TIJUANA

Deportee charity Chef feeds those who now are where she once was

“On this side, there are also dreams,” Esther Morales says to the people she helps out — migrants and deported persons. More than once, she has been in their situation; now, she owns a successful tamal restaurant called La Antiguita in the heart of Tijuana’s downtown. And thanks to the business’s prosperity, she has had the chance to get involved in local migrant activism: giving warm food (tamales and champurrado) to migrants, either on the streets or in shelters.

The Comida Calientita project has given people around 10,000 warm meals since March of 2020.

around 50 years old; one year later, she started her own business. “I started cooking in the shelter I first went to after my deportation – Madre Asunta Institute,” she recalls. “I had spent 20 years working in

“In spite of the pandemic and the risk of getting infected and my 61 years, we keep doing it, because of our love for the people.”

Between 1989 and 2010, Morales was deported nine times. After her last deportation, she decided to stay in Mexico; she didn’t have enough strength left to try crossing again. At the time, she was the U.S. as a cook. I recognized the need. Sometimes we even had no tortillas; there weren’t as many NGOs helping migrants at the time as there are today.”

After the shelter, she found work and housing by taking care of an older woman, and saved up the money to start La Antiguita. She invested 2000 pesos (about 100 U.S. dollars) in her first batch of tamales. In the beginning, Morales was selling just 10 or 12 tamales daily. But now, she may sell up to 100, especially in the winter.

While working on her business, Morales was coming back to the Madre Asunta shelter to donate meals and prepare Christmas dinners. Her name became a synonym for charity among the migrant community, and her work got the attention of the NGO Al Otro Lado, especially from Soraya Vazquez, who offered to sponsor Morales’ dream project. “My project is called Comida Calientita,” explains Morales. “Thanks to the financial support of Soraya and Al

Morales invested two thousand pesos (about 100 U.S. dollars) on her first batch of tamales.

Otro Lado, La Antiguita has given around 10,000 warm meals in more than 12 shelters or in the streets of the city since we began in March of 2020. In spite of the pandemic and the risk of getting infected and my 61 years, we keep doing it, because of our love for the people.”

Luckily, she hasn’t gotten the virus, but she was seriously injured last year. Somebody cut her neck with a knife, and she had to stop providing food to migrants for a couple of months. Her story made national news in Mexico. “I had a problem with a nephew who was deported. He was constantly asking me for money until I said no, and he attacked me with a knife. I was pretty delicate; it came within one centimeter of my trachea. I stopped for three months and then came back to work; for me, there’s no better therapy than that.”

OCEANSIDE

The law of the straw You have to ask for one now

It’s a day many have worked and waited for: Oceanside’s restaurants are about to get stingy about straws and other single-use plastics. On August 4, a once-reluctant city council finally agreed to require businesses to provide such disposable meal accessories upon request only. Janis Jones, a local teacher and activist, said her group began advocating for a single-use plastic ordinance four years ago. “Since then, the problem has only gotten worse.”

The city began with loftier goals. As part of the Zero Waste Plan, staff spent two years drafting an ordinance that would bar restaurants from using polystyrene foam by June 2022 — replacing it with recyclable or compostable “to-go ware” — and would require them to provide plastic items like straws upon request only by July 2023. In March, the city council rejected it. Then — at least as the residents, school groups, and environmentalists who supported a ban saw it — they took a big step backwards, turning the ordinance into a resolution that simply “encouraged” businesses to reduce plastic waste. Since Styrofoam foodware is cheaper than recyclable or compostable options, such encouragement wasn’t likely to help the big litter picture.

According to the Surfrider Foundation’s 2020 report, almost 90 percent of the trash plucked off beaches nationwide is plastic. Straws are among the top ten most plentiful items. A study from San Diego Coastkeeper found that 53 percent of the collected beach litter samples on the San Diego coast were

Lockdown = lobby up

Pandemic produces political paydays

The year of the big covid-19 shutdown was San Diego city hall's most lucrative year for behind-the-scenes influence peddling. "In 2020, a total of 57 lobbying firms and 61 organization lobbyists registered a total of 380 individual lobbyists with the City Clerk," says the Annual Summary of Lobbying Activity for 2020, reviewed August 12 by the San Diego city Ethics Commission. "Lobbying firms reported receiving a total of $5,529,336 from their clients," according to the report. "Organization lobbyists reported making a total of 2,135 lobbying contacts with high-level City Officials."

Grouped by quarter, lobbying payments ran from a high of $1,604,468 during April through June of last year to a low of $1,040,223 from October through December. Those numbers represent a sizeable boost from the year before, when total lobbyist compensation stood at $4,272,931, and lobbying contacts numbered 1612, per the commission's report for 2019, dated June 5, 2020. "During the 2019 calendar year, 58 lobbying firms and 57 organization lobbyists registered a total of 379 individual lobbyists with the City Clerk," the report notes.

As they increased their take from clients, members of the city's registered lobbying corps in turn hiked their campaign giving, sending an avalanche of cash to local politicians, the data shows. "Lobbying firms and organization lobbyists reported a total of $982,772 in campaign contributions made to City candidates, and to committees primarily formed to support or oppose City candidates," notes the report covering 2020. In addition, the document says, "Lobbying firms and organization lobbyists disclosed raising $458,716 for City candidates and for committees formed to support or oppose City candidates." The year before, generally an off year for political activity, lobbyists themselves came up with $268,835 in cash for candidates and committees, raising $924,273 from others. "It should be noted that the definition of 'fundraising' is limited to funds personally delivered to a City candidate, and contributions a lobbyist has taken some credit for raising with the candidate or the candidate's controlled committee," the report explains.

Besides being a historic year for Covid-19, 2020 marked the final months in office for GOP San Diego mayor Kevin Faulconer, who cultivated his ties to money-laden lobbyists, many of them political friends and former staffers, for gubernatorial campaign

UCSD's moonlighting abuse

It's an open secret that some already richly paid UCSD academic staffers have been taking advantage of lax enforcement of the school's limits on overtime, moonlighting, and other off-the-job activity to make even more money. But now the school's auditors have called out the problem in a newly released report dated May 3 that mentions no names or specific over-compensation numbers, but chronicles a litany of behind-the-scenes payroll abuse. "Per UC conflict of commitment policies, outside professional activities must not interfere with a faculty member's obligations to the University," says the document. The report explains that "outside professional activities are those activities that are within a faculty member's area of professional academic expertise, and that advance or communicate that expertise through interaction within the industry or community or with the public." Even if up-front cash compensation isn't involved, the audit says, a so-called conflict of commitment may still exist. "A conflict of commitment occurs when a faculty member's outside activities, compensated or uncompensated, and regardless of financial interest, interfere with the faculty member's professional obligations to UC."

Auditors say they discovered "instances where approvals to exceed time (Campus and Health Sciences) and salary (Health Sciences only) were granted by Campus and Health Sciences administrators who did not have delegated authority from the Chancellor." In addition, "we noted two instances of salary that exceeded threshold but without approval." According to the findings, "faculty were not always in compliance with annual report submission requirements and Deans have not taken appropriate corrective action." Also according to the document, "consequences for non-compliance were not established or enforced for either the Campus or Health Sciences." If auditors get their way, future penalties will be stiffer. "Health Sciences faculty are subject to good standing criteria, which is to be established by each department, in order to earn and retain income from professional activities," the audit says. "Loss of good standing may affect the amount of the faculty member's negotiated additional compensation and/or incentive and bonus compensation and their ability to engage in outside professional activities. However, to date, no faculty member has faced the consequences for failure to comply with the Plan or implementing procedures on outside professional activities requirements."

San Diego's Board of Supervisors is getting ready to levy a tax on pot, and needs some advice about it. So relates a July 30 Request for Proposals seeking Cannabis Taxation Program Consultant Services. "County staff is seeking an experienced consultant to develop a tax strategy, ballot measure and ordinance related to adult-use and medicinal cannabis (inclusive of hemp and hemp-derived CBD products where applicable) that is equitable for business operating in the unincorporated areas of the county," says the solicitation. Besides drafting a ballot measure and an approval strategy, the consultant is expected to perform as the supervisors' pro-pot coach, responsible for "Board of Supervisors preparation meetings, dry run presentation, rehearsal presentation, and hearing." Optional services include "Consultation to support implementation of Cannabis Taxation Program, upon approval of ballot measure." The deadline for proposals is August 20.

Meanwhile, the board has also been looking for someone to provide a Social Equity Program for Commercial Cannabis, according to a separate Request for Proposals, dated July 20. "County staff is seeking a consultant to develop a Social Equity program for commercial cannabis that informs the commercial cannabis ordinances, regulations, and programs that will work to repair the historic harm caused by the prior criminalization of marijuana and effects socially just and equitable outcomes," says the request, without offering much further detail. Media to be provided by the consultant include "a public facing website, with language translation accessibility, including, but not limited to, Spanish, Filipino, Chinese, Vietnamese, and Arabic," and "instructional videos that are professional quality and introduce interested people to the County's social equity program." Neither solicitation contains price limits...Get ready for a big-money push for new transportation taxes. A new campaign committee calling itself the San Diego Alliance for Traffic Relief, Reliable Transit & Jobs has set up shop here as of August 2, per a filing with the county Registrar of Voters. The fund's treasurer and principal officer is listed as Gretchen Newsom, a onetime mayoral hopeful and current political director of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 569, representing

San Diego trolley workers. Other principal officers include Mark Weber of mega-contractor HNTB Corporation; Valentine Macedo, Business Manager of Laborers Union Local 59; and Doug Hicks, chief of the Los Angeles-based Southwest Regional Council of Carpenters.

Sunday night knockoff

This is the lady cab driver who got kinda messed over when we had the articles on the Gaslamp and LiMandri called for a bunch of meetings over it, and it's long term history. Part of the problem is I am long-term history.

Your Allen Glick article ("Allen Glick and the killing of Tamara Rand," News Ticker, August 8) was missing one itsy-bitsy detail. The day that Tamara Rand got bumped off, and Dr. Rand found her in the kitchen, the timing of it was that the next day she was going to First American Title, I believe in Riverside, not the one here in San Diego, in order to turn in Glick with a ton of evidence, and the woman was an attorney. She was leaving in the morning and she got it the day before. I believe it was a Sunday evening.

"Nancy Worlie cleans house at KPBS"
News Under the Radar

August 11

Describing de la Torre as "once-controversial" is putting it mildly. She was at the epicenter of a scandal at UC Davis that ended up in her boss, also a woman, being fired as chancellor. But instead of being fired too, she floated free and washed up here in San Diego as the new president of SDSU. At last report, her salary was the highest of all the campus heads in the CSU system. For that sort of price she should be doing plenty to shake things up and make the operation run better. As for KPBS, the station chugs along, begging for contributions, and then ignoring the desires of its frequent listeners/viewers and most ardent supporters. Should those "public" stations be run by university campus bosses? Or might they be far better off if the community could participate via a foundation?

plastics, much of it polystyrene. And while California banned the automatic provision of plastic straws at dine-in restaurants starting in 2019, fast food was exempt. Advocates began lobbying the city to at least pass a “skip the stuff” ordinance to tackle the steady stream of and drinks make up about 25 percent of the waste produced, according to the city’s report.

Several local cities already have “upon request” ordinances: Vista, Encinitas, Solana Beach and San Diego. And polystyrene foam is banned in Vista, Encinitas, Solana Beach, Imperial Beach, and San Diego (pending environmental review). Reversing course in response to local pressure, Oceanside has now passed a resolution supporting the reduction of marine debris and litter from single-use polystyrene and plastic items, and — as activists sought — announced plans to come back with a new skip-the-stuff ordinance within six months. The motion by deputy mayor Ryan Keim was unanimously approved.

The “Marine Debris Reduction Resolution” targets materials that often end up as litter. Polystyrene (styrofoam) and plastic straws aren’t accepted in the city’s recycling program, said Oceanside environmental officer Colleen Foster. Businesses will be urged to phase out these hard-to-recycle plastics through a voluntary compliance program. And there are possible monetary savings if they only provide items like straws if a customer asks for them.

The estimated cost of the program to the city is $10,000, which Foster said will be used for education and outreach and to develop a cooperative purchasing program to work with businesses to mitigate the use of polystyrene. It’s a small cost for a community with an ocean economy. Business owner Marissa Figuero says she’s tired of seeing plastic strewn throughout the city, working its way to the ocean, or as an “oil spill we bury on dry land.”

SHEILA PELL

No use crying over spilled milk — or rice cookers.

ON THE ROAD Unlucky trucks

Trailer failure leads to multiple messes

On July 28, a truck full of Aroma-brand rice cookers overturned a couple of blocks north of Mira Mesa Boulevard. “We were confused how that freaking big thing happened,” an employee of a nearby business said to me on August 6. “When I came out for lunch, it was already tipped over, and I was like, ‘Oh cool, I have the whole action in front of me.’” The San Diego Police Department posted a Facebook video of what transpired in the aftermath of the accident that Wednesday: inside the rear of the toppled cargo truck, two police officers in uniform and four individuals in civilian clothing formed a daisy chain. The six of them passed rice cooker-filled boxes to people outside, who loaded 12 pallets on the pavement where Top Gun Road tees into Camino Santa Fe.

“It took us three hours,” said Sheryl, a dispatcher from Guardian Towing Inc. on August 9, “because they had to unload it. We couldn’t do it (roll the truck onto its wheels) with the rice cookers in there, because it’s going to put a load on our tow trucks.” (Each cardboard box weighed more than 13 pounds and contained two ARC 360 NG model rice cookers. Wal-Mart sells what it calls “America’s number one rice cooker” for $32.67 apiece.) “Even if we had enough power to flip the truck over with the stuff in it,” Guardian Towing owner Ali continued, “all the stuff would have been juggled around. That’s why we had to unload everything to make it lighter and save the load.” Ali explained how he and his buddy in the other tow truck strapped cables onto what appears in the video to be a 26-foot truck before simultaneously pulling it back. The cable “goes into the suspension and to the frame, then you got to pull down on this thing. And it needs to be cinched down for it not to slide towards you.” Per SDPD: “The tow truck driver[s] flipped the truck back onto its four wheels. The road was cleared. The driver was ok, and no one else was injured.”

“It sounds like it’s on the driver or other drivers on the road that made that into an accident,” opined Kahlee, a Mira Mesa resident and former warehouse employee who has helped load trucks. “I don’t think the rice cookers have anything to do with it, unless they were cooking rice on the drive.” But Ali disagreed with Kahlee. “The weight was extreme; it was very overloaded. I talked to the driver, and he claimed that he was going around the corner, and he started feeling the truck leaning; the right outer tire blew out as the load shifted to that side.” Ali has assisted the CHP and the SDPD with other rolled-over vehicles for the past 34 years. “We get a lot of those; I’ve got probably 2000 or more pictures of vehicles upside down. I’ve helped [toppled] trucks loaded with horses, hay, and airplanes.” He has also helped truck drivers trekking in from Mexico. “They come in 18-wheelers transporting cars and equipment, which I roll onto my flatbed.”

“We had to unload everything to make it lighter and save the load.”

The next day, about 45 miles south of Mira Mesa, a truck and trailer filled with LALA milk products toppled over in Rosarito. Agencia Infonort News reported that the accident’s probable cause was the refrigerated trailer’s brakes. “The driver, Alfredo T., 24, was treated by Red Cross paramedics, and he had no life-threatening injuries.” Locals said that that part of south Rosarito, where Bulevar 2000 meets with Carretera Federal 1D — “has signs that are confusing,” and that “there’s been a lot of accidents there lately.” The milk products in the haul were reportedly destroyed for safety reasons.

The Happy Man

I BROUGHT THE FORD up to speed and headed west on the new four-lane. The land was open and undeveloped on either side — gently rolling hills of chaparral thicketed with scrub, clumped shrubbery, and huge boulders.

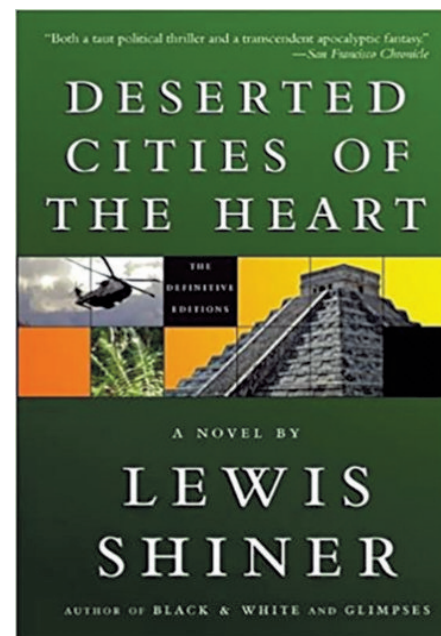

Five minutes later I was in Chula Vista, the municipality at San Diego's southern edge. Perhaps I might have lived here one day, after a suitable promotion. There had once been talk of my stepping into a project manager's slot, a thousand years ago.

After ten minutes of school zones and stoplights I was on Interstate 5 heading north. The tall, chunky buildings of downtown San Diego lay dead ahead, not looking much different than St. Louis or Denver or any other mid-sized burg. Only the complex freeway interchanges and nearness of the Pacific let me know I was in California.

Deserted Cities of the Heart

“YOU DON’T UNDERSTAND. My life isn’t like yours or Eddie’s. It never was. I don’t need to see my name in the papers to know I’m real. I have an ordinary life. I manage a Kwik-Kopy in a strip center in the suburbs. I live day to day. I worry about the machines running out of toner. I have friends that I go out to eat with. Sometimes we go out to clubs and things and sometimes I meet a man and sometimes I let him come home with me. About half the time, it turns out they’re already married. They’re always just about to leave their wives but they never do.”
 “It sounds very sad.”
 “It’s NOT sad. It’s dull. There’s worse things. I’d sure as hell rather be in good old boring San Diego right now...”

“I was on Interstate 5 heading north. The tall, chunky buildings of downtown San Diego lay dead ahead, not looking much different than St. Louis or Denver or any other mid-sized burg. Only the complex freeway interchanges and nearness of the Pacific let me know I was in California.

Excerpts from 49 years of Reader stories

Chess at a Run

After getting sick on Gatorade during an Olympic trial marathon, Gookin invented a substitute, Gookinaid. He devised it by analyzing his own sweat to determine what was being lost through dehydration. “I had a degree in biochemistry, so I had the expertise.”

Retired now from biochemistry and from teaching, Gookin says he spends his time marketing close to a quarter of a million dollars’ worth of Gookinaid a year. He also promotes orienteering. NOV. 9, 2000

Josie Scripps

She reports that the county, for its size, is second only to an area in Africa. Larger areas like Brazil and Ceylon contain greater quantities of gems, she says, but none has the concentration of the San Diego hills — tourmaline, garnet, blue topaz,morganite (pink) beryl, and purple spodumene (kunzite). Yet in the early Seventies, buyers from back East were gobbling up the best local specimens, which wound up in European and American museums like the Smithsonian. AUG. 17, 1978

Bummed Out, Spaceman Passes On

Upon his return to San Diego, Cary’s friend set him up in an apartment on Bacon Street, a few doors down from Poma’s Deli. Spaceman began calling local radio stations with his stories of Elvis sightings. KGB put him on the air. He made the local TV news. Longtime Ocean Beach residents who had purchased his paintings back in the 1960s began to look after him. And Cary even began painting again. DEC. 23, 1993

The Man Who Broke the Rules

He worked for several months at a bakery injecting jelly into the jelly donuts. The job paid minimum wage, but it had great benefits: he could eat all the day-olds he wanted, and he got to keep the plastic five-gallon jelly buckets. “They just throw them away!” he told me, both disgusted at the needless waste and thrilled by his unbelievably good fortune. He made bed frames out of them, wash basins, storage chests, kitty litter boxes. NOV. 8, 1994

Bill Gookin at the World’s Veterans Cup Championship, 1999. “The orienteer is relating to his environment and how he feels. The runner tries to blank out how he feels.”

Bull o’ the Woods

She gave me her best saw, a little Homelite. I cranked it up and started in putting an undercut on the first tree. I kicked out the notch with my foot. The eucalyptus smelled spicy. I went around and started on the backcut, looking up at the tree, wondering how many cords I could get out of it. I felt a tap on my shoulder, looked back, and Audrey was motioning me to shut the saw off. MAR. 4, 1976

Corb has seen some things.

The Chauffeur's Tale

"Limo driving?" says Corb. "It's not all bad."

The guy should know. He has been driving execs around for 25 years.

"I started in 1996, when the Republican Convention was on. I never left. I loved the job, even though some of it was more like nannying. So one day, we had a contract with a pharmaceutical company. Picked up a couple, CEO, CFO, whatever. They were going to LA to try to sell their company, get investors. Had two or three places to go to, like Studio City, Beverly Hills, Santa Monica, sudden, I can hear the windows in the back going up and down, rrr-rr, rrr-rr. The sun roof's opening and closing like rrr-rr, rrr-rr, the TV's switching on and off, and then the screen in between us is going up-down, down-up, up-down, up-down. I'm like, what's going on back there? Are they trying to talk to me? Get my attention?

"I hit the button to drop the screen, so I can see what they want. This guy's sitting in the middle of the back seat, this chick, too. They're both stark naked. She's on his lap, going at it like there's no tomorrow. And she's where all the money hides out. If they sold it, they were going to LAX, getting on a plane, and then flying to Japan. So I was going to drop them off, and then come back to San Diego.

"Lo and behold, they sold the company to the second place they went to. So they had time before their flight to Japan. So they go to dinner, and I unload them at the airport. Except two of them are going to stay and come back to San Diego — the CFO, and one of the girls in the office. The guy says, 'Let's pick up some champagne somewhere.' I know these places. I'm like, 'I'll jump out, get the champagne, the glasses, bag of ice. You stay in the car.' So, cool. Back in, pop the champagne, drive back to San Diego.

"So we're going along. I guess the music's turned up a bit in the back, when all of a trying to get traction on the ceiling. She's holding on to the top of the inside of the car, where all the controls are. And she's hitting all the buttons, the lights. Everything is going on and off. What can I do? I just roll the screen back up, and take them all the way back to their office in Sorrento Valley. This was about midnight. I got out of the car, stood by the back door, gave them a chance to regroup. She gets out, all disheveled. He gets out. I say, 'I'll clean up in there. Don't worry.' And he was like, 'I appreciate your discretion on this. I apologize.' I said, 'Understood. You're not the first, you're not the last. I'm well-versed. That's why I'm in the front seat. We're good.' Because I had to. I drove for his company. He digs around in his pocket and brings out five hundred bucks. 'Appreciate your discretion.'

"I tell you, limo driving isn't all bad."

Motormouth masterpiece

I have always loved the word "loquacious." I also love the word "screwball." And I especially love when the two come together in screwball comedies. If ever a rash of movies was by definition loquacious, it was those screwball comedies from the '30s and '40s. First up, the movies of Spike Jones and his City Slickers. Second up, and this surprised me, anything Cary Grant. That Cockney boy knew how to deadpan fast-talking funny. So when I heard they were doing a season of screwball comedies at The Athenaeum in La Jolla, I knew I had to cancel everything and go and see that motormouth masterpiece His Girl Friday. It played last week, at 240 words per minute, maybe the fastest-talking movie in the world. (Most old movie dialogues coast along at 90 words a minute. Even today, in real life, we normally talk no faster than 140. And one thing is for sure, whatever the speed, current movies just seem to have way less dialogue, period. We have to face it: we moderns aren't as... loquacious. So let's bring back the fast-talking dames! Bring back Humphrey Bogart with his endless plot reveals while he's holding a gun to some malheureux's stomach. More tell, less show!

My loquacious friend Clive — he's a software, neuroscience guy — reckons the Internet is turning us into monosyllabic zombies. And that many of us write a lot because we don't get to talk much anymore. "Raymond Chandler was a prolific letter writer; it's also clear he was a lonely man. He wrote in the night. And because I have health issues, I am housebound over covid precautions, and I think lack of contact has had effects on me. When I see how my tongue gets turned loose when I do talk to someone — talk of loquaciousness, I can't stop! — I realize how much we actually need the conversational element as social beings. I'm thinking on the level of the human animal, what our brain needs. We really need to interact. And if you had one of those medical research gizmos where you can see what part of the brain is working, with a fast conversation, you'd see whole areas lighting up, billions of connections, neurons, like a galaxy of stars. It may be that if we don't exercise [this conversational element] because of covid isolation or too much iPhone-staring, we literally drain ourselves of life."

In this case, at the Athenaeum, where the compulsive rat-a-tat-tat to-and-fro of Cary Grant and Rosalind Russell is so funny and simpatico, you've got to concentrate. But thanks to the screwball effect and the infectious laughter, you're so glad you did afterwards.

So what has happened in the 80 years since His Girl Friday? Have we surrendered to the machine, AI, special effects, let our fingers do the talking? "As they say, and not just about the brain, use it or lose it. We've gotta fire up that neuron light display between the ears," says Clive. Where to start? "Good conversations. Start some! I'm shy, but I'm making myself do it, with real people. No surrender to the small screen!"

Uh, but the big screen? Screwball comedies still have a couple of weeks to go. They're showing Thursday nights at The Athenaeum. ■

A little less action, a little more conversation.

MURDER HOUSE

Inquire Within

The house at 2719 Chestnut Avenue in northeast Carlsbad sits on a tract of land once used for tomato farming. The tract is a neat, well-kept neighborhood that is home to a mix of young families and older couples, many of whom raised their now-adult children there but never felt the need to downsize. Perhaps that's because the homes are all of modest size — three to four bedroom places lining the quiet streets and their broad sidewalks. If anyone ever set out to reboot the classic sitcom Leave it to Beaver, then hilly Chestnut Avenue is the sort of street they would no doubt choose as a location. There's no homeowners association, but there's really no need: virtually every house is in fine shape, with pleasant landscaping ranging from tropical to desert. And 2719 is no exception: olive green with white trim, the home has a terraced front yard with two retaining walls and a landscaping theme that leans toward tropical, with palms and cordylines.

The house, whose value Zillow currently pegs at more than $1.1 million, last sold for $521,000 on July 10, 2009. It was a quick sale: less than six months earlier, an elderly couple had been brutally slain in the upstairs bedroom, hacked to death with a machete by their 40-year-old son. The victims were 79-year Jean Gluck and her 90-year-old husband, Harry. Police found their bodies on January 18, 2009, after another family member called police and asked them to check on the couple, as he hadn't heard from them. "When police arrived, Jean Gluck's brother, Tom Regan, 78, who is legally blind and hearing impaired, was at the residence and granted access to the home so officers could complete a welfare check," according to a San Diego Union-Tribune story. Regan also lived at the home. Both victims had been killed with a machete; the attack was so savage that Jean was nearly decapitated, according to news reports. The killer had also tried to set Harry Gluck on fire.

Police immediately zeroed in on the home's fourth resident — the couple's 44-year-old son Dennis, who was missing — as a suspect. Tracked by police through his debit card transactions, he was apprehended on a bus in Ensenada six weeks later and turned over to Carlsbad police by Mexican authorities at the San Ysidro port of entry. Gluck had a history of mental illness: a schizophrenic transient prior to moving back in with his mom and dad, he had been arrested in June 2000 for threatening a man with a machete in an Oceanside homeless camp. Eight years earlier, his father had filed a restraining order against him for making threats, according to court documents. At a preliminary hearing in April 2009, Carlsbad Detective Bryan Hargett testified that Dennis Gluck had confessed to the slayings. According to a Union-Tribune story, he told police he killed his mother first, "swinging a machete onto her neck as she lay in bed." Then, the man told Hargett, he hacked his 90-year-old father to death and set his body on fire. "He didn't want them to suffer," Hargett testified. "He wanted it to be over quickly."

In November 2011, Gluck was sentenced to 32 years to life in prison. The realtor who sold the Gluck house less than six months after the murder said the sales price was significantly less than what comparable homes in the neighborhood were selling for. She was initially willing to be interviewed about the challenges of selling homes in which murders occurred, but later changed her mind, writing in an email, "I have given this much thought and feel strongly that my client's privacy is my first priority and that we shall not be able to discuss this particular listing or the events that preceded the sale, or during the sale. I simply will have no comment on this issue."

Home prices are through the roof (apologies for the pun). Demand so far exceeds supply right now that buyers routinely pay more than the asking price, because quite often, a bidding war erupts when a home goes on the market. Data from the Redfin real estate brokerage shows that more than seventy percent of homes in San Diego County sell in two weeks or less, and the California Association of Realtors says the median price for a San Diego home reached an all-time high in June of $865,000. Yet every so often, buyers can purchase a home for up to twenty percent below the going rate. Like the Gluck house, these homes come with a gruesome history: They were the scene of a murder, or murders.

"The diminution in value is generally between fifteen and twenty percent, depending on various factors," says Dr. Randall Bell, a real estate appraiser who has worked with a number of murder homes in the San Diego area. "I've seen murder properties sell at full value — generally smaller, less expensive homes — and I've seen properties where nobody will touch it, at least not for a considerable amount of time. The Jeffrey Dahmer property is an exception, because in that case, the apartment building where he killed all those people actually sold for a premium. But most people are turned off by it." Bell specializes in Real Estate Damage Economics, or REDE. "Real Estate Damage Economics is anything that negatively, or potentially negatively, impacts property values," he says. "I get involved with natural disasters, environmental spills, and crime scenes." Shortly after launching his company, Landmark Research, in Dana Point back in 1986, Bell shifted his focus to the then newly emerging study of REDE. "I was looking for something different," he says. "I applied to law school, got in, and then the day before, had this epiphany: I decided to take my skill set as an appraiser and turn it upside down. Instead of looking at what creates value, I would focus on what destroys value."

Locally, the most notorious murder house Bell appraised was the Rancho Santa Fe mansion where 39 members of the Heaven's Gate cult killed themselves in March 1997. "I worked on that for a couple of years," Bell says. "The owner invited me down and I went in there the day after they finished taking out the bodies. The smell, the stench, was still there — I remember that. I saw a lot of blood, but at least the bodies were out." The house, which had been rented to the cult members, was put on the market, but no offers came in. It was ultimately repossessed by the bank. A new owner, Bell says, “ended up tearing it down – every fence, the pool, the driveway, even the trees. It was a 100 percent demolition. It really was unprecedented. Even on the O.J. Simpson property, they left the tennis court and guest house and a lot of the landscaping and fencing.”

Bell says homes in which murders have occurred can prove a challenging sale. “You’ve got two issues,” he says. “One is the practical issue of property disclosure, and then there are all the things you have to do with the property. When you prepare a home for sale, you always want to put the best face forward — repaint, get rid of the clutter.” But when you add the crime scene stigma, you’re dealing with emotions...” Under California law, sellers or their agents have to disclose a death on the property only if it occurred within the last three years. But if the home was the scene of a violent murder, or if the buyer asks whether any deaths have occurred on the property, sellers and agents must share what they know, regardless of how long ago it happened. “You have to have realistic expectations,” Bell says. “A lot of people think the market will just blow that off as a non-issue, and occasionally that does happen. But for the most part, you’re going to see some resistance toward that property, given its history. People look at their homes as a refuge from the world, and they don’t want to go home to a place where the neighbors are pointing and gawking.”

Then there’s the matter of fixing up a murder house, which typically goes beyond merely slapping on a fresh coat of paint and laying down some new carpet. Bullet holes in the walls, for example, are generally not just patched up. Rather, new drywall is installed. And if blood seeps into the floor boards, they need to be ripped up and replaced. “When you have blood or bullet holes, police don’t clean that up,” Bell says. “They do the investigation, the coroner takes away the body, and what you get with that quite often is a gruesome mess. Realtors may hire someone to do it – there are companies out there that specialize in what’s called ‘biological containment’ – but ultimately, it’s the property owner or property manager who is left with that task.”

Further complicating the sale of a murder house is the question of title. “Sometimes it’s clean, other times it goes to probate, and sometimes it’s a rental,” Bell says. “The house where the Sharon Tate murders took place, for example. Sharon rented the house from a guy who lived in Laguna Beach. And after the murder, he moved back into the house and lived there for years.” Murders that take place in a private residence range from domestic quarrels to home invasions, but lean toward the former. Rick Carlson, a retired homicide detective with the San Diego Police Department, says that “in most homes where murders occur, there is some connection between the victim and the suspect.”

Here are seven other

San Diego County homes that have been the scenes of relatively recent murders (over the last fifteen years), along with their current status and their dark histories.

317 East Fallbrook Street, Fallbrook

Murdered: One victim, April 2012

Described on Zillow as a “charming Fallbrook home [within] walking distance to downtown,” this three-bedroom, two-bath home, with 925 square feet of living space, last sold on January 8, 2021 for $515,000. Photographs on Zillow show a stylish, contemporary interior with hardwood floors, wood window frames, plantation shutters and white subway tiles in the kitchen.

The listing says the home features a “large backyard [that] offers space for entertaining or even adding a pool,” with a lower bedroom and bathroom with a “separate entrance for in-laws or added income.”

On the night of Friday, April 13, 2012, Louis Ray Perez picked up Brittany Killgore, the 22-year-old wife of a deployed Marine, at her Fallbrook apartment with the promise of taking her on a harbor cruise. But after picking up the dark-haired young woman, Perez confessed the boat had already left, but said he would be happy to take her somewhere else. First, however, he had to stop at the nearby home of a friend, Dorothy Maraglino, who at the time lived in the small house at 317 East Fallbrook Street. At some point during the short drive, Perez pulled out a foot-long stun baton and zapped Killgore into unconsciousness – but not before she was sent a text message to a friend that consisted of just one word: “Help.”

Four days later, Killgore’s body was found, nude

Dorothy Maragliano was found four days after Kilgore's disappearance, alone and badly injured in a hotel room, along with a letter describing Killgore's murder.

and mutilated, in a dirt field off Borel Road near Lake Skinner in the Riverside County town of Winchester. An autopsy report said Killgore had strangulation marks on her neck, wounds on her left wrist consistent with handcuff use, and two small, brown marks on her face and neck believed to have been caused by the stun gun. The autopsy report also noted large wounds on her wrist and left knee "suggestive of attempted dismemberment."

Perez, Maragliano, and Jessica Lopez, who lived in the East Fallbrook Street home with Maragliano, were subsequently arrested, tried, and convicted of young Brittany Killgore's murder. Police said the three were involved in a bondage, discipline and sadomasochistic lifestyle. Besides murder, they were charged with torture, kidnapping, conspiracy to commit a crime, and attempted sexual battery in Killgore's slaying. According to a warrant, a search of the home on East Fallbrook Street led investigators to a room that appeared to be a sex dungeon, with whips, crops, leather restraints, a ball gag, a leather collar, zip ties, various ropes and cords, swords, a machete, black spiked gloves and a black knife labeled "The Black Defender."

Court testimony revealed that Maragliano was a dominatrix known as "Mistress Dee" who had lived in the home with a succession of submissive women who had been forced to sign "slave contracts." Lopez had lived in the home with Maragliano the longest; she was found four days after Kilgore's disappearance, alone and badly injured in a hotel room, along with a letter describing Killgore's murder in the house and where her body could be found. An excerpt from that letter: "You'll also find a taser mark and several ligature marks around her scrawny little neck as the bitch just wouldn't die. You'll find plenty of mutilation marks & bruises of where I knocked her down & held her still... I wrapped the rope around her neck after burying her face in the pillow & started to strangle her. She barely moved but she just wouldn't die, the miserable whore..."

A deputy with the San Diego County Sheriff's Department said in an affidavit that the three killed Killgore to satisfy their "unusual sexual fetishes."

2152 Flintridge Drive, Paradise Hills
Murdered: Six victims, November 2019

This home in one of Southeast San Diego's rougher neighborhoods is half of a single-story duplex – the other one is at 2150 Flintridge Drive – joined in the middle by two side-by-side garages. It was listed for sale at $595,000 in July 2020, and sold in December 2020 for $560,000. The home's sales pitch was clearly targeted at investors: "Duplex with attached granny flat," the Redfin description reads. "Tremendous cash flow potential, 2 units with an additional granny flat, all permitted. Take advantage of the enclosed patio to increase value as rentable space or additional space for an owner/occupant. Lease out one unit and enjoy a supplement to the mortgage payment. Great property for in-home care business (check with city)... Fruit trees, producing Hass avocado and citrus... Has some deferred maintenance."

The unit at 2152 Flintridge was also the scene of one of the most brutal mass murders in recent San Diego history. It was here that, early on the morning of Saturday, November 16, 2019, 31-year-old Jose Valdivia killed his 29-year-old wife, Sabrina Rosario, during an argument, just one day after she had filed for a restraining order amid a divorce. After fatally shooting his wife, Valdivia turned the gun on the couple's four children: three-year-old Enzi Valdivia; five-year-old Zuriel Valdivia; nine-year-old Ezekiel Valdivia; and eleven-year-old Zeth Valdivia. Then he shot himself.

According to San Diego police, a 911 call from the home came in at 6:49 am. No one spoke, but police could hear a man and a woman arguing in the background. As officers were en route to the residence, a relative who lived next door also called 911, saying he had heard arguing and what sounded like a nail gun being fired. "When the officers arrived on scene, they looked in a window and saw a young child on the floor bleeding," according to a homicide news release. "The officers forced entry into the residence and discovered five additional people, all suffering from apparent gunshot wounds." Both parents and little Enzi were pronounced dead on the scene. The three older boys were taken to local hospitals, where two died shortly after they arrived. Ezekiel underwent emergency surgery, but a week later, he too died.

About two weeks before the shooting, Jose Valdivia had sent his estranged wife a picture of a handgun with the message, "It's happening, like it or not," according to court documents obtained by Channel 10. In the days leading up to the murders, he repeatedly called and texted Rosario, according to news reports. In her petition for a restraining order, Rosario wrote that since she filed for divorce in June 2019, Jose Valdivia "has consistently harassed and threatened me over the phone." He also frequently showed up at the house and waited outside in his car. Rosario wrote that she was asking the court for a restraining order because "I am afraid that with respondent's unstable behavior and alcohol dependency, respondent will hurt me or our children. I do not feel safe around respondent or having our children in his presence."

A GoFundMe account raised $61,777 to help the family pay for burial and medical costs.

4368 Mt. Putnam Avenue, Clairemont
Murdered: One victim,

July 2017
Described on Zillow as a "Mount Street beauty," this three-bedroom, two-bath home was built in 1960 in the heart of Clairemont, San Diego's largest post-World War II subdivision. Originally known as "The Village Within a City," Clairemont welcomed its first residents in May 1951, and for the next decade and a half underwent a major growth spurt. The "Mount Street" neighborhood is known for streets that twist and turn across Clairemont Mesa and are, for reasons unknown, named after mountains. Nor is it known whether Mt. Putnam Avenue was named after Mount Putnam in Idaho or Mount Putnam in Vermont. Either way, the home at 4368 Mt. Putnam Avenue has 1790 square feet of living space, and according to Zillow features “gorgeous hardwood floors...lots of cabinet storage & counter space & island breakfast bar w/additional sink [and a] private & spacious master suite [that] opens to the lush backyard.”

The home last sold for $795,000 on July 16, 2019 – nearly two years to the day after the brutal slaying of 58-year-old Angela Burks, a longtime science teacher at Otay Ranch High School, by her 30-year-old son, Joseph. Shortly after 7 pm on Monday, July 24, 2017, a 911 call came in from the house. The caller, who turned out to be Joseph Burks, said he had been injured in a knife attack. Police arrived at the scene and found the young man standing in the driveway, bleeding. He told them he had stabbed his mother and believed she was in need of medical care. Police went inside the house and found Angela Burks lying on the floor, unconscious. She had been stabbed more than 20 times in the head, neck and throat. Angela Burks was transported to a nearby trauma center, where she was pronounced dead. Joseph Burks was taken to a hospital for his wounds and arrested for her murder. The following year, he was convicted and sentenced to 26 years to life in prison. During the trial, Joseph Burks claimed he had acted in self-defense, but Deputy District Attorney Makenzie Harvey said that the man watched his mother die, cleaned up, and then made up the story that she attacked him and he had to defend himself. Joseph Burks had lived his whole life with his mother, according to testimony from the trial. According to a Star-News article, “His grandmother, Josephine Van Atta, said her grandson was not working and did not pay rent. She said he hurt his back and got pain medications. Emergency room medical bills were found scattered in his room. ‘She was afraid he might hurt her,’ said Van Atta. ‘She was afraid if something happened to her, he would blame it on someone else.’”

Burks’ attorneys promptly appealed the conviction, arguing that under a new state law, he should have been considered eligible for placement in a mental health program. But in January 2020, a trio justices from California’s Fourth

District Court of Appeals upheld the conviction, noting that the law had subsequently been amended to exclude those convicted of murder and other violent felonies.

7405 Via Rivera, Torrey Highlands
Murdered: Two victims, August 2019

This four-bedroom, three-bath home in the Torrey Highlands neighborhood is located just south of State Route 56, about midway between Interstates 5 and 15. It’s part of a high-end tract of imposing two-story homes west of Rancho Peñasquitos that were built in the early 2000s on 1134 acres of land that had previously been used for agriculture. The home is not on the market, but Redfin estimates its value at $966,000. Until August 16, 2019, 7405 Via Rivera was home to a middle-age couple and their adult son: Yi Cheng, 60, a manager in the engineering department of Qualcomm; his wife, Xiaoqun Fang, 58, who had once worked at the Salk Institute for Biological Studies; and the couple’s 30-year-old son, Fang Cheng.

Early on the morning of Friday, August 16, police responded to a call about a person jumping from the Eastgate Mall overpass that crosses Interstate 805. They found the body of Fang Cheng on the freeway, beneath the bridge. The next evening, Fang Cheng’s parents were expected to arrive in San Francisco, but they never showed. Concerned family members called the police, who went out to the house around 10 pm. “Upon arriving at the location, officers attempted to make contact at the door, then by telephone, with no success,” according to a San Diego Police Department news release. “The officers looked through a rear window and saw the body of a person lying on the living room floor. This prompted the officers to force entry into the residence. Once inside, officers discovered the bodies of an Asian male and female in their 50s with trauma to the upper body. Both were pronounced deceased at the scene. No one else was located inside the residence.” Investigators later said they believed Fang Cheng killed his parents before killing himself in the fatal jump off the Eastgate Mall bridge.

Once the three were identified, there were no further news reports on the case, nor has the San Diego Police Department issued any updates.

Dr. Randall Bell, a real estate appraiser, said, “I’ve seen murder properties sell at full value — generally smaller, less expensive homes — and I’ve seen properties where nobody will touch it, at least not for a considerable amount of time.”

162 Parkcreek Court, Skyline
Murdered: Three victims, May 2011

A typical 1970s tract house, the most prominent feature of this three-bedroom, two-bath ranch-style home is its two-car garage. But whatever it lacks in curb appeal, it makes up for in the back. Situated on a large lot, measuring more than a third of an acre, on a quiet residential cul-de-sac, 162 Parkcreek Court boasts a huge backyard with a nice-sized pool. The home is located in the Bay Terraces neighborhood of Southeast San Diego, a hilly, urban tract developed in the late 1970s and early ‘80s. The neighborhood is largely Filipino, though there is a sizeable Latino population as well.

The home hasn’t been sold since 2004; that was seven years before all four members of the Pimienta family were killed there in a murder-suicide. Alfredo Pimienta, 44, had rented the home in 2009 for his family, consisting of 37-year-old wife Georgina and daughters

Priscilla, 17 and Emily, 9. Alfredo drove a tow truck for a living. A relative who had stopped by the house to visit the family early on the morning of Tuesday, May 24, 2011 spotted two of the family members' bodies in the backyard pool and called the police. Patrol officers subsequently found Alfredo Pimienta and his two daughters dead in the pool, while the body of Georgina Pimienta was found in a bathtub inside the house.

All four appeared to have drowned, a spokesman for the San Diego Fire-Rescue Department told the media. The San Diego Union-Tribune later reported that two suicide notes from both the father and the mother had been recovered, and that Alfredo was the last to die. He reportedly drowned his family members one by one, and then strapped a heavy object onto himself and jumped into the pool next to his two lifeless daughters.

Sources told NBC Channel 7 that Alfredo had financial and marital problems, and was still haunted by the death of his son more than a decade earlier. According to a Channel 7 story that ran the day after the bodies were discovered, "Neighbors and friends said nothing seemed amiss with the couple...Priscilla Pimienta was preparing for college. She was to graduate [the following] month from San Diego's High Tech High School." Classmate Alex Jasmund told the TV station that he, Priscilla and two other friends had gone to a nearby movie theater the Monday before the murders to see the 3-D vampire-hunting movie Priest. "Priscilla met with friends for frozen yogurt after the film to plan for Saturday's prom, including details like ordering a limousine and having a party with about 20 classmates," the Channel 7 report said.

*Murdered: One victim,
April 2019*

This modest three-bedroom, two-bath home is in one of Clairemont's older tracts, south and east of where I-805 meets Balboa Avenue. The homes along this curvy street are similarly styled: single-story, with protruding garages topped with gabled roofs. This particular home has been upgraded since it was built in 1961; there is stone siding along the front wall and a sturdy concrete-block-and-wrought-iron fence between it and the street.

The home is located directly across the street from Lindbergh Neighborhood Park, and last sold for $360,000 in January 2008. Its current value, according to Redfin, is $746,000.

Randy Taing, the 58-year-old owner of the popular Rose Donuts shop in Linda Vista, lived and was murdered in the home. Shortly before noon on April 5, 2019, police received a 911 call from Taing's son, who said his father had called him at work and said he had been robbed. The son drove to the house and found his father gravely injured. By the time police arrived, the senior Taing was unconscious. He was taken by ambulance to a nearby hospital, where he died after three days in the intensive care unit.

A year later, the local media reported that police were still looking for suspects. Detectives said Taing was alone in the home when it was broken into, and that a safe had been taken. It wasn't until this past May that a suspect was arrested: a 34-year-old Los Angeles resident named Keon Wilson. San Diego police lieutenant Andra Brown told the City News Service, "Over the past two years, homicide detectives conducted a thorough investigation and identified a suspect. During the course of the investigation, detectives learned that the suspect was also (allegedly) responsible for residential burglaries in Carlsbad and Poway. San Diego police detectives worked in conjunction with those investigating agencies to identify cases,

2350 Juan Street, Old Town

Murdered: One victim, November 2018

This three-bedroom, two-bath home high up on Juan Street is just a few blocks up a steep hill from Old Town State Historic Park, one of San Diego's most bustling tourist attractions. It's a neighborhood where several original homes have been torn down and replaced with garish "Mc-Mansions," including two directly across the street. The home at 2350 Juan Street is in impeccable condition, a classic ranch-style home with white walls and copper-colored storm shutters; the driveway curves around a small planter holding three birds of paradise plants, and then past a pair of California junipers. Valued this summer at more than $1.6 million, the home has been the longtime residence of the Peck family, the patriarch of which, Richard Landis Peck, is a former deputy San Diego City Attorney.

By the fall of 2018, Peck, 92 and long retired, was living in the house with just his 51-year-old son, Robert. On the evening of November 14, 2018, the senior Peck walked over to a neighbor's house and told her he had just shot his son. Police were called and when they arrived they found Robert dead with a bullet wound to his head. Peck was arrested and tried for murder, but wound up pleading guilty to voluntary manslaughter. He was sentenced to just three years of probation and ordered to stay in his home except for necessary errands like grocery shopping and religious services.

Why the light sentence? Peck said he shot his son due to abusive behavior, a charge corroborated by family and friends. Robert "Robbie" Peck had moved in with his dad about three months before his death, according to news reports. He was going through a divorce and could no longer stay in his own home. During those three months, Peck's attorney said, the nonagenarian feared for his safety and twice called police, who told him they didn't want to get involved in a family matter.

According to a City News Service report, "abusive acts dictated by the court included Robert Peck shoving a rag soaked in dog's urine into his father's face, throwing objects at him, and disabling his father's phone. He also told his father that he "was almost dead, that he had no purpose to live" and that he "needed to die of natural causes so (Robert) could inherit his money," according to the judge in the case, San Diego County Superior Court Judge Kathleen M. Lewis. The day of the shooting, Robert Peck smashed his father's telephone and told him, "I'm going to see you again" as he went off to bed, Peck's attorney said — again, according to the City News Service report. "The attorney said the most assistance Peck was able to receive was a 72-hour psychiatric hold on his son, after which he immediately returned to Peck's home and the abuse continued, prompting another call to authorities just a week later," according to the report.

Judge Lewis described Robert Peck as an "extreme alcoholic" who had a .39 blood alcohol content at the time of his death. She said she agreed to probation instead of prison time because of the abuse, as well as the senior Peck's frail physical condition and recent suffering of broken hips and heart attacks. Robert Peck's estranged wife and teenage son subsequently filed a wrongful death suit against the elder Peck, and in December 2019, they were awarded

$9.5 million.

There is a certain amount of morbid fascination with murder houses — which explains the "pointing and gawking" that Dr. Randall Bell says often is directed toward homes in which brutal slayings occurred. The first season of the popular TV series American Horror Story is called "Murder House," after a stately red-brick mansion where a number of gruesome murders have occurred over the years. A new family moves in, unaware that the ghosts of the home's former residents, both killers and victims, still haunt the house. Things don't end well.

Currently, the Roku streaming channel is home to a new series of short-form videos called Murder House Flip, a twist on home renovation shows in which each home that gets a makeover was once the site of a gruesome murder. Hosted by designers Mikel Welch and Joelle Uzyel, each episode focuses on a single home and is shown in three parts, each no more than six minutes in length. According to a May 2021 story in House Beautiful, the series has been "well received" by fans. "In the first episode, you can watch Welch and Uzyel renovate a home where seven murders took place," the article noted. "And if you make it to the finale, you're in for a treat as they tackle the home where former child star Judith Barsi and her mother were murdered. While these homes all had horrific histories, there is always a happy ending as Welch and Uzyel use design to create a brighter and better space for these families to heal in."

Thunderstorms can make ocotillos crazy

Thunderstorms have visited the Imperial Valley and parts of eastern San Diego County over the past several weeks. The seasonal arrival of moisture from the east and south, more or less typical for late summer, contributes to the greening of certain kinds of vegetation. On the desert floor, for example, the spidery ocotillo can grow an instant crop of green leaves after a storm, only to drop them two to three weeks later if no further rain arrives. The distribution of green-leaved ocotillos tells not only where rain has recently fallen; it also indicates where the runoff has collected and remained for enough time to be absorbed by the ocotillo's root system.

Warm Water Temperatures, into the 70s Fahrenheit over the past several weeks, won't last much longer. As fall approaches, shorter days and increasingly oblique solar radiation will mean that less and less energy will be supplied to the ocean waters offshore. These waters will soon be shedding more thermal energy than they receive, thereby keeping the coastal area comfortably balmy for several weeks after the end of the summer-vacation season. Don't give up on the beach after Labor Day, though — the water's only a bit cooler, and the beaches are relatively uncrowded.

Way, way, way down low in the bright afterglow of sunset, Mercury and Mars are in conjunction only 0.1° apart (for North America). About 15 or 20 minutes after sunset, use binoculars or a small telescope to try to pick up Mercury a few degrees above the horizon. It's a trace to the right of due west, far lower right of Venus. You've got a fairly good chance; Mercury is currently magnitude -0.5. Mars is another story; at magnitude +1.8 it's only an eighth life of San Diego artist Dr. Victor Minces. Minces' interactive sound sculptures allow participants to be absorbed by sound, his great passion. Minces will be in attendance, creating an interactive experience for guests. The premiere will be taking place outdoors in a garden space. Wednesday, August 25, 6pm; free. I ANSWERED THE CALL

Church of the Resurrection Parish

Contact: 1445 Conway Drive, Escondido 760-747-2322 www.resurrectionchurch.org

Membership: 3,000+ families

Neighborhood: North County

Pastor: Father Eduardo Bernardino

Age: 60

Born: Bulacan Province, Philippines

Formation: Mapua Institute of Technology, Manila; Our Lady of the Angels Seminary, Quezon City, Divine Word Seminary, Tagaytay City.

Years Ordained: 30

San Diego Reader: What is your main concern as a member of the clergy?

Father Eduardo Bernardino: I don't want to generalize, but there are some people who have somehow lost their enthusiasm to go back to church after covid, perhaps out of fear. They would rather stay at home and watch Mass over the TV or on their gadgets. My fear is that people might develop a laziness in not going back to Mass. I think that is the general feeling in the diocese, because our bishop has emailed us to preach more about the Eucharist to encourage the people to come back to Mass.

SDR: Why did you become a priest?

FB: When God calls, you just have to say, "Yes." Before I started my formation, I was finishing a degree in engineering. I felt there was something missing, which led me to discover that I was meant for the priesthood. When I was in my fourth year at Mapua, little by little I lost my desire to continue the course I was taking up; then, I felt a lot of loneliness and emptiness inside. I accidentally met a priest to whom I opened up my problems and I asked about the priesthood. From then on, he was the one who helped me enter the seminary.

SDR: What is the mission of your church?

FB: We have a mission to make a community of faith in our local parish, bringing Christ alive in every family and individual. We do that through different ministries for the religious and spiritual needs of the people, but also through the social outreach — we help the poor, support Catholic schools in the diocese, and we are active in sharing our resources with the interfaith community.

SDR: August 4 is the feast day of St. John Vianney, patron saint of Catholic priests. What inspiration do you take from St. John Vianney in your own priesthood?

FB: St. John Vianney always made himself available to the people, especially in regard to confession. He would spend a long time hearing confessions at his parish church. I find him inspiring because of his love for the people so they can receive the spiritual graces they need. So, I make confession available as much as possible — Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays each week at Church of the Resurrection — so people can come and confess and be forgiven of their sins.

Eduardo Bernardino

SDR: Where do you go when you die?

FB: I believe there is a heaven and there is hell. There is also purgatory, which is a place where our souls are being purified or cleansed before going to heaven. In the gospel, those who do good deeds receive eternal life and those who do wicked things receive eternal damnation. Bad people will go to hell and good people will go to heaven. I don't think there is meaning in what I am doing otherwise; if heaven and hell don't exist, are not real, then all I am doing as a priest is meaningless. Why would I encourage people to do good and insist on their turning away from sin, if there is really no heaven or hell? So, I believe either heaven or hell is the ultimate destination of our souls.

Drinks All Around

BY AMANDA TASCHER

ERICK ZENTENO

Gaslamp Breakfast Company
551 J Street
Gaslamp

“The pink is kind of our signature color here,” says Gaslamp Breakfast Company’s bartender Erick Zenteno. One glance at the restaurant’s perky pink decor and bright neon signage overhanging the bar proves his point. He proceeds to serve up a popular brunch-time cocktail called Pinkies Up, a double-meaning name. “Obviously, the color, we knew it was going to be pink. And then it’s just a fun concept — drinking with your pinkies up!”

Zenteno tells me how they created a new cocktail menu to help give the location its own identity. “When we first opened the restaurant, we had the exact same menu as the other Breakfast Company that’s in North Park. But once we opened, we saw what the culture was here — very fun, casual and outgoing. We wanted the cocktail menu to match the vibe, so we started switching it up with the drinks.”

Pinkies Up may be their most ingredient-rich cocktail. “We start with muddled raspberries; we have the X-Rated, the orgeat, little bit of lemon juice — not too much — vodka, and champagne.” He teaches me how to pronounce “orgeat” (or-zhaat), which is an almond liqueur. “Just a little bit of that goes a long way, so we don’t put too much, but just enough to get that flavor. Sometimes when you make a drink with too much stuff, it’s just overwhelming. So we made sure it was the perfect amount of everything in there.”

The pop of color comes partially from passionfruit-flavored X-Rated Fusion liqueur, plus the muddled raspberries which add textural notes. The thistle glass is even rimmed with sugar, to go with your morning coffee. “It goes well with anything you’re going to want to order on the menu. And if you have one, and you’re going to keep drinking them.”

He explains what inspired the recipe, “We wanted to have a cocktail for every type of spirit — so this is vodka. Everyone has a preference in their alcohol. And they all can have a fun drink.” Vodka-phobes may be surprised and delighted. “I’ve had people who are tequila drinkers, or whiskey drinkers, who don’t really like vodka too much but they want to try it how it is. And they get it as-is, and they love it.”

He suggests trying Pinkies Up “over a glass of champagne that you can get anywhere else. Champagne is great...” he says, treading quietly in front of the brunch crowd. “But we also have the champagne in [this drink], so you’re still getting it!”

In conclusion, Zenteno says, “I think the combination of everything that’s in this drink is something that you’ve probably never seen anywhere else. Especially adding the champagne to the top. I don’t think anyone would think vodka and champagne would go together!”

GASLAMP BREAKFAST COMPANY'S PINKIES UP

- 1 oz. vodka
- 3/4 oz. X-Rated Fusion
- 1/4 oz. lemon juice
- 1/4 oz. orgeat almond syrup
- 1 pump strawberry syrup
- Muddled raspberry
- 3 oz. brut Champagne

Rim glass with sugar. Add raspberries, orgeat almond syrup, and strawberry syrup to shaker tin and muddle five times. Add X-Rated, vodka, and lime juice. Fill shaker tin with ice, shake and dump into thistle glass. Top with brut Champagne.

blurt the inside track

Leonard Patton thinks the time is right for live jazz on the Boulevard.

Patton's army marches on La Mesa

There's an old joke that says the only way to make a million dollars in jazz is start out with two million. Given that, and given the reality of post-pandemic life, it seems like opening a jazz club just now might be a serious risk. But San Diego vocalist Leonard Patton doesn't see it that way. "It's actually kind of a perfect time. Things are opening back up again. After fifteen months of being locked down, people need the escape. Everyone wants to see live music, live theatre, and live art."

Patton recently opened The Jazz Lounge at 6818 El Cajon Boulevard. The venue is located in a small strip-mall; the space was the previous home of The Light Bulb Center. The property belongs to a musician friend. "We've been talking about this for a couple of years," Patton recalls. "She sent me a text in April [2020] and said the previous tenant was leaving. The pandemic had just started, but I decided to go for it. I've had the space since June of last year. So far, I've mostly been doing livestreams while I get the place ready, because I knew that the restrictions were going to ease." In the meantime, "I've built up a team of people to help us. I can't do it all by myself, but it's my creation. It's my thing."

The Jazz Lounge will seat about 40 listeners comfortably, and will feature live music and dining around four nights a week, at least at first. Patton finds that the rent is comfortable and has a way to incorporate food into the experience without getting into the restaurant business. "We serve food, but I don't create it. I have a partnership with a restaurant that's a block and a half away called Terra American Bistro. We take the orders here, and they make the meals. My wife picks it up. So we have food, and it's cool because I don't have any overhead at all."

So how does it work? What's all this going to cost? "It's going to be pre-ticketed events. We just had our opening weekend, and it was a huge success. People get tickets from our website, thejazzlounge.live. It's $40 for the music and $20 for the food. The first weekend worked out great. People are really excited about what we've created here."

Jazz fans are usually finicky about the sound in a place, but Patton says not to worry. "The room sounds great. And the cool thing is that, because of the size of the room, we don't need to amplify too much. We have done a few livestreams, and that sound is good too. The bass sounds really good in here, and we add a little piano into the mix. There have been no complaints."

The project has already produced shows by vocalist

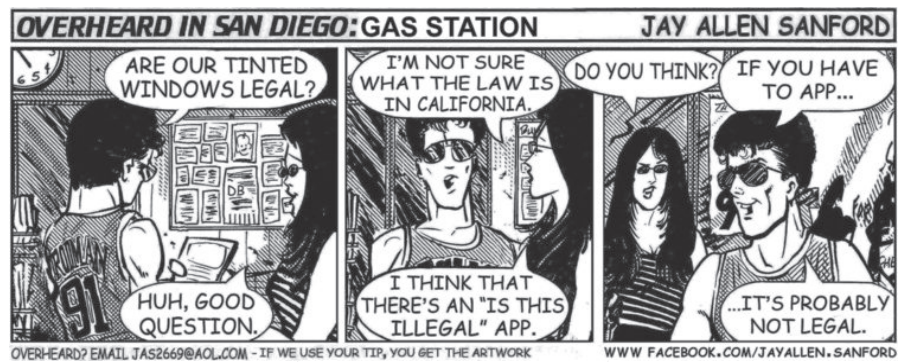

Aimee Nolte and Music Beyond Borders. And Patton has big plans for the future, drawing from an army of increasingly busy players. "Right now, there are a lot of gigs opening up, and the competition for booking the musicians is pretty fierce. Starting in September, it will probably be a hundred percent booked from there on out. In September, we're going to do a '90s Reimagined show, and in October we are doing a Blue Note celebration. Right now, everyone has gigs booked, which is a blessing. I'm glad that everyone's working. But my plan, ultimately, is to be booked three months in advance, with shows about four times a week. There might be days when people rent out the space for their own events."

Government finances Crhymes

"I was able to secure a PPP loan with the SBA to support my music career," says southeast San Diego rapper Cesar "Crhymes" Tellez. Despite losing 15 months of career traction to Covid, "the blessing was the opportunity to receive help from the Small Business Administration in form of grants and forgivable loans. I'm just a tenth grade high school dropout, and I was able to figure this shit out all on my own. Turns out that in 2019, I actually for the first time ever made more money in music-related revenue than in Uber or Airbnb combined. I started accepting payments for my merch and musical services through PayPal, Cash App, and Venmo, and those companies track your sales and send you a 1099 form to file your taxes. With that 1099 filled out and filed, I was able to prove that I am a legit tax-paying small business. That's how I was able to secure the SBA's $10,000 EIDL grant. Later in 2021, they made a new rule that states that if your small business suffered more than a 50 percent loss in revenue, you can receive an additional grant of $5000. I went ahead and did my 2020 taxes and it showed that I suffered a loss greater than 50 percent. I then turned that in to the SBA and received that extra 5K."

That wasn't the end of the government green. "So then I saw that the state of California was giving out grants to small business owners as well. I read and met all the requirements for that program and, bam, I got another grant to use for my small businesses. Thank you, California Relief Grant Program and SBA. After seeing that I was able to get approved

Tellez first made his mark with Sicko Records and DagoSD.com, as well as hosting a Friday night Imperial Beach event called Club DagoSD and collaborating with Bone Thugs-N-Harmony. His first solo effort, One Breath Closer, was followed by Evolution of Crhymes. His record label Crhyme Mate Entertainment has signed artists from San Diego (Big Ev & Thee Husstle) and the United Kingdom (Shakespeare).

Thanks to the government programs, "I have money to put into ads, to promote, support touring, create more merch, and your record deal is the loan. If you don't make the money they advanced you or the money they spend on your album rollout, guess what? You have to pay every single penny back with interest. And, more than likely, you'll be shelved and blackballed if you can't pay it back."

Crhymes will use some of the money to remaster a deluxe edition of his album Thuggery, which included contributions from Snoop Dog, Bone Thugs-N-Harmony, and a divorcing superstar whose cred recently took a nosedive. "At that time, Kanye West made that 'slavery for those other grants based off my taxes, I figured, why not give the PPP a shot, too? They just recently changed the rules for independent contractors like myself — to use the gross annual income of 2019, as opposed to the net income, to calculate the forgivable loan amount. Seeing that I'm a legit small business with taxes and financial records to back it up, I had no fear of going to jail."

and all around keep me in business. This is money I can use towards my independent career that I don't have to pay back, so long as I use it just for my business payroll and expenses. And that is exactly what I am doing with this extra cash flow." He considers the bounty an improvement over being signed by a major label. "A record deal is essentially just an advance for a loan. The record label is the

was a choice' remark, right when I was rolling out the project back in 2018. That didn't help things at all. At that very moment, no one wanted to hear any new Yeezy tracks, the public was big mad."

GEZA KELLER

Born in Budapest, Hungary, Geza Keller is a physicist by day whose Infinite Optics company earns $3 million in annual sales. He was three years old when he and his Canadian-born Hungarian mother fled the Russian Communist regime as political refugees and returned to Canada. He took early guitar lessons from Danny Schmidt, the father of the Eagles' Timothy B. Schmidt, and later learned to play the drums and tenor sax. Keller went on to groups such as the Jazz Sparks until moving to San Diego in 1988. His band breakingthecode landed a label deal with Angelic Records, but that company released only a concert album recorded at the Belly Up. He began recording his first solo album of originals during the 2020-2021 pandemic shutdown. The first single "Let Me In" was just released, with an album called Got Nothing to Lose due September 6. Work on the single started back in 1985. "The song was inspired by the struggle that many young people experience," he says, "trying to find their own identities, their purposes in life, their search for love and their attempts to overcome their limitations amid the general chaos of life. People seek love and yet are troubled by love. It's both the answer and the problem." Geza Keller will debut his album for an outdoor concert at Aztec Brewery in Vista on September 11.

STEPHANIE RICHARDS

Trumpeter Stephanie Richards has recorded with everyone from David Byrne and John Zorn to Anthony Braxton, Henry Threadgill, St. Vincent, Jason Moran, Yoko Ono, and Kanye West. She has also performed and recorded in a trio with Vinny Golia and Bert Turetzky, and has collaborated with performance artists Mike Kelly and Laurie Anderson. Her compositions have been featured on stages at Carnegie Hall, the Blue Note NYC, and Lincoln Center, and she conducted ensembles with Butch Morris' Conduction language. Her upcoming album Zephyr, due October 15 and made in collaboration with local jazz pianist Joshua White, was begun while she was pregnant, though it took two years to finish, due to the pandemic. "Your humanity is visibly evident when you're pregnant," she says. "I felt that I could connect even more closely with my bandmates, and with audiences." The album is being released with an accompanying film, shot by Vival Monga in the slow cinema genre that furthers the album's focus on water and breath. "It's not being dictated to you from a visual perspective," says Richards of the film, which will be released online as well as screened during the album support tour.

EL PERRO

Founded in 2019, El Perro is a psychedelic rock band led by guitarist and singer-songwriter Parker Griggs, whose group Radio Moscow began in the tiny Iowa town of Story City before relocating to Eureka, then Rancho Tehama, and finally San Diego in the early 2000-teens. El Perro's progressive space jam sound differs from Radio Moscow thanks to a second guitar and percussionist, pushing the music into more of a syncopated Latin and funk groove. Other members include former Radio Moscow drummer Lonnie Blanton, bassist Shawn Davis, and guitarist Holland

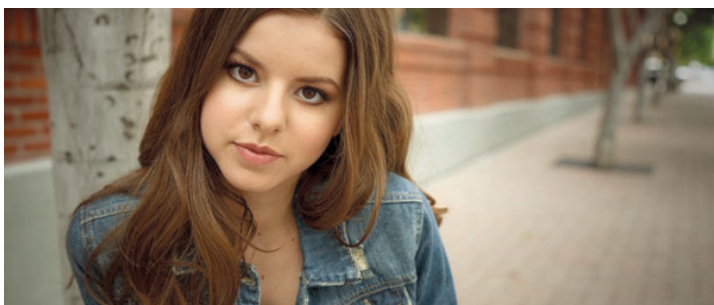

Redd. They just released their debut single "Black Days," in advance of a debut album due early next year, Hair Of. Griggs' other group Radio Moscow recently released Live At Rockpalast 2015, a 15-track DVD filmed shortly after the debut of their Magical Dirt album (which is heavily represented in the set list). Featured concert staples include "I Just Don't Know," "250 Miles," "Broke Down," "Brain Cycles," and "No Good Woman," as well as acoustic bonus selections and a cover of Peter Green/Fleetwood Mac track "World Keep on Turning."

RUN FOR YOUR FUCKING LIFE

Bumbklaatt singer/guitarist Fernando Cruz, aka Cruz Radical, spent 1994 through 2001 in Run For Your Fucking Life, aka RFYFL, with Jason Weedon, Jef Shadoan (A.R.M - Anti-Repression-Music), and Danny Calderon. The band played local shows with Davey and Tiltwheel, often sharing a bill with Krakass. They released a 7-inch themselves with help from friends at Hopscotch, as well as issuing several releases on the Gloom label. Their self-titled 2001 album was mixed and recorded by Gar Wood (Hot Snakes, Tanner). Fernando Cruz also played with Rail them to Death, Los Kagados, Agonista, and Illegal Visions. He went solo in 2015, releasing his debut Cruz Radical album the following year. On September 14, the local Three One G label will re-release the 2001 Run For Your Fucking Life album for the first time since its initial pressing, with vinyl variants including 250 red and 250 clear vinyl. The rerelease is a tribute to singer Jason Weedon, who passed away in 2019. According to the band, "This redux of the 2001 self-titled 45LP attempts to honor Jason by making more available some of his great work. Jason united and healed the scene, and the nihilistic visions of hardcore kids everywhere, like no other. This album is dedicated to Jason's spirit."

BELLA KAYE

Young singer-songwriter Bella Kaye says her new single "Drowning" (due August 20) is an emotional ballad reflecting on a dark period in her life when she lost herself and started spiraling downwards. "'Drowning' is a reflection piece, and I don't think I would've been able to write this song while being in the mental state I was in," she says. "I wrote this by reflecting back to the feelings of being trapped in a deep mental hole and feeling like I was losing myself. I feel this song is a very accurate representation of the emotions and feelings I was dealing with during this low point in my life. Even though I wrote this song based on my emotional state that happened a while ago, I feel like this song is still very relevant to me as I navigate through my teenage years." It's the second single off her upcoming seven song narrative concept EP, an autobiographical project. "When I began writing the songs for this EP I had no idea they were going to be a snapshot of my life." Kaye will be performing at the Adams Avenue Street Fair on September 18 at 1 pm on the Lestats/Starbucks stage.

IMMORTAL BEAUTY

BY GARRETT HARRIS

The grand opening of The Shell

I came to San Diego in the fall of 1990. All through the decade, I took advantage of the chance to buy student tickets for the San Diego Symphony and the San Diego Opera. However, the 1990s were a dark era for classical music and opera in San Diego. Any given concert was prone to some sort of glaring error. In many ways, those concerts established my concept of San Diego as something of a classical music backwater. To this day, I go to concerts with a cringe hidden just below the surface of my now wrinkling face. It is a sort of musical PTSD.

Given this context, the miracle that is the Rady Shell at Jacobs Park becomes that much more miraculous. From the structure itself, to the setting, to the camera work and sound quality, everything about The Shell reeks of top-shelf quality and execution.

The sound, from where I was sitting, struck my ear as if it were a proper orchestral concert, as opposed to a flat wall of blaring speakers. The coordination of camera shots with what was happening within the music was spot on, and the tight shots on the soloists added to the audience's experience of their performances.

The concert started with a new composition by a Californian composer Mason Bates. The pieces showed off the audio abilities of the venue's sound system, with electronic elements added to the orchestra. However, the piece was generally forgettable.

The concert started in earnest with cellist Alisa Weilerstein performing Saint-Saëns's Cello Concerto No. 1. Previously, I had heard Weilerstein perform only the Benjamin Britten Cello Concerto, which is, shall we say, not quite as expressive as the Saint-Saëns. Weilerstein's effusive playing during the performance mesmerized the audience.

Next, bass-baritone Ryan Speedo Green stepped onto stage and into the character of Satan himself. Green blasted his way through Mephistopheles's aria "Le veau d'or" from Gounod's Faust. Following this bacchanalian effort were arias from Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro, Rossini's The Barber of Seville and South Pacific. Each character from each piece was fully present in Green's performance. He didn't just display his impressive voice, he showed us characterization, as if we were in a fully staged operatic situation.

Opening night at The Shell, already a new destination in San Diego.

French pianist Jean Yves Thibaudet was the final soloist of the evening. Thibaudet has been a mainstay of the world's stage since the aforementioned 1990s. He was at The Shell to perform Gershwin's iconic Rhapsody in Blue. And it was during his performance that The Shell began to display its full capabilities, as images were projected around the Shell's fringe. The concert was now hitting on all cylinders as the visual arts became entangled with the musical arts.

Music Director Rafael Payare and the San Diego Symphony were the stars of the final piece of music, Stravinsky's Firebird Suite. The orchestra shook off the covid hangover which was present in some of the earlier pieces, and brought the concert to a quite satisfying conclusion.

Then came the fireworks. In one night, The Rady Shell established itself as a destination.

Absinthe makes the heart grow fonder

"It's great unless you're driving. This is powerful stuff."

The blue flame dances in and out of focus. The Green Fairy sparkles in front of my eyes. I can feel her hypnotizing me. I'm seeing seven veils, I'm thinking "Scheherazade," "Salome." My eyelids are heavy.

I take one more sip of the Green Fairy.

"Sir, sir! Your marrow. Best when it's hot."

This is Ivan. Last I saw, he was placing a cube of sugar on the special spoon, soaking it in absinthe, and setting it alight. Finally, he turned on the ancient French fountain spigot, so it dripped iced water onto the sugar's remains, and into the absinthe below, till gradually the liquid changed

Plus, you feel a little illicit just watching Ivan prepare the concoction for you. And this is so very much the perfect setting. Mini chandeliers cast shadowy light over the bar. Nobbly glass candle holders send a wavering glow across your absinthe glass. A long-horned springbok looks down at you from the wall. Life is chancy. Life is good.

This is The Lion's Share. It's one of those places that looks older than it is (opened in 2011). Very clubby, pubby place somewhere behind Kansas City BBQ (where, yeah, the bar/piano scene in the first Top Gun movie was shot). Lion's Share has a vaguely colonial, big-game hunter's vibe.

Tonight (around nine, which brings up another good reason to come here: their kitchen stays open till 1 am on weekends), it seems to be full of realtors from all over, spending some of the outrageous profits they've been making since covid. "Come to Massachusetts!" this glamorous, sylph-like lady says. She's nicely mood-elevated. "We'll set you up with an office. You'll reproduce this place exactly, and anchor our new development. Okay?" She has been saying this to

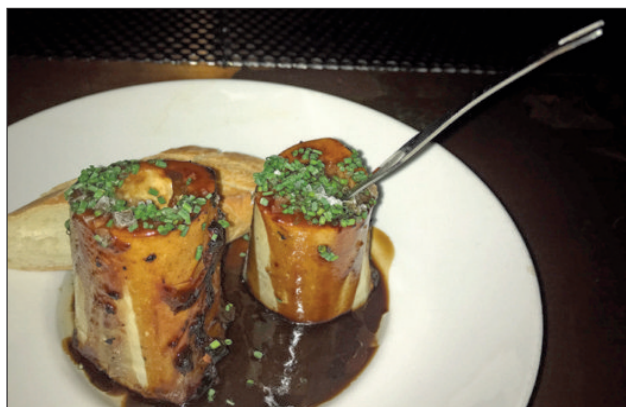

Ivan, one of the bar guys, the only one who can really handle the absinthe ceremony. Because that is what it is — a ceremony.

He leaves me the one-page menu, points out that some items have an asterisk. They're the late night weekend menu. Great, because today's Saturday, past 11 pm. Place is ker-rowded. Pleasantly. Found a corner of the bar, near the stuffed head of the bok. (Antelope? Gazelle? Don't ask, don't tell, heh heh.) They have several of these mounted on the walls. Even a magnificent stuffed blue peacock, tail spread in full display, between paintings and cartoons of explorer-type people and animals. It sets you up for exotic food choices.

And this menu is packed with them. Bison, rabbit, elk, red deer, wild boar. Talk about paleo! Problem? Not cheap. A chili-rubbed elk sirloin goes for $32, including sides like duck-fat mashed potatoes. A bison ribeye is $55; seared duck breast goes for $27; rabbit dumplings are $24, wild boar Bolognese runs $22.

My realtor neighbors are sharing a sausage board loaded with boar andouille, boar käsekrainer (Austrian cheese sausage), and buffalo, for $26. Oh, and now Ivan brings them a burger plate. I see it costs $19, including pickles and truffle fries. Looks delish.

But, ayee! Price. So I look at starters. Duck in a Hole runs $15, with duck confit (cooked and

Shank bones: inside, the marvelous flavors of marrow

Neighbor's burger ($19, with truffle fries, but Happy Hour price is $12, including beer)

from transparent to la louche, the legendary green-yellow milky drink, and the subtle aromas blossomed.

There is something truly seductive about the making of this herby mix that marries wormwood, anise, and fennel. The burning, dripping sugar cube gives it a subtle touch of sweetness. The flavor warms you, at least in my imagination, clears your thoughts, makes you want to get even clearer — and sleep at the same time. And it's somehow comforting that you're drinking literary history with every drop. Oscar Wilde drank absinthe. Hemingway drank absinthe, Picasso, Baudelaire, Poe, Van Gogh, Byron, on and on. Nobody's saying it made them into artists, but nobody's saying it didn't, either.

Sober shot of Ivan adjusting drip from ancient iced water fountain preserved in its own fat), plus white cheese and an herb and radish salad. Hmm. Better price. Bison tartare (raw) is $16. Lamb tacos are $15, chicory salad with duck prosciutto is $16, red deer sliders cost $19.

Or, hey, roasted bone marrow! ($16) Basically you shuck the marrow out of big hollow beef bones with a special spoon-fork, and mix with Bordelaise (a sauce made from red wine, marrow, butter, shallots, and demi-glace, a brown sauce). And then you scoop it all up with grilled bread. Sounds yummy. And guess what? It is. This is so light, it's almost like scrambled egg before it coagulates, yet full of flavor. It is a warm sensuous mess inside those bones, that classic taste of marrow I have loved ever since my bro and I scooped it out at grandma's place on Sunday afternoons. Tastewise? Almost, but not quite, cheesy. Like savory peanut-butter.

So I finish up on the marrow, and start sipping away at the Green Fairy. ($14) Ghosts of Edgar Allen Poe, Marcel Proust, and the Green Fairy herself drift by.

"It's great unless you're driving," says Ivan. "This is powerful stuff."

"No problems. I use a stretch limo," I say. "It's called the Green Line."

Which is convenient, since the trolley's Seaport Village stop is right next door.

But wait! Checking their menu online, I suddenly realize they have a happy hour. Dang! Four to six pm, Wednesday to Sunday. Deals like rabbit sausage on grilled bread for $7, lamb tacos for $12, truffle fries for $6, lamb poutine for $11, and burger and beer for $12. Gonna come back for some of that.

"So what about our deal, setting up a copy of this place in Mass?" says the beautiful realtor.

"I don't know," says Ivan. He's wiping a glass. "Place like this, it's a feeling. We've built this together, with our customers, over years. You don't just buy that." ■

Find Sindi's Snack Shack for bánh mì and street toast

Sindi's Snack Shack; 150 S Acacia Ave, Solana Beach. There's a new snack shack in Solana Beach, even if the physical shack itself is anything but new. Sindi's Snack Shack recently opened within the "Detached Garage of Witmer Residence and Drug Store," built in 1931.

Or so reads a small notice posted by the local historical society. Apparently, the Witmers lived upstairs from the drug store and soda fountain they operated on Highway 101, and originally built the detached garage behind their shop.

Which doesn't put it in a highly noticeable spot. The rear building is neither visible nor readily accessible to anyone surveying the continuous strip of businesses fronting the coast highway. Even when you go around the block to approach from Acacia Avenue — official site of the Snack Shack's street address — you find that the small structure sits removed from the street, tucked at the back corner of a large, mostly private parking lot.

Or maybe you don't find it. I never knowingly laid eyes on the small restaurant that previously operated here, though it did so for nearly forty years! My colleague, Ed Bedford, visited the aptly named Hideaway Café about ten years ago, finding it despite a thick layer of vines that completely covered the outside of the building, further obscuring it from view.

Korean street toast: a breakfast sandwich with cabbage and carrots.

That longtime business became a victim of the covid economy late last year. Now the shack has a new name, and both the vegetation and standard breakfast fare are gone. Rather, Sindi's Snack Shack offers a bevy of affordable pan-Asian dishes, beginning with bánh mì.

A detached garage from 1931, turned counter restaurant.

I happened to bump into the namesake Sindi as I walked into her small sandwich shop, and when I asked for a recommendation from a menu — which features such items as kimchi fried rice, rice noodle salad, Korean bibimbap rice bowls, and Spam musubi — she without hesitation suggested the grilled pork bánh mì.

And I'm inclined to think she was right. In general, its $8.99 price tag runs at the pricey end for the classic Vietnamese sandwich, but since it's being sold in a North County beach city, I'd have to consider it a reasonable value.

And it's not one of these "bánh mì-inspired" sandwiches we tend to see these days — this is the real thing, made on a slender baguette with a crispy crust wrapped tightly around toppings of pork, cilantro, pickled carrots, cucumber, and daikon radish. They'll also throw on jalapeño and mayo if you're amenable (I was). It tasted so right on, I imagined a smear of pâté in there, though I don't think there was any.

Besides the pork, sandwiches may be made with lemongrass chicken, garlic shrimp, or vegan alternatives ranging from vegetables to mock versions of the pork and chicken. The same proteins can also be applied to bun-style rice noodle salads for $10-12, or spring rolls for $7-8. All can be washed down with an assortment of boba teas.

While the Vietnamese side of the menu is solid, the Korean side yields some of the more fun-loving dishes, such as kimchi-topped hot dog ($4.99). But it was the breakfast sandwich menu that kept catching my attention. There's no surprise in finding $6-8 egg and cheese sandwiches featuring the likes of bacon, sausage, or even Spam. The so-called Korean street toast, however, was new to me.

But it's actually a thing, better known in South Korea by the name gilgeori toast. I haven't been able to find much about its history, but it seems that it has long been a staple of street carts in Seoul. And that a key feature is cabbage.

Not kimchi, but shredded cabbage, along with shredded carrots and green onions. In this case, it shows up on a sandwich of ham, egg, and cheese, served between slices of buttery, grilled white bread with a sweet and savory sauce. I'm not sure it will replace sausage-and-egg bagel sandwiches in my breakfast affections, but I might grab it first, by virtue of the fact most breakfast sandwiches do not help you start your day with a serving of leafy greens.

I don't want to suggest the Korean street toast is tasty despite the cabbage, as I really think the vegetables add something to the sandwich, texturally at least. But I do think that you'll have to embrace a little cabbage in order to choose it over Sindi's other offerings. Provided you can find her place.

Guns, nuns, and jump cuts

There was a time in the mid-'90s when it seemed like every other indie release owed a debt of originality to Quentin Tarantino. Hell, he produced half of them! The studio press release for Habit, the latest streetwise and cinema foolish grimefest starring Bella Thorne, pays its dues in the first sentence: "Reminiscent of early Tarantino..."

Drugs are once again the subject, only this time they appear to be the ephemeral auteur behind this cloddish frappe of guns, nuns, and jump cuts.

We open with a series of scenes that never quite get past the sketch stage. The flashback to Corpus Christi is brief: inside a pretty pink bedroom tucked inside a pretty pink camper sits young Mads, praying before the seemingly life-size crucifix on the wall. We meet her mother just long enough for her to poke her head through the door and ask, "Can't you just be a normal kid?" So much for summing up childhood. A jump cut brings us up to date and into Los Angeles, where we find Mads (Thorne) in her natural habitat, parked behind the wheel of her gold 1973 Ford LTD, immersed in thought, sucking back a smoke.

Mads' first act involves a visit to church; she arrives late to a meeting of SLAA (Sex & Love Addicts Anonymous) held in the basement. Hugging the periphery of the entranceway long enough to have a cheap laugh over one survivor's testimony, she gets as far as the refreshment table before making off with a fistful of mini-powdered donuts. Little effort is made in seeing the sight gag through to fruition. Why bother? The material is so familiar the audience can supply the incidentals shut-eyed.

Next stop, the pink house on the hill belonging to Eric (Gavin Rossdale), a washed up TV actor addicted to gambling and coke, who entrusts Mads with a teddy bear containing drugs and $20,000 zipped inside its fur belly. (Eric's Tarantino-esque rant comparing humanity to the LaBrea tar further proves the old adage, "Imitation is the sincerest form of failure.") Mads has two roommates: Evie (Libbie

MOVIES

Habit: Libby Mintz, Andreja Pejic, and Bella Thorne play nuns on the run from reason.

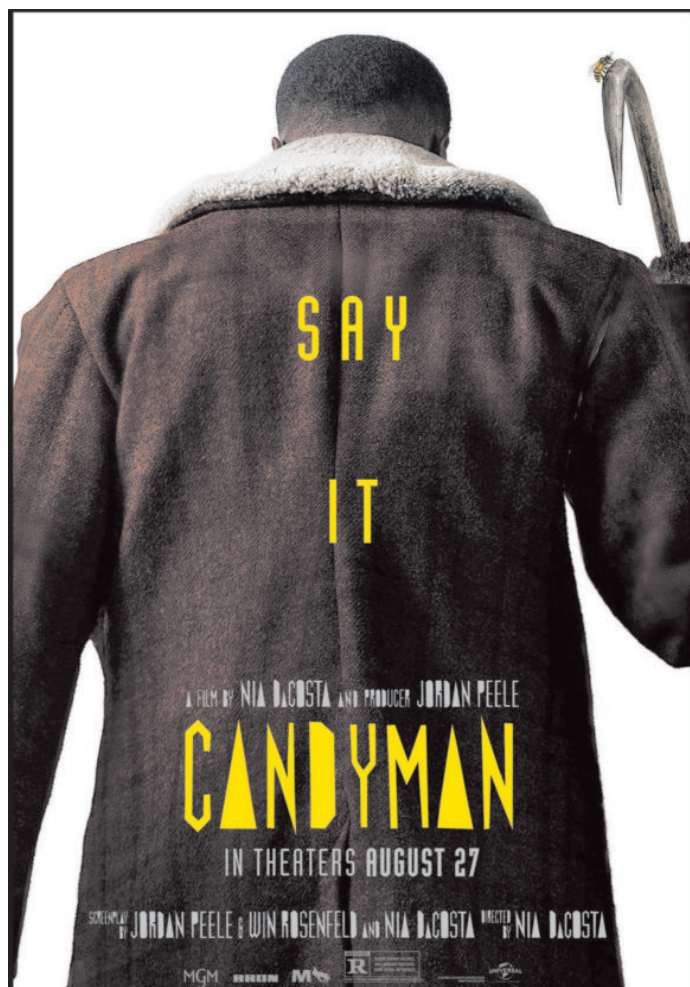

Mintz, co-writer) and Addy (Andreja Pejic). When Mads took possession of the bruin, she did so as a favor to Evie. Later that night, Evie's one-night stand makes off with the doll, leaving one to question why Eric didn't supply a contact name or an address where to drop it off. First-time director and co-writer Janell Shirtcliff tries so hard to be both irreverent and reverent towards Tarantino that she forgets the basic foundation of storytelling.

Throughout the film, Mads is constantly connected to Jesus, frequently conversing with him like Charlie in Mean Streets. (She begins her devotions with, "What's up, sexy man?") Rather than pray, she talks God into helping her. In her mind, she's doing God's dirty work. Who better than Mads to don the titular tunic and beg for a sign? No sooner do the words pass from her lips than she looks out the passenger window and sees a nun standing before a pink house, ringing her bell. Jesus gives them the plan to masquerade as nuns and start a convent of their own, but it's a passerby who conveniently hooks them up with a munificent millionairess (Ione Skye) known to take in nuns.

The film turns downright unpleasant with the appearance of Queenie (Josie Ho) — a cross between a Russian nesting doll and Tura Satana — and her confederate Tuff (Jamie Hince), a drugstore cowboy duded up for a night of killing. On his way to Eric's house to collect the cash, Tuff grabs a young boy off the street, whom he later injects with a hypodermic needle. The next time we see the kid, he's motionless on the floor. I'll be the first to agree that the best way to get an audience to hate a character is through pedicide — check out San Fuller's Underworld U.S.A. — but back it up with something other than a nihilistic disregard for humanity. Turning Mads into a junkie nun (a nunkie?) only goes to further prove the filmmaker's campy inability to recreate drug-induced delirium for the cameras.

It ends in immaculate conception, as in, Mads is with child, but doesn't know the father is. I generally like Thorne's choices and the anarchic disregard she brings to movies (and the pages of TMZ.) But that's nothing compared to my passion for telling a story with pictures, something this film can't get in the habit of doing. ●

Video on Demand and New Release Roundup

CODA — Where do they get off calling it an “Amazon Original” when part of CODA's (as in: Children of Deaf Adults) premise (and a good handful of its scenes) are lifted from the French/Belgian film from 2014, The Bélier Family? Normally, I'd concede the rationale behind American-language remakes of foreign films based on a cultural prejudice against subtitles. But this is a film about deaf people; large passages of conversation are subtitled as it is. Nor is it a true story, which leads one to question why the casting is so xerographic in nature: bald and grizzly Troy Kotsur is a dead-ringer for Papa Bélier, while Marlee Matlin — America's most acclaimed deaf actress — dyes her hair blonde to match the fictional Mama. Of the two main subplots put forth in the original, writer/director Sian Heder casts aside the one that concerns dad's run for political office in favor of propping up a more familiar trope: daughter Ruby (Emilia Jones), the only one in the family of four who is not deaf, flaps the wings of her inner-songbird to participate in a competition. If only the plotting were as compelling as the ensemble performances. As much as I'd love to encourage a visit to your local cinema, you'd be better off staying home and downloading the original. 2021. — S.M. ★★

For Madmen Only: The Stories of Del Close

— Del Close influenced generations of comedians, yet his name remains largely unknown to outsiders. Close had a mad love affair with Elaine May and to hear him tell it, instead of Close & May, a fellow comedian named Mike Nichols stole her away and took top billing. It led to a nervous breakdown. For years, he told the story of his father committing suicide by drinking a glass of battery acid in his presence. The events surrounding his death were true, but Close was nowhere in sight. The same man who told L. Ron Hubbard “Go start a Church” helped to form The Compass Players, “the world's first fully improvisational comedy troupe.” From there on in, improv became a way of life. He helped to develop what came to be known as “The Winchester Kitchen Table Rules of Improvisation”: respect the other person's reality, remember where the objects were, always play to popular intelligence, take the unlikely choice, and for God sake, no mime! He arrived in Chicago in 1973 to find that Bernie Sahlins, the founding father behind Second City, had little tolerance for extemporaneous comedy. Close was a comedy guru who trained generations of comedians and never got his due. When SNL began, they raided all of Close's students and left him aside. Filmmaker Heather Ross covers his time spent in and out of mental hospitals as well as his long bouts of drug addiction. Fans of insider comedy will not want to miss this. 2020. — S.M. ★★★

The Night House: Maybe invest in some curtains?

The Last Mercenary — With Eastwood, Stallone, and Schwarzenegger lighting up screens in the '90s, one had very little time to devote to the mulletted likes of ancillary action heroes Chuck Norris or Jean-Claude Van Damme. The bar was reset for the latter with the release of JCVD. With one foot extended high over head and tongue firmly planted in cheek, he starred as a broke, out-of-work movie star fighting to gain custody of his young daughter. Thirteen years later, and not much has changed, except this time it's Archie (Samir Decazza), the son he hasn't seen in 25 years, who believes dad to be dead. JCVD stars as Richard Brumére, the elusive dog of war known as “The Mist.” He's been out of touch for so long that his first contact with the outside world is via fax. The mistaken identity angle soon tires, as does our star trying to pull a Peter Sellers by disguising himself as everything from a swimming instructor to Archie's girlfriend. Like the kid who found out that he was adopted from friends in the alley, Archie learns the truth from a slip of a cohort's numb tongue. Don't expect pathos to get in the way of this silly action comedy. Only on rare occasions does the rapid pace gridlock: outside the window, the police can't be more than twenty-paces from the front door, yet it takes them a minute to finally break it down. Had I known to expect such a glorious third act from the star, I'd have paid closer attention to Bloodsport. David Charhon directs. Catch it on Netflix. 2021. — S.M. ★★★

The Night House — Death looms large. From inside the house, we see two women at the door, one with a tin foil-covered baking dish in hand. Mourners bringing a casserole for the family of the deceased? Not quite: it's Beth (Rebecca Hall), widowed by her husband Owen's suicide, returning home from the funeral. She chucks the dish in the garbage, only to dig it out later for a snack while watching her wedding video. A knock on the widow's door in the middle of the night she buried her husband adds to the unease, but the scenes involving Beth's grieving process are more nerve-rattling than the series of hallucinations that follow. A teacher, Beth is confronted in the classroom by a mother unable to deal with her son getting a C on his test. Coldly and in no uncertain terms, Beth informs Mom that her husband putting a bullet through his head takes precedence over her baby's grade. Suddenly, texts are sent from the beyond. The footprints that led to the pier are now pointed in the direction of the house. And in what could be the longest and loudest jumpscare in movie history, the radio turns on by itself playing Beth and Owen's song. Beth goes through the evidentiary box of Owen's personal belongings to check the eerie text exchanges from the night before, finding the phone buried beneath his clothes and the revolver. Don't you hate it when a character goes looking for one thing and along the way discovers another item that is key to advancing the plot? How about the pictures on Owen's phone of a woman who is Beth's double? Add to that the titular doppelganger and all that's needed to fill out the plot is Hall, who also produced, suffering for two hours. 2021. — S.M. ★★

Swan Song — Flash reaction: Udo Kier. Preparing a gall-bladder kabob in Warhol's Flesh for Frankenstein? How about Johnny Mnemonic's seedy handler? There's the criminally connected Friedrich in Dragged Across Concrete.

This week adds real-life queer icon Pat Pitsenbarger, the man who put the Pride in the Pride of Sandusky, wasting away in a nursing home. Of the 270 (!) films to his credit, Kier's latest drops somewhere in the top 5. Like the contract killer pulled out of retirement for one last hit — he was once the most sought after coiffeur in town — Mr. Pat was requested by one of his late clients (“a demanding Republican monster”) to prepare her hair and makeup for the open-casket sendoff. Her lawyer offers $25,000 to do the job. Why the overcompensation? Rita (Linda Evans) wanted to go to her grave with bygones gone. His advice to the lawyer? “Bury her with bad hair.” That soon changes. The minute he gets around people after a flight from his assisted living facility, he reverts to his old flamboyant self. When referred to by his old nickname, “The Liberace of Sandusky” he blushing replies, “Was I that butch?” A touchingly poignant scene with a one-time client puts Pat in touch with the character-defining getup: a hospital-wall green pantsuit topped by a purple fedora. In the past, Udo Kier dined on heart. This time, he'll break yours with what could be the performance of his career. Writer-director Todd Stephens (Another Gay Movie) pulls off what could be the surprise hit of the summer. Landmark Hillcrest. 2020. — S.M. ★★★

Herewith, a few words to entice you online for my deep dive into Airport 1975 — with Airport '77 to follow!

— Scott Marks

AIRPORT 1975 (1974)

It was the first of three officially sanctioned sequels to Airport, the obscenely successful air-disaster soap opera based on the Arthur Hailey best-seller released five years earlier. The credits read like a Love Boat passenger manifest; therefore it should come as no surprise that the script — small screen scenarist Don Ingalls' one and only theatrical release — was originally intended for a television movie. Producer Jennings Lang liked it so much, he reckoned it worthy of a theatrical release. Good call on his part! The film recouped most of its $3 million budget opening weekend. And the disaster series, which cycled through the early '70s, is part of what made Love Boat possible. The 120 passengers aboard the Washington to Los Angeles flight constitute a melting pot of cliches, all races, creeds, and stratas of life, abridgements of humanity designed with but a single distinguishing feature in mind so as not to tax the viewer. The formula was simple: cram as many stars as possible into one fixed location and, instead of uniting them through romance, dangle the fear of imminent death over their heads. The one thing this period in motion picture history taught us: never judge a movie by the number of star photos (a dozen wide) stretched across the bottom of the poster.

Airport 1975: Now might not be a good time to ask the stewardess for an extra pillow.

Conditions along the mid-Baja peninsula pointing to great late-summer and fall fishing in the San Diego area.

Dock Totals 8/8 – 8/14: 5585 anglers aboard 256 trips out of San Diego landings this past week caught 78 barracuda, 4133 bluefin tuna (up to 80 pounds), 13 bocaccio, 517 bonito, 2134 calico bass (1393 released), 372 dorado, 6 halibut, 4 lingcod, 2,001 rockfish, 621 sand bass, 51 sculpin, 254 sheephead, 1 striped marlin (released), 385 whitefish, 2 white seabass, 806 yellowfin tuna, and 2658 yellowtail.

Saltwater: The bulk of bluefin tuna are moving north toward San Clemente Island and further offshore and up the coast, while yellowfin, dorado, and yellowtail fill in behind them in the warmer water pushing up from the tropics with the early season storms that spawn off the Mexican mainland. Though most of these early systems have dumped a bit of rain in Cabo San Lucas and La Paz, they have been degrading, peeling off to the west and away from the coast after brushing by the tip of the Baja peninsula. Even so, this seasonal pattern is sending south swells north, and along with them more warmer water pelagic species including dorado, marlin, and wahoo. The change along the mid-peninsula Pacific Transition Zone has been rapid.

Most years, the last area of coastal water to warm up is along the southwestern shore of the Vizcaino peninsula that begins 500 miles south of Point Loma, and this season temps have gone from the low 60s to the mid-to-high 70s in the past ten days in that area. Local near-coast pangero reports from Bahia Asunción to Punta Eugenia (the mid-peninsula point that aims directly at Isla Cedros) have gone from a few yellowtail, calico bass, and sheephead caught to limits of yellowtail and dorado with some yellowfin tuna filling in. This early hurricane season change is a good indication of continued great fishing for those species in the San Diego region for some time to come as long as the frequent storms keep forming and pushing water north. Though it may seem odd as it is so far south of the border, the cool water trend in the transition zone is the last marine biosphere to turn over to summer-warm sea conditions, with temperatures rising about two months after they do in Southern California waters.

This change, however, has left the full-day to 2.5-day fleet with three basic options: a long run west/northwest fifty miles or so for bluefin, or south along the coast or offshore for yellowtail, dorado, and yellowfin tuna. 1.5-day and longer trips have more time to chase bluefin tuna than the overnight and full day trips, though some of the latter are splitting their time between all three options on a day-to-day basis. Anglers with a preference of species targeted should check destination areas when booking a trip. If booked weeks or even a few days in advance based on the outstanding bluefin fishing relatively close to port as has been the case for the past couple months, upgrading to a longer trip may be necessary. Though some are doing so, San Clemente Island is a long boat ride for a full day or overnight trip with a greatly reduced fishing time, while 1.5 to 3-day trips might allow time to target all species, especially if the two fish per angler limit on bluefin is met.

Closer to home, there have been notable catches for half day boats, land-based anglers, and the burgeoning kayak angling community. Surf fishing has been "off the hook" for barred perch, corbina and yellowfin croaker from the beach and piers, with a few decent halibut in the mix. Yellowtail have been biting well for the paddlers launching out of La Jolla Shores, and this past week as the bluefin moved north, a kayaker launching from Dana Point caught a fifty pounder just three miles out. Though those bluefin have mostly moved up the line, half day boats and even kayakers should get a shot at dorado and possibly yellowfin tuna within paddling distance of the La Jolla launch over the next couple months, as long as the pattern follows suit of other years where the conditions were similarly aligned. 2021 is not an "official" El Niño year, and as recent studies still favor neutral to light La Niña conditions into September, the fish are so far seemingly oblivious to our often-futile predictions. That said, the Greek philosopher Heraclitus' quote that "change is the only constant in life" certainly applies to fishing.

"Whenever I go out surfing, it's always a bunch of boys out there."

SURF DIEGO

by SIOBHAN BRAUN

17-year-old Ella Campagna has surfed competitively for years.

Favorite Surf spot?: "PB Point."

How long have you been surfing? "Since I was 7 years old. I'm on the Mission Bay High School surf team, and I've been competing in surf competitions for a long time now. My favorite surfing moment was coming in first place overall in the Sun Diego AM SLAM Surf Contest for women's longboard. For me, competing is fun, but it can be stressful depending on the competition and who I am up against."

Do you ever experience sexism in the water? "Definitely. I cut off this guy once on a wave and he started calling me all these [demeaning] names. Whenever I go out surfing, it's always a bunch of boys out there. It just feels weird sometimes."

What do you love most about surfing? "I love being able to go out there by myself to have fun. When I start applying to colleges I will definitely take the location of good surf spots into consideration."

cash. Close Faulconer advisor Phil Rath prospered mightily during the Republican's reign, raking in more than $10,000 apiece from a raft of influence-seekers, including Chick-fil-A and marijuana vendor Loud, Inc. Also among Rath's greater-than-$10,000 clients, a June, 2020 review showed: Newland Sierra, LLC; Paragon Partners; Torrey Holistics; UMMC, Inc; Will Senn; SBC Inc; Lennar Homes of California; Vulcan Materials; Real Outrageous Partners, LLC; Strainwise; and Torrey South Ventures, LLC.

the influence-peddling gravy train, including Faulconer's vanquished Democratic mayoral challenger David Alvarez, a former city council member who in February of last year inked Los Angeles developer Kilroy Realty as his first lobbying client. And the firm of one lobbyist, Maddy Kilkenny, once an assistant to Republican county supervisor Greg Cox and a campaign giver to both Faulconer and his Democratic successor Todd Gloria, grabbed an April 2020 deal with city lessee SeaWorld, to lobby "any and all decisions regarding COVID-19 response, reopening, and rent."

Goals

— If you've missed the window to be an astronaut, maybe you can qualify to pretend to be one for a year. NASA is accepting applications for four people who will live inside Mars Dune Alpha, a simulated Martian habitat at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, the Associated Press reported. The 1,700-square-foot structure will have no windows and will be created by a 3-D printer. These paid volunteers will be challenged with spacewalks, equipment failures, limited communication with "home" and restricted food and resources. "We want to understand how humans perform" in the habitats, said lead scientist Grace Douglas. Requirements are strict, but former Canadian astronaut Chris Hadfield recommends the gig: "Just think how much you're going to be able to catch up on Netflix."

Full Service

— Brandon D'Marcus Presha, 28, was arrested in Laurens, South Carolina, on Aug. 10 for an incident that took place on Aug. 6 in the McDonald's where he works, The Smoking Gun reported. Late that evening, police said, Presha donned gloves and sat down at a table in the restaurant to ink a tattoo on the arm of a minor -- and bystanders posted video of him plying his craft. Presha was charged with tattooing a minor and tattooing without a license.

Shooting Sports

— A 19-year-old woman in Kenosha, Wisconsin, accidentally shot a friend with his own handgun on Aug. 10 while using the weapon's laser sight to entertain a cat, the Associated Press reported. The woman, who had been drinking, according to a witness, picked up the friend's handgun, "turned on the laser sight and was pointing it at the floor to get the cat to chase it," the police report said. The gun went off and a bullet struck the 21-year-old man in the thigh. The victim was charged for violating bond conditions that prevented him from having a gun.

Don't Eat This

— A piece of wedding cake from the 1981 marriage of Lady Diana Spencer and Charles, Prince of Wales, sold at auction in western England on Aug. 11 for $2565, CNN reported. The 28-ounce hunk of confection was taken from one of 23 cakes made for the occasion and features a coat-of-arms, a silver horseshoe and a leaf spray. The piece was apparently given to Moyra Smith, a staffperson for the Queen Mother, at the time of the wedding. Since then, it was kept wrapped in plastic inside a cake tin. After 40 years, auctioneer Chris Albury bragged, "It's an object that's going to last."

Mistaken Identity

— Xi Yan of Jurong West in Singapore called animal welfare group ACRES to her home on July 28 because of what she believed was a snake hissing in a cupboard near her bed. She sent a recording of the noise, and ACRES concluded it was probably a black spitting cobra, reported Coconuts Singapore. The rescue team, armed with protective eyewear and snake grabbers, methodically searched her bedroom, but what they came up with was much less threatening: It was a malfunctioning Oral-B electric toothbrush buzzing away. "The problem started because water got into my electrical toothbrush and affected the mechanism," Xi said. "I should really buy a new one. I don't want to go through this again."

Behind the Curtain

— According to the BBC, North Korea is typically behind schedule when airing Olympic events, but this year is worse than usual. On Aug. 10, Korean Central Television aired 70 minutes of a women's soccer match that had taken place weeks earlier, on July 21. The match was shown without commentary and in low resolution, raising the question of the source of the video. This year, North Korea declined to send a delegation to the Olympics for fear of COVID outbreaks; Pyongyang reports it has no cases of the virus, but experts are skeptical. Sadly, North Koreans may not even know who won that soccer match, since 20 minutes were missing.

Bright Idea

— Rama Mahto, 65, was reportedly drunk outside his home in the village of Madhodeh, India, on Aug. 8, when a baby snake bit him on the leg, Newsweek reported. Contrary to common advice in the wake of a snake bite, Mahto captured the little snake and started chewing on it in revenge, during which his family said he was "bitten more than 10 times" on the face. His family urged him to seek medical help at the hospital, but he went to bed -- and never woke up. Mahto had told his family he didn't think the snake was venomous due to its age.

Seems Obvious

— Milford, Maine, has been fighting a problem with rats for the past several weeks, but the possible solution only came to light during a select board meeting on Aug. 3, the Bangor Daily News reported. According to fire chief Josh Mailman, the town health officer and assistant fire chief Chris Liepold discovered that one resident had been providing a veritable feast for wildlife in her backyard -- a pile of corn and sunflower seeds 20 feet wide and about a foot deep. A neighbor installed a game camera near the pile and found that along with deer, coyotes and bears, "a lot of rats" were visiting the spread. Griffin Dill, an integrated pest management professional at the University of Maine, explained: "If there's one person who's not keeping up their end of the bargain (in fighting rats community-wide), the problem is going to be an immense challenge." The generous feeder may be asked to pay for the removal of the pile, but their actions don't appear to break any laws.
