was the aggressor - since he had offered Sturdivant only a Busch.

The Pervo-American Community

- Rusty Sills, 56, previously an "underwear bandit" in West Des Moines, Iowa, was arrested in Pinellas Park, Florida, in March and charged with stealing women's shoes - sometimes "replacing" them with shoes he no longer fancied. (Police found about 100 pairs in his van.)

- James Dowdy, 43, on parole for an earlier sock theft, was arrested once again in Belleville, Illinois, after police received reports of socks missing in burglaries. Authorities said Dowdy had been involved in "other types of sock-related incidents [and] using socks in an inappropriate and obscene manner," but details were not reported. (Found in a search of Dowdy's home were notebooks of children's names, ages, and types of socks worn.)

Pointless

- Holly Solomon, 31, pleaded guilty in April to aggravated assault with her Jeep - against her then-husband — and has been sentenced to three and a half years in prison. The crime occurred in a suburb of Phoenix in November 2012, days after President Obama's re-election, as Solomon ran down her spouse because she was angry that he had neglected to vote for Mitt Romney as expected. However, his no-show did not affect the outcome, as Romney easily won the state's 11 electoral votes without him.

Is This a Great Country or What?

- Faced with a government fee accepted by most real estate investors who view it as a routine cost of doing business, wealthy Arizona investor Wayne Howard balked. Instead of the ordinary filing-fee rate of $50 for registering a property deed, he demanded that all 2922 of his deeds be recorded for $500, and when the Pinal County treasurer turned him down, he told the official he would simply use his pull in the legislature to change the law and get his 99.6 percent discount that way. (He almost succeeded. The bill passed the state Senate and was favored in the House, but after the Arizona Republic newspaper exposed Howard's imperial move, it failed, 30-28.)
