For indeed, truly, why worry about all the other squares being subjected to unasked-for performances when you could have a famous band (wow! ooh!

ahh!) like Billy Watson's play in your back yard, instead of going out to some kind of venue for music that you have to listen to with OTHER PLEBS?

LOO LAND

Problem: a paucity of public potties

SDSU's Project for Sanitation Justice makes a map

Call it a bathroom desert. Nearly half the county's census tracts have no permanent public restrooms. At the same time, using the great outdoors in lieu of a loo could lead to a fine. The shortfall affects everyone from joggers and tourists to transit users, but it's especially hard on those with physical disabilities and the homeless, say researchers with San Diego State's Project for Sanitation Justice. At night, the expected ratio downtown is one restroom for every 383 unsheltered people. The problem isn't unique to San Diego, but it has festered for more than two decades, prompting four

The region's public restrooms are managed by public agencies and public-private partnerships, plus departments within San Diego County's 18 cities, the county, and the Port of San Diego. Until now, only portable units have been mapped. Without knowing where the permanent bathrooms are — and aren't — it's hard to fix the problem, the researchers say. So in their new report, they present the first countywide database of their locations. To be included, a restroom had to be permanent, free of charge, and not located inside a private business or beyond a security screening checkpoint, like an airport.

The initial phase of the project sought to locate every permanent public bathroom, slicing the data by jurisdictions, zip codes, census tracts, and the city's community planning areas and council districts. The result: "We percent of the county's population. Another 1,027,122 people live in tracts with one restroom, and some 403,011 people have two restrooms in their tract.

Solana Beach, Del Mar, Lemon Grove, Vista, and Imperial Beach have fewer than 10 each. The county's smaller cities average about 17 public restrooms apiece. The Port of San Diego oversees 21 restrooms, included in the counts for Chula Vista, Coronado, Imperial Beach, National City, and San Diego. Across the county's 113 zip codes, the average number is about six. By county district, the report found District 4 (Fletcher) to have the fewest, and District 3 (Lawson-Remer) the most. The city of San Diego has 294 public restrooms.

The average number for its nine council districts is about 33, though some have fewer than 20 (Districts 6, 7, and 9), and two are "far above the average" (Districts 2 and 3). When it comes to community planning areas, Mission Bay Park leads with 40, downtown San Diego is next with 32, and Balboa Park has 21.

It remains unclear just how many restrooms are needed, but the researchers say there aren't nearly enough. In some cases, expanding hours and maintaining existing bathrooms would go a long way. As the project continues over the next several months, it will complete an audit of restroom quality and access, conduct surveys, and try to better understand community concerns about crime, vandalism, and the cost of maintenance. (Although the restrooms were counted between October 2021 and January 2022, it's not too late to add one that may have been missed, has permanently closed, or is under construction.)

No Orbeez, please Cops warn of TikTok teen trend trouble

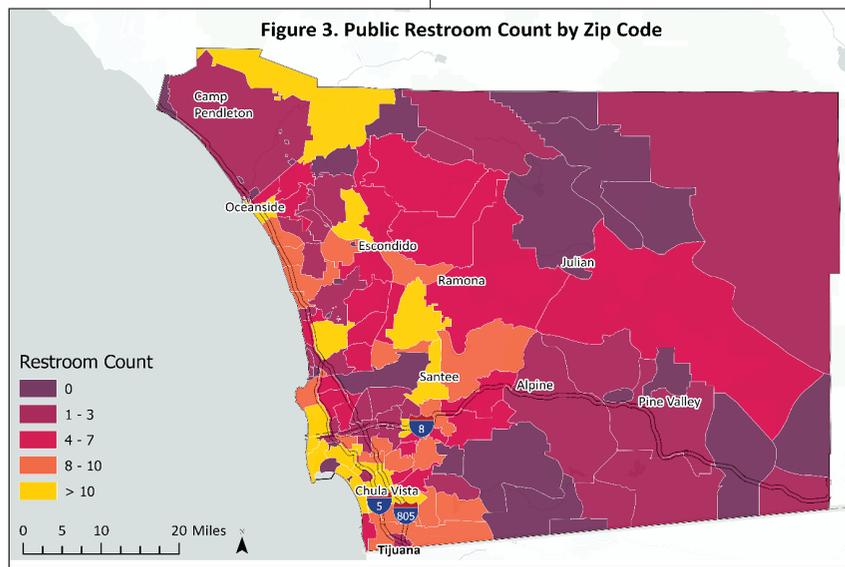

On the evening of April 3, El Cajon resident Brenda B. "heard gunshots" outside of her home. "Then I called my mom, who lives on my street," she said. "I told her not to go out while I rushed to my window to see. This area makes me feel so unsafe, and every day something happens."

I interviewed Brenda on April 8. She's 28 and works in the early childhood education field. I withheld her last name for safety reasons. She's witnessed a few scary incidents near her home — and their after-maths. Recently, a bloodied man with a "big hammer" was pounding on her door. She has noticed "guys stealing catalytic [converters] from cars, people screaming, fights, car accidents... And someone broke into my house while I wasn't home." The situation has put her on edge, so when she heard what she thought were gunshots, she was alarmed. "I couldn't see anything, but I heard a man yelling as if he was mad, and I got a bit scared and didn't go outside to check, because you never know what could happen." Later that night, Brenda's neigh-

My husband's and brother's car got hit tonight, and I just wanted to share this info with you all just in case it happens to you. I already called and told the police what happened." Brenda continued, "At that moment, I didn't know it was paintballs. My dad's car had a window broken, and who knows, maybe it was [also] caused by paintballs."

On March 31, days before the paintball shooting, the El Cajon Police Department posted a photo on its Instagram of an orange toy gun lying on the hood of a police vehicle. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Well, maybe not Littorally Worthless...but probably not worth it.

USS Fort Worthless?

Audit names San Diego-based ship in scathing shipbuilding assessment. The Navy is keeping sloppy track of its errant shipbuilding and repair contractors — including San Diego's National Steel and Shipbuilding subsidiary of General Dynamics — causing massive cost overruns and chronically crippled vessels, according to a new report by the Government Accountability Office. From aircraft carriers to littoral combat ships, the April 12 report found that taxpayers are being mightily gouged by faulty and delayed repairs, unchecked by designated watchdogs.

Among glaring issues: “Persistent propulsion system problems that significantly limit engine power with...Littoral Combat Ships.” LCS repair woes have led the Navy to seek cutting nine of the vessels and abolishing anti-submarine missions for the remaining fleet, according to a March 28 Defense News account. The hit list includes the San Diego-based USS Fort Worth, the maintenance of which is supposed to be monitored by a Navy unit called Supervisors of Shipbuilding, Conversion and Repair, SUPSHIP for short, based in Bath, Maine. And while the news hasn't made headlines in San Diego, the Fort Worth's proposed demise has encountered pushback in its namesake town by Republican House member Kay Granger of Texas. “I think it's absolutely the wrong thing to do,” she told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in an April 14 account, adding, “it's fast, it's agile and it's very capable. And it can be used in very specialized missions overseas.”

Also on the auditor's list of troubles: “Deficiencies with the CVN 78 aircraft carrier's 11 advanced weapons elevators,” which impair “sailors' ability to transport weapons to the aircraft carrier's deck for more than four years after the Navy accepted delivery of the ship.” Yet more hot spots include “Quality issues with a special treatment not adhering to the hulls of Virginia class submarines,” which “created challenges in meeting performance requirements and required costly unanticipated maintenance for the Navy. Collectively, these results have raised questions about the Navy's ability to effectively oversee shipbuilder performance throughout the construction of new ships.”

According to the GAO report, contractors' lack of adequate supervision has resulted in soaring costs for taxpayers and lasting maintenance headaches. “Navy shipbuilding programs regularly faced cost and schedule growth before ships were accepted into the fleet,” says the audit, adding that costs were forced over budget by more than $1.1 billion over ten years. In addition, quality has suffered dramatically, as exemplified by rising delays and costs at another General Dynamics facility cited by the auditors. “General Dynamics — Electric Boat—builder of Virginia and Columbia class submarines, each costing billions of dollars — took about 2½ years to resolve deficiencies for which [The office of Supervisors of Shipbuilding, Conversion and Repair] Groton withheld payments. SUPSHIP officials said it took an additional 2½ years to fully validate that the contractor's corrective actions restored system compliance.” Auditors picked a sample of 12 ships delivered since 2017 for a case study, revealing that “the Navy commonly proceeds through the sea trials phase with unresolved construction deficiencies and incomplete work.”

According to the report, Navy brass's persistent granting of work repair waivers to repair contractors have added to the problems and created new ones. The audit found that the San Diego-based USS Michael Monsoor, a Zumwalt class destroyer, had the second-highest repair waiver count, getting 29 during acceptance trials and 18 for ship delivery. Long a target of critics, the Monsoor had to be towed through the Panama Canal when it broke down during its maiden cruise to San Diego in November 2016 and has since experienced equipment failures. “Waiving incomplete or deficient equipment through trials and delivery reduces the [Navy's] ability to hold the shipbuilder accountable for timely correction of deficiencies by allowing shipbuilders to deliver ships that have yet to meet requirements. Further, [Chief of Naval Operations] approval of waivers for incomplete work reduces the SUPSHIPS' opportunities to interact with the equipment through inspections and testing to better understand its condition prior to ship delivery.” The waivers “also have the potential to mask construction problems with longer-term quality and performance consequences that can limit ship operations for the fleet forces,” the report says.

UNDER THE RADAR

Juan's easy path to power

After years of coasting through easy reelection battles, House Democrat Juan Vargas — running in California's newly redrawn 52nd District and facing a challenger from his party's left — is unlikely to find much different this campaign season. “Establishment politicians and the rich have reigned over our democracy for too long,” declares Joaquin Vazquez, a fellow Democrat, on his campaign website. Adds a dispatch from Blue America, which runs a liberal political action committee backing Vazquez: “Bernie won the district both times he ran for president. The incumbent, Juan Vargas, is a corrupt New Dem with a long, self-serving careerist history, first in the legislature and then in Congress. You might call him business-friendly, but a more accurate term is Vargas-friendly.” Vazquez has promised not to accept corporate contributions for his effort to dislodge Vargas. “Not taking corporate money may put me at a disadvantage in fundraising, but this is how we will ensure we are only beholden to the people's actual priorities, not to big business,” says the candidate in a statement cited by Blue America. “It is how we will ensure that families are no longer separated at the border and within our neighborhoods, and get closer to abolishing ICE.” Unlike incumbent Democrat Sara Jacobs in the 53rd District to the North, who made a similar pledge and then relied on millions of dollars of her Qualcomm-generated family fortune to get into office, Vazquez is from humble roots, and likely won't be self-funding.

Federal disclosure records show Vargas came up with a total of $622,989 between the first day of 2021 and the end of March, with ending cash on hand of $250,400. Donors included Verizon, AT&T, State Farm Insurance, and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters. Spending has included $7050 on January 29 of last year for a “vehicle lease signing payment” to San Diego Dodge, Jeep, Ram, and $115605.35 in January to his longtime friend and political guru Larry Remer's Primacy Group for his annual holiday card. The vehicle might not incur as much mileage in the new district as the old, which saw its labored stretch to the Imperial Valley lopped off by redistricting, while creating a super-wide 36-point voter registration lean to Democrats, per FiveThirtyEight. By comparison, 49th District Democrat Mike Levin enjoys just a five-point Democratic registration advantage. The margin there is so slim that the Democrats' House Majority PAC is ramping up to spend millions of dollars on TV spots to save his seat, the New York Times reported March 30. The 50th District of House colleague Scott Peters of La Jolla has a plus-27 point lean and Jacobs's 51st District favors Dems by plus-22. Despite the partisan registration odds against him, Republican Tyler Geffeney, an anti-abortion real estate agent from Fallbrook, is also in the Vargas race. “Illegal immigration has developed a cesspool for drug and sex trafficking where countless youth being escorted by coyotes straight into slavery for sex,” says his campaign website. “We need to close off our porous border while making the pathway to legal citizenship achievable.”

Lorena's choice Ex-Assembly Democrat Lorena Gonzalez, married to county supervisor Nathan Fletcher, chipped in $8270 on April 11 from her now-unneeded 2022 reelection stash for Assembly hopeful Georgette Gomez's ongoing election battle with fellow Democrat and ex-city councilmember David Alvarez.

Gomez took a tight 38.2 to 37.8 lead over Alvarez in the April 7 balloting to fill the Gonzalez seat, which she vacated in January, necessitating a June 7 runoff...Assembly Republican-turned-Democrat Brian Maienschein has been pulling in 2022 reelection campaign cash from the usual corporate and labor union sources, including the California Federation Of Teachers ($3500, April 11), PriceWaterhouseCooper LLP ($2500, April 8), Gilead Sciences Inc. ($1500, April 8), the California State Pipe Trades Council PAC ($5000, April 5), National Union Of Healthcare Workers Candidate Committee ($4900, April 1), Blue Shield of California ($2000, April 1), and Independent Insurance PAC ($1500, March 31.) Fellow Assembly Democrats have also been kicking in for the low-raising Maienschein, including $4900 from Marc Berman for Assembly 2022 on April 14. Eloise Reyes For Assembly 2022, Jones-Sawyer for Assembly 2022, and Jim Wood for Assembly 2022 each gave the same on April 5. Then on April 12, he picked up $9800 from Lorena Gonzalez's 2022 kitty. Meanwhile the California Nurses Association PAC gave $16,200 on March 18 to Shirley Weber's Secretary of State reelection bid. Weber raked in $16,200 from the California Teachers Assn. for Better Citizenship the previous day and got the same from the Southwest Regional Council of Carpenters PAC on March 9.

Environmental Assessment for Encroachments Along U.S. Navy Miramar Pipeline

Draft Environmental Assessment Available for Public Review

The U.S. Navy prepared a Draft Environmental Assessment (EA) to evaluate the potential environmental impacts associated with the realignment of two segments of the Navy's existing Miramar fuel pipeline in the Clairemont Mesa area of San Diego to address two major areas of the pipeline easement that have been encroached upon, making it challenging for the Navy to inspect, maintain, and repair affecting operations. Fueling operations do not pose a risk to public or environmental safety. The Proposed Action would address major encroachments by constructing new underground pipeline segments within the City of San Diego right-of-way, away and out from under school, church, and residential properties.

The Navy invites you to review the Draft EA and welcomes your substantive comments on the accuracy and adequacy of the environmental analysis.

The public can participate in any of the following ways:

beads at unsuspecting victims, such as joggers, people in stores, and vehicles on the roadway, using these splat guns. This is an incredibly dangerous prank.”

The “Orbeez Challenge” is a social media trend that started before students around the U.S. went on Spring Break. Kids load up Orbeez — gelatinous beads that expand when fused with water — into their gel blaster guns and then film themselves as they shoot random people. But it’s not just Orbeez being shot; Nerf foam darts and paintballs can also be discharged from the toys. In March, people around the county reported on neighborhood forums about teenagers in vehicles (and tweens on e-bikes) shooting soft projectiles at smaller children, homeless people, shoppers, parents, and even a “pregnant woman.” And while it may sound harmless, people are quick to post photos of welts left by the projectiles.

Last month, El Cajon local Victoria Valdez and her 10-year-old son were shot at while taking a stroll in their neighborhood, on Lexington Avenue near the fire station. “The gun made noise while being shot; we heard the air pressure,” Valdez told me on April 9. “My son said it looked like a BB [gun] and it really scared him. I heard the gun go off several times, but only my son saw the car and the driver who did it. Who does that to a kid?”

Not everyone takes the victims of toy-gun pranks seriously: one alleged prankster was photographed holding up what appeared to be a Nerf gun, mocking the disgruntled photographer who had just been shot at. A grandmother commented on Facebook, “A little Nerf gun toy is not a crime!” An Instagrammer questioned the El Cajon Police Department, stating, “The gel balls explode upon impact, and they don’t leave a mark, so there would need to be additional proof.” The police department replied, “It would be an assault on a person if one shot an individual with a gel bead. Regardless of a mark being left.” Further, “these juveniles run the risk of a citizen or a law enforcement officer mistaking it for a real gun and defending themselves. We encourage you to talk to your friends and children to inform them of the dangers associated with engaging in this TikTok trend.”

Last year, the attempted filming of a robbery prank for YouTube led to a death in Nashville, Tennessee. Twenty-year-old YouTuber Timothy Wilks and his friend David Starnes Jr., with butcher knives as part of the prank. Starnes, 23, told police detectives that he was unaware of the prank and shot Wilks in self-defense, according to a February 6, 2021 statement released by the Metropolitan Nashville Police Department.

White flight all right? Border opens gates to Ukrainians but not migrants fleeing violence

Two months ago, the El Chaparral migrant camp of Central Americans was expunged by Tijuana’s municipal government; the move was supposed to aid in the reopening of the El Chaparral Port of Entry at the San Ysidro-Tijuana border. And on April 7, after more than two years of closure due to covid, the port did reopen. But to the surprise of many, migration authorities of the U.S. did not open the gate in order to enhance daily border crossing, but for Ukrainian refugees.

The decision brought complaints from those that cross the border for work, mainly Mexican-Americans, and from non-Ukrainian migrants who have waited months or even years to enter the United States. Erwin Lopez, who works in San Diego and crosses the border daily, said, “We all lose, because people sometimes are late for their jobs... From what I have noticed, Central Americans were never treated that well. For me, it’s uncomfortable to see the preference (Ukrainians) are given just for the color of their skin.” To Josefia Ariaz, who also crosses daily, it’s not fair for Mexican-Americans or legal residents who had been waiting for the El Chaparral gate to be reopened. She noted the difference in how Ukrainian migrants and Hondurans are treated: “I think it’s kind of racist. Why, if they (Central Americans) are also escaping from something, are they not given the same attention? It’s like a friend of mine said:

pening in their country, but migrants are escaping from a war environment as well. Of course, the war is not official, but their lives are threatened, and on their way here they suffered rapes, murders, and all kinds of hardships. The thing here is that the U.S. is responding according to their geopolitical strategy. Ukraine is one of its allies. Rusthe U.S. prefers blonde white migrants to keep their race, and we Mexicans and Hondurans look alike, more or less. I agree with her.”

Judith Cabrera, co-director of Border Line Crisis Center, which advocates for migrants, lamented that while one group is received as heroes, the other is received as criminals. “We know that Ukrainians are escaping from this terrible war that is hap-sians have been treated differently.” Most Ukrainian migrants usually wait for about three or four days to get into the U.S.; Central Americans that have had to remain for months in Mexico while waiting. Neither Mexican nor American migration authorities have announced when the El Chaparral Port of Entry will be opened for its normal use.

John Edward, peripatetic psychic

I just got off the phone with John Edward, the self-described psychic medium who came to prominence around 20 years ago on the television programs Crossing Over and Cross Country, through his appearances with Larry King and Oprah, and through countless public psychic readings. But Edward's career as a psychic began long before his stardom. He grew up in a family that was at least partially hospitable to the possibility of psychic phenomena — his father was averse to it, but Mom and Grandma were interested — and says he identified his abilities while still a child. He had some guidance from an older psychic mentor who took a special interest in him, and began working in the field when he was just 15 years old. He started small, doing psychic fairs, readings for individuals, and parties that he jokes were “like Tupperware parties, but with a psychic instead of Tupperware.”

That was nearly 40 years ago. Now, Edward is touring, and on April 22, he will be hosting coming a live event at the Sheraton San Diego Hotel on Harbor Island. Edward has been to San Diego before, as well as lots of other places in California. He prefers to be near the ocean if he can be. “I’m a water person,” he says. On one of his last visits, he held his event at a hotel Downtown where he met and befriended Jo Frost, the Supernanny. He took his niece to see the seals in La Jolla. Now as then, he will be offering the audience his services as someone who — through the perception of symbols, letters, numbers, or personal presences — claims to be able to connect people here in this world with those who have left it already. That is his speciality.

I wrote “audience” above, but when I use that word in conversation with Edward, he lets me know that there are no spectators at his events. As he puts it, “Everyone is in the pool,” and nobody should expect to not get wet.” Though Edward says that “the accuracy is the same” for readings done in person as for those that happen remotely, he also says that there is a special “energy” — a word he uses frequently, in various contexts — in the live events. In fact, he tells me that one of his producers for Crossing Over once said he wished that the show could somehow capture the feeling of a live event. Something more like being at a concert than seeing a recording of it. This makes sense to me: a live event allows the person in the “pool” to feel the charged expectation of seeing a man at the front of the room who is a reputed bridge to another world. The crowd buzzes with anticipation. They gasp in recognition when he gets something right. Doubters have their sense of what’s possible expanded. Tears flow as people experience what feels like reconnection with their lost loves.

When I talk to Edward, I am of course curious about what he says he is perceiving when he is doing a reading. I note that it seems he sometimes reports whole names or words, while other times, he gets just a letter or a number. “I wish it was always the same,” he tells me, but it seems it’s just the case that levels of psychic clarity vary. He may get whole names or words, or he may get something more suggestive, less well-defined. All he can do is work with what he gets. He sometimes repeats a motto he received from a mentor: “You don’t always have to be right, but you have to try to be as accurate as possible.” He says the specificity himself and the “sitter” — the process has to be collaborative. When he sees evident resistance, disinterest, or a forcing of the experience away from whomever or whatever is “coming through,” he will even stop the reading. “The face,” is his shorthand for this reaction, which I’m given to understand often comes accompanied by certain visage. “I’m not a big fan of the face,” he says.

“You don’t always have to be right, but you have to try to be as accurate as possible.”

of what he has in mind is what gives him the confidence to be insistent with the reading — and adds that his doggedness once earned him a comparison to a terrier from a fellow psychic.

Edward can seem insistent while he is reading, engaging his subject in a way that probably looks pushy to skeptical eyes. It may look like he is playing on a person’s suggestibility. I ask him about this, and he says that he is not concerned about pushing people, because if something is there, “then it’s there.” He describes himself as reporting what he senses, even if it is there amid a less-than-ideal murk. And once he has something in his perception, he says that his “brain is like a runway” and that he has to “air traffic control what’s there,” getting things out of the way and moving them along.

He also says that some people don’t realize that “there needs to be a connection” between

I appreciate comments like that one, and when he tells me at the interview’s start, “You do you,” and when he says that he thinks many psychics are “lazy.” These serve as reminders that this medium is also a New York guy, the Irish-Italian-American son of a cop who was raised, and still lives, on Long Island. He curses once or twice during our conversation, and he talks a good deal about his family.

At one point, I admitted to Edward my surprise that he would want to talk with someone like me — Oprah I ain’t. He said that he treats interviews and media contacts of all kinds as important: they are ways to reach people with what he does, and he believes that people are brought together for a reason, whether those people are the ones who end up as producers of his TV show, or a client for whom he is doing a reading. He believes that if even 10 people see an interview he does, those 10 people are important. ■

John Edward: “I’ve been doing this for longer than most people.”

The Father of California Wine:

Agoston Haraszthy
Theodore Schoenman, editor

DURING THEIR SHORT STAY in San Diego, the Haraszthys, father and son, seemed to have dominated the town. But they had also been in the center of a curious controversy. They were sharply upbraided in the local press for some peculiar machinations in connection with the building of the first jail in San Diego. Even for a frontier town, free gunplay in 1850-51 was phenomenal. With the large number of wild characters floating in and out on their way to the goldfields, a good jail was badly needed. Haraszthy bid for the job and was awarded the contract by the city council headed by his father even though his bid of $5000 was more than double the lowest bid. This raised quite a few eyebrows. Because good quality cement was hard to get, Haraszthy had to use huge cobblestones held together with a mortar of local origin. This was loosened by heavy rains, and when the first prisoner, a harmless drunk, was locked up and a public celebration with a parade and music was held, the prisoner crashed through the wall and calmly sauntered over to the nearest saloon to the immense amusement of the crowd. But Haraszthy not only weathered the storm, in the end he was awarded an additional $2000 to make the jail more secure.

He made his mark in the legislature as well. He successfully lobbied for the expansion of San Diego harbor and for a hospital to care for sick immigrants. He also fought off a determined attempt to create a telegraph monopoly in San Francisco. But his historic proposal to divide California into two states died in the senate.

I GOT MY FIRST GLIMPSE of San Diego at about three o'clock in the morning, right off the bus. I spent the whole night roaming the streets, and I couldn't get over the quiet, coming from New York. The streets had a swabbed feel. The whole place just looked deserted to me, and it's not an impression I ever really got over, that something was missing. San Diego's always sort of struck me as the town out of a dull person's imagination. I didn't really feel much spirit there until I met Blue.

LEVEL UP LOOKS TO WED WRESTLING AND WEED

Perhaps you know that the official beer of the National Football League is Bud Light. The NBA has Michelob ULTRA. Major League Baseball's official beer is Budweiser, but its official cerveza is Corona. And wrestling? Well, the WWE has Victoria as a sponsor for SummerSlam, but if local wrestling promoter Norris "Bones" Jarmon gets his way, the sport may get another sort of substance as its sponsor: cannabis. "For this industry, it's not like boxing, where you are going to see Corona's logo in the middle of the ring," Jarmon explains. "You're gonna see stuff like an 'XYZ' cannabis brand." Jarmon aims to emblazon the sponsors' logos onto the same spots pro boxing matches would hit, including for TV, so when you get those backstories, cannabis storylines are going on,” Jarmon continues. “Like, ‘Hey, you stole my Cannabiotics, dude, that’s my favorite XYZ weed, and we have to go settle this in the ring.’ You are going to see a wrestler hit an XYZ, and you’re going to see him hit a guy, and you’re going to hear the commentator say, ‘Whoa, that XYZ hits hard.’ Ideally, the people in the crowd will say, ‘Oh, I gotta get an XYZ.’ So there are a hundred different ways we can promote brands.” If the videos go viral, “you can’t help seeing the brands on the videos,” and the sponsor’s fame spreads.

LUCHADOR — SUPER FUERTE CANNABIS

On February 25, Jarmon — an IT technician and a wrestler in his own right — brought students from his Level Up Wrestling School to grapple with visitors from Los Angeles’ Santino Bros. Wrestling Academy at the first-ever Green Thumbs Up event, held in the parking lot of the Dr. Greenthumb’s Dispensary on Campo Road in his La Mesa hometown.

(It seemed like a promising location: La Mesa is only 9.1 square miles, but According to a Cal State University-San Marcos study, in the first two quarters of 2020, City of La Mesa records showed more than $10.16 million in adult-use cannabis sales within city limits, yielding over $400,000 in taxes.) What followed was a three-hour “high-flying madness” wrestling show, with a side of comedy skits, complimentary agua frescas for any incidental cottonmouth, and tacos to sate the fans’ munchies. The event started right before 5 pm, as tag-team wrestlers James ‘Mr. Attitude’ Brady and Savanna Stone stomped their way to the wrestling ring as the sun set behind the 94 and 125 freeway changeover overhead. The St. Louis-based wrestling duo high-fived the fans, and then Stone stopped mid-stride and gazed at a group sitting ringside as they passed around a joint. One fan got the hint and gave the marijuana stick to Stone, who pinched it with her index finger and ‘green thumb,’ brought it to her lips, took a long drag, tilted her head back, and held her breath.

“There you go, smoke it up, Stone, smoke it up,” yelled Terex, one of the live commentators at the event, which streamed on YouTube’s Canna Pro Wrestling Show. (The show is another part of Jarmon’s Full Spectrum Promotions company.) Stone exhaled a substantial cloud of smoke while simultaneously opening up her arms in triumph.

Terex yelled, “Don’t bogart the plant; let James Brady hit that.”

Stone handed the joint over to her partner. Brady then ascended into the 18x18 wrestling ring with its apron reading “LUCHADOR — SUPER FUERTE CANNABIS,” joint in hand. He stood on the top turnbuckle and puffed away, illuminating the cherry at the end of the joint. The crowd cheered.

“I’ve smoked and wrestled before at the same time,” Terex commented. “Let me tell you what, it is tough to do.”

Barry Sweeney, the second commentator, replied, “I imagine that’s why you are the professional. I can’t imagine taking a hit from that is gonna mellow out either of these competitors, though.”

“No, definitely not,” Terex agreed before hitting his own Georgia Peaches indica joint and coughing a little. Sweeney grinningly passed his own joint toward Terex and asked, “Take a hit of this?” Terex declined.

By now, Brady and Stone were feverishly pacing the ring — loosening up, stretching their bodies, utilizing the turnbuckles in the corners as pivot points. The tag team, who double as a couple outside of the ring, also heaped abuse on their opponents below: Guy Cool and El Primohenio Trebeca from Los Angeles, and Michael “Main Attraction Wrestler (MAW)” Hopkins from San Diego. The five were set to compete in a five-way scramble match; the winner being the wrestler who scored a three-count-pin or a submission before the allotted time limit.

The bell rang twice to signal the start of the match. Guy Cool, a small-framed wrestler in pink and black spandex pants, yelled through his megaphone at Brady. MAW Hopkins then punched Cool while simultaneously stomping on the wrestling mat.

“Straight dick punch!” Terex yelled as Hopkins tossed Cool over the top rope and Cool fell eight feet to the pavement below.

Stone and Brady then simultaneously flung Hopkins and Trebeca into the ropes. When they bounced back, the couple performed a synchronized big back body drop, sending Hopkins and

STAND AGAINST PLANTAR FIBROMATOSIS

DO YOU HAVE A NODULE ON THE ARCH OR BOTTOM OF YOUR FOOT?

It could be plantar fibromatosis, a condition in which slow-growing nodules (lumps) on the bottom of your foot cause discomfort, swelling, and difficulty with walking.

New treatment options are needed for plantar fibromatosis

- Current treatments for plantar fibromatosis are focused on relieving swelling
- Removal of nodules may require surgery or radiation therapy

Biosolutions Clinical Research Center is enrolling patients for a clinical study

The goal of the study is to learn more about a potential non-surgical treatment option for plantar fibromatosis. You may be eligible to take part in the study if you*

Are aged 18 years and older

Have a diagnosis of plantar fibromatosis and at least 1 hard or firm palpable nodule

Be willing to participate in follow-up visits and answer questionnaires *Additional eligibility criteria apply. Speak with the study team to learn more.

After receiving treatment, you may resume normal activities.

Trebeca “straight up and straight the f–k down,” as Terex put it. The couple then tussled in the ring in a lovers’ spat while the three other wrestlers remained momentarily incapacitated outside. But only momentarily. Soon, as Sweeney noted, the action was “spilling out into Dr. Greenthumbs’ audience here. Not only does every competitor in this match have to be careful, but so do these fans, because their reflexes gotta be awfully slowed by now,”

Terex clapped back, “That’s a misconception there, Sweeney. Potheads can do just as much as non-potheads; we’re very motivated.”

Hopkins picked up Stone, spun her around, then sidewalk slammed her to the mat. Brady made it back up to the ring, and he duked it out with Trebeca. The couple “shitcanned” Hopkins and Trebeca over the top rope, and then Guy Cool rejoined the match, ready to deploy the Stunner. It’s one of his favorite finishing moves, in which he reaches back to grab the opponent’s head, then abruptly drops to his buttocks in a seated position, forcefully dropping his opponent’s face into his shoulders. The sound of the wrestlers hitting the mat was tremendous.

“Guy Cool, apparently he was out taking a little weed nap; he f–king woke up from that shit,” Terex said.

“That’s the strategy,” Sweeney replied.

At that point, Hopkins finally snapped out of his daze, grabbed Cool with a double underhook, lifted him by the inside of his elbows, then plowed him into the mat. The ref counted, “One, two... three,” and the bell rang.

Sexy Fabrizio, Osiris Mittens and THE REBEL STORM.

“Here is the winner of the match!” yelled the ring announcer. “The MAW, Michael Hopkins.” The fans cheered for their San Diego hero.

Level Up

A few months before the February event, I drove out to the Level Up

Pro Wrestling School at 7323 El Cajon Boulevard. Three guys, including MAW Hopkins, were in the wrestling ring, practicing moves. The ring — the same one they would use at Green Thumbs Up — was in the middle of the space. Some of the fold-up chairs and tables surrounding the ring had battle scars, as they had doubled as projectile weapons in previous bouts. The place felt like a theater: curtains, a matte-black interior with high ceilings, and a truss system overhead holding various colored spotlights.

A loud boom echoed from underneath the ring as Hopkins body-slammed the other wrestler. “Then you cusp the head like this,” he explained — then he looked at me as I snapped photos. “My bad,” I said, before scurrying back outside to await Jarmon. The wrestling school shares a wall with the NAPA Auto Parts store on one side; on the other is a medical plaza, home of Urban Leaf, a recreational cannabis dispensary. Jarmon, the co-founder of Level Up, pulled up, and I asked what his landlords thought when he told them he was opening a school for Lucha Libre pro wrestling.

“They were like, ‘Uuuuuhh, what?’” Jarmon answered. “But before I signed the lease... well, let’s back up to 2016. That’s when I got back into professional wrestling training after a 14-year hiatus.” In 2016, Jarmon linked up with his buddy, Benny “B-Boy” Cuntapay, the head trainer at the Battle-U Pro Wrestling School in Chula Vista. Known as “Bones” in the local pro-wrestling circuit because of his slender, 6-foot 1-inch, 160-pound body, Jarmon started training exercises with B-Boy as refresher courses. The two had previously trained in the early 2000s.

Battle U is also where MAW Hopkins got his start: “I remember seeing B-Boy in the Lucha Underground TV show,” he said, “so I signed up with him in the summer of 2016. Plus, I live in Oak Park, and Chula Vista is a lot closer than the only other open pro-wrestling school was at the time.” Hopkins, who had just gotten out of the U.S. Army, was an established fitness trainer.

But in the world of pro wrestling, he was a total newbie. “When you start training, it’s all about the rolls,” Hopkins explained. “Like tumbling, basically, trying to break your fall, so you are not hitting your head or breaking your neck. There’s a lot of neck conditioning, like doing bridges and flexibility stuff and opening up your hips. Stuff that you wouldn’t get at a normal gym facility.”

Jarmon added, “You prepare your body for the worst, like almost a car crash. For example, we were out playing football one time, and I slipped on a rock. The only thing I remembered was tucking my chin in, and when I landed on the other rocks, luckily, I didn’t hit my head. I would’ve been a lot worse shape if I had.”

Hopkins agreed: “It’s all about just trying to protect yourself, because wrestling is an extreme, theatrical sport. So, when we do things, it’s one take, so we gotta make sure we don’t mess ourselves up in that take that we’re doing it.”

Early in the program, students learned a few collegiate wrestling techniques. “Because Benny has done that in the past,” Hopkins said. “So he put all that training into us as beginners to have at least the general basics. When you wrestle, you have to make it look believable, and his big thing is making everything look legit.” Athletes have to be in tip-top shape, and flexible enough to perform myriad fast-paced maneuvers. Jarmon continued: “In class, we talked about ‘What is the best-conditioned athlete?’ and I believe it’s a pro wrestler. When wrestling and grappling on the mat, sometimes that oxygen level is restricted; you gotta have a different level of conditioning.” After the aspiring wrestlers learned the fundamentals, they got into the moves, the different holds, and pins. “For the first three or four months, that’s all we did; it was all technical wrestling,” Hopkins said. “And then submissions. B-Boy is big on submissions.” At the Green Thumbs Up event, Hopkins employed different submission moves: “a reverse front facelock or the inverted front facelock, and after that, a scorpion death drop.” The scorpion death drop is when a wrestler applies an inverted facelock to the opponent, then drops backward, plowing the back of the opponent’s head into the mat.

Jarmon added, “And this is why you have to learn how to fall at the beginning of the courses, because if you are not prepared, you can get hurt.”

Once their in-close work is solid, students can learn the more free-wheeling stuff: how to hit and bounce off the ropes, how to jump off the turnbuckles. “Getting your footwork right is probably the biggest thing to learn there,” Hopkins added, “in terms of taking the right steps and making sure that we collide in the middle of the ring. You want all your impact and bumps — which is when you fall — to be right in the center of the ring.”

“Falling in the center — is that being theatrical?” I asked.

“That’s just being safe.” Hopkins responded.

After you get all the fundamentals down, you should be ready to structure the match. “And basically, that’s all psychology,” Hopkins explained. “You work the crowd.

First, you have to establish your character to the crowd.” This is where you differentiate between the good guy wrestler and the bad guy wrestler. Hopkins’ character at Green Thumbs Up was more of a bad guy; the fans rooted for him because he was local. “I try to become cocky,” he said. “I show out. I show my athleticism; that’s who the ‘Main Attraction’ is. That’s who he portrays himself to be. I’m that guy in the gym just curling in the mirror, being the loudest one there. Not that I am that guy in real life — that’s the character.”

Once character is established, the action can commence. “The good guy,” said Hopkins, “he does all his cool stuff in the beginning: the arm drags, the hip tosses, and dropkicks. That’s their opener. And then it’s the bad guy’s turn; now the bad guy has to inflict pain on the good guy, cut him down and get sympathy from the crowd; you have to build up the sympathy, making everyone in the crowd feel sorry for the good guy. And then there are those little hope spots in between when the good guy fights back, but then the bad guy cuts him down again. And it’s just a back and forth battle until both opponents are down for a minute. And then you have the good guy shine back up, and he works his way back into the fight, and then finally hits the bad guy with a big move. And it’s just a back and forth, big move after big move, then who’s gonna win or who’s going home with a submission or a knockout.”

Hopkins trained with Benny/B-Boy for a year, then wrestled in his first pro match in April 2017. But around November 2017, Battle-U closed its doors. “So did the promotion associated with the school — FCW, Finest City Wrestling,” Jarmon continued. “One month later, we started a new promotion/show called Ground Zero. But we had no school, no building, no home.” What Jarmon did have was a ring. “I initially bought the ring for Battle-U, with money I made from selling weed. I would spend about $10,000 on a new ring. Some people were saying, ‘Oh, you’re overspending,’ but I wanted to get the right ring with the right ropes, the right aprons, the right canvas, foam, and wood, and make it perfect — with the little wraps on the turnbuckles and the stairs.” In August 2018, Jarmon found a home for his wrestling ring at Level Up. And three years later, it’s still in tip-top shape.

That’s life inside the ring. Outside, said Jarmon, the school can teach and lead wrestlers up to a certain point. After that, “You’re pretty much out in the wild, and you take your bookings as they come. You have to learn how to market yourself and organize your calendar.” Jarmon said that students must be 18 years old or older to attend the school. As for pricing, “B-Boy charges students per base; there are opportunities to do monthly, full-tuition upfront. Those things I let him handle.”

Medic!

Amy Jarmon is Norris Jarmon’s wife. An infection nurse by occupation, she’s an essential component of Level Up: the official ringside nurse. When a wrestler is injured during a match, she’s first on the scene. “I’ve been doing this for almost five years now with Norris,” she said. “It took me a while to know if these guys were selling that they were injured or actually injured. They’re not injured most of the time, so it’s really part of the show. It took me until last year to realize that it’s part of the theatrics, as there’s a lot of drama involved in the whole storyline.”

Anyone who remembers seeing the late Miss Elizabeth backing her then-hubby, the late Randy “Macho Man” Savage, during WWF championship matches, or John Cena when he proposed to Nikki Bella at WrestleMania 33, understands how significant a strong woman can be in the predominantly male pro-wrestling business. “I know wrestlers or wrestling promoters might say, ‘Dude, this guy legit hides behind his wife,’” Jarmon said, “but hey, I’ll say it right now, you gotta have that type of relationship where you acknowledge who does what well. We can’t do it all. We can get shows every day of the week with this wrestling stuff. Where she comes in is with the liability, the insurance. Especially when there was covid. She’d tell them, ‘Hey, this is what I do for a living,’ and make everyone feel good about what we were doing. My wife helps out a lot in approaching these businesses.”

One day in 2021, Jarmon was on the Clubhouse social media app, talking up his cannabis wrestling events. Someone close to The Budtender Awards organization who had caught one of Jarmon’s audio posts connected with him. “The Budtender Awards is a business-to-business cannabis event that recognizes the best budtenders in the country,” Jarmon explained.

“We talked, and they thought wrestling would be a great fit.” When they spoke, the 2021 award ceremony was slated to be at Mandalay Bay in Las Vegas on May 22-23. Pandemic precautions were still in full effect in participating Las Vegas establishments. Further, “MGM, the parent company, hadn’t hosted a pro wrestling event before. And with the pandemic still lingering, there were no contact sports with crowds allowed.”

Amy picked up the story: “My role in the organization was to make sure everybody was tested for covid and healthy. Mandalay Bay was very hesitant at first, but I said, ‘We own a wrestling school in San Diego that I actually was able to keep open through covid by adjusting class size, doing testing, and working with the CDC in San Diego.’ I explained my mitigation plan at the school, and I went over exactly what I would do for a wrestling show. They gave us the OK, and they took my plan we used in The Budtender Awards, and they kind of adopted my craft.”

That helped the entire event get approved. After the mandated closures, the Canna Pro Wrestling Show was the first approved in-person contact sports event in Las Vegas. It was approved by the MGM, Mandalay Bay, the Public Health Department of Clark County, and the Gaming Commission.”

cannabis consumption and pro wrestling could not always be as public as it is today. However, many pro wrestlers from the ‘80s and ‘90s are now talking about their marijuana use. The Godfather — who made a guest appearance at Jarmon’s Canna Pro Wrestling Show at the EMBR Dispensary in La Mesa in June 2021 — said in a recent Table Talk interview in that he smoked a “one-hitter” inside Undertaker’s coffin before a WWE show. “I swear that’s true,” he said, “I smoked in the coffin.” The Godfather, now 60, also said he started using cannabis at 27 in an effort to wean off painkiller pills.

“He has not taken a narcotic pill since he was introduced to cannabis,” Jarmon said. “I watch these wrestlers, these older wrestlers, and they’re all banged up. There’s not an old wrestler who doesn’t have some ailment, or something wrong with their knees. And they take painkillers and other things to block the pain. Pills mess with your brain’s bottom line; they tell your brain not to feel that pain. Cannabis isn’t doing that; the pain kind of goes away because you’re distracted. So it’s definitely great to smoke a joint and then have a little bit of relaxation after beating your ass.”

Then there’s Rob Van Damme (RVD), who wrestled with the WWE, Extreme Championship Wrestling (ECW), and Total Nonstop Action Wrestling (TNA)/Impact Wrestling leagues starting in the early ‘90s and on and off until 2019. RVD is a longtime user and proponent of cannabis products. Now 51, he has parlayed his pro-wrestling career into RVDCBD, a cannabinoid company specializing in CBD and cannabis paraphernalia. Jarmon is a licensed affiliate. “RVD allegedly had difficulty with pro-wrestling management because of weed,” Jarmon continued. “But obviously, they got over it, because now RVD is in the WWE Hall of Fame.”

Even so, some professional wrestlers are hesitant to discuss cannabis, and understandably so, as it might affect their coaching or teaching careers. When I asked MAW Hopkins, the winner of the Green Thumbs Up match, if he consumed marijuana, he paused before saying, “The theme may be cannabis, but when I get the belt, it’s a wrestling belt. It represents me, and I represent a winner. So my character would say that he doesn’t do it for the weed; he does it because it’s a championship belt. He wants the gold.”

Wrestling has always had its heels, its villains who spoil things for everyone else. In this case, it’s the bots that shadow ban or delete accounts containing cannabis content. “I had an Instagram account, and it got deleted with 12,000 followers,” Jarmon told me. “I’ve had accounts deleted for using the wrong hashtags. They think you’re trapping (selling illegal bulk) on Instagram, and they don’t like cannabis content. So many companies are afraid to advertise on social media with cannabis. So basically, I just want to do a wrestling show. That way, even if they see we’re smoking, whatever it is, it’s [hopefully] going to go underneath the radar because the show is about wrestling. The big, established wrestling companies are doing their marketing the right way, and that’s what we’re trying to do. They wouldn’t promote cannabis, but at the same time, as far as business practices go, as far as credibility goes, as far as just the track records they have — I ask, how can we do anything similar to what they’re doing?”

Similar, but not the same: Jarmon’s niche businesses are blossoming, as marijuana dispensaries around town are booking him and his wrestlers for upcoming shows. “Who knew something as simple as 4-2-0 would turn into what it is today,” he asks, “with festivals in every city and town, bringing people from all walks of life together because of this plant?” For Jarmon, “it’s always 4:20 in San Diego.”

Piano, con amoroso

(Softly, with love)

We didn't meet often, and when we did, it was always in the dark. From the outset, I could have described the warm baritone voice, the music, and the well-worn jokes, but it was probably a year before I could say what color his hair was, or his eyes. That was the day he showed up — against everyone's expectations — at my wedding, and I finally saw him in the daylight.

"Gilbert won't be coming," my brand-new in-laws had explained, vaguely apologetic.

"He never goes to weddings; he says they make him cry."

But suddenly there he was, my newly-acquired Uncle Gilbert, vaulting over the patio stair railing and into his Life-of-the-Party routine: hugging and kissing, bellowing jokes, mugging for the photographer. His eyes, I discovered, were pale blue. And a little red. The wedding had made him cry, just as he'd said it would.

He is grinning ear to ear, dazzled, a man in the midst of his dream.

Every family has its eccentric element — the renegade relation who charts their own exasperating destiny and so becomes an anomaly, to be puzzled over and spoken of with an affectionate shrug. My husband's Uncle Gilbert is an anomaly of long standing. He has three brothers, my other acquired uncles, all with lives neatly bordered by suburban lawns and regular office hours. Gilbert has lived in the same downtown walk-up apartment for nearly thirty years. He is what was once known as a "cocktail pianist." Or, as the rest of the family puts it, mildly mystified, "Gil plays piano in a saloon." For thirty years, Gilbert has descended from his apartment each evening to walk to a nearby job at a neighborhood bar. For the last twelve years, that walk has taken him along 6th Avenue and the green of Balboa Park to a small club called The Granada. The Granada has a trim, tidy brick exterior that seems slightly uncomfortable with the place's name, stylishly scrawled in pink neon next to the door. Occasionally, my husband Rob and I stand in that pink light and then walk beyond it, into the dark interior, to watch his uncle perform. Inside, the dimness is enhanced more than lifted by a few candle lamps with red shades. A deep laugh unfurls out over the room and we follow it through the stale dark to where Gilbert is holding court. He sits at a piano that's been built into the bar, which curves around him like an enormous boomerang. A dozen people lean against its padded leather border or perch on stools around it. We pick out two stools and sit, and he breaks off his banter with the others to give us an automatic smile and a "Hi, good to see you."

Then Rob always says, "Hello, Uncle Gilbert," raising his voice over the other conversations. And his uncle always peers across the bar and does an elaborate double-take. “For heaven’s sake — Robbie!! I didn’t recognize you two for a minute!” Hands are clasped all around, and Gilbert turns to his audience to announce in mock bewilderment. “This is my nephew and his wife! I didn’t think they hung around places like this...!” The joke has been the same every time we’ve stopped by.

He begins to finger the keyboard, playing softly as he launches into a monologue of polite fictions. “You know, I was just thinking about you folks the other day, and decided I’d give you a call, and then a couple of friends stopped by, and...well, you know how it is.” We agree: yes, we know how it is. Gil asks after all the relatives, laughing, groaning or shaking his head in sympathy as we pass along the family gossip. All the while, his hands are picking out melodies; the music swells up to fill any pauses when we don’t know what to say. And all the while, the rest of the crowd waits.

The regulars at The Granada are pretty proprietary about their favorite musician. They show up, some of them every night, to have their bit of the evening show and to be acknowledged. He has a special word, an inside joke for each of them. There’s a microphone set discreetly to one side on top of the piano, and at some precise point every evening — when the noise and numbers are at a comfortable level, not intimate but not anonymous — someone sidles up to the mic, gives Gilbert a cue he’s already expecting, and begins to sing.

The small man in the dark blue suit sings Verdi, complete with operatic gestures, while two of his friends smile and nod, waiting to applaud. Then a younger, nervous guy with curly dark hair and lots of gold chains takes up the mic and quavers into Neil Diamond’s “Solitary Man.” His beginning is painfully weak, but Gilbert pounds away at the piano and the music buoy the singer up until he remembers the way he rehearsed it in the shower, and finishes on a note of shaky triumph. An immaculately groomed woman of about forty signals from behind her Manhattan and confidently approaches the microphone. At the first notes from the piano, she throws herself into an energetic medley of songs from Sweet Charity. Tunes from Broadway musicals and movie soundtracks are big with The Granada’s regulars. So are life histories, exchanged in familiar asides between the songs and refills.

Besides making the music, Gilbert puts on quite a show himself, dropping one-liners culled from the Late Show and holding forth on everything from the state of the Union to the best way to grill a steak. Showbiz is a favorite topic, free-wheeling commentary that can cover pop stars in rehab, celebrity divorces, TV show plot twists and Hollywood icons going back generations. Telling a well-worn story about Frank Sinatra, he says, “Well, you know how short-tempered he can be...” The regulars nod their heads. Yep. Old Frank always was pretty touchy. Gilbert punctuates the end of his story with a few bars of “My Way” and then bellows “Nurse!” — calling for another round.

I remember I used to worry about those endless refills, until one night I picked up Gilbert’s glass by mistake and discovered it was straight 7-Up. Later, Rob confirmed it; his uncle never drinks alcohol. The boisterous tipping is an act, part of the invitation to relax and join the party around the piano. That night wasn’t the first, or the last, that I watched and wondered who Gilbert really was.

There was another night, when we spent the entire evening watching him minister to his faithful night-blooming flock. They all came craving something and they all went away satisfied. The more inept the performer, the more solemn and smoothly professional Gilbert became, treating whoever was faltering at the mic like they’d just closed at Caesar’s Palace and decided to drop by. The piano-playing was loud, emphatic, with lots of flourishes to lift the singer out of himself and keep him moving through the nervousness into the approval and applause. It was near the end of that evening that Rob spoke up. “Uncle Gilbert, would you play ‘Capriccio Italien’ just once? I’d like Barbara to hear it.” I remember something passing over his face, then softening it with a gently pained expression. For a moment, I thought he was going to refuse, but he looked down at the keys and flexed his hands, and the light, prancing music from Tchaikovsky’s “Capriccio Italien” began to float up. The few folks still around nodded their heads to the three-quarter lilt for a few bars, then went back to their conversations while Gilbert played — deftly, precisely, so that each note seemed to rise and glint in the air around us, clear and bright.

On the drive home later, I asked Rob, “Didn’t you say your uncle didn’t read music?”

“He doesn’t. Never has.”

Whenever I think of this man, the images in my mind form and revolve in time to that music. I see him blustering and back-slapping at our wedding, with eyes suspiciously red. I think of his solitary walk to The Granada each night, and each night’s string of 7-Up “cocktails.” I think of him at his keyboard, bantering, garlanded by people waiting to perform. There is another image too, from a photograph in an album full of old playbills and clippings with Gilbert’s name underlined in red. The photograph is large and glossy, carefully preserved in a manila envelope. It shows Gil in his thirties, dressed in his best suit and standing by a mirror-smooth swimming pool, next to a stunning woman. She’s impeccably turned out in a skirt and jacket ensemble, a fur stole draped over one arm, her blond hair swept back in a chignon. There’s a caption on the back of the picture that reads, “Me with Faye Emerson (Mrs. Skitch Henderson) at a party in Palm Springs.” I remembered Skitch Henderson was the bandleader for The Tonight Show early on, when Johnny Carson first started keeping everyone up late. But I had to Google Faye Emerson: a minor film star, a popular TV personality, and a bona fide celebrity from San Diego.

The description Gilbert wrote seems self-consciously nonchalant, like the pose: poolside, with a cocktail casually cupped in one hand. But there is nothing nonchalant in his face. He is grinning ear to ear, dazzled, a man in the midst of his dream. I always wonder, thinking of that photograph, how big the dream was, and how long it went on. And I think of the people at The Granada — the shower singers, would-be Pavarottis and might-have-been-musical comedy stars — and of the careful, kindly way the man at the piano treats their dreams. They come in, some of them every night. Some nights, we come in too. And Gilbert plays gently, just for us.

DR. JORDAN B. PETERSON: BEYOND ORDER

Dr. Jordan Peterson, clinical psychologist and professor at Harvard and the University of Toronto, gained publicity through his 2018 encounter with Cathy Newman on Channel 4 News. The more Newman inaccurately paraphrased his beliefs and betrayed her irritation, the better Peterson came across. As of January of 2022, the video had been viewed more than 35 million times, making it Channel 4's second most-viewed video ever. According to The Guardian, this "bolstered Peterson's image as the coolly rational man of science facing down the hysteria of political correctness." As he told Newman in his distinctive, constricted voice: "I choose my words very, very carefully." His book 12 Rules for Life: An Antidote to Chaos has become a bestseller. In this lecture, Peterson delivers twelve more principles for resisting the toll that our desire to order the world takes.

Jacarandas on Ash Street, locust blossoms in Julian

April's Lowest Tides, associated with the full moon, drop to as low as -0.58 feet on Monday, April 25. On Monday at 12:59 pm, the tide bottoms out at -0.58 feet. Tuesday's lowest tide of -0.45 feet occurs at 1:39 pm. You may get some access to coastal tidepools during these low tides.

Blue-Blossoming Jacarandas (the City of San Diego's official "street tree") have already produced a first wave of color all over the region. By early or mid-May, warm weather permitting, this Brazilian import could put on a dazzling show. The larger jacarandas, which in full bloom are leafless (or nearly so), display myriads of delicate, trumpet-shaped blossoms — a lavender haze when seen from afar. Jacarandas are commonly used as landscaping in parks and on most college campuses. Nice rows of jacarandas grace Ash Street downtown, Rosecrans Boulevard in Point Loma, 25th Street in Golden Hill, and Mission Village Drive above what was Qualcomm Stadium.

JACARANDA FLOWERS BLOOM IN POINT LOMA HEIGHTS.

LOCUST TREES HAVE BECOME ALMOST A TRADEMARK OF CALIFORNIA'S GOLD COUNTRY.

The Tall Locust Trees planted years ago along Julian's narrow streets are once again brightening this backcountry (and former gold-rush) town with blossoms of white, pink, and lavender. Introduced into the West by 19th-century emigrants, locust trees have become almost a trademark of California's gold country, from the Mother Lode south to Julian.

Bracken Ferns are rising on the higher mountains of San Diego County, their bright green, unfolding fronds (called "fiddleheads") pushing up through the russet remains of last year's growth. Look for waist-high bracken fern along the creeks and hollows of the Palomar, Cuyamaca, and Laguna mountains.

Vega, the Summer Star, the zero-magnitude equal of Arcturus, is now twinkling low in the northeast after nightfall... depending on your latitude. The farther north you are, the higher it will be. If you're in the latitudes of the southern U.S., you'll have to wait until a bit later after dark for it to appear.

Rhyme & Verse

Hidatsa Scarecrow Woman
A poem on indigenous themes by Jennifer Reeser

My "wicked" scheme to scare the crow:
alongside Scattered Corn, I, Turtle, prepare balled skins of deer, clad in a kirtle.

Two gangly sticks for legs I pound across the hills of bean and squash.
Whatever crimes they might contrive,
I quash.

To these, two sticks for arms I lash beneath the scrap hides used for heads, with split deer entrails intertwined by threads.

The Mapi—solar flowers—fence our garden with its ragged vagrants;
but still, they bring the bees from sedge sans fragrance.

My father was a fine corn priest.
My best creations are my worst—for feasts sometimes depend on the accursed.

Jennifer Reeser is a poet, critic, and a translator of French and Russian literature. Her sonnet in response to Shakespeare's Sonnet 130 appeared in her 2012 volume Sonnets from the Dark Lady & Other Poems. Her most recent book is Indigenous: Poems (Able Muse Press, 2018).

MOVIE LISTINGS

All reviews are by Scott Marks, Matthew Lickona, and Duncan Shepherd. Priorities are indicated by one to five stars and antipathies by the black spot. Unrated movies are for now unreviewed. Thousands of past reviews are available online at SDReader.com/movies.

After the Rain — It wasn't a random act of violence like the ones hitting classrooms with greater frequency, but a broken spring of nature. More than 6,000 parents whose children perished in the 2008 Sichuan Earthquake were inspired by the government to cut their losses and have another one. (Those who couldn't conceive naturally were treated to in vitro fertilization.) Jian Fan spent over a decade following two families, their "replacement children," and the chronic distress that accompanies non-healing wounds. Sheng couldn't save his daughter Rain from the rubble and resents her substitute for not being born a girl. Ranran began life under her grandparents' roof; a couple could be fined for having more than one child and the death of her sister, also named Rain, freed up a bed in her parent's house. A calculated moment or two — the camera follows Sheng's hand out of frame to obscure from family view the cocktail out of view of the family — are not enough to distract from Fan's insight when objects, randomly placed in the peripherals, grow to have great significance. 2021. — S.M. ★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

Forever a Woman: Yumeji Tsukioka stars as the woman who jerked a thousand tears.

Big Night! — The drive-by shooting that opened the picture felt out of place, particularly in light of the campy irreverence that quickly followed. Relax. It was director Jun Lana's successful attempt to throw the audience off guard before taking us on a wild ride through the life of Dharna (Christian Bables), a flamboyant stylist who lives up to his passive resistant handle. The opening murder he witnessed was a mistake, but Dharna fears lightning will strike twice. The only aspect of his life that comes close to "straight" is his aversion to narcotics. How his name made the titular blacklist of suspected drug dealers and/or users established by the Philippine government in 2016 is a wrong he spends the better part of the running time trying to right. His quest to clear his semi-good name begins with a local politician who offers him a crash course in corpse cosmetology and leads to a meeting with a cowboy legend who may or may not be able to clear his name. Not taking its violent promise too seriously is what gives the film its fresh spin on the old war on drugs. 2021. — S.M. ★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

The Eternal Breasts (Forever a Woman) — Mastectomies as subject matter are, not surprisingly, a hard sell. Correct me if I'm wrong, but the first time Hollywood breached the subject was the small screen 1978 biopic, First, You Cry starring Mary Tyler Moore as news correspondent Betty Rollin. Some 22 years earlier, Kinuyo Tanaka's The Eternal Breasts (playing here under the title, Forever a Woman) introduced Japanese audiences to Fumiko Shimojō's (Yumeji Tsukioka), a frustrated poet whose marriage to a failed, philandering stockbroker ends in divorce. Her poetry reflects her suffering; she longs for a different life, the kind that would bring joy to her writing. But no matter how strong her character is, happiness eludes Fumiko. Moments of euphoric liberation brought on by the separation are quickly scuttled by her doctor's diagnosis. That doesn't mean the pain she endures doesn't lead to a period of emotional growth and enlightenment. Every moment of happiness she's afforded is matched by misfortune: news of her winning a poetry contest coincides with the discovery of a lump on her breast. With two romances left in her, Fumiko refuses to let her illness define her. If there's a complaint to be made, it would be the absence of her children during the final third. Other than that, this stands as one of the most profound emotional experiences cinema has to offer. Do not miss this movie! 1955. — S.M. ★★★★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

Father Stu — Mark Wahlberg and Mel Gibson aren't real world men of God, but they play them in the movies. Wahlberg stars as Stuart Long, a hard-living pugilist whose doctor cautions that it's time to hang up the gloves. Next stop: showbiz, where homophobic Stu counters a casting agent's advances with one punch. (If Wahlberg was so intent on playing a showbiz priest, why not a remake of Going My Way with Gibson in the Barry Fitzgerald role?) What ultimately draws a guy who doesn't have the good sense not to drop f-bombs in the confessional to the clergy? Carmen (Teresa Ruiz), a pretty face who Stu eventually beat down, but not before going three or four rounds of "No!" means "Yes!" Stu's estranged parents, played by Oscar winners Jacki Weaver and Gibson, are disgusted by their son's decision. (Gibson's likening Stu's quest to Hitler joining the A.D.L. earns a satirically contemptuous chuckle.) The former underwear model proves he still has what it takes — the womenfolk swoon when Wahlberg removes his shirt to be baptized — but when it comes to providing a rationale for the ultimate conversion, writer-director Rosalind Ross comes up empty and Wahlberg can't act what isn't there. 2022. — S.M. ● (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Love Letter — When Andrew Sarris classified a chapter of his Pantheon defining The American Cinema as "Subjects for Further Research," he had filmmaker's like Kinuyo Tanaka in mind. The celebrated actress known for her collaborations with Kenji Mizoguchi (Sansho the Bailiff, Ugetsu, The Life of Oharu) was also the second woman in Japanese cinema to direct a feature. PacArts will screen 4 of the 6 features Tanaka signed starting with this, her debut feature. In a performance worthy of Robert Ryan, Masayuki Mori stars as Reikichi Mayumi, a deeply disturbed veteran five years out from the war who, were it not for his brother, could not scrape by on the money he makes as a translator. A navy buddy hooks him up with a job writing mash notes for prostitutes looking to win back the sailors that abandoned them. (His letters are so poignant, his customers cry when he reads them aloud.) Mayumi holds his vendees in contempt until that day when yesterday's love (Yoshiko Kuga) becomes today's clientele. Were it not for America's puritanical code, complex emotional melodramas such as this would have cracked American screens long before the studio system crumbled. Nothing you see this year will come close to matching the emotional force of this quartet. Order your tickets yesterday! 1953. — S.M. ★★★★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

On the Line — Korea's answer to The Wolf of Wall Street (The Phish of Seoul?) is this gatling-gun paced action derby that puts its current Hollywood counterparts to shame. The real villain in the piece is not ex-cop Han (Yo-Han Byun) or even his snakey superior VP, Jeon (Kim Mu-yeol in a performance you're gonna love to hate) — a scam artist who delights in Electro-luxing the bank accounts of unsuspecting pigeons — but Mrs. Seo-Joon. In the time it took for Han to save a co-worker's life, his better half panicked and transferred their life savings. Ditto Han's equally flummoxed boss who flushed the company's payroll. Being both victim and enforcer gives revenge-seeking Han a tremendous advantage when it comes to working both sides of the law. Being in the right place at the right time lands him a job at the mob's call center. In less than a reel, he impresses the boss enough to earn a promotion and begin weakening the system from within. Why did it take so long for the police officers to recognize one of their own? Brothers Gok and Sun Kim work so quickly that when questions arise there's no time to think about answers until you're on the drive home. 2021. — S.M. ★★ (ULTRASTAR MISSION VALLEY AT HAZARD CENTER)

There's a name for people who knew Gilbert Gottfried solely on the basis of the numerous animated birds he voiced: parents. More on the passing of a comedy legend awaits you online.

DIG A HOLE: GILBERT GOTTFRIED

Fans of his numerous appearances on Howard Stern's radio show and those fortunate enough to have seen him perform at a comedy club can attest to Gilbert's caustic brilliance. He was the irritating putz on the road trip who insisted on singing every chorus of "100 Bottles of Beer," or your miserable, scrunchy-faced uncle seated at the head table, complaining that the ice wasn't cold enough. Gilbert had the delightfully nasty habit of speaking aloud what everyone else was thinking, no matter how base, cruel, or patently offensive it might have been. On stage, he was the master of putting a smile on the worst life had to offer. But when it came to film, the script didn't exist that Gilbert passed on. (All of his cameos butted end-to-end wouldn't amount to one feature.) I've spent the past few days sliding down the Gilbert Gottfried wormhole, and Neil Berkeley's 2017 documentary Gilbert brought much-needed comfort.

Gilbert: We hardly knew ye.

Into the Woods

Musical theater legend Stephen Sondheim died last November, and director Kristianne Kurner writes that “his passing has influenced every aspect of the production” of this, one of his most famous creations (with collaborator James Lapine). The musical’s first act cleverly weaves together the storylines of a number of fairy tales — Cinderella, Little Red Riding Hood, Rapunzel, Jack and the Beanstalk — by sending their characters...well, you know where. All sorts of things happen in the woods; it is, after all, the undomesticated place where desire meets experience and complications arise and adventures ensue. But these are fairy tales; part of the pleasure is knowing how they end. That’s the privilege of living in an ordered world with established boundaries. Except when you go into the woods, the woods go into you. Kurner writes, “To me, the first act feels like the beginning of 2020. We all had an idea of what our lives would be like. Then COVID hit...” And so Act Two sets about hauling Act One’s stories for children into the very grown-up world of unintended consequences, moral confusion, and rampant death. It’s not much fun, but the music is dazzling enough to make it entertaining all the same. You start by smiling over a husband’s wayward eye, then nodding over a wife’s wayward kiss, then downright enjoying a cavalcade of acrid recriminations before things get really serious. The magic of theater! Kurner: “We come out the other side still searching for hope, but it’s now a bruised and battered hope.” Sondheim, whose 11 o’clock number “No One is Alone” serves as both comfort and caution, might approve. The show itself is a lot, but the production works hard to keep it simple. Criss-crossing green boards overhead represent the woods; a trio of arches serve as homes for everyone but Jack and Rapunzel, who get a hovel stage right and a tower stage left. The songs do a lot to convey their own drama, but Tanner Vydos’ wolf and prince and Sydney Joyner’s baker’s wife do a particularly fine job of acting through the lyrics. The trickiest bit is Rae Henderson-Gray’s all-important witch: she’s a complicated character, but her performance is complicated by the presentation, and there are times when the emotions and even lyrics get lost in the costuming. She comes into her own when things come apart. SUNSHINE BROOKS THEATRE, 217 N. COAST HWY., OCEANSIDE, 760-433-8900, 8PM FRIDAYS, SATURDAYS, & SUNDAYS.

Million Dollar Quartet

In 1956 Johnny Cash, Elvis Presley, Carl Perkins & Jerry Lee Lewis met together in Memphis at Sam Phillips’ Sun Records for a night that changed American music forever. ### The Taming by Lauren Gunderson

In this hilarious, raucous, all-female “power-play” contestant Katherine has political aspirations to match her beauty pageant ambitions. All she needs to revolutionize the American government is the help of one ultra-conservative senator’s aide on the cusp of a career breakthrough, and one bleeding-heart liberal blogger who will do anything for her cause. Well, that and a semi-historically-accurate ether trip. This madcap romp tackles modern American political extremism, feminism, James Madison, Shakespeare, and beauty queens. The three slightly insane women at its core just might be political geniuses. Here’s lookin’ at you, America. Initially inspired by Shakespeare’s The Taming of The Shrew, THE TAMING grew out of Gunderson’s desire to wrestle with potent elements inside the Bard’s playful and problematic battle of the sexes. Inside the heightened, cheerfully absurd world of THE TAMING the play spans America’s insidious, sound bite politics with the switch of actual history and proves Shakespeare’s point that true debate is hot. THE TAMING is the third in Lauren Gunderson’s The Shakespeare Cycle and takes the sass, sex, and banter from Shakespeare’s The Taming of The Shrew and tags in modern American politics. Directed by Marti Gobel, the cast includes talented San Diego performers Katee Drysdale, Suthesha Mani and Kylie Young. Adult Situations and Language SCRIPPS RANCH THEATRE, 9783 AVENUE OF NATIONS, SCRIPPS RANCH, 858-578-7728, 8PM FRIDAYS & SATURDAYS, 2PM SUNDAYS.

Urinetown

In a dystopian future, a water shortage has led to a government-led ban on private toilets. Everyone is forced to use public restrooms, which are regulated by a single, evil company (Urine Good Company) that charges outrageous fees for people to take care of their most basic need. Heroic Bobby Strong leads a revolution to overturn this evil empire, so that everyone—rich or poor—can pee freely. Urinetown is a musical satire of the legal system, capitalism, bureaucracy, and musical theatre itself.

BOOZE NEWS

BY MATTHEW FLYNN

ReBru makes all things new

Wasting good beer is a serious faux pas. Leaving wounded soldiers stranded on the living room table after a party is bad enough, but what happens at a brewery when gallons upon gallons of craft beer are deemed undrinkable? The problem is thorny enough to inspire former Thorn Brewing employees Dennis O'Connor and Neil Lotz to found ReBru Spirits, which is in the process of finalizing a rum, a whiskey, and an absinthe for release. "It's all excess craft beer, mostly from San Diego," explains distiller Wili Fleming. "Essentially, the beer has gone stale, but the alcohol is still good, and that's what we're after. We are literally distilling the alcohol out of craft beer and turning it into spirits. This not only solves a problem for our oceans and waterways, but also saves local breweries a lot of money. Processing all that beer waste is expensive for the breweries, but ReBru saves them a lot of money by accepting thousands of gallons of beer and returning empty kegs to be reused."

ReBru whiskey is a collaboration with Baja Brewing; the spirit is aged in charred barrels to help it pick up whiffs of burnt caramel with a vanilla finish. The Rebooch White Rum is a collaboration with BoochCraft that distills multiple styles of hard kombucha to produce a funky concoction with notes of citrus, berries, and spice. And ReBru Absinthe is a powerful, 138-proof Swiss-style absinthe with an anise nose and finish that really opens up when ice water is added. The new spirits will soon join ReBru's other products: its flagship gin and award-winning vodka.

Along with upcycling unsellable craft beer, ReBru is big on using botanicals to create unique flavors. Fleming explains, "Gin and absinthe are botanical spirits. Several herbs and spices are blended and added to our spirits at a very high proof in order to get a deep extraction of the essential oils. Our gin is a blend of 10 botanicals, mainly juniper berries, coriander, and citrus peel. Absinthe must have wormwood, anise, and fennel in order to be considered a true absinthe. Our main recipe for absinthe calls for six different botanicals."

The whiskey and absinthe are due for release soon, although Fleming can't be specific on the date. "Everything takes longer than expected, so we've gotten good at practicing patience in order to get things done the right way." For now, a tour provides tasters of the upcoming releases, and their available spirits can be found in cocktails at their Barrio Logan location, which also features a restaurant featuring items that employ the distillery's spent grain, and a speakeasy where DJ Kimmy serves as resident DJ every Friday night.

In addition to distilling the spirits, Fleming is on hand on Sundays to help people wind down the weekend while enjoying the fruits of his labor. "Every Sunday afternoon is the Sunday Sip, where I play mellow folk music live from 1-3 pm — mostly old songs about moonshining and whiskey-related topics. It's family- and dog-friendly, as well as the perfect way to nurse a hangover from Saturday night."

Soda Bar, super star

California measures approximately 163,696 square miles, and it's home to more than 39.5 million souls. Total number of places to see music? Search me. But I'm betting a thousand would just be a start. And out of all of them, San Diego's proud-she explains, "was founded by Pete Muller, an American businessman and singer-songwriter who developed a deep appreciation for small music venues while touring with his band in 2019. The goal has always been to offer small venues the support they need to thrive, such as extending finanwork with venues through the end of virus days. "We know the erratic and nonlinear nature of pandemic recovery has resulted in continuing uncertainty and financial instability. Venues have faced enormous challenges to reopen safely and protect their staff and customers. They continue to face canceled performances and attendance below pre-pandemic levels. We also know that [live] gigs have been missed, and can have a cathartic effect on those who attend them. Nothing compares to seeing your favorite band play live in person. We'll continue but-humble Soda Bar, age 14, got plucked from among the masses as one of 18 venues nationwide — and one of only two in California — to be awarded one of the spring round of Small Venue Grants from the Live Music Society in New York City. San Francisco jazz club The Black Cat was the only other California winner.

The Society's Executive Director, Cat Henry, says that, while she can't go into the specifics of the jury process, "the venue's philosophy and programming is wonderfully eclectic, and it's a beloved venue with a great story. Soda Bar is an example of why small venues are important, not only as economic engines for their communities but as anchors of American culture. The fact that longtime staffers Angie Ollman and Cory Stier became owners shows the kind of dedication and passion of music venue workers. We're talking about lifelong music lovers who've often played and toured in bands themselves, and want to help build the scene for the next generation."

The Live Music Society itself, cial and technical assistance in areas like audience outreach, sound design, and fundraising. Once the pandemic eases, the organization will refocus efforts on a broader range of resources and support. There's a new sense of optimism as we head into spring, but many venue owners are still fighting to keep their doors open and recovery may take some time."

Each round of grants is adjudicated by an independent jury made up of music industry professionals, including touring musicians, talent buyers, agents, and tour production staff. However, final selection of grantees is approved by a committee of the LMS board. The number of awards given out annually varies. "In covid times, I don't think we can say there has been a typical year. However, since October 2020, we are proud to have contributed in a small way to the survival of 126 venues in 34 states, with funding of over $2.3 million. We plan another round later in 2022, and as feedback and new information is received, the grant will naturally evolve."

Henry vows that the Live Music Society will continue to to seek ways to help keep this experience vital and stable."

Fair fee unfair? The San Diego County Fair's 2022 "pay to play" model requires artists who wish to perform at this year's event to pay a $25 processing fee for their applications to be considered. On the other end, there will be no payment to most of the artists for the actual performances. In essence, this scenario becomes "pay-to-play-and-not-get-paid."

Besides the joy of playing a live gig, what do the entertainers get out of this? Judging by the Fair's website, it's the opportunity to play in front of a large crowd, get noticed, and earn that coveted "exposure." The website states that "Community Entertainment is a vital component of the Fair, offering an opportunity for local talent to gain exposure, and allowing Fair guests to discover and enjoy local entertainers."

Katie Mueller, the Chief Operations Officer for the San Diego County Fair, explains in an email, "We historically receive hundreds of entertainer applications (about 600 in 2019 and we have received 268 this year so far) which all have to be vetted, corresponded with, and ultimately, if they are selected, packets of information then have to be created for each one. Once they arrive on site (fair admission tickets and parking are provided for access), they have to be escorted through a golf cart system to their performance place. The fair provides the marketing, venue (professional stage, lights and sound, plus stage manager) for the ability to perform in front of an audience of people. The processing fee at application time helps to cover the cost of staff and labor to process the applications, vet the entertainers, provide the packets of information, and all of the would tax our resources chasing down participants who weren't really serious?"

Performers who hope to set-up a jar on the stage and collect some random bucks, the way every cashier at a counter service restaurant does these days, are out of luck. According to the Fair's FAQ, "Soliciting tips during your performance is not allowed. If you solicit tips in any way, your performance will be canceled and the violation will affect future bookings." Mueller says in her email that this has been a longtime policy, and that "we want our customers to enjoy their experience at the Fair and not feel obligated to leave tips."

Getting asked to play a gig for free can result in some musicians feeling anywhere from 'exposure,' my response has always been, 'If I want exposure, I'll run naked thru a Walmart.'" The Baja Bugs made $400 for playing the Fair that year, but he stresses that he would "never pay to play anywhere." He also notes that "all the food vendors have to give the Fair a percentage of their merch, food, and beer sales. So, the Fair is raking in money from the entrance fee and parking fee as well. And they don't have money to pay the bands? Yeah, sure."

Josh Taylor, meanwhile, has played the Fair for free in the past, and he claims that this model of unpaid "exposure" is currently rampant in the live music industry. He says at least three of the Fair's local stages get legitimately high traffic, and that he's "probably earned up to a couple dozen fans each year I've played there." He doesn't seem in love with the arrangement, but he did get a little something out of it. He views the trend as a reality for working musicians that isn't likely to change, so he works at developing workarounds. "It's easy and understandable enough to sit around with our friends and bitch about the crappy economics of art — and believe me, I'm not immune to that indulgence — but it doesn't really answer any questions or solve any problems. I just think, 'Well, that's clearly not a sustainable model as a musician, so I'll try to figure out the next step.' It's the same story with streaming killing music sales over the last couple of decades. Okay, so we lost that fight, cat's out of the bag, no putting it back. So, what instead? Hence, Patreon, etc."

ALICIA PREVIN

The daughter of pianist, composer, and conductor André Previn and jazz singer Betty Bennett, Alicia Previn is a classically trained violinist who studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London. She has played with bands like the New Archaic, In Tua Nua, Folding Mr. Lincoln, Tim Foley, Yael & Vlady, the Rose Three, Big Boss Bubeleh, the Young Dubliners, and others. She has recorded with acts such as Philip D'Arrow, Andy Leek, the Hothouse Flowers, Flogging Molly, Katmandu, Finn MacCool, Ten Bright Spikes, the Bumpin' Uglies, Cracker, Great White and Jack Russell, Richard Thompson, General Public, and the Communards. Previn is currently working with reggae icon Scientist, aka Hopeton Brown. After the well-known sound engineer and dub originator was shown a video of Previn performing the reggae standard "The Tide Is High," he contacted her on Facebook to express his admiration and suggest a collaboration. The result is a new version of the song "Broken Heart" by one of Scientist's recent discoveries, Israeli artist Shusha Onyema, produced by Dana Peralta and recorded at Studio City Sound in Los Angeles.

SITTING ON STACY

Founded in 2013 and originally known as Paper and based in Ventura before settling in San Diego, Sitting on Stacy plays ska-flavored alt rock. The band was founded by singer-guitarist Hoyt Yeatman, singer-bassist Kyle Hart, and drummer Jeff Demorest, who was later replaced by Trevor Smith. Yeatman and Hart both graduated SDSU several years after forming the band, with Yeatman minoring in music global composition. A debut album was released in 2017, Obsessed, along with a video for the track "Oh Baby." The band won the 2018 Kaaboo Discovery competition, earning a slot on that year's September Kaaboo music fest bill. After releasing their 2019 album Perfectly Sane, they opened for the Jonas Brothers in Chula Vista, as well as a handful of other 2020 dates. The group continued releasing singles during the Covid-19 pandemic, including "This Summer's Day" and "Ellen." With new drummer Trevor Smith in tow, they just finished a co-headlining tour with the Aquadolls.

PARADE OF HORRIBLES

Hard rock punk-funk duo Parade of Horribles features singer-bassist Jason York (Civic Unrest) and drummer Chris Mazzola. The band's Listen In EP, due May 6, has been in progress since summer 2019, when drummer Chris Mazzola spent a couple of weeks at Yosemite. According to Oceanside-based singer-bassist Jason York, "I don't know if I got bored or lonely or what, but I just started writing a song a day. After having music for three of 'em, I started to nail down a vocal theme. We were in the thick of organizing the 11th Annual Punk Rock Food Drive, so I just started singing about that. Different themes around running a nonprofit, and organizing annual fundraiser events for the last decade. By the time Chris came back into town, the EP was complete." The EP was tracked by Tim Sams of Craft Sounds, which books and hosts shows at local breweries. "We live a couple blocks from each other, so it makes for a pretty easy recording schedule. One day for drums, one day for bass, and I recorded the vocals at my home studio." The release party happens May 13 at the Pour House in Oceanside, where the bill includes Generator (Bad Religion tribute) and Bakersfield singer-songwriter Matt Salkeld. The event is a fundraiser for the duo's Punk Rock Food Drive, which has raised over 236,000 meals for local food banks since 2009.

MARCELO RADULOVICH

Guitarist/keyboardist/electronic-manipulator Marcelo Radulovich (Gunther's Grass, Playground Slap) is an experimental musician in the vein of John Cage and the Kronos Quartet. As a member of the Trummerflora music collective, he performed as Titicacaman, as well as presenting and promoting San Diego shows featuring other avant garde musicians from around the globe. Asked to describe his music, he says "Always a tough question, but experimental pop, dada funk, and surreal rock are all tags which have been used. I like lush and rich productions. The music is very colorful, with lots of funk in the rhythm, loud in the bass, and with electronics, sampling, and processing that gives it a futuristic feel. Most of the songs are under three minutes, and they come in English and Spanish." His newly released Merry Go Down: Flashbacks album contains "reinterpreted songs an old band of mine used to play in the early '90s, a band called Merry Go Down, don't know if you ever heard of it," says Radulovich. "It was a good chunk of work, no people playing together, just me piecing separate tracks together. The band was a rock/funk band and the sound of this record reflects that, some of it gets into the super funky."

BEACH PUNX SUNDAY

Winstons in OB will host a free afternoon Beach Punx Sunday party on April 24 featuring four local bands with deep roots in the coastal community. Late For Life originally formed as Switzer circa 2001 in Miami, FL, where the members met during college. They played the 2003 Van's Warped Tour as well as over a hundred other shows that year, becoming known for offbeat covers like Depeche Mode's "Enjoy the Silence" and Slayer's "Raining Blood." Despite the moderate success, they went on hiatus in 2004 and would not make a return for 13 years. Punchcard shows have been described as reminiscent of a drunken stand-up comedy hour. A 2010 album called Over It was followed by a 2014 EP Non Compos Mentis. Early 2018 saw the release of their first full-length in eight years, a politically inspired project called Making it Great... Again. Midnight Track plays punk rock music with a touch of ska and reggae, citing influences from The Clash and Stiff Little Fingers to Toots & the Maytals and Los Fastidios. Just in Case, originally based in southern New Jersey, released their self-titled debut full-length in 2008. A new EP dropped last August, Roll With the Punches.

You can submit a listing, download mp3s, watch videos, subscribe to event alerts, get directions, and find more information about these shows online at SDReader.com/music.

IMMORTAL BEAUTY

BY GARRETT HARRIS

Return to a Requiem

I opened Facebook on Sunday evening, April 10. As I began scrolling, I saw a post announcing Brahms' Requiem at Mission Valley United Methodist with members of the San Diego Symphony at 7 pm. I looked at the time. It was 7:02 pm. I thought I might tear down the hill from my home in North Park and catch the concert from the second movement on. Then I looked back at the post and saw a link for a live stream. Bingo. I clicked the link and actually caught the downbeat of what turned out to be an impressive concert.

The Brahms Requiem is actually entitled Ein deutsches Requiem — A German Requiem. It is not a German version or German translation of the Roman Catholic Requiem Mass. Brahms had other intentions. He hand-selected the scripture which forms the text of his Requiem.

As part a theological dispute regarding the text with the conductor who was to perform the premiere, Brahms wrote, "As far as the text is concerned, I confess that I would gladly omit even the word 'German' and instead use 'Human,' also with my best knowledge and will, I would dispense with places like John 3:16." John 3:16 is the famous Bible verse that reads, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son..." What Brahms is driving at is that his German Requiem isn't about everlasting life and the resurrection of the dead on the last day. In fact, it isn't about Jesus at all.

The purpose of Brahms' Requiem is contained in the opening lines: "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

Brahms knew that of which he spoke. He started the Requiem after the death of his mother, but the basis of the second movement came from a symphonic sketch that he produced shortly after his mentor Robert Schumann had jumped into the Rhine in a suicide attempt. There can be no doubt that Brahms wrote to comfort and bless his own mourning.

The Brahms Requiem has been comforting those who mourn ever since its premiere on Good Friday in 1868. It is right and appropriate that Mission Valley United Methodist placed their performance on Palm Sunday, the start of Holy Week. The quality of the performance was beyond all my expectations, both musically and from a streaming perspective. The balance between orchestra and chorus was well-conceived and executed on the stream. There were multiple camera angles that were thoughtfully utilized, based on the context of the music. Conductor Stan Wick led the gathered forces with a sure hand and steady tempo. The soloist, soprano Amy Mein, and baritone Chris Stephens are close personal friends, so I recuse myself from expressing any opinion, except to say that they comported themselves like the professionals that they are. I hesitate to admit this, but this performance of Brahms' masterpiece brought me back to it for the first time in several years. As I've wandered the classical music landscape over the decades, every now and then a performance will bring me to a musical home that I've been missing without realizing it. Such was the case on this Palm Sunday.

Break-fast after sundown

“I am lucky. UCSD accommodates us Muslim students.”

What Meshal is going through right now — “now” being the holy month of Ramadan, with its ban on eating while the sun is up — is not easy. But it has its consolations. “The first thing I eat, after the sun sets, is dates,” he says. “Three dates. At the end of a fasting day, there’s nothing more delicious than a nice sweet Al Madina date. I brought two kilos of dates over from Saudi Arabia to make sure I had them.” Why dates, before you have your main meal of the day? “That’s what the prophet, peace be upon him, recommended. People love especially Madina dates. He ate them. Their sweet taste brings your energy back.”

I’m sitting at a big table opposite Meshal in this UCSD eating hall called Canyon Vista. And I’m grateful to sit down. It has been a long haul. One thing you can guarantee at UCSD: at any given moment, there are 1500 people wandering around, totally lost in this forest-campus, just trying to get to class, get to eat, get home, remember how to get back to their car, how to get out into The World. Me, I left the trolley’s new Blue Line extension at the UCSD Central Campus Station an hour ago, and ever since, I’ve been humping around colleges, through trees, across game areas, asking, asking, always asking, “Have you seen the Canyon Vista Food Hall?” I am wiped out. I was trying to track it down because I heard it has the largest halal-certified residential dining facility in the nation. (That’s what the guide says, anyway.) And this being the fasting month of Ramadan, I was interested in what halal food’s all about.

I heard about Canyon Vista at another campus eatery, Roots, in Muir College. It was a pleasant surprise to see the plaza among trees and glass and green grass spaces. Also the prices there, fabbo. I just wanted a snack, so I chose a simple dish, a bowl of three-bean chili. And guess what? Four bucks, with some buttered sourdough bread. Deal! I sat there, among students all hot into their laptops, remote-lifting their steaming coffees as they stared at their screens. In fact, every on-campus place (including the one that specializes in kosher food for Jewish students) seems to hold prices to below ten bucks. And good news: you don’t have to be enrolled at UCSD to eat here.

Pretty quick, though, I’m on safari again. The Hunt for Canyon Vista continues! Sun’s setting when I finally find it. I feel like Lewis, or maybe Clark. I pass a witty “Before I Die” chalkboard wall (“Before I Die, I want to kill myself.” “I want to kiss Alexis.” “Destroy China.” “Get Cozzi to confess his love.” “Love myself.” “Have a kid.” “Meet Shrek.”), and then somebody points me downhill. “Halal Certified Location,” reads a sign. Aha. I come inside this space outfitted with long tables and white tile walls and several big open kitchens. The sign is posted above a large rotating hot plate which servers are loading with different steaming piles of fried rice or noodles, plus chopped meats and veggies mixed in. A dozen piles, I swear, each wafting up nice savory smells.

This is about 7 pm, and people are just starting to trickle in. Guess the sun has dropped below the horizon. Muslim students can at last break their fast. A large number of California’s million Muslims are probably farewelling the sun right now, hollow with hunger. “I haven’t eaten since 5:15 am,” Meshal says. He also hasn’t drunk water. That’s part of the rule. Meshal’s a Saudi student who’s studying for an MA in engineering. “This is my first Ramadan in the US,” he says. “I am lucky. UCSD accommodates us Muslim students. They offer meals early and late enough, and they always have a choice of Halal foods. These have been prepared according to Muslim rules. Animals have to be slaughtered by a Muslim. They must face Mecca. On other campuses, Muslim students have maybe only a single choice of halal food to eat. Often the same, day after day. Here, we always have plenty of choice.”

“It involves extra preparation,” says Chris Basco, the sous chef who’s in charge tonight. “Meat and veggies and sauces all have to be certified halal. So that puts the cost up. But students appreciate it.”

Meshal orders a beef bowl. (There are maybe a dozen bowls to choose from.) I’m doing the same. I get yakisoba noodles — I had a choice of three or four other noodle and rice combos — with baby corn, bell peppers, celery, and water chestnuts and a choice of halal sauces. I chose a house Mongolian sauce. I notice that Meshal falls silent as he prepares for his first food in 14 or so hours. Man. Not sure I could have that discipline. He starts with a quiet prayer and then a long sip of water. He curls noodles around his fork and lifts them slowly, his eyes closing with pleasure. Or is it prayer?

I dig into mine. Oh yes. Rich flavors. A fine mess of carbs and beef protein that gets richer as you go down into the mix. Nine buckeroos.

So what food does Meshal miss most from his life in Saudi? “I miss my mom’s rice,” he says. “It’s Roots campus diner’s three-bean chili: $4 and filling, a fab breakfast deal just the kind of rice, and the way she makes it. The flavors! You don’t get it here. In Saudi, rice is the heart of any meal.”

He also misses his Al Madina dates. “That’s why I brought over the two kilos of them from Saudi.”

Hope there’s enough. He’ll be fasting all month, till May 2nd. Me, I’m just getting a taste for all this UCSD setup. Like, they even have a rooftop BBQ going on-campus. I’ll definitely be coming back for that — if I can find it. ■

Better desert dining at The Fox Bistro

3845 Yaqui Pass Rd, Borrego Springs. We've reached that time of year when folks head out to the easternmost reaches of San Diego County in search of desert wildflowers. Thanks to a drier than usual winter, this spring won't be hyped as a #superbloom, but the lack of trend chasers may be a good thing. It means lighter traffic, less crowded hiking, and easier access to the few worthy dining options available in Borrego Springs.

And given the two-hour drive from downtown San Diego, you'll likely want to eat before you return home. I had a chance to check out several Borrego-area eateries during a recent visit, and there was a clear number one. Whether or not you stay overnight, the best dining east of Mount Laguna can be found at a hotel restaurant: The Fox Bistro.

Name and ownership has changed over the years (including the Union-Tribune's Copley family), but that's currently what they call the food program at La Casa del Zorro, a 42-acre resort that makes the most of its remote, desert environment. Highlights of the scenic property include multiple swimming pools; tennis, bocce, and shuffleboard courts; a life-size chess board; and an outdoor stargazing theatre built to take advantage of Borrego's status as a dark sky community.

The upscale feel carries over into The Fox Bistro, which occupies a space both elegant and rustic. The spacious dining room echoes the white-washed adobe of old California, warmed up by exposed beams, hardwood floors, and occasional splashes of color. Pleasant as that is, the more romantic bet might be taking a meal on the so-called rose garden terrace, a still more spacious covered deck spruced up with plants, string lights, and a large outdoor fireplace.

The resort offers guests a rather flimsy continental breakfast buffet, but the lunch and dinner service (consider reservations) prove there are kitchen staff in Borrego Springs who care about quality cooking and ingredients. Even a $9-$10 kids menu surpassed other options in the area. Lunch keeps it light, with the likes of sandwiches, tacos, and fish and chips, each running in the 19-dollar range, and for those seeking a dinner deal, Sunday through Thursday "sunset dinner" specials cost about the same, with a different, single-choice entrée on special from 5-7pm: fried chicken on Sundays, for example, or spaghetti on Wednesdays.

Really, when it comes to dinner, it's more about how casual or refined you want to be. You can find satisfaction with a $22 meatloaf or a $50 sea bass, and indulge your grilled meat cravings with $31 baby back ribs or a $44 rack of lamb.

I'd like to have tried them all, but would have needed to stay for a week to get through the elevated comfort food menu. Still, I was able to enjoy a playful smoked salmon appetizer that deconstructed classic bagel shop offerings, complete with herbed cream cheese, capers, and red onions.

The surprising part: I was impressed enough with the vegetarian entrees that I bypassed the likes of $36 blackened mahi mahi and $29 chicken Oscar (with crab cake) for a well-rendered $23 mushroom risotto with asparagus.

And it was a tough choice between that and a $25 portobello mushroom Wellington.

Mushroom risotto with roasted vegetables and asparagus.

The Fox Bistro dining room straddles a line between elegant and casual.

bello mushroom Wellington.

I can't go as far as claiming I would drive two hours just to dine again on The Fox Bistro's vegetarian dishes or otherwise. But I will definitely pay more frequent visits to the Anza-Borrego Desert knowing I can eat well while I'm out there.

Email Del Mar Mesa Garden Club for info info@delmarmesa.org

Dock Totals 4/10 - 4/16: 1846 anglers aboard 74 half-day to 1.5-day trips out of San Diego landings this past week caught 954 bluefin tuna (to 60 pounds), 1 blue perch, 13 bocaccio, 12 bonito, 64 calico bass, 16 lingcod, 1 mako shark, 2991 rockfish, 54 sand bass, 40 sanddab, 160 sculpin, 19 sheephead, 739 whitefish, and 284 yellowtail.

Saltwater: The bluefin bite slowed as the moon phased into full, while a blustery beginning to the week kept the San Diego sportfishing fleet at the dock on Tuesday. Still, the counts reflect decent fishing off the northern Baja coast, though the tuna caught are smaller in size than during previous weeks. The schools of bluefin are spread out from just south of the border down to the banks outside of San Quintin, where panga operators are finding willing fish within 20 miles of the coast. There are still no reports of activity at the Tanner or Cortez Banks west/southwest of San Clemente Island, though as conditions flatten out, I expect to see reports from that area, where bluefin seem to populate year-round.

Boats fishing San Clemente Island, however, have been reporting a decent pick on larger yellowtail to 35 pounds, although most of those trips are operating out of landings in the Orange County and Los Angeles harbors, while the San Diego full-day and 1.5-day trips have been concentrating on tuna and yellowtail to the south, the latter showing signs of improvement around the Coronado Islands. Rockfish, sheephead, whitefish, and lingcod are filling out catches for the local half-day fleet, though sand bass are biting well. As the water slowly warms to near 65 degrees, we should see calico bass increasing in the counts, and conditions are beginning to favor the appearance of yellowtail and white seabass outside the La Jolla reserve.

For anglers working the sand, mole crabs, blood worms and mussels have been good baits for barred surf perch, spotfin croaker, and corbina, while those fishing Lucky Craft and other shallow-running crankbaits are finding occasional halibut in the cuts and holes near the surf break. Steeper beaches, especially during high tide, are more productive for those fishing lures, especially during smaller swells and when able to cast beyond the surf break. Lure fishing on shallower-sloping beaches when the swell is up can be tough, so often during the springtime swings in wind and waves, finding a jetty to work just behind the surf break is the better option.

waters. Boat limits are the total fish caught divided by anglers (which can include crew) aboard. As not all anglers are as skilled or lucky as others, there will be occasions where a boat returns with full limits, in which some anglers caught few or no fish, while others exceeded their personal limit. In these cases, the captain and or deckhands will usually divvy up the "extra" fish among the less-fortunate anglers. Basically, while on a sportfishing vessel, an angler can catch over their limit, but the boat can take no more than the total considering number of anglers aboard and daily bag limits, nor can any angler disembark with more than their personal daily limit. For trips of three days or longer, a total of three daily limits is the maximum. So, it is entirely possible and basically legal to go on a trip aboard a sportfishing vessel that reports limits caught, not catch a single fish, and still come home with fish in the sack.

Boat limits explained by Cornell Law School: "Off the coast of California, boat limits apply, whereby each fisherman aboard a vessel may continue to use recreational angling gear until the combined daily limits of HMS (Highly Migratory Species) for all licensed and juvenile anglers aboard has been attained (additional state restrictions on boat limits may apply). Unless otherwise prohibited, when two or more persons are angling

Mission Bay are finding good action on halibut and spotted bay bass, with a few shortfin corvina in the mix. For halibut, the holes around bridges in Mission Bay have been best, while the channel edge along the San Diego Bay mouth between the Point Loma Flats and Zuniga Jetty has been holding good fish to 32 inches or so. Further inside San Diego bay, the best bet for halibut has been around the deeper cuts and marinas, and along sandy areas and channel slopes near the Coronado Bridge.

So, back to bluefin and the fleet. Often, a newcomer to San Diego sportfishing will notice a 'hot stick' angler catching more than the daily limit allowed per angler while out on a sportfishing vessel. Aren't they poaching once they have their limit and continue fishing? Well, that's a gray area when it comes to the rules. Yes, if they catch and keep more than the daily limit per species, they are breaking the California Department of Fish and Wildlife rules. On the other hand, sportfishing vessels operate under 'boat limits' in California, and this also applies to long-range trips deep into Mexican

SURF DIEGO

by SIOBHAN BRAUN

Local?

Nope, New Hampshire native

How did you get into surfing?

I've been living in California for the last three years. Originally, I came out here for cliff jumping but I picked up surfing. I've just been kind of doing that now.

How did you get into cliff jumping?

There was a bridge next to my high school that everyone would jump [off of] after school. I started doing flips off it. There is a huge community out here of cliff jumpers—people that push it to the extreme, so I came out here for that. But now I've transitioned more into surfing.

Did you surf at all prior to moving to San Diego?

Occasionally. I mean the surf out here is so good that I started taking trips up the coast and then I really fell in love with it and left [New Hampshire]

What's your favorite surf spot in San Diego?

Scripps or Blacks Beach.

Can you remember the first time you surfed and what that was like?

Yes, it was AWESOME! I was pretty young. It was on a family vacation in North Carolina. I rented a board for the day and I never got out of the water.

Do you have a favorite surf moment?

Yes, surfing at sunset in Costa Rica. I was out there with all my friends. Couldn't beat it.

Any wildlife experiences?

Yeah, I had a sea otter charge me one time.

Have you seen any fights in the water?

Not so much [in San Diego]. I think because the surf is so good all the time it's not as bad as in other spots. In Santa Cruz during the summertime, if it's a good day and you drop in on other people, they get really mad. Certain breaks, especially Four Mile in Santa Cruz, can be really aggressive. I once saw this older guy get super mad at this little kid because he dropped in on him. He followed him all the way down the beach. He was getting all in this little kid's face. It was crazy. Everyone was yelling at him to leave him alone and to stop picking a fight with a ten-year-old.

What advice would you give new surfers?

Just get out there. Get in the water.

breakfast, all utilities, cable (HBO), heated pool/ spa, on-site laundry. High-speed Internet available for additional charge. (*Rates subject to change/ tax.) California Suites Hotel, 5415 Clairemont Mesa Boulevard. (858) 799-0219. www.californiasuiteshotel.com.

Fish Report

for HMS species aboard a vessel, fishing may continue until boat limits are reached."

The confusion about personal limits and boat limits is why we sometimes hear or read that the counts reported were not accurate.
In truth, and having worked as a deckhand, captains and crews are acutely aware of limits and keep exact track of the number of fish caught because the fines and penalties one can incur as an operator can be expensive, and certainly outweigh any benefit one might gain from "false advertising." This is especially true considering most offshore trips are selling out well in advance. If, for example, 56 bluefin were caught by 28 anglers, it really means 56 tuna were caught, and 28 anglers were aboard.
What any one angler caught, however, is hard to legally prove or disprove, so boat limits were established as the common rule.

They're out there, so go out and get 'em!

Fish Plants: 4/21 - Lake Poway, trout (1500)

graduate art program at UCSD, a class in oil painting and color theory. I'd taken some courses at the League in New York, but I still wasn't comfortable with color, and I was looking to Blue's class to help me there.

I was anxious to try my hand at the landscape around San Diego. That whole Southern Californian palette sort of swept me off my feet, the clay and purple in the mountains and that cornflower blue — I spent most of my time out in the hills with a canteen and a sketch pad, when I wasn't in class.

Sweet (or Savory?) Revenge

— When Alisha Moy, 20, and Jordan Cobbold, 21, broke it off after just a few weeks of dating, Moy was ready to move on. But Cobbold, apparently, was not, Metro News reported on March 31. A couple of weeks after they met, Cobbold suggested he take a key to her flat in Suffolk, England, which raised red flags for her. "I remember calling my mum because I was worried about it," she said. After she messaged him to break it off, she returned home from work to find "something wrong" in her apartment. "He'd pulled my shoes out of the little cloakroom and poured beans and spaghetti in there. There were condiments splattered all over the walls and cooking sauce poured all over my vacuum cleaner," she said. Cobbold had cut the cords to all her brand-new electrical appliances. Damage was estimated at about $2000; police arrested him a few days later and he was fined, given community service and a restraining order.

Inappropriate Behavior

— An unidentified crane driver in Dublin, Ireland, lost his job after he recorded himself dropping a bag of his own excrement from the crane cab onto a rooftop on March 30, DublinLive reported. While flinging the sick sack overboard, the man joked about "the joys of being a crane driver" and laughed, much to the horror of social media viewers who saw the video. The construction company said the driver had been removed immediately and would "not work on any of our other sites in the future."

They also asked social media platforms to remove the video.

Now Hiring

— Tired of mild winters and modern conveniences? Looking for a new gig? We know just the job for you! The U.K. Antarctic Heritage Trust charity is accepting applications for seasonal positions at its Port Lockroy base in Antarctica. The base is in need of personnel to take on several duties, including running a post office and monitoring penguins. Other open positions include base leader, shop manager and general assistant to work at the gift shop and post office from November 2022 to March 2023. The base was established in 1944 and is located on Goudier Island in the Palmer Archipelago, west of the Antarctic Peninsula. Besides average seasonal temperatures of -10 degrees Celsius (14 degrees Fahrenheit) and minimal hours of darkness each day, living conditions for the workers will include limited power with no running water or internet access. Job seekers outside the U.K. can apply, but they must have the right to work in the U.K. The deadline for applications is 7:59 p.m. EDT on April 25.

You Can't Park Here

— A strange sight greeted residents of a rural area of Kansas on April 5: a mobile home resting smack in the middle of a gravel road, with no owner (or resident) in site. The Kansas City Star reported that the home was found in southern Labette County, and the sheriff's office made a request via Facebook for the public's help in identifying the owner of the mobile home. Of course, theories ran wild among Facebook users. "Maybe they are on house arrest and needed to go somewhere," one user said. In the early evening on April 6, the sheriff's office announced that they had found the owner of the abandoned mobile home, and it was later revealed that blown trailer tires during transport were to blame for its temporary abandonment.

Naughty

— Electric vehicle charging stations in Isle of Wight, England, were hacked in the most middle-school of ways, the BBC reported on April 6. It seems someone reprogrammed the screens on the charge points to show a pornographic website instead of the Chargepoint Genie network. "We are saddened to learn that a third-party web address displayed on our electric vehicle (EV) signage appears to have been hacked," the Isle of Wight Council said in a statement. They apologized to anyone who "may have found the inappropriate web content."

The Passing Parade

— Rachel Mulcahy is in trouble with Clonard Monastery in Belfast, Northern Ireland for apparently posing as a nun and disrupting services at the church, the Belfast Telegraph reported on April 3. In recent days, she has been served with an injunction to stay at least 150 yards away from the building, but the bogus nun says she is praying for its parishioners. Mulcahy is also known around town for dancing frantically in the streets to religious music, accompanied by two evangelical preachers playing musical instruments. She sometimes falls to her knees and shouts, "Christ, come into me!" She told the Telegraph that she is "in love. Head over heels. I can't stop it. I love Jesus Christ so much that all I can think about is him." But one "insider" claimed she "is not a nun" and said "the congregation (is) quite elderly and they felt intimidated by Ms. Mulcahy's behavior. They just want to be left alone to pray in peace."

The Continuing Crisis

— Christopher Whetstone, 41, was arrested March 29 after authorities carrying out a search warrant at his home in Temecula, California, found two rocket launchers and a practice grenade in a trash can, National Public Radio reported. He was charged with grand theft, although it's unclear whether the charges are related to the discarded heavy artillery items. Riverside County Sheriff's Department Sgt. Edward Soto said narcotics and a bazooka also were found in the home, which is adjacent to a middle school.
