Papa Doug Manchester's downsizing effort includes wife, La Jolla estate

Turn out the lights. The latest matrimonial party is over for ex-Union-Tribune owner and would-be ambassador to the Bahamas Douglas Manchester. The million-dollar-plus Trump donor, called out by the Washington Post last year for having questionable attitudes towards women, has gotten divorced from second wife and Russian immigrant Geniya Derzhavina, per court records. The wealthy Republican real estate developer, now 77, filed for dissolution of marriage on October 21 of last year, with final judgment entered two months later, December 27, by Superior Court judge Truc Do, according to an online list of filings in the case.

As first reported by Don Bauder in August 2013, former Siberian Derzhavina was divorced in 2009 from a Vista denizen known as Brantley Vigil, who subsequently went bankrupt, listing $38,859.61 in assets and $787.000.53 in liabilities. She ended up with the couple's 2009 Honda Civic, valued at $25.397. Derzhavina reportedly met up with Manchester — more than 30 years her senior — at the Del Mar track in 2012. Mature men "know how to treat women," Bauder quoted her as saying in a profile on a website for seekers of Russian brides called russianwomentruth.com.

Manchester finally managed to untie the knot with first wife Betsy, whom he married in January 1965. in 2013. During the couple's contentious four-year-long divorce proceedings, Betsy unrolled a bevy of anecdotes about her husband's over-the-top lifestyle. "As an example of the standard of living that DOUG and I enjoyed during our long marriage, in 2007, we threw a birthday party for DOUG at the Manchester Grand Hyatt," wrote Betsy. "There were over 220 guests, and the party  $\hat{\mathbf{x}_{i}}$  alone cost more than \$200,000. We then flew to Costa Rica on a private Gulfstream IV iet and went on a week-long cruise in Costa Rica aboard a chartered 165-foot private yacht. After the cruise, we returned home on the Gulfstream IV jet. The Costa Rica trip cost in excess of \$350,000."

ing one neighbor to complain on Twitter, "Did Papa Doug Manchester have to disturb all of Carmel Valley with his marriage fireworks last night? My dog barking like crazy." Then followed a merry-go-round of high-society party life and eight-figure residential real estate deals, including the purchase in 2015 of the historic Fairholme estate in Newport, Rhode Island for $15 million, which he flipped for a reported $16.1 million in February of 2016 Also in 2015, Manchester picked up Foxhill, the sprawling La Jolla estate of the late Union-Tribune publisher Helen Copley, from the estate of her son David for about $27 million. He subsequently sunk additional millions into the property for extra bedrooms and other accoutrements to accommodate his wife and the couple's three young children.

Now, with his latest try at homespun marital bliss history, per the court filings, Manchester, father of a total of eight children and grandfather of thirteen, has placed the real estate on the market in two parcels, asking $37 million for both. "Mr. Manchester's spokeswoman said he is selling to 'downsize,'" reports the Wall Street Journal, which also offers a description of what it calls "an elaborate French chateau-style estate" equipped with its own four-hole golf course. "The estate is about 27,000 square feet and has historic flair, with four-poster beds, gilded detailing, original mouldings, wood paneling, chandeliers and stained-glass windows." according to the account. "A billiards room is outfitted with plaid carpeting; lampshades have fringe details topped with gold fox ornaments. One of the bedrooms has blue coffered ceilings, blue patterned carpeting, and gold-and-blue curtains with ornate tassels."

Councilman Chris Ward pushing a land swap deal with the State

By Thom Senzee

an Diego City Councilman Chris Ward contravened the wishes of some of his most vocal constituents by seeking to exchange a portion of land at the city-owned Mission Valley stadium site for 2.5 acres of state-owned land where a Department of

Neal Obermeyer

Motor Vehicles branch has been located in Hillcrest for nearly six decades.

"Council member Ward is proposing a land swap with the DMV to move the DMV to the stadium area, but it is in very initial stage," reads a March 9, 2018 note presumably composed by a San Diego Association of Governments official, that was obtained from the association by a community activist through a Freedom of Information Act request.

Ward was forthright when asked about his previously unreported bid to move the Hillcrest location of California's driver licensing and vehicle registration agency to a site outside of the uptown neighborhood. "The Hillcrest DMV site is still state property," the councilman says. "However, my office will continue to work with our state representatives to determine the possibility of this path forward."

Officials at the Department of Motor Vehicles in Sacramento are getting used to rejection coming from Hillcrest. They were hit with unified resistance from normally antagonistic community groups when DMV architects presented a "decidedly suburban" design for the rebuild of the department's Hillcrest branch. A year ago, Hillcrest Business Association executive director Benjamin Nicholls said, perhaps prophetically, the design "might be appropriate for Mission Valley, but not at all for the [Hillcrest] urban village."

It's not clear which state officials Ward is working with on his property exchange vision. But he is currently running to replace 78th District State Assemblyman Todd Gloria, whose former San Diego City Council seat Ward now occupies. Should he be elected, he like would have more success pushing his DMV project from Sacramento. Meanwhile, as the players in San Diego's game of political musical chairs rotate, Gloria may well be sitting behind the mayor's desk by that time.

Hillcrest Business Association's perennial opponent

Chris Ward has been working with state officials to move the DMV out of Hillcrest.

in all things land use, Mat Wahlstrom, founder of Rescue Hillcrest and a former Uptown Planners board member, was one of those normally adversarial parties who agreed with Nicholls about the DMV's first-draft design. Wahlstrom went even further by insisting a better draft could, and perhaps should, include affordable housing. "State law, former Senator Christine Kehoe's SB 754, which passed in 2007, Ward telling his constituents... that he is proposing this deal?"

specifically calls for rebuilding the Normal Street DMV as a mixed-use project with housing units," Wahlstrom said. "We don't want to lose parking either. Remember, that was one of the original complaints with the old DMV; they didn't have enough parking for their current needs. Architects can be very creative if you give them a chance to design with a creative, useful purpose."

But Wahlstrom doubts the delay in the release of a second-draft DMV design has anything to do with architects wrestling with how to include affordable housing. He's sure it has everything to do with real estate negotiations and Chris Ward.

Benjamin Nicholls, of the Hillcrest Business Association, says the city ought to "actually listen to neighborhood folks.

Meanwhile, some Hillcrest residents aren't sure how they feel about where a local San Diego Department of Motor Vehicles branch should be located.

"Well, in some ways - at least when you absolutely just can't get out of going, when you have to go to the DMV -- it's nice to have it right here in the 'hood," Hillcrest resident Laura Harris-Hernandez says. "But, honestly, I hardly ever go there, and it seems like it's just a lot of people lined up on the sidewalk who leave their gum and their cigarette butts on the sidewalk," she continues. "I think I'd like to see it moved to Mission Valley."

Harris-Hernandez, 59, says the situation reminds her of a bit of family history she refers to as "the Horton Plaza experience." She says her wife's family was displaced decades ago by the acquisition of property downtown when she was a child. "I think they got money, but they had to move, and it wasn't what they wanted. They were happy where they were."

For Wahlstrom, what complicates matters today is what he sees as "backdoor dealing." "Why isn't Chris Ward telling his constituents in the light of day that he's proposing this idea behind closed doors with SANDAG and the DMV?" he asks. "Why is he instead working furtively on a deal to wrest control of stateowned land to — I have no doubt - sell to a developer for an amazing price, who'll then make a high profit by building more of just what we don't need: unaffordable housing for wealthy people who don't already live in Hillcrest?"

Wahlstrom, who filed the Freedom of Information Act request which revealed Ward's dealings, says anyone who claims that the push continued on page 49

UNDER THE RADAR

Family fat cats Political bloodlines run deep in San Diego, as evidenced by an emailed fundraising pitch by congressman Juan Vargas on behalf of supervisorial hopeful Terra Lawson-Remer. "I am excited to invite you to my home for an event in support of Terra Lawson-Remer, running to flip the County Board of Supervisors!" says the House Democrat. The per-person price of admission runs from $800 to be a co-host down to $125 for "activist" status.

Vargas and Lawson-Remer's father Larry Remer have been close friends and political associates for decades, dating from Vargas's time on the San Diego city council, through his years in the state Assembly and Senate, and into the House. After working for Jane Fonda and the Chicago 7's Tom Hayden, Remer's Primacy Group, his PG Printing & Graphics, and family relations have made hundreds of thousands of dollars if not millions for furnishing campaign advice and services to Vargas. Daughter Alexa Lawson-Remer, later tapped by the National LGBT Bar Association as one of the Best LGBT Lawyers Under 40 in 2018 for her work at Sullivan & Cromwell in Los Angeles, got $3840 as a Vargas for Assembly campaign worker in 2004.

The Vargas political machine, financed largely by the state's insurance lobby and other corporate special interests, sometimes drew Remer into its web of controversy. In 2010, a political committee funded by Chevron Corporation, Sempra Energy, ExxonMobil, and others spent almost $1.5 million on a campaign of hit pieces and TV spots against then-Assemblywoman Mary Salas. The series of slashing attacks on the Chula Vista liberal by the ostensibly independent PACs never mentioned Vargas. Two years later, the group's failure to disclose to voters its motives drew a $6000 fine from the state's Fair Political Practices Commission. Though formed to "support the election of Juan Vargas for State Senate District 40 in the June 8, 2010, Primary Election," commissioners concluded, the committee "failed to add the full name and office of the candidate it supported as its primary activity."

Ethics chief's retirement San Diego's ethics commission is discussing plans to recruit a new executive director to replace Stacey Fulhorst, says the agenda for the board's January 9 meeting. Whoever gets picked for the job is likely to play a pivotal role in policing what critics say are some of the loosest local political ethics in California and opening the commission's notoriously nontransparent policies and procedures.

Last year under Fulhorst, the commission's annual report noted that administrative fines collected from ethical miscreants plunged from $45,600 to just $22,200. Other questions arose when the commission slapped mayor Kevin Faulconer with a $4000 fine for late disclosure of charity gifts from Campland by the Bay but withheld announcement of the penalty until two weeks after the developer got city council approval of a lucrative city lease.

Fulhorst sharply curtailed

the commission's practice of issuing written advice letters posted online for public review, standard procedure at the state's Fair Political Practices Committee. On the other hand, public records requests in 2013 revealed that Fulhorst provided extensive non-public compliance guidance in a series of emails to and from Republican treasurer and political operative April Boling regarding a recall effort against then-mayor Bob Filner. According to the website Transparent-California.org, last year, Fulhorst pulled in total pay and benefits of $221,361.

"The North County battle over artificial turf" Neighborhood News January 14

I was so glad to see this excellent article about the dangers of synthetic turf and why it should be avoided. I was at the city council meeting in Oceanside when Councilman Chris Rodriguez said that having "professional fields" would allow the city to charge leagues to play there. The parks and rec commission is prioritizing lighting for the city's playing fields, to expand the hours that they can be used, because many sports leagues - soccer, baseball, rugby — are having to go elsewhere. Now that we have a non-toxic spray policy in Oceanside, it doesn't make sense to remove the healthy grass fields and subject children to three times more abrasion injuries and extreme heat as well as toxic chemicals.

"San Diego's auditor finds stolen water, mother supervising son, city cars parked in red zone" News under the Radar January 15

It is said that money talks, and in the two examples mentioned, Jacobs' money was talking out of two different mouthpieces, Voice and KPBS, at the same time. If anyone thinks that ol' Irwin and his sons are just local rich guys, examples of hard work and smarts paying off, and merely local philanthropists, think again. They are buying favorable news coverage in a way that newspaper advertisers in the old days could only dream of. It isn't obvious yet what the Jacobs clan is up to, but they are busy buying friends and the best of publicity. There is something sinister going on with them, probably along the lines of remaking the city into some example of what they think a 21st century city should be. If they want to do that, then by all means, why don't they unveil the plan? Or do they know that the folks who live here won't like it at all? Stay tuned. -Visduh

Speedway's fast rise The race for gas station dominance roars into town

A popular Midwest brand of convenience stores and gas stations is quickly making inroads in the competitive San Diego County market. Late last month, Speedway, which is headquartered in Ohio, acquired six stations in the area: Carlsbad, Lakeside, La Mesa, Mira Mesa, Otay Mesa, and San Ysidro. All are currently branded as Shells, except for the Lakeside location, branded USA. A seventh location, the ARCO off I-5 in Cardiff by the Sea, has started making the conversion, but the location has yet to be posted on the company's website. (Customers at this new Speedway location, for the time being, now have to use two debit card terminals, one for gas, and one for convenience store items. An employee explained that ARCO still has the gas contract at the Cardiff location until May 2020, so the conversion of the station new pump facades and signage - may take a while, unless the contract can be bought out by Speedway.)

After starting an aggressive acquisition campaign in 2012 with the purchase of smaller chains in the east, Speedway has now become the second-largest gas retailer in the U.S., with 4000 stations in 32 states. But the conversion of the gas stations may just be a corporate "shell" game, perhaps meant to increase Speedway brand recognition in Southern California. Speedway is a subsidiary of Marathon Petroleum Oil, which owns

ARCO- and USA-branded stations. Marathon also owns one of the main gas refineries

zona. A comparison The store had called police dispatch to report a homeless male in their store attempting to steal a hoodie sweatshirt and refusing to leave.

At about 5 am on January 6, San Diego Police officers responded to a shoplifting incident at Rite Aid in Ocean Beach at Niagara and Sunset Cliffs Blvd. When officers arrived, the suspect was waiting for them, wearing a stolen hoodie and refusing to leave. He told employees he was waiting for SDPD "because he was cold and wanted a warm place to stay." According to the San Diego Police Department's David Surwilo, "The store had called police dispatch to report a homeless male in their store attempting to steal a hoodie sweatshirt and refusing to leave. Although he was belligerent, he was not being physically violent. Once in the store, the officers detained the male, who was also without shoes or socks."

Sorry, cheap gas fans — ARCO's gotta go.

Responding officers Dominic Collins and Christian Nimmons spoke to the manager, who did not want to press charges but did want the subject to be instructed by the officers not to return. "They simply wanted the homeless male out of the business, and to know he was no longer welcome at the store," Surwilo continued. Officer Collins then asked the store manager how much the hoodie cost and offered to pay for the item. The store manager told the officers not to worry about the hoodie. The officers thanked the manager for the kind gesture, and issued a "Do Not Return/Trespass Order" to the homeless male.

However, said Surwilo, "the officers noticed the male was still cold, shivering, and wet, so they decided they couldn't just let him go; he still had no socks or shoes. Officer Collins went back into the Rite Aid and purchased a pair of socks and shoes for the male. Once the items were on his feet, they reminded him of the trespass order, and the male departed."

OCEANSIDE Hot meals on hot wheels Stolen car. stolen card make for breakfast bash

On June 9 of last year, a man who was part of a group staying at a rented vacation home on the 800 block of South Pacific in Oceanside woke up to find that his 2016 red Nissan Rogue was missing, along with around $4600 worth of computers, phones, and key fobs -and his credit card. The man notified police, and said that there were transactions on the card he had not made, including a transaction at the San Diego County jail and $49 at the Denny's on Oceanside's Harbor Drive.

Oceanside police went to the nearby

San Luis Rey riverbed and woke a homeless woman who they knew had a record of theft convictions. She told the officers that she had been woken up the morning of June 9 by two men, one of whom was Miguel Rodriguez. She said they told her they had two cars they wanted to sell, a white BMW and a burgundy Nissan. They also had computers, a cell phone, tablets, and a credit card. The men told her they had been informed by a female friend that she had found a house in the 800 block of South Pacific Street with an open door, an easy opportunity for burglary. According to the homeless woman, Rodriguez said he was aware there were people staying in the luxury beachside rental, because he could hear noises while he was inside.

Rodriguez offered to go pick up food from the nearby Denny's, and so the woman placed an order for herself and her friends. Then she used the card to put money on the books of a mutual friend named Roderick, who was staying at the George Bailey Detention Facility. She said that after they were finished with the Nissan, the key fob was thrown into the bushes.

Property from the burglary was found in the second man's home, located a mile from the burgled home, according to police. and Rainbow issue. Like 100,000 acre-feet or more in lost sales for the city of San Diego [due to] Pure Water, compared to 24,000 for Fallbrook and Rainbow combined." (An acre-foot is equal to 325,851 U.S. gallons). The local projects could reduce Water Authority deliveries over 10 to 15 years by 20-25 percent, with a commensurate increase in cost to the other member agencies, such as Val-

VALLEY CENTER Adios, avocado? Increases in water price and foreign competition have farmers fretting

In December, the boards of the Fallbrook Public Utility District and the Rainbow Municipal Water District voted to begin detachment from the San Diego County Water Authority in order to join Riverside's Eastern Municipal Water District. It's the first time in the Water Authority's 75-year history that any of its member agencies have tried to secede, and the move raised questions in Valley Center, where farms are still the main customers, even as avocado turf keeps shrinking. Chief among them: will those left behind pay more as others tap new supplies? ley Center, he says. While the Fallbrook and Rainbow detachment could have an incremental impact, the local projects "could have a devastating impact if the Water Authority's rate structure is not adjusted."

Why not join the exit party? That's what agricultural customers will be asking when they learn that Fallbrook and Rainbow expect to save millions of dollars annually by jumping ship, Arant told the water board in October. Answer: it's not an option. All of their seven connections are on aqueducts owned by the Water Authority, while most or many of Rainbow and Fallbrook's connections are on aqueducts owned by the Metropolitan Water District. Detachment would still leave them paying for certain services from the Water

1.5 to 2 percent loss of revenue could, Arant says, "reasonably translate into a 1.5 to 2 percent rate increase to Valley Center."

"Yes, we are concerned," says Valley Center Municipal Water District general manager Gary Arant. San Diego Water Authority has estimated a revenue loss of $13,367,100, and that 1.5 to 2 percent loss of revenue could, Arant says, "reasonably translate into a 1.5 to 2 percent rate increase to Valley Center." (The amount could be lower, depending on Rainbow and Fallbrook's debt obligations once they leave.)

But even bigger trouble is brewing: San Diego Water Authority member agencies, such as those in the city of San Diego and East County, are developing new supplies like Pure Water (recycled water). That means they'll be buying less water from the Water Authority, leading to higher rates. "This will raise rates as well," says Arant, "but three or four orders of magnitude higher than the Fallbrook Authority "or building pipelines paralleling the aqueducts northward to tie in on the sections owned by Metropolitan Water District."

One consolation for farmers is a recent change made to the Special Agricultural Water Rate, a temporary drought program the Water Authority has in place to provide growers cheaper rates in exchange for less reliable supplies. It was set to expire at the end of this year, but now it will become permanent. Through 2020, participants will pay $1,231 per acre-foot for treated water, while municipal and industrial users pay $1,686 per acre-foot. "Even though they are accepting a lower level of reliability during droughts and disasters, the pricing is critical to agriculture's continued existence in the San Diego region," Arant says.

It was the formation of Valley Center's

Water District in 1954 that created the area's "unique cross-blending of agricultural and residential development," notes a report by San Diego Local Area Formation Commission, the agency that will oversee the proposed detachment. But the mix of farms and housing is changing substantially, according to the commission, which is now reviewing Valley Center's municipal services - a state requirement for sphere of influence updates — for the first time since 2003. Being near Escondido and right next to Interstate 15 (one of the busiest commute corridors) has also drawn developers. The county has already approved Meadowood (824 units), Orchard Run (300 units), and Park Circle (332 units), which will break ground this year. Lilac Hills Ranch, now under review by the county, would add 1,746 units. The commission attributes this ongoing transition to more residential uses to higher water rates for farmers and demand for housing.

Arant partly disagrees. Even with the agricultural land that has turned residential, farming dropped long before the housing pressures started, he says. Most of Valley Center's farming was for avocados. "Avocado land is very steep and rocky, and was recently downzoned by the county to one dwelling per 8, 10, 20 or 40 acres, making it unsuitable, physically or economically, for residential development. One reason agriculture has diminished so rapidly and deeply is foreign competition from Mexico and Central and South America, he says. That, "and the cost of water, which has more than doubled in the last 10 years."

THE BORDER Garden gone Could this be the ending of a beautiful Friendship? On January 12 at about 10 am, a handful of San Diegans travelled across the border to meet with Tijuana locals behind the Plaza Monumental de Playas de Tijuana — The Bullring by the Sea. In photos and videos posted online, about 30-40 people can be seen gathering to console one another in the wake of the recent bulldozing of the binational garden by U.S. Customs and Border Protection. Posters with art and messages were hung on the section of the border fence that's wrapped with papel picado (punched paper), where visitors on the Mexico side can peer through and view the U.S. side of the park, which is referred to as Friendship Park. Daniel Watman, one of the organizers of the ¡Protege nuestro jardín! (Save Our Garden!) gathering, had posted on Facebook: "This morning (Jan. 8) Border Patrol bulldozed the entire U.S. side of the binational garden. I got to [the Mexico] side an hour after they did it. No warning, not even a sign [and] in fact we were supposedly in talks with them as to how access rules were going to be. minutes. I can barely hold back from shouting expletives here. Mexico's side still intact, which means there is always hope."

At about 1 pm on January 12, a few at the gathering behind the bullring dug holes to plant native "trees of hope;" others painted tires that were partially buried to fence off the continued on page 16

Slow and Steady Wins the Race

Well, saves the species, anyway

When the San Diego Zoo sent Diego the tortoise to the Galapagos Islands in 1977, there were only two males of his species left there. But over the next 40 years, the rapacious reptile fathered over 800 offspring, bringing his ilk back from the brink of extinction. And he might still be there today, were it not for the mainstream media's prurient interest in all things sexrelated. A CNN report on Diego went viral, and it wasn't long before the Galapagos Wildlife Authority was fielding "research requests" from interested parties from all over the world. "It became pretty clear that Diego had a target on his shell," says Turtle Sexpert Mona Lott. "Shark fin, rhino horn, elephant tusk - suddenly, nothing compared to the stamina and performance promised by powdered tortoise glands. We had to bring him back to San Diego, where he can be kept in a secure location and allowed to get his swerve on in safety."

Green Does Baseball GirlsDoPorn verdict inspires former Padres manager to sue team

Earlier this month, San Diego Superior Court Judge Kevin Enright awarded $12.75 million to 22 women who claimed that the operators of the website GirlsDoPorn.com tricked them into, well, doing porn. Though the women signed contracts saying that the material they helped create could be shown anywhere, they argued that they were lured to a San Diego hotel room and then plied with drugs and alcohol so that their judgment was too impaired to properly assess those contracts. Further, they were lied to by the website's owners - assured that the videos would never make it to the Internet, and would be sold only on DVDs in foreign countries.

When fired Padres manager Andy Green read about the lawsuit and resultant award, he couldn't help but feel inspired. "I too was lured to San Diego and plied with alcohol," he explains. "I too was lied to by the owners, assured that I would be allowed to build a sustainable, successful program over time, and not have my top performers traded away like so much horseflesh. Yes, maybe I should have paid closer attention to my contract. But you know how it is — I needed the money. Anyway, if those girls can do it, so can L'

Green: "The judge in the GirlsDoPorn case said that the management's scheme had caused the girls significant and reputational harm. That they had become pariahs in their communities, and that some of them had lost their jobs and even become suicidal. Let me assure you that whatever they did on camera, no matter how degrading, it was nowhere near as publicly humiliating and personally harrowing as coaching the Padres on national television night after night for three years.'

Pornhub protests purity probe prohibition Tube site vows to fight bill banning virginity tests

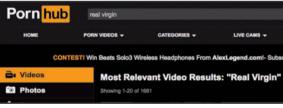

San Diego Assemblywoman Lorena Gonzales recently introduced AB 1909 into the California legislature. If passed, the bill would outlaw virginity testing — the inspection of the hymen to determine whether or not it is intact. The tests came into the public eye last November, when rapper T.I. declared during a podcast that he accompanied his daughter to a yearly exam. But while America's concerned dads may not be enough to stand in Ms. Gonzalez's way, America's masturbators are another matter. "Assemblywoman Gonzalez says there's no justified reason to do these examinations," says Pornhub.com spokesman Brad Malegaze. "But that's only

Two weeks ago, Hillcrest residents woke to a horrible surprise: a vandal had replaced the white stripes of a heavily trafficked neighborhood crosswalk with the colors of both the iconic rainbow flag and the more recent transgender flag. "It's just awful," said Marquis of Hillcrest Gay Furiously. "During the persecution of Christians in Japan, they would make believers step on an image of Christ's face. In Iran, they make people trample on images of the American flag to indicate their disdain for The Great Satan. And now, right on the corner of Normal Street in Hillcrest, some hate monger has made it so that when pedestrians in San Diego's gay district want to safely cross the street, they must walk all over their own flag. In essence, it's a declaration that members of the LGBTQIA+ community must stomp on their pride in themselves and behave like 'normal' people if they want to stay safe. Just super evil stuff. And the worst of it is, nobody's had the guts to remove it yet."

Pornhub: "Not just virgin - REAL virgin. Our integrity demands their integrity."

because Ms. Gonzalez isn't aroused by watching videos of real virgins getting deflowered on Pornhub.com. Which is fine, of course, but it's no reason to kink-shame the many, many people who are, or to deprive them of the perfectly legal, perfectly safe, perfectly harmless sexual satisfaction obtained via those videos. These viewers aren't into play-acting, wherein an actress might, say, refer to her on-camera partner as her step-father and so give the impression of an incestuous hookup. (Not that there's anything wrong with that!) But virgin voyeurs are after the real deal: hot first-time action with genuine virgins losing it on camera. And how can we as a porn provider, in good conscience, present such people with videos labeled 'real virgin' if we can't medically verify that the actresses involved are in fact real virgins? Here at Pornhub.com, we know that virgins are a precious commodity, and we'd hate to deprive them of work just because some law says they can't be checked — or worse, see them injure themselves by obtaining back-alley virginity tests, often in less than sterile conditions. We implore Ms. Gonzalez to rethink her terrible decision to keep women from realizing their full potential in their chosen profession."

Friendly fire

Fire, as in the monstrous mega fires we're seeing in Australia, has been front page news for weeks. But it is also something the Kumeyaay people have been speaking out about for years.

Michael Connolly Miskwish has been following the history of wildfires both here and in Australia. "Their bush fires in Western Australia became worse in the 1960s after total fire suppression became policy," he told me. "Same as here. The expansion of dead undergrowth exploded."

Ironically, he says, banning all fires actually raises the risk of damaging fire. Here, we think of fire as a friend who only needs regular encouragement." could keep it so fire would be our friend, our agent, not our enemy. Fire helps make the land fertile, it gets rid of parasites which attack food sources such as acorns. And fires also limit the number of pine trees, which we don't need, and encourages oaks, which we do. This approach opens patches of land to encourage deer, and other wildlife to come graze, so we get better hunting. Our ancestors would set fires after harvesting the acorn and pine nut and wild grass seeds, to stop parasitic plants like mistletoe from spreading. By stopping the domination of any single species, you keep diversity open, prevent the growth of dense tree stands, and create more of an open tree-park feel> ing. This allows small burns, and lacks fuel for today's superhot fires."

When Miskwish comes to town, he usually has something on his agenda. This time, he's here to show kids how to play pushook, which looks suspiciously like pick up sticks. "Or maybe you should put it the other way round. I don't know about yours, but our game has been around a long time," he says.

Basically you grab the four dice, eight-inch-high marked sticks, and let them drop on a round "striking surface." Any that lands face-up earns you one of 15 playing sticks they call politos. There's a lot of clacking going on as the

bet. "Look at California's favorite origin story.

It's Ramona. The only mention you usually get of us is in the past tense. 'They did this, they ate that.' As though we're an extinct people.

No. We're not. We're here, and we are here to

Does he have a chip on his shoulder? You kids play with the wooden dice.

Kachina, 10, won the game.

One of the first times I met Miskwish was out at his Campo Reservation, where he was showing me the mixed patches of farmland and trees. "We've had a problem from the outset," he says. "When the Spanish arrived, and looked at the land, they believed God had created this ideal countryside of forests and glades and running water for them to come and run their cattle on. Excuse me, but it wasn't God, it was us. For millennia we have been doing prescribed little fires, burning at the right time of year, every year. That way, we stay. And when it comes to managing fires, we're willing to share."

RIP Don Quixote

In a couple of days they'll be memorializing Marshall Saunders, the San Diego man who tried to save the world. I considered him a dear friend even though I knew he had hundreds, maybe thousands of others who loved him just as dearly.

What I'll remember is those afternoons when we sprawled like seals in the winter sun at Cafe Madrid, arguing about how to save this planet. He was from rural Texas, spent his time of citizen lobbyists.

"I realized that anything my audiences intended to do would be swamped by what the government did or did not do," he wrote later, in his online biography. "I realized that ordinary people like me would have to organize, educate ourselves, give up our hopelessness and powerlessness, and gain the skills to be effective with our government."

His main discovery: You don't have to be rich, important, or backed by some major corporation to qualify as a lobbyist. "Any of us can be," he said.

So he created the Citizens' Climate Lobby,

"I realized that anything my audiences intended to do would be swamped by what the government did or did not do"

in commercial real estate, negotiating shopping malls. Not the first person you'd think of in the same breath as a save-the-earther. But that's all he was into: doing good. Muhammad Yunus, the Bangladeshi inventor of the Grameen micro-lending bank, so inspired him that he flew over to Bangladesh and ended up starting his version of a Grameen bank for Northern Mexico, Grameen de la Frontera. in 2007. It has since blossomed to 561 chapters with upwards of 200,000 members around the world. I sat in on a couple of their weekend training sessions, and I was surprised to hear Marshall train neophytes on conference call about how to address a congressman face to face, how to stand your ground without being rude, and above all, how to keep the discourse polite.

Marshall Saunders at a Citizens' Climate Lobby "invasion" of Congress. Invaders disperse to personally lobby House members and senators.

Then, in 2006, he saw Al Gore's An Inconvenient Truth. "I realized that all the good in the world wasn't going to [help] if climate change made people's homes unlivable."

He went around giving climate change talks: to Rotary Clubs, schools, anyone who would listen.

We were on our way back from the coffee cart. He was down. "I'll tell you," he said. "It's hopeless. I give these speeches, and yet at the same time, the coal lobby persuades Congress to give it something like $18 billion in subsidies to increase production."

That's when he decided to create an army

Marshall saw one of his dreams, a federal carbon tax proposal, become at least a bill (HR763), before he died late December. But most of all, it is the army he leaves behind that will carry on this modest guy's immodest fight. Now, Congressmen and women have two annual visits to face from Citizen's Climate Lobbyists, 1200 of them (it was 25 the first year), ranging up the steps of Congress with questions on progress. Face to face.

Even people who completely opposed him, or just saw him as hopelessly quixotic, would have to call that progress.

tion," followed by a communion ceremony led by the Border Church.

"I think that they are sending a sign to Mexico that it is not a friendly welcome into the U.S. anymore," said Jamie Shadowlight, a local musician. "This park has been used for many peaceful demonstrations of our common human connection, beyond borders. I have been here for the Fandango Fronterizo, where we made music together with hundreds of people through the border fence, singing call and response."

Until 2018, the border patrol conducted the Opening the Door for Hope program, which allowed select families to reunite with one another for three minutes as guards opened the U.S. Mexico Border gate. "Jimmy" from IB is sad that the reunification-program is no longer active. He was part of a vintage VW-caravan in 2018; some of his buddies drove up from Mexico, while other buddies drove down from Canada, and they met up at the park. "I resent the limited access here," he said. "The locked gate to our cars — no story is complete without a visit to the area. And the road is below sea level. I can see why they would not put money into the park if the road is fucked. Then there is the sewage issue - I could go on and on: the rude Border Patrol, which controls the access to the circle."

Per NBC San Diego, Chief Douglas E.

Harrison from U.S. Customs and Border Patrol confirmed that the binational garden was torn down on the U.S. side of the fence. "Traffickers cut the legacy border mesh and were using the binational garden to cover illegal activities," he reportedly said. "I know they had to take measures to eliminate the vulnerability. I contacted Friends of Friendship Park, and will meet with them to discuss the next steps."

Activists struggle to keep it real

A recent episode of Nan Sterman's A Growing Passion show on KPBS-TV mentioned the idea that unlike trees and grass, synthetic turf causes a "heat island effect." Sterman showed how one spread of ersatz lawn measured 148 degrees, and what's more, she says that that the ground underneath can become contaminated with toxic leachate. "It's a petroleum product. People install turf thinking they will save water, but it turns out you have to wash it all the time because of pet waste and dirt. And then, when you wash it, the toxins pollute the soil underneath. And then, when you tear it out at the end of its life, say 15 years later, there is no place to take it to get recycled."

The fight against synthetic turf is just getting organized. Suzanne Hume says she was sidelined by her 2017 exposure to helicopterdropped pesticides that were being spread on the tomato fields near her Oceanside home. "I had difficulty speaking and breathing. My lungs were burning. I had tubes down my nose and throat." She didn't sue. But Hume and her husband John Bottorff moved away pens to you and you end up struggling to speak, you decide you must do everything in your power to make sure kids have a safe and healthy future," says Hume. The two corral area teens to get organized, form clubs, and lobby local politicians to do things like plant 4, [councilmember] Chris Rodriguez said the city can make money by paying to install synthetic turf fields at Jefferson Middle School and then charging people to use them. And they want to pay for [the synthetic turf] by using grant money from Prop 68 [passed in 2018].

"There are hundreds of chemicals. I just can't imagine why they wouldn't use natural grass."

trees and stop installing fake turf. Their efforts at public meetings were thought to be quaint and sweet, but then they got a grant from the California Air Resources Board for $99,560, and now the message is getting out. "Everyone has a right to clean air and water," says Hannah Smith, 16, a student at Oceanside's El Camino High and a member of CleanEarth4Kids.org. "We just got a grant to put up three no-idling signs and to plant four trees at every school in Oceanside and Vista. One minute of idling makes more carbon monoxide than three packs of cigarettes."

Neither Hume or Bottorff get paid for their work with CleanEarth4Kids. Besides the trees and signs, they are also using the grant money to help underwrite prizes for essay writing contests and to put potted plants in classrooms. Hume's approach is cheery and optimistic as she speaks at schools and Rotary Clubs, but she knows her cause needs to be pushed firmly and professionally at the local government level. "[County Supervisor] Dianne Jacob is now doing a complete review of pesticides used on county land. We are meeting [Supervisor] Nathan Fletcher at the end of January."

But of course, there is resistance. "It's been really challenging," admits Hume. "At one [Oceanside] city council meeting on December The parks and recreation director said he applied for this grant. They claim those fields are safe, but they can't claim that, because there is lead, heavy metals and a whole class of toxic chemicals in those blades of grass."

(Asked about the matter, Councilmember Rodriguez said that he "never made reference to a field at Jefferson and then charging the public to use it." But Hume replies, "He may not have said, 'Jefferson Middle School,' but the grant application specifically names it as one of two sites to get synthetic turf." A review of that night's meeting shows that the council approved a "park improvements" grant seeking Proposition 68 funds. The grant specifically mentions Jefferson Middle School's field and track as one of two local areas that would be equipped with artificial turf should the grant be obtained. In a separate item where the council approved asking the city staff to create a feasibility study for installing synthetic fields, Rodriguez referred to "charging leagues" to use fields that have been modified with synthetic turf. He did not specifically mention Jefferson Middle School at that time.)

Diane Woelke is a retired certified nurse with a masters degree in midwifery from USC. She is involved in an ongoing battle over artificial grass with her neighbors in Oceanside's Arrowood neighborhood. # Dear Hipster:

I often hear people talking about hipsters and Millennials as if the two are coextensive. Other times, people equate hipsters and Gen X'ers. Sometimes Generation Z takes the blame (or gets the credit, depending on your perspective), although maybe there isn't actually a Generation Z and it's supposed to be called something else entirely. I legit don't know. These things seem very mercurial and arbitrary; and it's not like I want to start bickering and arguing about who killed who here, so let's not get into it. Here's my problem: I was born in 1981, and I definitely don't feel like I belong with Generation X; but I never feel right when people call me a Millennial, either. I fight with my friends about this more than you might expect. I know there isn't really a bright line that separates the two things, so I guess I get to pick. Would it be better to settle

Pick neither. Being caught between two generations is about the hipsterest thing you can be. The idea here is that you can remain smugly superior to multiple generations, thus being allowed to say things like "Gen X'ers care too little, but Millennials care too much," and you get to be right about it. Plus, nothing is ever your fault because you're not part of anybody's collective zeitgeist.

Paradise Hills is easily overlooked

"Radiating Vibrance" graces the long southside wall of La Palapa market. The design features wavy green bands, to denote the neighborhood's hills; a bright sun, enclosed by yellow and red mosaic tiles; and teardrops of sunshine, diffusing outward.

Origin

Guy Preuss is an affable, tanned, retired Navy Master Chief, a Vietnam vet. As the 30-year selfdescribed "temporary" president of the local village council and the chair of the planning committee, he does what most people these days don't do: stay put, stay committed, stay the course for his sake and that of his long-loved, iconic suburb, Paradise Hills. He's lounging with me on the screened-in porch of his doodad-crammed bungalow, which he bought in 1977; I can see out back to an over-chlorinated pool that's darkened by towering jungle growth. After I loudly repeat my initial question, he says he'll be glad to tell me the town's creation myth, but he's got to run and get his hearing aids.

In 1835 a Scottish sea captain anchored in San Diego Bay, hoping to save his life and that of his very thirsty crew. He and same disembarked, rowed ashore, and traipsed inland. They found a creek with cool, clear "sweet water," and the refreshed captain christened it Paradise Creek. The source of the creek had to be the hills above, which they climbed and from which they espied their boat, anchored in the bay, the great ocean beyond. They planted a metaphorical flag: this rise was "Paradise Hills." These days, Paradise Creek flows, Preuss says, "underground until you get to National City, which lies just to the west, and comes aboveground there in Kimball Park." The creek still runs to the sea, its banks lined with "dumped tires and other refuse," South Bay's detritus.

Demographics

The ethnic pie of Paradise Hills slices 39 percent Hispanic, 33 percent Asian, 13 percent non-Hispanic white, 11 percent African-American, and the rest, ancestrally fluid. 'Twas not always thus. Preuss says that in the mid-1970s when he was shopping for a home in "The Hills," a realtor told him, sotto voce, "This community is in transition." That," Preuss notes,

Overlooked

SUÁREZ

One phrase that caught my ear when I first rambled through the neighborhood was, "Paradise Hills is easily overlooked." By whom? By its constituents? By the city of San Diego, and its trashrecycle-fire-cop-streetsewer brigades? Besides three elementary schools, there are only two public services: a '50s-era, plain-Jane United States Post Office, zip code 92139, and a branch library — a near-Day-Glo orange cinder block box, a cramped hub, mainly for kids' books and movie renters. No police station, no mayor, no county admin buildings. Paradise Hills, population 17,000, is, like many pockets of San Diego, umbrellaed by council districts — here, District Four, Monica Montgomery in charge. Even the planning committee is shared with Skyline to the north.

In short, "P.H." is not overlooked by its populace. Its homes are mostly bit of refined Navy housing and few apartments. This South Bay sentinel is hardly a destination except for whatever community orgs and benevolent societies muster up along the long lazy dip of Reo Drive, with its ample free parking, its un-stoplighted mélange of salon, Mexican Restaurant, grocery and convenience store, VFW hall, House of Boxing, Baby Cakes, barber shop, medical clinic, coffeehouse, which is about it.

Impressions

A few paradisiacal objects (nothing the English poet John Milton would have recognized): dustcovered parked cars inside or beside chainlink fences bent-leaning and torn-open around empty lots (why torn open if empty?); no big box stores or congregant spaces other than churches, humming as much on weeknights as on Sunday, and their spacious parking lots, one as large as Home Depot's; brown-eyed girls (Do you remember when . . . we used to sing) idling at stop signs in white Hondas and checking the mirror for the look and lay of palm-frond-sized, glued-on evelashes; alleys behind restaurants smelling of fried chicken and refried beans; rare flat stretches of street, frequent up-down, slowgo grades (cars everywhere, even at 10 am); driving uphill, crossing a cross-street and seeing the Pacific in hazy dreamscape, close but far, blue-gray gunmetal, otherworldly; homes built for such panoramic views, call them perched or terraced, some that block the views their neighbors used to enjoy. Is "paradise" a home in the hills above all with its bird'seye view of the sea or is "paradise" the terrain somewhere beyond the sea, toward which those thirsty shipmates wished they could sail?

Sidewalks

With Preuss as my passenger guide, I bend my head to observe a neighborhood bereft, for multiple stretches, of sidewalks. "See there? Sidewalk, then no sidewalk... sidewalk, then no sidewalk." The reason: Paradise Hills was once part of the county, which did not require concrete paths, unlike the city proper. Thus, the hodge-podge, from one street to another, the sidewalk starts and stops, before one house. unlain before the next. Dog walkers must venture into the street, past a parked car or two, to perambulate round "P.H." It's even dicier given the scarcity of streetlights, another urban necessity.

Thorn-in-the-side Preuss has advocated for years, he says, to get sidewalks in. In 1992, he and a buddy began measuring the lengths of every street in Paradise Hills which were missing "all-weather walkways." They counted 50 missing sections. Preuss has been barking at the city on this one issue, at planning committees and at city council meetings, begging someone to lay down these 50 sections.

In one report, he spelled out the point with a marketing kicker at the end. Sidewalks support transit users and pedestrians "by allowing a safe way to the grocery store, the beauty parlor, the barber shop, the water store, the post office, the library and the three elementary schools...enhancing community character and supporting the desirability of the housing stock by making the village more walkable."

Then there's the 1990 Americans with Disabilities Act, which requires sidewalks and ramped curbs at cross streets. Preuss says the wheelchair people are infuriated that they have to motor or push themselves into the street, often a life-anddeath wager after 5 pm in winter.

To date, Preuss (and Paradise Hills) is one for 50. "We've never got anything. 'It's a citywide problem," he's been told umpteen times by downtown officials. "'You're never going to get all those sidewalks in, just ask for one — one at a time." OK, so that one time, he asked for one, and he got one. He asked again, and he got none.

It's duly noted that San Diego ponied up sidewalks on Reo Drive's single, packed commercial block. (Preuss says it had a lot to do with the political ambitions of then-congressman, Bob Filner.) The city coughed up eight trees, three crosswalks, and four sidewalk pop-outs, which makes pedestrians more noticeable to drivers as walkers move out into the street. Still irked by city hall neglect, Preuss says that

Reo Drive's "nice, wide sidewalks" support businesses, not neighborhood street-walking. "You keep hammering, you keep hammering, and maybe, eventually," he says, "you get something done."

Unimaginable

Last November 20, San Diego's police chief David Nisleit came to the Paradise Hills Village Council to help comfort the residents after the gun deaths of a mother. Sabrina Rosario, and three of her four boys, Zeth, 11, Zuriel, 5, and Enzi, 3, four days earlier. Ezekiel, 9, died a week after he was shot. The gunman was their father and Rosario's estranged husband, who killed himself at the scene. In a hushed and hurried voice, Nisleit said, "We've been staying in touch with the family. As you could imagine, they're going through — I don't think anybody could ever imagine what they're going through. It's impossible to understand what they're going through. We stay with them through the process of the investigation — that's one thing homicide does."

Nisleit said the city was offering "psychological services" to the family of the deceased, neighbors, and their own investigators. Following the discovery of the carnage on Flintridge Drive, in which a neighbor reported hearing the sounds of a "nail gun," "homicide, crime lab technicians, dispatchers, and patrol officers have all gone through critical debriefs. Two of the responding officers had newborns at home." He paused, then continued. "Most are back at work," one week after the shootings.

The chief took questions. But it seemed the two dozen who turned out for the session were too stunned to know what to ask; the feelings were palpable, ranging from speechless to hopeless there in the Lutheran Church community room.

One person stated that it's inexplicable why nothing was done by authorities to protect the woman and her children. Apparently, the chief said, the husband/ killer had a registered firearm, despite the mother having secured a restraining order against him just the day before. (A family spokesperson said no one knew the father had a gun.) How could it be that no one knew the man's volatility? The chief said he and the department were just as flummoxed as everyone else by the question. He closed with the alltoo-pat advice: "There are a lot of resources to assist the community with - crisis interventionists — so if you hear of anyone who needs help, we'll make certain those assets are available to you."

The murder of a mother and her children is a crime few communities ever experience. (That it took place "in" Paradise Hills will cast some shade, unfortunately.) Most everyone at the village council meeting seemed racked by disbelief and by feelings of betrayal; finding fault, claiming that someone should have interceded before it happened, is one way to cope. Still, how does anyone suspect a father to be capable of killing his children, his wife, and himself unless he or she knows? Perhaps someone did; perhaps someone is haunted by that.

Other crimes

The summer of 2019 was a violent one. Two men, Tyshawn Powell, 20, and Dustin Bridwell, 37, were gunned down on neighborhood streets. Powell's two suspected killers have been charged and await trial; police still seek a suspect in Bridwell's death. These murders stirred a latent mayhem in outside or homegrown troublemakers: graffiti, smashed windows, and break-ins once again, recalling the late 1980s, grew more common.

"This summer, while I'm away in Chicago," one 17-year resident says during the meeting, "I'm texting my neighbor, 'Go check my windows. If they're broken, call the cops. It's on the news." She hectors parents for letting their kids run wild out of school, and the city that could but won't hire "our youth" to do roadside cleanups.

When the meeting adjourns, several stay after, turning up the volume, I sense, in my presence. They first underscore less egregious beefs (though just as irately voiced): why everyone should avoid shopping at one (unnamed) store because it's "nasty inside," and which street had more than its usual pile of trash, and how come the city cleaned up one homeless camp only to let it reappear the very next day.

The summer of 2019 was a violent one. These murders stirred a latent mayhem in outside or homegrown troublemakers: graffiti, smashed windows, and break-ins once again, recalling the late 1980s, grew more common.

And then a lifelong "P.H." denizen, a woman, says that she lives cattycorner to the United Church of Christ, which rents out its facilities once a week to an evangelical group, "Las Iglesias," who play and sing electrified "praise music" so loud she's called "the cops on them more times than you can imagine. The drumming, the craziness!" The police, she continues, "come out and tell them to stop and then, after they leave, the music starts right back up again."

And another, getting into the ethnic weeds, says, "Paradise Hills has become a splintered community." (Many within earshot second that.) "We have Filipinos and Latinos and a few blacks and some whites, here and there." who live and look out for their own, "and that's why nothing gets done." She says the Filipinos have their own senior center. "But we didn't know anything about it. We've been the most neglected of all," that is, the pioneer set from the 1950s. But it's not racial for her. Why? Because "the last councilperson who cared about us was

To which, yet another youngish oldtimer, 57, adds, "This is the problem with our neighborhood. We grow up here, when the kids bicycle everywhere, and then they grow up, they move away, the parents get old, they die, the kids sell the house — and then shit moves in."

And so on, until the emotions are, in part, purged. Violence so close to home, whether next door or one street over, makes people crazy. Guy Preuss walks me to the door. He says council meetings allow neighbors "to vent." (Later, someone affectionately labels the monthly meetings "bitch sessions.")

Project Reo (1)

It sometimes happens that a handful of a neighborhood's residents, feeling isolated in their home lives, frustrated by the town's untapped potential, and tired of expecting others to step up, one day finally does awaken, and that handful of residents begins building a cohesive community, blockby-block, inside the fragmented one.

Credit this approach to staying put and staying committed (à la Guy Preuss), because that day came three years ago when five families formed the Project Reo Collective. The gang's hub is a coffee shop on Reo Drive whose block of businesses comprises the commercial district. One recent night, seven members of the collective, all of whom own and work at the coffee shop, show up to guide me through the live theater of Paradise Hills revitalization.

They go back first to what it was like in the crime-ridden days of the 1980s and the 1990s when urban communities lost control to the crack epidemic, driveby shootings, and the drug war on the border. Rough times back then. Empty storefronts, walls gang-tagged, the Reo Drive liquor store robbed like clockwork once a month, siren-amped police stops, homeless camps, absent streetlights, missing sidewalks. Not the Trump-dumped tweet of a "rat and rodent infested mess." But still the canard held sway: whatever's wrong is someone else's problem.

Fabian Gil and Gina Moreno grew up in Paradise Hills when the town was self-sufficient — local restaurants, fresh food markets, a gas station. Traveling elsewhere was infrequent. Highway 54 was still a dirt road. Parents worked close by; kids played sports at parks and summered on their bikes. Holidays meant local carnivals. Fabian, who scissors his shoulders back and forth when he talks, like a boxer feinting, says, "This downtown was our little strip. Nobody came from elsewhere." As kids, "We had a sense of ownership."

One couldn't walk down the street and, "Just be," as Tommy Walker, a local real estate agent, tells me. Fabian recalls "a couch" just sitting on Reo Drive, abandoned, wet, filthy. He told a friend, over a brewski one day, that "We're never going to see that couch out there again. Everybody was itching for something, everyone was waiting." Indicating the five families around the table, he notes, "We finally said, 'Why not us?

Why can't we act?"

To revive Fabian's sense of "being owed" — a hometown which caretakes its people — Paradise Hills needed a catalyst. It came in the form of the mural project, initiated by Enrique Lugo, an art teacher in Chula Vista and now, Dean of Students at High Tech High International. His 12th-grade class (the emphasis was on project-based learning, which also enlisted local volunteers) painted three murals on the sides of buildings. One, "Radiating Vibrance," graces the long southside wall of La Palapa market. The design features wavy green bands, to denote the neighborhood's hills; a bright sun, enclosed by yellow and red mosaic tiles; and teardrops of sunshine, diffusing outward.

The murals stirred much pride but little action, says Selina Lugo, Enrique's wife. She and others wanted other sustaining projects, so they organized a movie night, a Saturday cleanup, and, eventually, a hangout where people could network and stage events and nurture more community cohesion. The coffee shop idea sprouted as though its seeds were there, under the asphalt of Reo Drive, waiting to be watered.

Project Reo (2)

All members of Project Reo are volunteer joiners. All are parents and homeowners. All have day jobs. All love where they live. All are proud that local houses can cost less than $400,000, though that doesn't mean "The Hills" are broadly affordable. Rentals are scarce. The homes are, for the most part, multi-generational. When a house comes up for sale, it's far more likely to go than linger.

Daneyel Walker and her husband Tommy tell me that Project Reo has "created a third space," adding to the "home life and the work life, a community life." And, as another coffee shop owner, Susan Corrales, notes, in Paradise Hills not only are there "no gated communities or apartment complexes, you have a backyard."

A time-honored tradition in American cities is to silo people, via religion, ethnicity, language, or recent immigrant status. Many people were often wary of mixing, and desired less integration, perhaps, because they didn't know any better. I hear these sentiments from more than a few locals, a longing for a past when pockets of "P.H." were white or Hispanic.

Contrarily, Diana Cornejo-Sanchez, an educator at High Tech High, trumpets diversity as the main reason for the Project's success. She says it begins with multiple ways in which Americans are separated or separate themselves: "religion, socio-economic status, recent immigrants, those born and raised here, military, retired people, blue-collar workers, new families, grandparents."

Such disconnection does not mean one group of people wants nothing to do with another group. Groups have no way of coming together unless there are organizations that both celebrate diversity and acknowledge its paradox. "We want to be around people who are like us and people who are not like us."

All those groups and statuses Cornejo-Sanchez mentions tend to separate until, according to Project Reo members, neighbors attend events and express not only relief that someone's making space to congregate but also emphasizing a common humanity, which is too often overshadowed in America by difference.

"When you go to events now," Gina Moreno says, "you won't see one type of person." New events piggy-back on traditional ones, much of it driven by a

Christmas sweater con-

Paradise Hills Facebook page where, Gina says, "opinions are as diverse as the community." (Everyone, familiar with the "keystroke warriors" and the bullying trolls, laughs.) One example of the Reo mixtape is the block party with classic car parade and live music, called ReoFest. Another is the miniextravaganza at Christmas, Holiday in the Hills. All Reo Drive businesses contribute - for instance, the ugliest test or an afternoon of cookie decorating for families. One collective idea the group fosters is a kind of leaderless momentum where, as Fabian notes.

where, as Fabian notes, "activities run themselves." The low-rider club, the pumpkin fest, Halloween's car-parked "Trunk or Treat," law enforcement's Coffee-with-a-Cop, all continue because volunteers contact one another, not because Project Reo "runs it."

"We've created a blueprint," Fabian goes on. "We're asked by other communities, 'How did you do this? Show us.' We can't tell others what to do because we don't live there. But we can show them."

Asserting their political muscle, Project Reo members and others attend the annual city council budget meetings, wearing matching T-shirts and advocating for sidewalks, streetlights, and weed abatement. "If we don't ask for stuff," Fabian says, "we won't get it." They don't endorse candidates, though they get solicited by same, their clout arising from new and growing voter registrations.

Tommy says that of the 17,000 locals, only 3000 participate. "We have a lot of work to do."

After November 16

In the wake of the murders, a candlelight vigil was held. Hundreds came out to support the extended family of Sabrina Rosario. It was too bad, the Project Reo folks say, because it was "national news," and the media descended for lead-and-bleed coverage, and then withdrew, "never showing the good things that we're doing," Gina quickly adds.

Fabian pushes it further. "That vigil was needed before those deaths happened."

Others in the group expand the feeling, arguing that last summer's murders of Powell and Bridwell were like an inaudible car alarm. Just because tagging incidents had dried up, postmural-painting, didn't meant that all was rosy in Paradise Hills. "We should have had that vigil then," Daneyel says.

She speaks movingly about November 16. Her soft tone, steady throughout, grows anguished, vexed. She calls it a crime of a "troubled man" that, though hidden, "we very much need to talk to our children about. When someone doesn't want vou because she has a boyfriend, or there's a husband involved, how do vou deal with these emotions, these feelings, how do you separate yourself when you can't have what you want? And then, when the law's involved — how do we protect our women?"

The restraining order Sabrina Rosario got was too little, too late. "When we get a court order, am I supposed to show you this piece of paper, and that's going to stop you from attacking me? Will it keep me and my children safe? What happens then?"

Such tragedies hit the surviving kids the hardest. The boys who died "went to school with our children in Paradise Hills. They played sports with them," several in the group say. I register in each a note of angry despair.

The November 16 murders will darken the children's memory, who, down the road, may place this darkness as central to their lives in the twenty-teens. They may never forget because their parents chose not to sweep such horror under the rug; because their parents intervened with solemn vigils and voga classes, movie nights and live jazz, art therapy and town forums; and because their parents established both a place and a principle, sharing grievances and differences, solidarity and joy, and, consciously, shaping the next legacy of Paradise Hills.

Rhyme & Verse

A pair of poems for Burns Day

A Man's a Man for A' That

Is there for honesty poverty That hings his head, an' a' that; The coward slave — we pass him by, We dare be poor for a' that! For a' that, an' a' that, Our toils obscure an' a' that, The rank is but the guinea's stamp, The man's the gowd for a' that.

What though on hamely fare we dine, Wear hoddin grey, an' a' that? Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine, A man's a man for a' that. For a' that, an' a' that, Their tinsel show, an' a' that, The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor, Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see yon birkie ca'd a lord, Wha struts, an' stares, an' a' that; Tho' hundreds worship at his word, He's but a coof for a' that. For a' that, an' a' that, His ribband, star, an' a' that, The man o' independent mind He looks an' laughs at a' that.

A price can mak a belted knight, A marquise, duke, an' a' that; But an honest man's aboon his might, Gude faith, he maunna fa' that! For a' that, an' a' that, Their dignities an' a' that, The pith o' sense, an' pride o' worth, Are higher rank than a' that.

My Heart's in the Highlands

Farewell to the Highlands, farewell to the North, The birth-place of Valour, the country of Worth; Wherever I wander, wherever I rove, The hills of the Highlands for ever I love.

My heart's in the Highlands, my heart is not here; My heart's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer; A-chasing the wild-deer, and following the roe, My heart's in the Highlands wherever I go.

Farewell to the mountains high covered with snow; Farewell to the straths and green valleys below; Farewell to the forests and wild-hanging woods; Farewell to the torrents and loud-pouring floods.

My heart's in the Highlands, my heart is not here; My heart's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer; A-chasing the wild-deer, and following the roe, My heart's in the Highlands wherever I go.

Robert Burns (1759-1796) was the premiere Scottish poet and balladeer. He's regarded in Scotland with the same reverence as Shakespeare in England — and, as with Shakespeare's creative use of Elizabethan English, Burns's style is immediately recognizable through his use of colloquial Scottish dialect interwoven into the English of his day. He is celebrated throughout the world

tion of city code." She says the slope allows toxic runoff to flow into city drains. "Research shows there are many carcinogens and other toxic chemicals that end up seeping into our water table." Woelke says that so far, she has sought but failed to obtain support from her Arrowood homeowners association. "The temperature gets as high as 200 degrees, and she allows her grandkids to play on it. I would never allow my grandkids on it." She adds she has also argued with city of Oceanside about the installation of rubber playground matting at nearby Luiseno Park, because "it's falling apart." Regarding the installation of fake grass at Jefferson Middle School, she says, "I think it is unconscionable that they would subject the kids in a lower socioeconomic neighborhood to these poisons in their playground."

Carlsbad's Mary Anne Viney says she has a mixed scorecard regarding her efforts to get her city and school district to stop exposing its residents to poison. "They both now have a non-toxic policy," she says, noting that she successfully got the city to start using organic instead of synthetic pesticides. But she wasn't as successful with artificial turf. "I asked the city to delay it back in January of 2019." She says California's EPA (Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment) is about to release the results from a four-year-old study on the toxicity of fake grass. "I just wanted them to wait until it came out. And they did delay it for six months or so." But then she says Carlsbad started rolling out the artificial turf at Stagecoach Park in July. "There are hundreds of chemicals. Some are known, some are unknown. Kids are constantly getting exposed to them on their skin and by breathing. I just can't imagine why they wouldn't use natural grass."

Viney says California was once on the right path. "The state tried to pass a law that prohibits this stuff, but then it was watered down. Now you have [state agency] Cal Recycle giving grants for schools and cities to install this stuff. I think it is atrocious to exploit our children this way. I didn't tell the city of Carlsbad to not ever use it. I just said wait until we get all the facts. That would be a lot more prudent than using these kids as guinea pigs. I want to know why they still use it when there's all these studies that say we just don't yet know if they are safe enough. I guess we'll just have to wait 10 or 20 years to see if these kids get cancer." Viney says she relies on nontoxicneighborhoods.com for her data. "Right now, this is all just a grassroots effort." With my friend Annie again. 'Cause she's usually up for anything. Went for a winter swim in the ocean t'other day. And today it seemed like a good idea to go, well, roller-skating. So, nice, crisp sunny day, we meet here outside what looks like a giant Quonset hut with a sign reading "Skateworld."

"Oh ves. This is the place they wanted to close down," says Annie. "Put up a Big Box, last I heard." What?

"It's a kind of cultural genocide," says Annie. She can be dramatic, but I know exactly what she means.

"Better get in while it's still here," I say. So we head through the swing doors to a lobby and a line. "What's the deal?" I ask the gent behind the glass. Hold my breath because I'm betting the use of the rink, the hiring of skates, some locker to put your stuff in, is all going to cost.

"Ten and five," he says. "Ten dollars to get in, five for the skate rental, quad or in-line."

Long and short: I wobble, and I mean WOB-BLE around the rink. Annie, dammit, soon picks up on her ice-skating experience. But even she's holding the hand of a little girl who's offered to be her steady-buddy. "Take your time! See ya!" Annie yells, each time they pass me by

Of course, I hit the deck about twice each go-round. Just as well I'm a good faller. What strikes me though, is how everybody stops, hauls me back to vertical, and kind of laughs with me, not at me. Whatever, I'm rediscovering the "roller" in skates. And this is exercise! Just holding everything together and trying to move at the same time takes total concentration. A few circuits and I'm wet with sweat. Heck, did this as a kid. What happened to muscle memory?

Only thing that saves me is a whistle. They're clearing the rink for races. Thank goodness! A moment later, I'm clinging to the snack bar like it's flotsam from the S.S. Bedford.

"Comfort food!" I gasp.

"You've come to the right place, sir," says server gal Callie. I can see I'm not the first to turn up this way. It looks like a triage station. Okay, I exaggerate. 'Course Annie now rolls up. "The man's in shock. Give him some hot brandy," she says. "Call the medics."

"Excuse me! I'm fine, thank you," I say. "What's on the menu?"

Here's what's amazing: food items you normally sneer at and start ranting about, like "This is what's Making America Fat Again!" suddenly looks like the only thing that'll save you from an embarrassing freak-out.

The choice is cheese nachos, $6.25 with a 16-ounce soda and a bag of chips, or $4.50 a la carte. A hot dog with chips and 16-ounce soda,

I know that it is totally because of the circumstances, but this tastes like the most delicious danged pizza in the world. It is hot, seriously juicy, the dough is crispy on the edges, nicely floppy under the cheese and pepperoni, and it's small but enough. I don't need the nachos (which are okay, but nothing to write home about). And they don't gouge you for it! Beautiful.

From the food deals to the skating floor, you just notice this generous, non-rapacious vibe here.

In what seems like no time, I've wolfed most of it, and Annie's challenging me to go back on the maple.

As I step down onto the rink, Nick looks up. "Bend knees," he yells, "and head up! It's the heaviest part of your body!" ■

How to find Alex's Brown Bag

Mother's Saloon; 2228 Bacon Street, Ocean Beach. Just a few years ago, it made a list of "the best cheesesteaks outside Philly" compiled by the Food Network, but when I went looking for Alex's Brown Bag at its home inside Pacific Beach pub Latitude 32, it was gone. I guess Food Network fame doesn't guarantee longevity, I thought at the time. Tread lightly, Hodad's and Blue Water.

Turns out, the only problem here was my timing. Last year, the Brown Bag moved from inside one beach town bar, to another: Mother's Saloon, in Ocean Beach. I have to imagine Alex's regular customers were more on top of this change than I was. They'd already followed the business when it moved on from its original location in Bankers Hill a few years back. I can't claim as much. Never-changing red lights and backed up traffic in left-turn lanes successfully prevented me from entering Pacific Beach for seven years, and by time I made it there, Calozzi's Cheeesesteaks had opened.

But I know how to make it into Ocean Beach without getting stuck at a single traffic light, so off I went, looking for the cheesesteak I barely recall eating, it's been so long. Full disclosure: I'd never entered Mother's Saloon before, at least not since it was a would-be rock club called Dream Street, which only booked bands willing to sell tickets to friends. The place is apparently more of a sports bar now, with loads of TV screens showing replays of football and basketball games when I walked in. I couldn't spot any signs of Alex's Brown Bag at first, though I did see plenty of Mother's Saloon menus, and wondered if I had once again showed up too late. Maybe the cheesesteaks had moved on to Imperial Beach or something?

But all I was missing this time was a flip of the laminated menu. Mother's Saloon makes and serves its assorted burgers, wings, and nachos, but now shares its kitchen with the Brown Bag. I'm assured that, while the same cook makes both sides for their menu, the cheesesteak side adheres to the recipes the place always relied on, meaning the standard cheesesteak ($6.75 half, $11.50 whole) still grills onions, peppers, and mushrooms with its Philly-sourced beef, and still piles it on the traditional Philly-baked Amoroso Roll with melting American cheese, provolone, or cheez whiz.

Which, of course, makes it authentically cheesesteaky, and capable of satisfying all associated Philly cheesesteak cravings. Even less traditional fare, such as the chicken cheesesteak slathered with buffalo sauce and ranch dressing, makes a tasty belly filler to go with the tasty belly filler to go with beers being poured in this saloon. While this iteration of Alex's doesn't lose anything by moving from one back-of-the-bar kitchen to another, it doesn't feel special enough for national top ten lists. While I don't miss the Philadelphia Eagles paraphernalia plastered on the walls of most standalone cheesesteak restaurants, some sort of Philly soul here would give these 'steaks charm. They're maybe third best in the city at this point.

45 years later, at Sandwich Emporium... Sandwich Emporium; 3054-1\2

Clairemont Dr, Clairemont.

A very basic California sandwich: turkey, provolone, and avocado on sourdough.

Order Any Food Item Get A Free Drink One coupon per customer per orde Cannot combine coupons. Stop by for authentic Vietnamese Banh Mi sandwiches, spring rolls, egg rolls, and noodle salads.

"Established in 1974 in the neighborhood of Clairemont," is the first thing that stands about Sandwich Emporium.

That makes it about 45 years old, which would have to put it not far down any list of the city's oldest sandwich counters.

As if to punctuate the scene,

as I approach the shop, I see a teen with long, surf-blond hair and a tie dye sweatshirt parks

his bicycle in

220 Euclid Ave., Suite 180 San Diego, CA 92114 • (619) 450-6177 front of the shop. Some things don't change.

Some things do. Ownership has changed, since '74, and I take it the place has changed locations, while opening up a few new ones over the years, in Rancho Peñasquitos, Mira Mesa, and Escondido. But as I search the internet to find all this out, I notice a second thing about Sandwich Emporium: you can order online.

That has become the norm, of course. It's just not the first thing the mind rushes to associate with a 45-year-old restaurant. At some recent point during the place's decades long history, a decision was made to modernize, to establish a photogenic web presence that links to Pinterest, Instagram, and Twitter. That accepts online pick-up orders, and links to four separate third-party delivery apps. It's a story that must have been playing itself out all over the nation as small shops and chains have had to adapt to our online lifestyles.

At the counter, a photo sign advertises the Pho'Wich, "inspired by a bowl of pho" for $8.99. This takes the Emporium's signature, roasted in house beef, and sets it on a buttered garlic roll with toppings said to include basil, pickled jalapeño, cucumbers, and hoisin mayo. The mainstream popularity of phở is something else I'm pretty sure Sandwich Emporium didn't see coming, back in 1974.

I can kind of see where they're going with the phở idea, with the rare beef, fresh herb, and the addition of hoisin lending a little five-spice feel. But mine definitely felt a little closer to bánh mì, particularly because they subbed cilantro for that basil. The shop does a similar bánh mì-styled sub with turkey, calling it the Saigon grinder.

To contrast, I order a more traditional So Cal sandwich, the California: roast turkey, provolone, and avocado on slices of sourdough. Now this looks like an old fashioned sandwich, with yellow mustard smears at the cut edges of rectangular bread. It's a fine sandwich, but not nearly as fun or photogenic as the Pho'wich. I guess our expectations have changed, too, since '74.

BOOZE NEWS

How Mother Earth quietly became one of San Diego's most successful breweries

Fun fact: Idaho's largest brewery is headquartered in Vista, California. That's because, in 2016, Mother Earth Brew Co. expanded beer production to Nampa, Idaho, a small city about 15 miles outside Boise.

San Diego beer companies building production breweries out of state has had what we might call mixed results. Building a brewery in Virginia put Green Flash on the path to foreclosure. Ballast Point's Virginia brewery wasn't included when the drastically devalued company was sold last month. Stone Brewing still operates its Virginia brewery, but last April it had to sell the one it built in Berlin.

Meanwhile, Mother Earth has only grown stronger, enjoying double digit growth year after year since it opened nearly a decade ago. At the time it started shipping from Nampa, it distributed to five states. Today it ships to 18, plus more than a half dozen countries in Europe, Asia, and South America. Beer quality has been part of it, but so has business acumen.

Both founder Daniel Love and executive vice president Kevin Hopkins bring Fortune 500 experience to their passion for beer, resulting in a company that's been methodic and strategic with every move it makes. "Passion does not automatically equate to profitability," says Hopkins, "That's why we do things a bit differently than others."

At times, Mother Earth has been ahead of trends. It was quick to embrace cans, and to install a quality assurance lab - both in 2014. Other times, it's been slow to follow them: initially refraining from releasing hazy IPAs, for example, despite surging demand. When it did release hazy beers, they were the result of 18 months of recipe development. While Hopkins acknowledges a missed opportunity, when early adopters were selling out entire batches of hazy IPA in a single weekend, Mother Earth's "do it right" approach has worked out in the long run. Since introducing its Project X series of hazy IPAs in August, the brewery has already quadrupled production, and expects to double that in the next few months.

For the past few years, Mother Earth's bestselling beer in San Diego has been its Cali Creamin' Madagascar vanilla cream ale, now offered with the addition of Valencia orange. However, most of the company's business remains driven by IPAs. In its first four years alone, it had to increase production by a factor of 20 on the strength of its Hop Diggity and Kismet IPAs. Both beers relied on one of the priciest hops at the time: Nelson Sauvin. That prompted a minor change in direction.

Can artwork is turned into decorative prints in Mother Earth's Vista taproom

"We were one of the largest users of Nelson here in San Diego," explains Hopkins, "But we realized that Nelson wasn't going to be sustainable long term, at the volumes we were growing." So Mother Earth spent months developing a new flagship IPA, featuring an intriguing new hop: Mosaic. Released straight into cans in 2014, Boo Koo IPA is now the brand's number one seller.

But it's clear the move to Idaho is the biggest factor in helping Mother Earth thrive even as the craft industry at large has slowed down. While all the beer we see in Southern California is still brewed in Vista, roughly two-thirds of its beer

"It afforded us the ability to build a larger brewery than we could have here," says Hopkins, noting the company searched for 18 months within California before realizing the opportunity that expanding out of state provided. "We built that whole facility for single millions, not double digits."

They did so without adding investors, and with a small business loan. This conservative fiscal approach has also allowed Mother Earth to provide benefits to full time employees. But the most interesting advantage to the Idaho move allowed has been qualitative. The water in Idaho is not only cheaper, but yields better tasting beer, particularly the hoppy beers. So when the company's brewers and lab techs examined water profiles to ensure its beers tasted the same whether they were made in Vista or Nampa, it meant the entire product line wound up tasting better. Why?

Because "we did not change Idaho to match California," notes Hopkins, "We changed California to match Idaho?

Sullivan King brings his "metalstep" to the Music Box on Jan. 24.

Pac-Man chomping on ghosts It seems that local-concert promoters are nodding 'yes' in unison with my basshead brethren lately, and following the lead of video gamers. On January 24, Sullivan King, Yakz, and Grabbitz will perform their dubstep at the Music Box.

Sullivan King plays metal-guitar solos on his Schecter guitar, DJs, and yellsings shrieking vocals atop hellishly-low bass drops. Yakz is more chill and fuses slower reggae-style beats within his dubstep set — which bassheads refer to as "riddim": wordplay on how a typical Jamaican reggae artist might pronounce the word "rhythm."

Grabbitz's sound is said by some dubheads to be a bit more like "pop" dubstep; loaded with soft lyrics that lead to the heavy drop and dubby-twangs, as heard on the 2014 EDM-favorite "Here With You Now."

"I know a lot of gamers that play competitively that listen to music while they are playing — dubstep is a popular form of music, and about five years ago, there was a period of time where you could hear it more in actual video game soundtracks," said Ian Ferguson, who works at Luna Video Games in Chula Vista; he's also a DJ and has been gaming for 30 plus years. "Syndicate on the Xbox 360 has music in the dubstep style," he added.

"If I play World of Warcraft on player-versusplayer mode, or play Diablo, it would be more metal and dubstep, or both: Metalstep (like Sullivan King)," said Raving Mad, another gamer. But "for World of Warcraft while doing dungeon/ questing/farming, I like epic music."

"Dubstep and metal is a fairly aggressive type of music," Ferguson said, "and when people are playing action packed games, they generally listen to it because it has a lot of energy to it .... Most of these games allow you to drop the music but keep the sound volume up. Things that you maybe have to listen to, like footsteps, you can keep that part on but turn down any background music."

This style of gaming, where gamers replace soundtracks in gameplay with the aforementioned styles of dubstep, became popular when streamers would stream live while listening to "bass-thicc" dubstep — on the Twitch live streaming video service for everything video games.

On the flip side, many dubstep producers are fans of video games and samples of popular games are evident or influenced in some of their music.

On Yakz's "The Music" cut, at the 53 second mark, some fans say it sort of sounds like Pac-Man chomping on the ghosts. Yakz's never verified such on the record.

Grabbitz recalls being inspired by video games to produce music. "When I was about 12 or something," he said in an interview with Rolling Stone, "I started making beats on an Xbox game called MTV Music Generator."

Sullivan King reportedly "discovered EDM" after playing hours of online gaming and listening to dubstep (continued on page 40)

True collaborative work Pete Bayard had performed in a series of bands in St. Paul, Boston, and New York City before he landed in San Diego and started playing in the local outfit Indigo in the mid-2000s. He followed that with a short stint with locals Rookie Card before he moved to Seattle near the end of the aughts. There he found himself playing in yet another band. When he returned to San Diego in the early 2010s he started a new outfit called Super Buffet. The band had a peculiar genesis.

"It started mainly on a whim," Bayard explained. "I was going back home to Boston for something. My brother still lived there, and he's an excellent drummer. I called him up and said, 'We're in a band, and I just booked a show for us. I'll send you some material later.' I still knew a lot of bands in the area, so I put together a show and it was sold-out. Standing-room only."

One-off shows in his old stomping grounds of Minneapolis and Seattle followed, and Bayard eventually decided to get the project going in San Diego. At that point, he had one child, his wife was expecting twins, and many of his musician friends were becoming parents as well. As a result, Bayard would aim "to keep it loose and get away with as much as possible" with the San Diego incarnation. A key element of this was allowing musicians to come and go as their schedules allowed. Bayard's old Indigo band-mate, Chris Silva, jumped in early and has been a solid presence providing rhythm guitar and backing vocals. Drummer Brendan Ruff has been quite reliable as well. Bayard claims these two have been around "99 percent of the time" even though five other drummers have sat in for gigs. Bayard tackles bass and lead vocal duties himself. so that leaves the occasional keyboard and vocal accompaniment courtesy of Marie Haddad and a myriad of lead guitarists that have done stints with the band including Wendy Bailey, Paul Rvu, Dennis Sheridan and their current axe-wielder, Jon Norwood.

Despite a bit of musical chairs, it usually works out fine for the gigs. That being said, Bayard did have one "crossed-wires" incident with his bandmates that landed him an unexpected solo slot at the International Pop Overthrow event in Silverlake.

"Brendan was available,

Of course, it's easy to see why Mayall would want to keep returning to this northern San Diego venue; it's top shelf as far as local clubs and neighborhoods go. But how is it that there are still enough locals to keep filling up the joint, every single time he breezes through town? If you've ever been, you already know. And if you haven't, you should.

E.N. YOUNG at Winstons

Reggae rocker E.N. Young (Tribal Seeds) has been making the solo scene since 2010, when he released his debut full-length Luck & Chance No More. A busy gig schedule, as well as producing other bands, resulted in a five year wait before a sophomore solo album, Live Love Stay Up, dropped in three formats: original, acoustic, and dub versions. Recorded at his IB Imperial Sound Recording Studio, guest players include members of fellow locals Tribal Seeds. A follow-up, Call On Me, features a live version of "Don't Burn Bridges" from his debut record, performed with his concert band, Imperial Sound. The album's video for "Call On Me" was shot

DIRTY SWEET at Casbah

Named for a lyric in the T Rex song "Get it On (Bang a Gong)," Dirty Sweet was formed back in 2003 by former members of Convoy, Lovelight Shine, and Jenune with a yen for '70s style crotch rock that at the time was experiencing a shortlived revival. AJ Croce (son of famous former neighbor Jim Croce) signed them to his Seedling Records label, and in May 2005 they became the first local band to headline the Casbah for three consecutive nights. Their album Of Monarchs and Beggars was promoted by supporting Jimmy Eat World on a sold-out tour, as well as with their first overseas dates. Recog-

THE DANGER FIELD at Tower Bar

This year's Ska/Punk BBO features Epic 18 from Imperial. CA. as well as Rochester. Minnesota's Fall Risk. and DJ Yaya Byrd spinning ska vinyl. Representing the local scene is East County's the Danger Field, who say "We're just three guys trying to recapture the feeling of the '90s SoCal punk scene." After releasing an acoustic EP, their debut full-length The Last Of the Latchkey Kids dropped in 2016. A self-titled EP was released last April, and the band's YouTube channel profiles their skate-flavored brand of Green Day-inspired pop-punk with clips like a

JOHN MAYALL at the Belly Up

The Reader's local concert database goes back over a dozen years, and a guick browse indicates that British blues rock pioneer John Mayall has played the Belly Up once or twice per year for as long as the paper's website has existed, over 20 times, the majority of them marked sold out. And memory would seem to indicate that this is a longstanding tradition for the perpetually touring Mayall, whose total mileage on his never-ending road trip will likely never be surpassed unless Bob Dylan lives to be 100. Heck, I saw Mayall at the Solana Beach club back

Beethoven's Pastoral

ARTISTS Edo de Waart, conductor REPERTOIRE BEETHOVEN: Overture to Egmont, Op. 84 HAYDN: Symphony No. 92 in G Major: Oxford BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 6 in F Major: Pastoral Please join us 45 minutes before the concert for "What's the Score?", a lively talk about the composers and the repertoire given by commentator Nuvi Mehta from the stage of Copley Symphony Hall. ABOUT From the powerful and expressive strains of Egmont to the natural beauty of the Pastoral, experience Ludwig van Beethoven's mastery of musical drama. As Edo de Waart has said, there would have been no Beethoven without Franz Joseph Haydn. The symphony first came into its own through the works of Haydn, but it was in the music of his student, Beethoven, that the form's expressive potential truly revealed itself. Beethoven's Sixth took the symphony to new heights in its depiction of the power and beauty of the natural world. This concert is part of the San Diego Symphony's seasonlong celebration of Beethoven's 250th birthday. Friday, January 24, 8pm; Saturday, January 25, 8pm; $20-$100. Jacobs Music Center/Copley Symphony Hall, 750 B Street.

Jazz Vespers Each Jazz Vespers service begins with a 30-minute set of live jazz, blues, and gospel, featuring the Archie Thompson & the Archtones and guest musicians. Saturdays, 4:30pm; through Wednesday, December 30, free. First Presbyterian Church Chapel, 1740 4th Avenue. (DOWNTOWN SAN DIEGO)

Full Beethoven mode

The San Diego Symphony has been holding a January festival for the past several years. This year, the topic is Beethoven at 250 The festival started with performances of Beethoven's Leonora Overture No. 3, Piano Concerto No. 1, and Symphony No. 4. Over the next few weeks, Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 and Symphony No. 6 will also be performed. The conductor for these concerts is Edo de Waart, who holds the title of principal quest conductor.

It was our great fortune to have living legend Emmanuel Ax as the soloist for Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1. Mr. Ax is also in full Beethoven mode. January finds him San

The human body is about 60 percent water, but on Saturday, January 11, it appeared as though Emmanuel Ax's hands were 100 percent water. Such was the fluidity of his playing.

I always find it difficult to put into words the effect a great artist such as Mr. Ax has upon a concert and an audience. Were I to boil it down to the bare minimum, listening to him play this concerto felt good. I know that sounds basic in the extreme, but when all flowery language fails to convey the essence of a concert experience, what else can I say? The liquid quality of his playing led to a general feeling of well-being beyond mere astonishment at the technical accomplishment.

If only that general feeling of well-being could have been present in the orchestra's performances of the Leonora Overture and Symphony No. 4. I can't say that I was uneasy but the feeling of effortless musical accomplishment was not as prevalent.

The San Diego Symphony continued to play Beethoven in much the same way it always plays Beethoven. It cannot be called wooden or lackluster. It is much better than that, but every so often it does, indeed, lack luster.

"I experienced the orchestra's performance as a vast plateau which gently sloped down to the horizon.".

Most of the phrasing was accomplished, stylish, and satisfying, but every now and then there was a lack of intention in the details. Repeated notes or phrases tended to become disconnected and stale.

Everything was accurate, but at times it was only accurate, and that leads to a general sense of something other than well-being. I didn't feel an inner pulse which held the entire structure together.

Now I'm just one guy, but I experienced the orchestra's performance as a vast plateau which gently sloped down to the horizon. In the middle of that plateau was a polished peak of granite named Ax.

The setting has a way of obscuring any sort of resolution

an Diego Repertory Theatre's production of Stephen Karam's The Humans does a good deal of stage-setting before you even take your seat. A display by the box office provides "a behind-the scenes glimpse of the Scenic, Lighting, and Costume Design" for the show. The lobby walls feature an extensive exhibition of local artist Lauren LeVieux's oil paintings, titled Presence: Time Through Structure, and designed to "enhance the visitor's experience of The Humans...The generations interacting for keeps" in an apartment "where space reflects relationships, where rooms define connection." And a bulletin board features a prompt: "One thing my family never talks about at Thanksgiving dinner is..." A few of the pinned responses: How none of us are actually enjoying it. Bio Dad. My niece's alcoholism – everyone acts like falling on the floor is just normal. Sex. Whatever could potentially irk Dad. Things that actually matter.

But after I left the theater, I found myself wishing there had been at least one more element to help me enter into the drama. As it was, it was a solid day before it occurred to me that The Humans was less about its title — taken from the notion that when so-called monsters tell scary stories, it's people that serve as the villains — and more York City, just a little too close to where the towers fell on 9/11. Maybe that's on me, but I'm not sure. I do know that I wasn't alone in feeling like the show's end wasn't really a conclusion, that what I had witnessed was only the excavation of one family's dysfunction, and not its about its setting: a basement apartment in New family's dysfunction, an exploration.

Maybe it would have been different seeing the show in New York. Maybe Dad's early-on mention of the disaster, bumping up against a mysterious and powerful thud from above that gets blamed on an elderly Chinese neighbor, would have been enough to set me on edge. To make all the ordinary family stuff that followed — the unasked-for advice, the drunken pot shots, the generational tensions - not about itself but about one man's monstrous, unspoken anxiety. Things that actually matter. Whatever could potentially irk Dad. But here in San Diego, separated from the tragedy by 3000 miles and nearly 20 years, it was too easy to lump Dad's complaint about location in with his general air of paternal criticism. cell signal and trot out some Father Knows Best?) It was too easy to take the family drama at face value, to watch as the wine flowed and the truth came out, and to wait for the domestic fireworks. Wasn't that the point of the subterranean roots framing the underground apartment? To let us know that this was about Ye Olde Family Tree?

Say this for the Blakes: they're that rare stage family whose members actually love each other. When they talk about family being the important thing, the thing that endures, they mean it. They have their differences, but nobody's seething; nobody's looking to draw blood. That's impressive, and it's also convincingly portrayed, especially in the preservation of holiday traditions: the sung toast, the peppermint pig. But it also makes the proceedings feel broad - a joshing line like "Not even terrorists want to spend time in Philadelphia" could play on a network sitcom. And it makes the early-on eruptions of spite - Brigid answering her janitor father's complaints about the place with "it's not like you gave me any money to help me out" — feel jarring.

But of course, everyone's got their share of troubles wearing away at the Thanksgiving bonhomie. Grandma has dementia. Mom is frustrated at work, and sad that her family doesn't take her more concerns seriously. Dad is soaking the sheets with night sweats. Daughter Aimee has colitis and consequent job trouble, and to top it off, her lover has left her. And daughter Brigid is trying to make it as a classical musician in New York. So yeah, things are bound to get tense, even explosive. But when they do, it's not the humans that resolve the drama — as villains or as heroes. It's the setting. And while that setting is impressive - Chris Rynne's lighting and Giulio Perrone's set provide plenty of tension when called upon - it has a way of obscuring any sort of resolution. Which may be the point.

to move the Department of Motor Vehicles office out of Hillcrest began with community rejection of the firstdraft design misses the fact that Councilman Ward was already engaged in talks centered on relocating the DMV several months before the design was released.

The Hillcrest Business Association has its own reasons for discontent with how the Normal Street project has unfolded of late, says Nicholls. One is the fact that the design SANDAG has come up with is essentially a fixed, linear park that runs the length of what is now a drivable street that's easily converted to his organization's weekly farmer's market. The other concern is lack of certainty about the creation of a maintenance assessment district that his group would administer.

"If the city wants us to be involved in the management of the promenade, we have to be included in the design of the project. Showing us what they've designed isn't good enough."

Nicholls says representatives from City Hall need to "actually listen to neighborhood folks. We want to make sure that this space is designed well and concerns of the local businesses and residents are addressed."

a big way, thanks to a takeover attempt by a group of well-heeled MAGA fans, the Wall Street Journal reports. Hicks Equity Partners, run by Dallas, Texas tycoon Tommy Hicks, Jr., is out rounding up $250 million to buy Rose Canyon-based One America News Network, says the paper.

Put together by Robert Herring Sr. and run by his son Charles, One America is seen by Trump and his backers as a more stalwart conservative alternative to Fox News. A close friend of Donald Trump, Jr., Hicks is a longtime Trump donor and co-chairman of the Republican National Committee. But Hicks partner Rick Newman insisted that the deal was not political. "Over the last 25 years, we have been active media investors. Any interest in OANN is from a purely business standpoint." said Newman to the Journal. And an email sent to the newspaper by the younger Herring suggested the San Diego owners may be playing hard to get. "With the 2020 political season in full swing, expressed interest is on the rise," he was quoted as writing. "Yet our family didn't build our operations to sell it."

world. In May 2019, the network complained via Twitter that the president hadn't mentioned it in a Grand Rapids, Michigan speech during which he lavished praise on Fox News. "President Trump recently gave a speech thanking his supporters in the media. Not a single mention of One America News--one of his GREATEST supporters...@OANN calls bullshit," said the tweet, as reported by Vox.com.

Among those confirming intentions to join the current bid for One America is Doug Deason, affiliated with Charles and the late David Koch, donor to San Diego mayor Kevin Faulconer's One San Diego non-profit, and criminal justice reform advocate.

Speaking of reform, Deason wrote in a 2015 New York Times opinion piece that "like many 17-yearolds, I did something stupid. It was 1979, and I threw a party at the home of neighbors while they were out of town. (Their son had given me a key.) The party got out of hand, ultimately getting the attention of the police. I was charged with felony burglary. I ultimately pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor criminal trespass charge a significant step down from felony burglary. My punishment included a six-month probationary sentence and a fine. When my probation was complete, my youthful indiscretion was expunged from my record. I was given a second chance."

Deason's father is Darwin, founder and ex-chairman of Affiliated Computer Services, who in 2009 bought a sizable chunk of La Jolla oceanfront real estate on Spindrift Drive from one-time Trump ambassadorial hopeful Doug Manchester for $18.15 million. The Dallas billionaire subsequently forked over a $3284 to San Diego lobbyist Matthew Peterson to ease the construction of his sprawling baroque remodel past city regulators.

Quezon's Game: Filipino Philosemite

or a month, the link languished in my mailbox — I put off playing Quezon's Game until the latest possible moment. Frankly, the thought of a Filipino Schindler's List held about as much interest as watching Pinoy TV with Hebrew subtitles. But rejoice! It may not always qualify as great cinema, but when it comes to presenting a fascinating, emotionally rewarding history lesson, you'll be hanging on every scene. Plus, there's just enough Tagalog spoken to satisfy the natives in the crowd, but not so many subtitles that it will tax the average American moviegoer.

A post-logos disclaimer warns that while much of what will follow is based on truth, the filmmakers are not above borrowing a cup of poetic license to sweeten their tale. We open in 1944, with his excellency Manuel L. Quezon (Raymond Bagatsing), second President of the Philippines, and his wife Aurora (Rachel Alejandro) watching what is presumably the first newsreel footage of Hitler's death camps put on public view. Heightened for dramatic purposes, Quezon's question, which bookends the film, is a familiar one: "Could I have done more?" How much of what follows is true and how much is manufactured hokum along the lines of Oskar Schindler asking how many more lives he could have saved had he sold one of his cars? I could have done more to provide an answer, had I only watched the film in a more timely fashion.

Flashback to 1938. With the war ramping up, a telegram arrives from Jewish cigar tycoon Alex Frieder (Billy Ray Gallion), bearing news of Germany's plan for a final solution. On paper, the alternative sounded like a no-brainer: the Nazis had Jews they wanted to dispose of, and the Filipinos were willing to take them in. Under the guise of boosting the economy, Quezon posted classified ads offering Jews professional jobs in the Philippines. Reasoning that paper is cheaper than Zyklon B, they'd be doing Hitler a favor, taking Jews off his hands for nothing more than the cost of an exit visa. For a brief period, it worked. The Japanese invasion of the Philippines in 1942 put an end to Quezon's game, but not before over 1200 migrants were saved from certain extinction.

Quezon was more concerned with saving lives than swaying voters. In order to do so, he needed to first convince Washington to open up immigration restrictions. This was a time when our nation's capital was teeming with antisemites, none moreso than fictional composite Jonathan Cartwright (Paul Holme) an American liason who hated Nazis, but not as much as he hated Jews, who he classified as "worse than n----s." Quezon was determined to help the Jews, with or without the support of the United States government. There is but one gestapo in the picture, the toothsome, face-invading Lt. Ebner (Kevin Kraemer), who arrives in Manila clad in full Nazi regalia. Unlike Schindler's List, the goal here is not to recount Nazi atrocities so much as it is to amplify the amount of compassion that went into Quezon's deisions.

I was unable to track down the film's budget, but I'm guessing this was not a case of first-timer Matthew Rosen having Hollywood millions to burn. In addition to directing, Rosen is credited with writing the story, plus managing cinematography and editing. The film no doubt looks a lot more expensive than it was, leaving one to bemoan some of the smaller, more easily preventable mistakes pertaining to period accoutrement. The whiskey that's decanted throughout the picture bears more than a passing resemblance to watered down Snapple. The orchestra that plays the presidential gala appears to have been patterned after a '90's wedding band, right down to the locks of the lead singer, whom we're led to believe is Quezon's mistress. In fact, one of the only hairstyles they got right was General Eisenhower's (David Bianco). But at least the side-by-side comparison photos of actors and subjects that close the picture reveal a meticulous eve for casting. A followup visit to You-Tube unearthed newsreel footage of Quezon. It's more than just an imitation: Bagatsing's nuanced performance taps into Quezon's every move, sound, and thought.

There is a great film waiting to be made about President Franklin Roosevelt and the U.S. government closing American borders in the spring of 1942 to boatloads of Jewish refugees seeking asylum. News of Hitler's death camps reached American shores later that year. Why did it take FDR so long to help rescue European Jews? Quezon's Game brings these issues fully into light, drawing parallels to contemporary world unrest, while remaining careful to avoid being coy or overtly obvious. Nor was Quezon's game to shy away from singling out a culture of bigotry as one of the major culprits behind America's indolence. After all, in his eyes, the "Colored Only" signs that for years dirtied the American landscape stood for all people of color. What's one more Filipino, or Jew for that matter?

It's another case of my asking that you work for your art. As of this writing, the film is scheduled to play one week at one theatre: the AMC in Mission Valley. If 1917 put you in the mood for another, far-superior war film, then the one-take gimmickry was worth it.

Dr. No (1962)

James Bond was my generation's pop culture counterpart to Star Wars, and as such, the first six installments are pretty much beyond criticism. But the first indications of the franchise ramping up the camp and becoming a slave to gadgetry were apparent as early as You Only Live Twice. For my money, the series ended on a high note with the release of On Her Majesty's Secret Service, still the most adult of the Eon-produced 007 titles. It's interesting to see how much has changed since the series commenced with this tightly drawn thriller. Instead of globetrotting, we open and close in Jamaica. There's no precredit sequence of the sort that would later become a series trademark, and Maurice Binder's credits are completely animated, in a bouncing-ball manner reminiscent of Saul Bass' intro to Ocean's 11. We meet Bond at a baccarat table, where he's revealed to us in bits and pieces; reaction shots of the various players cut together with tight closeups of Sean Connery's body. It's only after a winning hand and a celebratory smoke that we see his face. The regulation Bond girl (Ursula Andress) doesn't make her famous entrance until an hour into the picture, and it'll be another 20 minutes after that before the eponymous agent of evil (Joseph Wiseman) is seen. With but one special effect to show for itself, this is as gentlemanly-paced a 007 picture as you're ever likely to find. CORONADO VILLAGE THEATER: Wednesday, January 29 at 5 pm.

Love Story (1970)

Where do I begin? "Death Story," as it came to be called, was the film that introduced Hollywood's concept of a "set-'em up-towatch-'em-die" picture to my then-15-yearold brain. The script originally called for the movie to open with the doctor bluntly informing Oliver (Ryan O'Neal) that his young bride Jenny (Ali MacGraw) was a goner. Worried that this wouldn't allow the audience any time to get to know her character, director Arthur Hiller instead started the story at the beginning and trudged ahead chronologically. But in that case, why begin with narrator Oliver seated alone and teasing the audience with, "What can you say about a 25-year-old girl who died?" Doesn't it defeat the purpose of relocating the bad news delivery to two-thirds of the way into the picture? The film also marked the first time I can recall having to issue a firm "Shush!" to a fellow theatre patron. Nancy Reagan despised the film, due to its plethora of profanities. Seated behind me were a pair of chatty, white-gloved Reaganites. Every few minutes found them gasping, "Oh! Did you hear what she said?" After about the fifth interruption, I turned and said, "Bullshit, lady. She said bullshit." Their mutual "Harumph!" was followed by a quick retreat to the back of the house. Believe it or don't. this dog was nominated for seven golden doorstops. As interpreted by Oscar-nominee MacGraw, Jenny died as she lived: smirking. One of the original reviewers observed that the closer Jenny inched towards death, the more beautiful she became. Oscar-nominee Hiller's contribution to the advancement of cinema was attaching a camera to a hockey stick. And his slow, 20-to-1 zoom-in on the exterior of a Harvard house as the badlydubbed couple are heard joking around about sex is better suited to radio. A copy of the double-LP soundtrack, complete with dialogue from the film, found its way into my hands, and left me asking, What kind of a monster would think of adding a laugh track to these somber proceedings? Sure wish I still had the cassette tape. See it at your own risk when it screens citywide

Geyrhalter positions his subjects center-frame, and rather than editing around his questions, he simply snips them out, clumsily interrupting the flow of thoughts with momentary cuts in and out of black. I Love You, I Don't (Je t'aime moi non plus) — Get the margarine; it's a low-rent Last Tango In Paris. Broodingly handsome gay garbage collector Krassky (Joe Dallesandro) strays from his volatile lover and partner in asepsis (Hugues Quester) and in the direction of Johnny (Jane Birkin), a boyish and beleaguered waitress he encounters working behind the counter of deserted roadside diner. A dream date almost ends in disaster, with our otherwise virle hero finding it impossible to achieve orgasm through vaginal penetration. The quick thinking Krassky instead flips Johnny over, and the sounds she makes while being sodomized were turned into the "lyrics" of one of composer and first-time director Serge Gainsbourg's hit songs. As pointless and pretentious as soft core porn gets, every smudged window and pockmarked screen door stands as a glaring testament to texture supplanting meaning. Gainsbourg and trophy-mate Birkin were an item at the time. making this less of a film and more of an amateur with a camera winking at the audience as if to say, "Look what I'm getting!" 1976. – S.M. • (LANDMARK KEN)

The Irishman — During his fight against the Nazis, Frank Sheeran (Robert De Niro) forced a pair of enemy soldiers to dig a hole that, in the few seconds it took to fire off a few rounds, became their eternal resting place. Little did the soldier know at the time, but this "follow orders and you're rewarded" mentality was preparing him for a career in the mob. Speaking of following orders, Scorsese hops in bed with Netflix for a return to the genre that has brought him the most amount of box office success. It's great to see the old guard together again, with Scorsese newcomer Al Pacino noisily stealing the show as Jimmy Hoffa. When he goes, much of the energy gets buried with him. The tale of the teamster who wacked the hand that fed him is never boring, but at this stage in his career, one expected something more than a small screen gangster epic from the man who redefined the genre. He knew all along that the majority of viewers would come to the film on television, so he shot accordingly. A betting man would wager that well over half the picture was composed in TV-safe closeups and reverse angle shots of well-paid actors talking, the impact of which would not be lost on a flatscreen. I liked it better when Scorsese, not the medium, dictated shot size. 2019. — S.M. ★★★ (DIGITAL GYM CINEMA)

Just Mercy — Alabama logging worker Walter McMillian (Jamie Foxx) looks skyward towards the gap left by a recently felled tree, never dreaming of the hole in his life this foreshadowing shot would come to represent. McMillian fit the M.O. of a scapegoat, and he was wrongfully sentenced to death for killing Ronda Morrison, an 18-year-old white dry-cleaning clerk. His case was appealed and overturned, thanks to crusading defense attorney (and founder of the Equal Justice Initiative) Bryan Stevenson (Michael B. Jordan). It's good acting at its finest in this preaching to the choir "right to life" drama that might have worked had the filmmakers chosen to show the audience a little mercy by not constantly talking down to them. There were two venal Vincente Minnelli patriarchs to choose from neither of whom had Liz Taylor as his on-screen daughter. Arthur Kennedy is pure scum in Some Came Running. On the surface he's Parkman, Indiana's #1 son, but his heart pumps silt. Still, revulsive though he may be (in a good way), he is no match for Robert Mitchum in Home From the Hill. Director Minnelli asks us to accept George Hamilton in the role of Mitchum's son. (And I goof on Spielberg's inability to suspend disbelief!) But what delight awaits, watching Mitchum belittle the evertanned (and ever-fledgling) actor. But all roads lead to Bob's heated moment of comeuppance: eighty-seven minutes in, Hamilton enters dad's study/arsenal to make it known that he's hip to the fact that one of the ranch hands is his half-brother. So what if Pop sewed a few wild oats with a tramp who gave birth by the side of a ditch? Hamilton follows with the line of his career: "She must have been some pig to crawl into bed with you." Thawing momentarily, Bob stammers, "We'll just let that...We'll just let that pass became of Morrison's murderer? The closing crawls inform audiences as to the whereabouts of several of the film's wrongfully condemned characters. Call it a case of selective compassion, but I had to Google the victim's name to learn that her killer has yet to be brought to justice. Directed and co-written by Destin Daniel Cretton. 2019. — S.M. ★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Midnight Family — Mexico City has 45 government operated emergency service vehicles to serve a population of approximately 9 million. That leaves a wide open market for private care, and this is the story of one such hospital wagon and the family in the heat of the moment." Flustered Mitchum. How often does that appear on the menu? When it does, savor it!

WRITTEN ON THE WIND (1956)

"A great man! A giant of a man!" To hear his family speak, you'd half-expect Jonas Salk and Amazing Colossal Man Glenn Langan to enter hand-in-hand. Instead of a titan, director Douglas Sirk portrays oil tycoon Jasper Hadley (Robert Raging Bull: Fadder o' the year Joey LaMotta!

Keith) as a pocket-sized but nowerful house mouse. The inheritors to his throne are his impotent lush of a son (Robert Stack) and a doxy daughter (Dorothy Malone) who makes Mitchum's "sand hill tacky" look like a Disney Princess. Halfway through the picture, Old Man Hadley's ticker gives out, forcing him to take a fatal spill down the family's grand staircase. (If a diminutive oil tycoon falls in the middle of a mansion, does anybody hear?) It doesn't help that his daughter — Sirk's framing reducing her to a calcitrating torso — is blasting a molten version of "Temptation" on her Victrola. Patroclinous trivia: milguetoast Robert Keith was the real life sire of strapping Brian Keith, movie dad to both Hayley Millses in The Parent Trap, and TV's "Uncle Bill" on Family Affair.

RAGING BULL (1980)

Jake La Motta (Robert DeNiro) is by no means Judge Hardy, but the father of the year award goes to the younger LaMotta brother. Unfortunately, there isn't enough quality screen time devoted to Joey (Joe Pesci) and his kids, but the thirty seconds we do get > to spend around the family dinner table is magic. Joey points a knife at his young son and threatens, "If I see you put your hand in the plate one more time, I'm gonna' stab you with this knife. You hear me?" We never learn if Joey, Jr.

got the message, for no sooner is his dad about to bludgeon the tot with a butter knife than Uncle Jake saves the day by bursting into the house and putting his brother's head through a glass door. Every day is Father's Day in the LaMotta household, ya' son of a bitch! And while we're on the subject of father figures, here's a little mob movie trivia. Russell Bufalino, the character played by Joe Pesci in The Irishman, was the real-life godfather to Al Martino. Upon learning that Martino's role as Johnny Fontaine in The Godfather had been taken from him and given to Vic Damone, the singer put in a call to Bufalino, who stepped in and smoothed things out.

that's been in business for 20 years. They race to be the first on the scene to administer care, and more times than not, wind up getting stiffed for their services. On a bad night, they spend more money on gas and Fabulosa - the latter needed to to keep the back of the ambo smelling fresh. Seventeenyear-old Juan, he of the perfect hair and winning personality, repeatedly reminds the family that the ambulance feeds them. When he's not manning the scanner, he's calling up his girlfriend to recount that night's exploits. At 81 minutes, you won't be bored, but don't be surprised if the car ride home finds you questioning how an audition reel for a reality television program earned a theatrical release. 2019. — S.M.  $\bigstar$  (DIGITAL GYM)

Richard Jewell — Clint Eastwood worked five years putting the film together, and there's not another actor out there who'd make a better lead than Paul Walter Hauser. Their similarity is uncanny, but it's much more than that: Jewell is not a celebrity along the lines of, say, Ray Charles or Mr. Rogers. So unlike most celebrity biopics, this isn't a matter of makeup and mimicry, where an actor is afforded the luxury of poring over hours of footage before hitting their mark. And whether or not a newspaper reporter propositioned an FBI agent to get a scoop is second only to the fact that were it not for their rush to judgement. Jewell would have lived out the remainder of his life in a manner befitting a hero. Alas, the film tanked at the box office. Did people stay home fearing a lecture on fake news from a crabby old Republican prone to speaking to unoccupied chairs? Give the man some credit. With 38 movies to his name, director Eastwood's a much sharper smuggler than that. Set aside a couple of hours this holiday season to spend with a pair of real-life American heroes. 2019. — S.M. ★★★★★ (ARCLIGHT LA JOLLA)

Uncut Gems — Howard Ratner's (Adam Sandler) day is consumed with robbing Peter to pawn to Paul. His life is a constant juggling act, his desperate ploy a complex series of bets involving a multitude of moving parts. If he can distract his clients long enough to keep afloat everything, the rewards could top over a million. Howard is based on a real-life character who worked alongside directors Josh and Benny Safdie's dad in the Diamond District back in the day. There's much scuzzy fun to be had, but nothing tops a moment of unexpected sensuality between married Howard a his younger secretary/mistress (Julia Fox in a blistering debut). Pretending that he's in a cab, Howard hides in the closet, sexting Julia as he watches her prepare for his arrival. For a brief moment, we're granted full access to Howard's charisma; we understand what drove the directors to fashion an entire feature around him. And while the Safdies aren't able to shake all the obvious tropes — dangling a character head first out a window, a gag involving a file and a security door, etc. - their vision is singular enough to keep it interesting up until the ending...well, just ends. 2019. - S.M.  $\star \star \star$  (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Underwater — Will Eubank trades in the cramped, outmoded U.S. Air Force base that played home to extraterrestrial biological entities in his previous film, The Signal, for an underwater research lab imagineered in a style that evokes a crumbling '80s health club. There's nothing alien about this plot: a subterranean tremor does irreparable structural damage to the facility. And no sooner does the ocean rebel against the corporate-financed mission than it's up to our six surviving occupants to improvise an escape route, unexpectedly lined with Dolby-flexing sea monsters. What once would have been classified a B-movie boasts an A-list performance by Kristen Stewart, surpassed only by cinematographer Bojan Bazelli's buoyant ascent through a torrent of flickering sludge. Providing the occasional unintentional laughs are T.J. Miller's growingly annoying variation on a waterlogged Jeff Spicoli and a mumbling. decidedly undecided Jessica Henwick who. not knowing whether to laugh, cry, or shriek, will on occasion do all three. There's no better feeling than starting the New Year right with an affectionate, action-packed genre picture. 2020. — S.M.  $\star \star \star$  (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Yojimbo — Akira Kurosawa's bloodyminded political parable about the struggle for supremacy in a godforsaken 17th-San century rural village. The feudists on both Diego sides are uniformly petty, pea-brained, and baboonish (the only thing protecting them from one another is their cowardice), Re and justice is done when an unemployed ader samurai wanders into their midst and capriciously slaughters them all. Toshiro Mifune, Jan scratching and swaggering to a great scratching and swaggering to a great musical score, enjoys himself enormously as the nihilistic samurai who is endowed with 23 an unsportsmanly superiority in the art of ,2020 swordfighting. 1962. — D.S. ★★★★ (LANDMARK KEN)

news of the WeiRD

Hair of the Dog

- In a whole new twist on stomach pumping, doctors in Quang Tri, Vietnam, saved 48-year-old Nguyen Van Nhat's life in January by transfusing 15 cans of beer INTO his stomach. As Dr. Le Van Lam explained to the Daily Mail, alcohol contains both methanol and ethanol, and the liver breaks down ethanol first. But after a person stops drinking, the stomach and intestines continue to release alcohol into the bloodstream even if the drinker has lost consciousness and alcohol levels continue to rise. In Nhat's case, upon arrival at the hospital, his blood methanol level was 1,119 times higher than the appropriate limit. Doctors administered one can of beer every hour to slow down his metabolizing of methanol, which gave them time to perform dialysis. Nhat spent three weeks in the hospital before returning home.

Blame It on the Meth

- Debra Lynn Johnson, 69, of Searles, Minnesota, suffered from heart disease, diabetes, high blood pressure and mental illnesses, according to the Mankato Free Press, and was a patient at a transitional care center before her husband took her home to have a "death party," he later told authorities. Brown County sheriff's officers responding to a 911 call from Duane Arden Johnson, 58, on Jan. 24 found the words "Death Parde God Hell" spray-painted on the front door. Duane came out of the house naked, yelled that his wife was dead and ran back inside, where officers found him in the bathtub picking

"things" from his skin. Debra's body, still warm, was wrapped in a sheet. Duane told police his wife had begged him to take her home to die, so they had staged the party, "rocking out" to Quiet Riot's "Metal Health" and taking methamphetamines. After her death, Duane said he washed and wrapped her "like the Bible told me to do." Police found stolen guns and hundreds of rounds of ammunition in the home, and Duane was charged with felony counts of theft and receiving stolen property.

Ewwww!

- Penny Pospisil, 47, of Sumter County, Florida, was arrested on Jan. 25 for the alleged murder of her boyfriend, 55-year-old Anthony Mitchell, according to WFTV. Investigators believe that last August, in the Lake Pan RV Village where Pospisil and Mitchell lived, she killed Mitchell and cut his body into pieces, living with the remains in their camper. When neighbors asked about him, she explained that Mitchell had died of natural causes and she had him cremated. But they also noticed a foul odor coming from the camper and that Pospisil was regularly showering at the pool. When police arrived in December to investigate her overdue lot fee, she told them that she was a victim of domestic violence and had killed Mitchell in self-defense. She faces charges of second-degree murder and abuse of a dead human body.

Names in the News

- Your giggle for the week: During a Jan. 17 special program on ITV Westcountry in the United Kingdom about how police forces are suffering under budget cuts, a certain officer interviewed for the show got more attention for his name than for his opinions about the budget. PC Rob Banks has undoubtedly heard clever remarks about his name all his life, reported Plymouth Live, but Twitter users from as far away as Australia found it newly hilarious.

Try the Decaf

- Officers in Madison, Wisconsin, were called to a home on Jan. 20 by an unnamed 34-year-old male resident who went on a sprée of destruction when he thought his wife had destroyed his prized collection of action figures. Madison Police Chief Mike Koval wrote in his blog that officers arrived to find an ax buried in the windshield of a car. The man explained to them he had overreacted and used the log-splitting ax to chop up a TV, TV stand, laptop computer and other items in the house before going outside to attack his car, chopping off both side mirrors and breaking out the windshield, reported WMTV. He admitted to officers that he had also been drinking too much, and he was charged with disorderly conduct and felony damage to property.

The Entrepreneurial Spirit

- A 19-year-old man from Nice, France, has received a four-month (suspended) sentence for a clever plot he hatched in September. The man, known only as Adel, removed a PlayStation 4 from a supermarket shelf on Sept. 17 and took it to the produce aisle, where he weighed it and printed out a price sticker for fruit. Then he used the self-checkout line to pay and left the store with a $389 piece of electronics for about $10. Adel sold the PlayStation for $114 to buy a train ticket. The next day, he tried the same scheme, but police caught him in the act. He will only have to serve his sentence if he re-offends, reported Kotaku.com.

Least Competent Criminals

- Oh, those pesky surveillance cameras. Alexander Goldinsky, 57, had a bright idea for collecting some cash, but it was just so 1990s. While working as an independent contractor at a Woodbridge, New Jersey, business, Goldinsky scattered some ice on the floor in the company's kitchen area, then carefully arranged himself on the floor as if he had slipped and fallen, according to United Press International. Then, as the security cameras rolled, he waited to be discovered. He was arrested in January on charges of insurance fraud and theft by deception, after the Middlesex County Prosecutor's Office said Goldinsky filed a false insurance claim for an ambulance ride and treatment at a local hospital.
