Some years ago I looked for Ken's pieces and would comment. One time he suggested in a reply that we should meet, since we knew much about the topics he reported. "Antifa defendants expose selves gloating over Reader cover," Neighborhood News, August 19

Erich Louis Yach might be the Antifa defendant facing the most possible years in prison. He has 3 active court cases in San Diego County, plus he allegedly committed the riot crimes while out on bail for previous felony, which could add 16 years to any other sentence.

When Yach was in court on September 15, his attorney repeated his prior statements that they expect to make a plea deal for his two felony cases, so Yach's one misdemeanor-resisting-arrest case will be dismissed. Yach is next due in court on Sept 28.

ON DRY LAND

Homeless issue heats up Where there's smoke, there may be an encampment fire

Retired San Diegan Patricia Fillét says that on September 3, she and her Old Town neighbors smelled and saw smoke billowing near the Morena Boulevard and I-8 interchange. They logged onto the NextDoor and Citizen apps to warn each other; and to find out about the fire causing the smoke. Was it caused by homeless people living on and by the riverbed? By record high temperatures? By a lack of water in the nearby San Diego

River as seen from Mission Center Rd.

"Even though this is considered a river, we are in a third-year drought, and nearly in fire season all year long," Fillét explained to me on September 11. "I'm not sure if you've taken a walk down to the San Diego River, but you can certainly see from Pacific Highway at the Ocean Beach bike trail entry point:

the burn areas, encampments, trash, debris,

"Due to the suspicious nature of the fire and the death of the female, detectives from the San Diego Police Homicide Unit and the Metro Arson Strike Team [also] responded to the location."

River, which is surrounded by dry brush and weeds? "The Citizen app suggested the fire in the San Diego River [area was] an encampment fire started just after 3 pm," Fillét posted on NextDoor. Another person, who lived uphill from Fashion Valley, added, "[I was] driving westbound on the 8 freeway, and the Morena Boulevard exit was closed as well as Rosecrans. I thought maybe it was a fatality because there were so many firemen and policemen and [a] helicopter....

abandoned shopping carts, and other biological hazards." Fillét, now retired, is a lifelong San Diegan and part of the Old Town Community Planning Group. The group meets monthly and addresses the goings-on in the area. Lately, Fillét has been monitoring the fires around Presidio Park and across the I-8 freeway along the San Diego River. She concentrates on the westernmost section, where the San Diego River discharges into the Pacific Ocean, monitoring the riverbed inland underneath the Morena and I-8 interchange. But she also checks spots further east, where the river flows just a few feet away from the Fashion Valley mall's lower parking structure.

She continued: "The fires and encampments are more than unhealthy and unsafe for individuals experiencing homelessness." There are the nearby homes and businesses as well. Those who live in homes surrounding Mission Valley often speak of the 1985 fire, which was, at the time, the worst brush fire in the history of San Diego. Just east of extinguished a brush fire and discovered "what appeared to be a deceased female on the ground," reads an SDPD report. "Due to the suspicious nature of the fire and the death of the female, detectives from the San Diego Police Homicide Unit and the Metro Arson Strike Team [also] responded to the location and assumed responsibility for the investigation." No updates were posted online. On August 22, just four days after the fire and mysterious death but in the same vicinity, Fillét recounted seeing "smoke in the afternoon and first responders at Friars and Morena."

Concluded Fillét: "We realize many individuals are experiencing traumas. And we as a community have a responsibility to find solutions together to help alleviate suffering. However, we need to no longer accept 'no' as an answer. We need to place individuals into shelters and/or housing to begin the stability to begin their lives with healthier opportunities."

the two malls in Mission Valley, a fire fueled by heavy brush and powerful winds spread through a series of Mission Valley canyons and climbed into Normal Heights. The fire burned 300 acres, destroyed 76 homes, and damaged 57 others.

But fire, Fillét warned, is not the only dangerous aspect of Mission Valley. "We strongly support that anyone who uses the public domain of rivers, parks, and canyons should be able to do so without fear and intimidation from encampments, illicit activities, and graffiti, [which] we witness while using this area," she added. On two Yelp pages, those for San Diego River Bicycle and Pedestrian Path and the San Diego River — reviewers warn visitors about the homeless people who live by the river. A series of reforms to community planning groups brought by San Diego City Council could be good for housing and diversity, bringing more balance to decisions about what gets built where. But some say the proposal, if not amended, will silence less affluent neighborhoods.

The city's 42 citizen planning groups provide information and opinions on new development projects and land use decisions, and their recommendations are a key part of the planning process. They will still play that role, but the ability to quash projects in the midst of a shortage of affordable housing will be reduced, some say. Others argue that a rotation of new voices will refresh "what has become a stale and often ignored process."

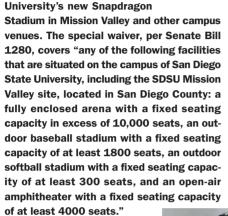

The reforms have been in the works since a 2018 county grand jury report and city audit found planning groups to be unprofessional and lacking in transparency — problems

Newsom signs SDSU suds sponsor statute

Never mind the scandals, bring on the booze 'n beer banners!

Championed by state Senate Democrat Ben Hueso, a legislative waiver signed on September 13 by Governor Gavin Newsom will let alcoholic beverage makers pay to promote their wares to crowds at San Diego State

The legislation, in the works for almost a year, comes on the heels of allegations regarding SDSU's worst booze-related scandal in its history, as first revealed in a June 3 expose by the Los Angeles Times. "The reports to campus officials late last year revealed disturbing allegations about players from San Diego State University's winning football team," the story began. "Claims were rapidly spreading among the school's athletes that five players had raped an unconscious girl and left her bloodied and bruised at a house party off campus." A civil suit by the alleged victim in August against ex-SDSU punter Matt Araiza and two other football veterans of the school charged that "she had already been drinking with friends when they arrived at the party on Rockford Drive, and Araiza, who lived at the home, gave her a drink. She believes the drink 'not only contained alcohol, but other intoxicating substances," according to a Times August 25 account.

In another high-profile case, 19-year-old Dylan Hernandez died in November 2019 after falling out of his bunk bed following a night of drinking at a "Big Brother, Little Brother" Phi Gamma Delta fraternity pledge event. SDSU blamed the fraternity for the boozerelated death and kicked it off the campus. "Based on the preponderance of the evidence gathered during the investigation, including the San Diego State University Police Department's report, admissions by former members of the Sigma Delta chapter of Phi Gamma Delta International Fraternity, photos, and ore intimate relationship with alcohol

videos, I have found Phi Gamma Delta to be in violation of Aiding and Abetting, Alcohol, Hazing or Conspiracy to Haze, Health and Safety, Illegal Drugs, and Violations of the Student Organization Conduct Procedures policies." wrote Carvl Montero-Adams, director of SDSU's Student Life & Leadership office. in an August 13, 2020 letter.

But when it came to making a buck from liquor advertising at its own venues, SDSU took a different course. A January staff report to the trustees of the California University System, which lobbied heavily for the mea> sure, made a financial case for the special treatment, but avoided discussing SDSU's long-festering student drinking problem. "This bill would make legislative findings and declarations as to the necessity of a special statute for the campus of SDSU, including the SDSU Mission Valley site, located in the County of San Diego," the report says of the legislation, designated Senate Bill 1280.

Influence greased On September 13, the same day the San Diego City Council rubberstamped Democratic mayor Todd Gloria's pick to redevelop the city-owned sports arena and environs, the chosen developer filed disclosure papers revealing it spent $34,000 during the final quarter of last year, $36,000 in the first quarter of this year, and $48,000 during the quarter after that to grease the project's way through city hall. The disclosures, signed by San Diego lobbyist and regional airport board chairman Gil Cabrera, show the influence-peddling expenditures of the would-be developer, Midway Rising, LLC, to be bankrolled by another outfit called Zephyr Acquisition Group LLC of Encinitas. The principal of both, Brad Termini and his wife Stefanie, had previously kicked in $50,000 each to a 2020 so-called independent campaign committee run by Laborers International Union of North America, Local 89 backing Gloria, along with $4500 to trict and the surrounding communities." JMI's John Moores, one-time Padres owner, himself was a key figure in the Valerie Stallings bribery scandal, which forced the city councilwoman off the council after she pled guilty to state charges of failing to disclose strategically timed gifts from Moores during his successful drive to get tax dollars for his baseball stadium downtown.

High tech junket

Jennifer Haynes, Legislative Director for GOP Congressman Darrell Issa, got a free summer trip to Seattle, thanks to a group calling itself the Women's High Tech Coalition and computer giant Microsoft, according to a July 11 filing with the Clerk of the House by her boss. The first part of the excursion lasted from June 26 to June 28, the document says. Transportation for Hayes was listed as $801, lodging cost $585, and meals ran $69. A separate July 11 report signed by Issa says Microsoft paid $848 in travel costs and $79 for meals during more time spent by Haynes in the Seattle area between June 29 and July 1. "Participants will watch staff showcase the latest and greatest MS customer stories highlighting our technologies including O365, Azure IoT, Holo-Lens, Machine learning, and more. Participants will also experience a hands-on demonstration of HoloLens technology," says Microsoft's itinerary. "The Inclusive Tech Lab is a Microsoft space dedicated to inclusive gaming. When people come to the lab, we introduce them to the social model > of disability through the lens of gaming." The Women's High Tech itinerary said that House guests would meet with executives from Amazon, T-Mobile, Weyerhaeuser, and Alaska Airlines. According to its website, the nonprofit "hosts regular luncheons, meetings, and receptions in Washington, DC, as well as additional events in Silicon Valley, in order to bring together policymakers, senior congressional staff, federal agency executives, and leaders from industry to network and exchange ideas." Toni's political healthcare A well-heeled San Francisco developer has kicked in $50,000 to Senate Democratic Pro-Tem Toni Atkins's so-called ballot measure committee, currently aimed at passage of pro-abortion Prop 1. Susan Lowenberg made the contribution on September 1, according to a disclosure report. made worse by the city's limited oversight. The update retains the 500 community volunteers who now serve, and secures the autonomy of the groups to run their own annual elections to elect new voting members. However, under the reform effort, led by councilmember Joe LaCava, planning groups will become independent advisory bodies to the city, taking on their own recordkeeping, websites and other tasks long handled by city staff. There will be a requirement to consider designating seats for renters, stakeholders and business representatives to ensure voting members reflect the broader community. And each group will now have to collect demographic data of existing and new voting members and the community to submit to the city in its annual report.

Throughout the review process leading up to the meeting to approve the reforms, several community planning groups have voiced opposition on matters ranging from financial burdens to allowing developers to avoid presenting their plans to the groups if they choose not to involve them in the review. Many of their concerns remain unresolved, according to a letter from Debbie Watkins, chair of the Mission Beach Precise Planning Board. Staff documents state that the "city will endeavor to notify [community planning groups] of discretionary permits or actions located within their area." But Watkins said it doesn't say what can be done if a planning group asks a developer to present their plans at a meeting and the developer declines.

Derryl Williams, chair of Groundwork San Diego-Chollas Creek Board of Directors, asked the city to postpone the item. Groundwork, a non-profit based in Encanto, works with planning groups in the Chollas Creek Watershed, where they have been restoring the creek, adding trails and other community features used by neighbors. He criticized the imposition of a two-year gap before termedout members can seek election, which makes it harder to recruit members; the dropping of the requirement that individuals seeking election attend three previous meetings — a minimum threshold to discourage favoring special interests — he said; and above all, the taking away of fee-free appeals. Until now, the typical $1000 appeal fee has always been waived for appeals filed by planning groups. "The elimination of fee-exempt appeals for CPGs will effectively silence the groups," especially in low income communities, Williams said, since planning groups aren't allowed to charge fees to fund appeals or collect membership fees for operating expenses.

The city has pledged ongoing support, such as a $500 stipend to each planning group in fiscal year 2023. In addition, meeting space will be available without charge at city facilities, on a case-by-case basis, and the city will post the groups' agendas on their website. But Williams said it's not nearly enough to fund the needed data management systems, online meeting and translation services and website support. "To continue improvements in our communities of concern, the [groups] need the city's support, rather than being penalized."

California solves crisis by offering "a different kind of asylum."

On September 14, California Governor Gavin Newsom signed the Community Assistance, Recovery and Empowerment (CARE) act into law. The law will allow courts to order treatment

A smiling San Diego Mayor Todd Gloria joins Gavin Newsom outside the newly re-opened Boulevard Sanitarium for the Care and Treatment of the Mentally Unwell in San Diego's back country. "Speaking as someone who has lost a lot of sleep over the people sleeping on his city's sidewalks," said Gloria, "I can't wait to get these poor folks 'off the streets and into the suites' here at Boulevard!"

plans for mentally ill homeless individuals for up to two years, plans that can include medication, housing, and therapy. Critics have accused Newsom of returning to the days when people were "warehoused in institutions," but he said he found their arguments "exhausting," and that "their point of view is expressed by what you see on the streets and sidewalks all across the state. I'm trying to win an election, position myself for a presidential run in 2024, and convince people to move to California from places like Florida and Texas because here, 'we still believe in freedom.' But no one's gonna believe me if they're not free to walk down the street without being accosted by a homeless schizophrenic shouting about masks and aliens. If we have to curtail the freedom of a few unlikely voters to make good things happen, that's okay, because as the bill's name makes it clear, California CAREs."

Navy reinstates Catholic worship at base chapel after unspeakable incident

Statement from Father Gerald Riptide, Navy Chaplain for San Diego, regarding the military branch's announced and then retracted decision to cancel Catholic Masses at North Island

Good heavens! No, bad heavens!

Chapel: "As Christians, we believe that our prayers are both heard and answered by an all-loving, all-powerful God, and that our worship at Mass pleases Him. But at the same time, we are content with the axiom that those answers to prayer are often mysterious, o and frequently outright invisible. Many times, it seems that our petitions for the protection of our sailors are raised in vain; I think of all the senseless injury wrought by the fire aboard the Bonhomme Richard. So when > the Navy noticed that fewer and fewer Navy personnel were attending Mass — especially our younger enlistees, who are of course the future of the military — they made plans to cancel the contracts that brought civilian priests in to minister to the Naval faithful. A sensible if painful costcutting measure in these difficult times

"Little did we realize that our prayers were not only being heard, but were also the only thing preventing the unholy surfacing of the great fish-god Dagon, that stupendous monster of nightmares, the mere sight of whom is enough to drive men mad, who awaits the day when his hideous worshippers may rise above the billows to drag down in their reeking talons the remnants of puny, war-exhausted mankind, the day when the land shall sink, and the dark ocean floor shall ascend amidst universal pandemonium. Suffice to say that we learned a valuable lesson last week, a lesson that more than accounts for our decision to reinstate the saying of Catholic Mass at North Island Chapel. And be assured that the gibbering lunatics who were once proud Navy men will be cared for as humanely as possible for the rest of their tortured, wakingnightmare lives. All praise and thanks to God, who preserves us from the sleepless foe."

In Blackmail. Edward G. Robinson plays a convict who embarrasses the authorities by escaping custody twice.

Fat Leonard Francis embarrassed authorities twice, first by bribing Navy officers and then by escaping house arrest after conviction.

On The Office. Jenna Fischer played Pam Beesly, a woman who harbors regrets after the man with whom she has a healthy relationship runs away.

Judge Janis Sammartino seemed to express regret over allowing Fat Leonard to live at home for health reasons, which allowed him to run awav.

Also on The Office John Krasinski played Jim, who tried to leave Pam but ultimately found it impossible.

Francis' attorney Devin Burstein assured Judge Sammartino that Francis wasn't going anvwhere.

Vampires on my front porch

I didn't want to cut off any heads. The truth about vermian regeneration is complicated. Take the beefy night crawler, who has 150 body segments. If you cut off 11 of his front segments, he'll grow 4 or 5, and he'll be shorter, but he'll be fine. Hack off his behind to the 35th segment, and he'll grow a new tail end, but a cut after the 11th and before the 36th segment is almost always fatal. – Laura McNeal JUNE. 12, 1997

Rats and Lilies

A few days later, we noticed rats in the carport. They ran along the cupboards when we parked our cars. They scurried along the stacks of lumber, balanced on coils of irrigation hose. Notes on a Tragedy

A reporter looks back on covering the PSA crash

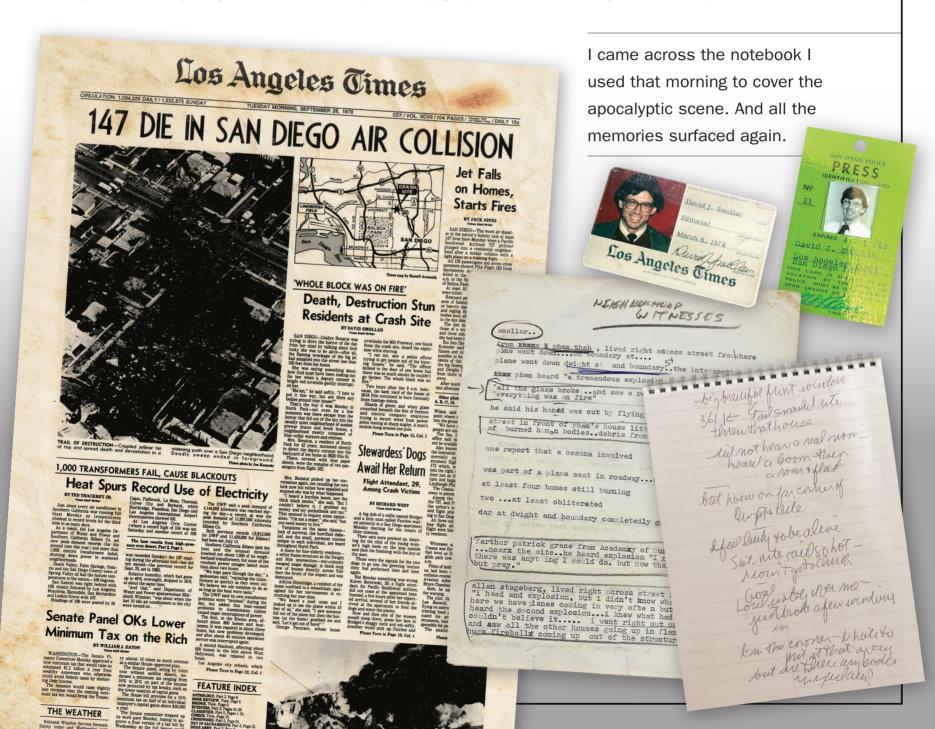

Even after the passage of 44 years, the tiniest of details still remains fresh when I relive the hot awful Monday of September 25, 1978 in San Diego. At fifty seconds past 9 am, above El Cajon Boulevard at 38th Street, the right wing of a Pacific Southwest Airlines jet descending in a turn toward Lindbergh Field was gashed from below by a single-engine Cessna that the 727 pilot had lost sight of. Killed were the two Cessna pilots, all 135 PSA passengers and crew, and seven people on the ground where the jet plunged into houses along Dwight Street between Nile and Boundary streets in North Park. I was a young reporter fewer than six months into a journalism career, working for the San Diego County edition of the Los Angeles Times. The crash of flight 182, the deadliest ever in U.S aviation at the time and still the worst in San Diego history, would serendipitously result in my first front-page byline. A few weeks ago, while reshuffling boxes in the garage, I came across the notebook I used that morning to cover the apocalyptic scene. And all the memories surfaced again.

Dispatch

On the morning of the 25th, I had arrived early to the eighth-floor newsroom, in the Central Federal Tower at 3rd and Broadway, planning to call the County's Air Pollution Control

District about unhealthy smog that was predicted to envelop the city on a hot Santa Ana day, with temperatures rising to record triple digits. It turned out that the APCD had scheduled an 8:30 am demonstration of experimental vapor-recovery gas pump handles at the Go-Lo station in North Park on University Avenue at 32nd Street — by happenstance, only three blocks north from where PSA would plummet. But I missed notice of the event, having worked the previous Friday in San Onofre on a story about Amtrak engineers injured by rock-throwing inebriates targeting nighttime trains along the beachside track. (The County's official photographer Hans Wendt was at the Go-Lo when he heard a pop skywards, looked up to see the 727 hurtling out-ofcontrol to the ground,

So I was on the phone to Dick Smith, APCD assistant director, both to develop the smog story and include information about the new pump handles I had missed acquiring by not being at the Go-Lo. I absentmindedly looked out the window adjoining my pod to the northeast and saw angry black smoke billowing over the Broadway skyline. Simultaneously, senior reporter Jack Jones, who was manning the city desk until the usual arrival of editors around 10 am, was motioning frantically for me to get off the line. He looked stricken. He had been monitoring the police-fire radio frequencies when he heard this chilling transmission:

"San Diego dispatch, Engine 14" — from John Allen, one of the Station 14 crew members from 32nd Street and Lincoln Avenue who were on their daily run at Morley Field.

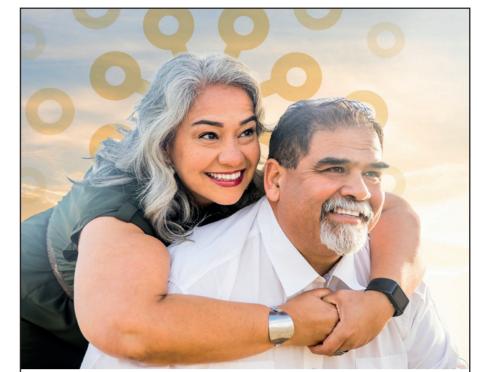

"Engine 14," Fire Dispatch replied.

"An airliner has crashed in the vicinity of Interstate 805 and University and we are responding from Morley Field," Allen panted, his voice trembling.

Three seconds of silence. Then Dispatch queried, "Engine 14, are you responding to a vehicle fire?"

"Negative, San Diego, this is an airliner crash at approximately 805 and University. We are responding."

I mumbled a quick, "Dick, I gotta go" into the phone, and bolted to the city desk, where Jack shouted that a passenger jet had crashed, and pleaded with me to hustle over to the 805 and University with photographer Bob Lachman, who had caught the same scanner traffic while working in the photo lab and was already at the office door, loaded down with his camera bag, ready to go. The elevator ride down eight floors to the lobby and then two floors to P2 in a separate lift seemed, at the time, the longest three minutes of my career.

As Lachman gunned his car out of the skyscraper garage, its shoebox-sized radiotelephone buzzed with information from reporter Nancy Ray, who had arrived at the office and was helping Jack monitor emergency radio traffic. She told us the plane was a Western Airlines 727 (such is the fog of early news reports) and that police and California Highway Patrol were already setting up roadblocks as dozens of fire engines and rescue vehicles swarmed the area. As we drove onto the 163 and took to the Richmond Street exit to Upas, thick black smoke was spreading throughout the sky.

Arrival on Scene

Having spent many days around Morley Field as a kid, I was able to direct Lachman along the side streets to the south of the crash site, taking Upas to Herman to Thorn to Felton to Myrtle — correctly assuming that those little-trafficked thoroughfares would be the last to be blocked off. (Times reporter Nancy Skelton, having heard the news while still at home, got caught up later at one of the barricades that was keeping traffic from exiting the south 805 at University, and lost more than an hour in a contentious standoff with a CHP officer before a San Diego police official who had been called to the scene waved her through, anxious to forego an arrest and an additional headache, given the far more serious matters only a stone's throw away.) When Lachman reached Myrtle and Boundary, a block south of the impact, I got out and urged him to get back to the office as soon as he had good shots and not worry about a rendezvous with me later.

I was wearing suit pants, a blue dress shirt and maroon tie, and I was already sweating through them with nervous anticipation as I ran up Boundary toward the epicenter, the heat made worse by a baking sun, and my nerves made worse by the acrid smell of metal, jet fuel, household goods, baggage items and, yes, flesh, all burning furiously together and foretelling a horrible story. It was 9:23 am. I recalled what Iack had imparted to me months earlier about reporting, after he had watched me having to revamp a story several times by adding needed details: "Make like a vacuum cleaner and suck up everything you can, and don't worry about shaping it until later." Fortuitously, I made a snap decision to get a phone number from every witness interviewed, which served me well, both at the time and a decade later in revisiting the scene for a story looking back into history. I just didn't want to panic the way I saw a friend from the The San Diego Union do, running past me, away from the flaming wreckage, moaning how awful everything was. Don't picture yourself on that plane, I admonished myself. (That would come after up and down the Boundary block. Two passenger seats sat perfectly upright in the middle of the street. I nearly tripped over parts of a shoe, then blanched at a discolored bare foot alongside the curb, next to a record album. Everywhere, residents, numbed by the cacophony of sirens and exploding debris, were trying to comprehend both what had happened and why they had been spared when others just two or three or four doors away had either been killed or had their homes torn apart, or both. Pham Thanh, a refugee from Vietnam only nine months in San Diego, described how the windows of his house had been blown out by the plane's nearby impact, and how he had found a wall of flame as he opened the door and ran away from "everything that seemed to be red all at once." I noticed that his hand had been cut, but his adrenaline was still so high that the pain hadn't yet fully registered. He went off looking for an EMT or nurse as emergency vehicles became visible on the next block.

There were more bloodspattered house-steps and trembling witnesses as I reached the point near Dwight where the main part of the fuselage had disintegrated. The tailmounted rear engine with its PSA logo, charred but still readable, rested on its side, half-destroyed amidst the burning rubble that moments earlier had been dwellings. Resident Allan Stageberg heard the sound of air whizzing past his house and then an explosion that violently shook the structure. He knew it was a jet when he opened his door and saw fire engulfing the aircraft and a row of houses burning across the street on the south side of Dwight. As he spoke to me, two firemen sat on a nearby curb receiving supplemental oxygen to counteract the foul air. "We get planes coming low over us all the time on their way to landing at the airport, so for me it was just a matter of time before something like this happened," said Stageberg. (In the aftermath of the crash, air traffic control procedures were changed so that all planes now land under mandatory tower direction, with southbound craft required to make a wide 180-degree turn 10 an initial hour or so of frenzied interviews and brief descriptions which, more than four decades later, I can still picture vividly. Flecks of blood and remnants of clothing along with large and small pieces of the plane, interior and exterior,

I espied Rev. Patrick Grace of the Academy of Our Lady of Peace in University Heights, who had rushed over to try and help in any way possible. "I had heard there might be injured, so I'm here in case there is anything I can do," he told me forlornly as he watched dozens of firefighters maneuvering to get the upper hand on the fires. "But now, there's really nothing I can do except pray." I noticed a second priest on the Nile side of the wreckage saying the last rites of the Catholic Church over a couple of blanket-covered bodies. I couldn't get over to talk to him, but Rev. Grace thought he might be from nearby St. Augustine High School six blocks south, where later in the morning, the County Coroner would set up a temporary morgue in the school's gymnasium (and where one of our youngest reporters would become physically ill by evening from watching body bags — that eventually totaled 143 — steadily arrive, filled by deputy coroners and enlisted Navy and Marine personnel pressed into service to comb the site for remains.)

The Front Page

By that juncture, I had written "10:04 a.m." in my notebook. It had been a little more than an hour since the two planes had collided. (By then, the city desk was aware of the Cessna, and had dispatched two reporters to the North Park intersection of Polk and 32nd streets where it had crashed.) I looked around for colleagues, amid the mob of emergency workers and spectators, but I could spot only Lachman and a second Times photographer who had joined him. Later, the paper would charter a helicopter to get an overhead photo of the carnage.

It occurred to me that I should find a telephone and let the city desk know where I was and what I had so far. That task turned out to require more than a half hour: I spent much of the time looking for a working phone. Power had been turned off in the area because of damaged lines and fear of sparking, and telephone service was spotty, as phone cables were attached to the same electric utility poles. I knocked on a half-dozen doors along Boundary north of Dwight, where miraculously there had been no damage; the area plowed by the plane was mercifully limited to a single block, due to the steep angle at which it had fallen. When I finally found a residence with a functioning phone, the owner eved me warily even after I flashed my newspaper identification and San Diego Police press pass. A ten-dollar bill sealed the deal — much to my irritation. I felt momentarily like a cliché reporter as pictured in an old 'B' movie. In any event, the man pointed me to an oldstyle phone, and I dialed into the office and was put through immediately to Jack, a consummate professional who now was assembling a crisp, clear main story from a myriad of sources that would be ready well before deadlines for the 2 pm Late Final edition distributed at major Los Angeles newsstands and for worldwide use on the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post joint newswire. Jack was terse and focused, and wanted quick bits of color, witness quotes and names, and any statistical information I had gleaned. I was able to help with the first two, but not the third.

Then my editor Dale and said I absolutely needed to be back no later than 1 pm to start on a color story to run (potentially) alongside the main narrative by Jack in the nextday editions, given the deadlines being placed on him by top editors in Los Angeles. (I learned later that Dale had successfully pushed back against an L.A. editor who wanted to bigfoot the office and send a reporting crew from Los Angeles.) That gave me, at best, a little more than 90 additional minutes at the scene, not counting the time needed to get back downtown amid a chaotic traffic environment. It also added additional pressure, intended or not, to come up with an article compelling enough to pass successfully through a gauntlet of editors. I was no naïf about the rarity of a front-page byline in a profession that often measured success by how many you produced. A page-1 story required more than the average deadline product.

Fetherling got on the line

"Are there any bodies around your house?" Hustling back south on Boundary, I noted that most of the fires were coming under control, and the smoke over the landscape had cleared sufficiently by now to bring into starker relief the violence that had shredded the neighborhood. Doing my best to shrug off the oppressive heat, I continued to record observations as I moved from house to house to talk with more people, while a helicopter hovered overhead with a bullhorn voice ordering all sightseers to leave an area of 24 square blocks immediately or risk arrest. It was 10:41 am.

PSA workers had arrived and were somberly roping off the aircraft wreckage. Perhaps they already knew that in addition to the seven working crew, there had been 18 other PSA employees aboard, San Diego being the company's main base. On the porch of one house on Boundary, two collection workers gingerly removed a nose and upper lip with a moustache, all stuck to a piece of fiberglass, and placed the body part in a body bag. Firefighters, clad only in boots and shorts because of the heat, set up a ladder to climb the roof of another house where a body rested. As they brought it to the curb to be bagged, a normally stoic police officer cringed and turned away, his eyes tearing momentarily. One worker confessed that he tried not to think about what he was doing because so many bodies had been mangled. He put it delicately: "It's an understatement to say that what we're seeing doesn't look nice at all." Flies had begun to buzz around the baby blue blankets, held down with rocks, that tirage teams were using to cover body parts not yet placed into bags. The body bags already processed were piling up in the street, each marked with a manila tag specifying the remains inside. In another front yard, student homework papers for a second-grade class in the West Covina Unified School District were scattered randomly on the lawn, together with half of a passenger seat armrest. Three credit cards lay on a neighboring lawn.

A sailor from the destroyer escort USS Stein was fast-walking down Boundary, headed for a house on Felton where his grandmother lived, so I followed. The Navy had permitted emergency leave for anyone with a relative in the area, because no one could get through by telephone. The sailor, Steve Abernathy, spotted his frail, white-haired grandmother Catherine Lambert in front of her house and rushed to embrace her. She was still a little shaky, even though the only damage to her property was from a Timex watch that had rocketed forth from the jet's impact and slammed against her living room window, creating a small crack. A full armrest ended up in her laundry handbasket in the backyard.

I looped back to Dwight after collecting more eyewitness accounts, and in the intense sunlight, caught the flash of a man wearing red overalls as he was walking toward Niles Street. Catching up with him, I learned that he was a deputy coroner, setting out to talk with an elderly woman outside a Niles house just north of the corner whose backyard appeared singed. She was in animated conversation with a neighbor, explaining how she felt so lucky to be alive as the plane had nose-dived, only 100 feet further south, into neighboring houses. "The Good Lord must have been watching over me even though on Saturday night it had been so hot, I had decided that I wouldn't go to church on Sunday." The woman, 79-year-old Gladys Bonatus, had lived in the house for 42 years, and averred that in all that time, she had never liked the airplanes overhead, and probably would like them even less now. The deputy coroner stepped forth and gently interrupted the conversation, his manner almost apologetic.

As we drove onto the 163 and took to the Richmond Street exit to Upas, thick black smoke was spreading throughout the sky.

"Ma'am, I'm the coroner. I hate to put it this way, but are there any bodies around your house?" She didn't say anything, but simply pointed to the backyard, and the deputy motioned to two Navy men trailing him to bring a couple of body bags.

Turning back to her neighbor and acknowledging my presence, Bonatus felt compelled to explain why she was clutching a small brown paper sack. It contained some money and her pocketbook, which she had earlier grabbed after someone had run up the street shouting for everyone to evacuate their homes. "I'm not a miser, but you need money to live." Her eyes welled up as she described the irrepressible four-year-old boy who lived on the corner with his mother and whose home had been flattened. Both were presumed dead. She spoke haltingly of how he used to come over to her house and stare at the front porch doorbell button because it had a light inside it. He always was asking why a doorbell would need a lighted button, she sobbed.

I thanked her for her time and expressed my relief that she had come through the ordeal without being hurt — though I could tell from the conversation that the crash was going to be on her mind for a long time afterwards. Her sense of things at once arbitrary and spiritual led me to jot down a note about the capriciousness of the entire scene: a multiplex nicknamed Dossie's with senior citizens largely untouched but the adjacent houses destroyed; residents who knew nothing was amiss until the loud boom of the explosion, while others, like wheelchair-bound Adlyne Ethelridge, saw a body tumble out from the plane after it passed over her backyard no more than 10 feet away, just prior to implosion. There could be no logical explanation for all of this. But my brief foray into philosophical thought ended abruptly when an officer yelled at me to move away from a burnt house with a leg jutting out from a side wall. Walking back over to Boundary, I passed two U.S. postal inspectors who were beginning their required search for any mail salvageable from the crash, and to carry out a neighborhood survey to determine the short-term extent of delivery disruption.

The Story

Now it was 11:56 am. I stopped to reread the conversation of Gladys Bonatus, and decided that I now had a compelling lead for my article. Her experience — a jumble of contradictory thoughts and actions, seemingly so

natural in reacting to disaster — would serve as a powerful introduction to the neighborhood trauma that morning. But how to get back to the office? Locating another nearby phone and asking for someone to pick me up both seemed non-starters, given the roadblocks and the frenetic state that the newsroom must be in.

Then I recalled a corner grocery and laundromat at 30th and Redwood streets with a pay phone; I reckoned it was far enough south that the phone should be working and roads unblocked. It was probably a mile away, but with my clothes already soiled with the stench of disaster, why worry about additional sweat? When I reached the store some 20 minutes later, I scored a minor jackpot. There was a direct phone line to Yellow Cab on the outside wall. By the time I had returned from a dash inside the store for a Coke and cheese crackers, the taxi was waiting. The driver had a straight shot down 30th and then west on Broadway to the office. He cranked his air conditioning to the highest setting, certainly as much to counteract my scent as to ease the heat. But he said nothing, and I was an extravagant tipper that day, compliments of the Los Angeles Times.

By 1:05 pm, after a quick wash-up, I was at my typewriter, too pumped up and nervous to even grab one of the turkey or tuna sandwiches that Dale had ordered up for the staff. The newsroom was not vet as crowded as it would later become; several reporters were still out at the makeshift morgue, at the airport, at hospitals, and at Red Cross and Salvation Army locations. The anecdote with Gladys Bonatus seemed to work perfectly as a lead-in to the other accounts and descriptions I had accumulated. But after thinking it through, I left out her recollection of the little boy and the doorbell, having cringed as I imagined the pain that relatives and others who knew the family would feel to read it less than 24 hours after his death.

Shortly after 3 pm, I had a 1400-word piece to the city desk. That gave local editors enough time — barring the need for major structural rewrites — for a draft copy to be in front of Los Angeles editors for their 3:30 pm meeting to decide Tuesday's page designs and story positions. Jack borrowed a duplicate to look for details important enough to include in any update of his main piece, otherwise long finished and already on the newswire. As my story completed its wend through preliminary editing, Nancy Skelton appeared in the newsroom. She had spent several hours at the scene after being released from her runin with the CHP, but had not been in contact with the city desk all day. She was extremely unhappy when, after describing to editors what she had, she was told to give the best material to Jack and other reporters for possible inclusion in their stories. She grew even more upset when she heard that my piece had been scheduled for the front page, thinking of course that she, as a veteran reporter previously with the Sacramento Bee, certainly had the better story — if only she could be given a few hours to write it. In a non-deadline world, or on a day with more flexibility to surmount the constraints of the clock, she might well have been able to prove her point. Nancy was only partially mollified by Dale's assurance that she would report and write the major follow-up article Tuesday ("Requiem for Dwight Street") for second-day coverage in Wednesday's paper. She didn't speak to me for more than a week. I was a bit flummoxed, having done nothing untoward. But I tucked away an early and powerful lesson about the Darwinian aspects of newsroom culture and competition.

The colleague whom I truly felt sorry for was Ted Vollmer, arguably the best pure reporter in the office. He had called in sick that morning with a stomach flu, and had not learned of the disaster until around noon, when he turned on his television. Mortified to have missed perhaps the biggest story ever to hit San Diego, he had immediately called the city desk, only to be asked if he could come in and file a couple of necessary non-PSA stories that would end up buried inside the local section the next day. Being the loyal trooper that he was, Ted agreed.

The rest of the afternoon was spent largely rechecking details for accuracy and checking with other reporters to make sure everyone was working from the same set of basic facts. As telephone service was restored to the stricken neighborhood, I called some of the individuals I had interviewed to confirm the unusual spelling of their names and to ask if they had anything additional they wanted to add. To a person, they were all subdued, thankful to have survived but, as I gathered from the tone of their voices, nevertheless excited that their evewitness accounts would be memorialized in print. At 5:45 pm, Jerry Belcher, a veteran deadline reporter and rewrite specialist in the L.A. newsroom whose narratives flowed like hot butter, rang me. He suggested a couple of fixes to smooth the Bonatus anecdote and emphasize the searing experience the neighborhood had undergone — and which he himself felt during his reading. I would have been too drained to argue had I disagreed, but as it was, his edits indeed added several nice segues between quotes.

In 12 hours, that story would be read by a million subscribers, and soon after, it would become yesterday's news for the vast majority. For myself, and I'm certain for those I encountered on that long-ago Monday who are alive today, the day remains a collection of indelible memories.

North Couny Beaches Lose Sand, Santa Ana Season Arrives

As the Beach Season Winds Down, San Diego County's coastline is padded by what are likely the deepest and widest accumulations of sand we'll see this year. Many stretches of the coastline are vulnerable to powerful waves associated with winter storms. This wave action can pull sand off the beaches and deposit it offshore, leaving behind (especially in North County) nothing but cobble beds. During the spring and summer, gentle wave action usually returns much of the sand, usually in time for the arrival of the summer tourists.

Late September Signals the Beginning of Santa Ana Winds, which may continue intermittently through the winter. Early Santa Anas are often responsible for coastal San Diego's hottest and driest days of the year. Records show that 62 percent of the days at Lindbergh Field with 90-degree readings or higher have occurred during the months of September and October. The desertlike days are a consequence of dry air from a high-pressure area centered over Nevada or Utah moving across Southern California's coastal

DISCUSSION GROUPS

Escaping the Heat of This Season's first couple of Santa Anas will not be easy — if you can't be inside air-conditioned buildings at any rate. Along the coastline, where temperatures may reach the 90s, taking a dip in the surf solves the problem. Inland, the furnacelike heat is moderated only by increases in altitude. Head for the high places of the county — the mile-plus heights of the Palomar and Laguna Mountains, for example. You could climb a couple of the county's loftiest peaks: Cuyamaca Peak (6512') in Cuyamaca Rancho State Park or Boucher Hill (5438') in Palomar Mountain State Park. On peaks such as these during a Santa Ana-wind episode, the thermometer registers about 25-30 degrees lower than in the lowlands. Since the early phase of a Santa Ana sweeps away atmospheric water vapor and air pollution, hundred mile vistas in every direction may be yours to enjoy.

Eat the heat

"Fight fire with fire! Just ask the Koreans!"

at hot to cool down," my aunt used to say. "And drink hot, too." "What does that mean?" says my neighbor Kevin when I quote her to him on this stinking hot day last week. Auntie Ros came out with her prescription back on one of those Indian Summer evenings when I was a kid. I was hungry, but not that hungry, and certainly not for the lamb chops and boiled spuds and beans she was cooking up for us. All we knew was, the stove was making us hellishly overheated. Her solution was to keep up a mantra of: "Fight fire with fire. Just ask the Koreans!"

So today, neighbor Kevin and I are testing this out. We haul up to Lisbon and Imperial, outside this "BVM BBQ" place in the Encanto area, kill the engine, and feel the midday heat plunge in as the A/C shuts down. "Oh man," says Kevin. "Sure hope they have air conditioning inside." Uh, no. No air-con inside. In fact, you go through BVM's open door and it's like walking into the proverbial sauna. Woompf! "It's 100, at least," says Kevin. "Inside! I can't believe it."

Chris, working the brisket

"Hello!" I say. Don't see anybody here.

"Coming!" says a guy as he appears behind the counter. "There's only one of me. We've been having...problems this morning. The heat..." We're in this big, old-school joint. Reminds me of a Charles Dickens factory scene from the 1800s. It turns out this eatery has been set up in what was once a post office for the Encanto region. Amazingly, given this heat, there are other customers here. "I was driving towards Spring Valley, needed some food," says a gal standing beside us. Maritza. "I found this on my phone, and saw they did pizzas with, like, BBQ meat chunks on them. I thought that was original. So I stopped."

The real hero here is Chris, the one-man band behind the counter. He's laboring away, dunking fries into pots of boiling oil, grabbing sides of ribs and cutting them on circular meat saws, pouring vinegar over collard greens, scooping out spoonfuls of frijoles, mac 'n cheese, and cornbread from buckets.

So now Kevin and I are checking out the menus on the walls. Mostly BBQ items, pizzas, and sandwiches. Whatever, we're talking about meat here. Except, best deal? It's tacos, mostly $1 > each! Carne asada, pollo asado, adobada, one buckeroo. OK, fish is $1.75, and so are the pulled pork and pulled beef. But these are deals. Prices start climbing when we get to the rest of the menu. Six pieces of "jumbo wings" cost $7.99, a plate of baked beans goes for $4.99, and breaded fried okra is $6.99. They do sandwiches with BBQ meat inside, like the pulled pork or the beef brisket sandwich ($10.99). And under "new items," BBQ "beef spuds" for $7.99.

Huh. Baked potato under BBQ meat? Sounds good, but it turns out it's academic. "I don't do those," says Chris, simply. He does do pulled pork > fries, or carne asada, or beef brisket, though. Cost $9.99 each. Hmm. And with the pizzas, I see what Maritza means about BBQ influence. They have choices like chicken BBQ pizzas pulled pork pizzas, or brisket pizzas for $16.99. But actually, the dinner combos may be the best deal going: a three-piece chicken combo with two sides costs $10.99. A pork rib tip and chicken combo, including two sides, is yours for $14.99. Of course, in these temperatures, common sense says we should be having salads, or a cold soup like gazpacho. Sigh. Hope you're right, Aunt Ros. In the end, Kevin gets the beef brisket combo with sides of mac'n cheese and collard greens ($14.99), and I go for the pulled pork fries ($10.99).

We drag a high-legged table out to near the front door, and settle down in the shade. A slight breeze comes in. We get a couple of sodas and pay $26.92 for the lot. Not too bad; say, thirteen bucks each. "A little chewy," says Kevin as he attacks a slab of brisket. "But you know what's best? It's these collard greens. I'm getting bacon, garlic, onions...these are the greatest!" He says he hadn't even heard of collard greens before today. I had, natch, and knew they have been a staple in the deep south ever since slavery days, when collard greens ("cabbage plant," from "col wort," think cole slaw) often made the difference between surviving and starving. What Kevin's tasting is the classic slow-cook of collard greens with garlic, bacon, and onions added in. Meantime, I'm chomping into my pulled pork fries, basically a mess of liquidy, rich, stringy pork on top of a pile of the fries Chris has just cooked in front of us. I don't know how he does all of this in the heat, but it comes out great.

We could have gone for the basic classics: the full rack of pork ribs ($28.99, or half, $17.99),

Maritza and Kevin work out plan of attack on his brisket dinner

Beautiful mess: my pulled pork fries or meats like the beef brisket ($14.99 lb), but in this roasting weather, it just seemed like it'd be too much. And we weren't wrong. When we finally head for the door, we are both stuffed to the gills. (Oh yeah, they did have fish, too, like a whole fillet in a sandwich for $11.99, or a shrimp po' boy, also $11.99.) We head for the "cool" of the 90-plus weather outside. "Chris," says Kevin before we leave. "You are a hero. I don't know how you stand this."

Kevin's brisket dinner combo. Unexpected star? The collard greens.

"You do what you've got to do," says Chris. We say goodbye to Maritza, who's still waiting for her pizzas. "That's cool," she says, when we apologize for leaving.

"Uh, maybe not the best word, today," says

Cabaret

Karson McGinely returns to the role that won her a San Diego Critics Circle Award 11 years ago. Her Master of Ceremonies at the decadent Kit Kat Club in '30s Berlin is also very much the Master of Ceremonies for the Cygnet Theatre in '20s San Diego, drawing the audience in with the promise of distracting naughtiness before baring her teeth and reminding them that you can't ever really leave your troubles at the door. It's one of the great and terrible parts in musical theater; not just amoral, but convincingly resolute that morality is little more than a luxury of the comfortable — rather like love. Not for nothing is her big torchy song titled "I Don't Care Much." She is the heartless world, the one set against lovers both young and old, the one that grinds the weak under its heel as it rewards the powerful. And Ms. McGinley nails it. Not that the lovers both young and old don't do their best; otherwise, what would we do for a story? The production takes its time gathering the threads, but from the moment the lederhosen-clad youth waft their angelic rendition of "Tomorrow Belongs to Me" from the balcony on, the show marches with energy and purpose toward the inevitable. A couple of missed motivations and throwaway subplots (Bobby?) serve as minor stumbles, more than made up for by the versatile cast and creative staging. (Loved the tap-dance beatdown!) Come Fall In Love -The DDLJ Musical

Come Fall in Love - The DDLJ Musical is the story of Simran, a young Indian American woman whose future is set: an arranged marriage back in India to a family friend. But when she convinces her very strict dad that she should spend a summer of freedom and fun in Europe, she falls for the charming Rog, and her careful, logical plans go out the window. Can she be true to both her heritage and her heart? Can carefree American Rog win over her traditional father? Take a whirlwind trip from Boston to Europe to India as cultures collide in the stage musical adaptation of the beloved hit romantic-comedy film Dilwale Dulhania Le Jayenge, set to the exuberant beat of all-new songs created for the stage. Dido & Aeneas

This monumental work by Henry Purcell is a classic tale of love, loss, betrayal, revenge, duty and above all, fate. This new, fully staged production, marries the ancient, the baroque and the present day, inviting audiences to relive this opera through 21st century eyes & ears. Featuring Victoria Mature (Dido), Evan White (Aeneas), and Brendan Nguyen (Conductor), with chamber orchestra presented in Bario Logan's fantastic arts space Bread & Salt. Profits from this production will be donated to Summit for Stem Cell Foundation.

Fandango for Butterflies (and Coyotes)

Fandangos are vibrant gatherings in which music and dance bring stories of a community to life. For a group of immigrants gathering in a community center on the eve of a city-wide ICE raid, this night's fandango serves a vital purpose: to resurrect the culture they left behind. Inspired by interviews with Latin American immigrants - many of whom made a dangerous journey to the United States - Fandango for Butterflies (and Coyotes) is a celebration of the resiliency and camaraderie that can be built as strangers become friends, friends become family, and the music plays on.

Kristina Wong: Sweatshop Overlord

On Day 3 of the COVID-19 pandemic, Kristina Wong began sewing masks out of old bedsheets and bra straps on her Hello Kitty sewing machine. Before long, she was leading the Auntie Sewing Squad, a work-fromhome sweatshop of hundreds of volunteers-including children and her own mother-to fix the U.S. public health care system while in quarantine. It was a feminist care utopia forming in the midst of crisis. Or was it a mutual aid doomsday cult? With hilarity and boundless generosity, she invites the audience in on her work building community in isolation, while reflecting on what we'd been through and imagining what we wanted to become.

The Outsider

Call it Washington Goes to Mr. Smith. Paul Slade Smith's story of a shlubby but competent administrator who finds himself launched into the political limelight shares an outlook with Frank Capra's classic film — basically, if you're not cynical about American politics, you're a rube and a dupe, but if you don't believe in the promise of American politics anyway, you're a shrivel-hearted crank. But where Capra went for drama, Smith and director Christopher Williams are after comedy - with a heart. The tone is set even before the play begins, as the standard pre-show announcements are delivered in the form of a political attack ad. "Other theaters want to steal your money, but here at Scripps Ranch Theatre..." It's right on the nose, just like the interstitial songs: "Born in the USA," "Ain't That America," "American Idiot," etc. But that doesn't mean it doesn't work, thanks in no small part to the energy, timing, and commitment of the cast. Even when you can see a situation coming, as in the case of the disastrous interview that closes Act One, the execution is good enough to keep the laughs coming.

You know you're in Capra-land from the get-go as well: only there would a governor be forced to resign over a little thing like marital infidelity. His Lieutenant Ned Newley has just delivered five minutes of televised silence at what was supposed to be his swearing in — he's better at policy than people, you see and in so doing, has attracted the attention of D.C. super-consultant Arthur Vance (John Nutten, who here puts one in mind of an amped-up Ronald Reagan). Newley may be smart, but he comes across as dumb on TV, just dumb enough to be "real" — the political currency of the moment. ("Unqualified is the new qualified!")

Vance is a great character: a slick huckster who lives for the campaign and believes in his work, even if he doesn't believe in his candidates. He must contend with both the new gov's idealistic Chief of Staff and his emptyheaded Executive Assistant, but don't you know it, he's one of those everycrisis is an opportunity types. SCRIPPS RANCH THEATRE, 9783 AVENUE OF NATIONS, SCRIPPS RANCH, 858-578-7728 8PM FRIDAYS & SATURDAYS 2PM SLINDAYS

Don't Worry Darling — Alice (Florence Pugh) and Jack (Harry Styles) are lucky to be living in the idealized community of Victory, the experimental company town housing the men who work for the topsecret Victory Project and their families. The 1950's societal optimism espoused by their CEO, Frank (Pine)-equal parts corporate visionary and motivational life coach—anchors every aspect of daily life in the tight-knit desert utopia. But when cracks in their idyllic life begin to appear, exposing flashes of something much more sinister lurking beneath the attractive façade, Alice can't help questioning exactly what they're doing in Victory, and why. Just how much is Alice willing to lose to expose what's really going on in this paradise? Directed by Olivia

Wilde ("Booksmart") and starring Florence Pugh (Oscar-nominated for "Little Women"), Harry Styles ("Dunkirk"), Wilde (upcoming "Babylon"), Gemma Chan ("Crazy Rich Asians"), KiKi Layne ("The Old Guard") and Chris Pine ("All the Old Knives"). 2022. — Sgt. Tiki (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Other featured stars include Thuso Mbedu, Lashana Lynch, Sheila Atim, Hero Fiennes Tiffin, John Boyega, and Adrienne Warren. Directed by Gina Prince-Bythewood. 2022. — Sgt. Tiki (IN WIDE RELEASE)

the inside track

Bob Cressey, bringing the party to Petco.

The perks of playing for the Padres Major League Baseball's season is nearing its end, but musician Bobby Cressey is still living the dream. Not only is he one of the lucky few to make a living playing professionally, but this is his thirteenth year as ballpark organist for the Padres, a job he's held since the organization decided to reinstate the position in 2010, following their move to Petco Park in 2004. "I heard through a friend that the team was thinking about bringing back a live organist," he recalls. "They hadn't had one since they moved to Petco Park. I've always been a big baseball fan, and they were going to bring the organ back as a part of Throwback Thursday. That really inspired me. I totally hustled my ass off in an effort to get the gig: I tracked down the CEO in the pre-season and gave him my card. After that, I must have called and emailed them a dozen times. I even made a video of me playing 'Take Me Out to the Ball Game' and sent it to them."

He says he was eventually invited to audition, and got the gig a couple of weeks later. He began by playing the Thursday night home games, but soon began performing at day games and Sundays as well, up to 20 or 30 games a year. "I've been a Padres fan all of my life," says Cressey. "I was born here, and even though I've lived in other places, I always kept current with what the team was doing. When I got the gig back in 2010, that was one of the ways I sold them, I said, 'Hey man, I'm a musician and I love baseball.' I didn't have to feign interest."

Cressey singles out one preferred element of the job. "During the seventh inning stretch, when I play 'Take Me Out to the Ballgame,' all eyes are on me" — or ears, anyway. "But it's really everyone doing a big singalong. Everyone's there to have fun, some of them have had a bit to drink, and at that moment, it becomes a big party for 40,000 people. There's a lot of other things I love about the job as well: there's certain romance of being at the ballpark during the day, with all of the sights and smells. Plus, I'm getting paid to play music while watching sports."

It appears that, while Cressey was watching sports, someone else was watching him — someone who sent him a surprise Instagram message last year, introducing themselves as a producer for the TV game show To Tell the Truth. (The show made its debut in 1956, ran until 1968, and has since undergone several revivals.) "I was initially kind of skeptical, because it didn't seem very official, just like some random guy's account. But when they followed up, I could tell they were legit. They sent me a couple of videos of the new version of the show. A few months later, they reached out and asked me if I was up for it. They explained how the show works. My part was relatively easy, because I was to be the one telling the truth. Then they hired two imposters to pretend to be the ballpark organists. Next thing I know, I'm up in L.A., they're putting me up in a hotel, and we're doing the shoot."

To Tell the Truth, which has run six seasons in its current incarnation with Anthony Andeson as host, had Cressey and the two imposter ballpark organists questioned by comedians George Lopez, D.L. Hughley, and Natasha Leggero. None of celebrity panelists was able to correctly identify Cressey as the actual ballpark performer. "[The imposters] had the harder job, because you never know what the panelist will ask. If someone asks me who the shortstop of my team is, that's no problem, because I know. It's much tougher for the actors — although we must have trained them pretty well."

Cressey's gig with the Padres, which goes on hiatus when the season ends in October, is only a small part of his busy life as a musician. "It's funny, because people always know me for that gig. But in reality, it's only five, maybe ten percent of what I do."In 2017, Cressey finally recorded his first album, Cali Native, featuring 20 local musicians, including Zak Najor on drums, Omar Lopez on bass, and Gilbert Castellanos on trumpet. Cressey also frequently performs around a hundred top-forty shows each year with The Mighty Untouchables, and plays organ for the San Diego Gulls minor league hockey team and the San Diego Sockers soccer club.

FLOGGING MOLLY

Flogging Molly's first new album in five years, Anthem, reunites the band with engineer Steve Albini. A video is streaming online for the album single "The Croppy Boy '98," and they released a lyric video for their single "The Road Of Mine." The band's current tour makes a hometown stop at North Island Credit Union Amphitheatre on Friday, September 23, for a bill that includes The Interrupters, Tiger Army, and The Skints.

PIERCE THE VEIL

As Pierce the Veil continues to work on their fifth studio album, they released a quarantine version of their 2012 song "Hold On Till May," as well as dropping their first all-new single in six years, "Pass The Nirvana." They'll play Soma in the Midway neighborhood on December 30 and on New Year's Eve.

SWITCHFOOT

Switchfoot's new LP, this is our Christmas album, due November 4, is an 11 track collection inspired by everyone from the Beach Boys to Black Flag. "Christmas is an emotional treasure chest for a songwriter to pull from," lead Singer Jon Foreman says. "It's a season stretched tight with contradictions: celebrating the free gifts of love and grace with an outburst of materialist capitalist consumption. An emotional roller coaster of family and friends, hopes and scars — bringing out the worst and the best in all of us."

TOM BROUSSEAU

Grand Forks. North Dakota native Tom Brosseau moved to San Diego in 2001 and became one half of the American Folk Singers, alongside Gregory Page. His new solo album is called From Blue & White Notebooks. "It has nine songs and is simply produced, a very quiet album," says Brosseau. His song "We Were Meant To Be Together" was recently covered by Watkins Family Hour on their new album, Vol. II.

DANI BELL & TIM LOWMAN

Tim Lowman, who fronts electro-blues project Low Volts, was recently married to the frontwoman of Dani Bell & the Tarantist in an outdoor ceremony during San Diego Blues Fest at Embarcadero Marina Park. Thanks to arrangements made by local promoter Tim Pyles, the ceremony was officiated by one of the festival performers, ZZ Top frontman Billy Gibbons. Low Volts appears at this weekend's Adams Avenue Street Fair.

Shoppes at Carlsbad:

Saturday, 4pm — Adam Bergoch.

Side Yard:

Wednesday, 6pm — Jemille Vialet

Ski Beach:

Saturday & Sunday, 12pm — Pacific Islander Festival

Thursday, 7:30pm — High Pulp and Montalban Quintet. $15. Friday, 7:30pm — Chase Petra and French Cassettes, $18. Saturday, 7pm — Cold Gawd and Krause. $18. Wednesday, 7:30pm — String

Butt Rock bonanza

The definition may be slippery, but you know it when you hear it

Some call it glam rock. Others, hair metal. My friend Joe calls it butt rock: as in, on August 28 at Petco Park, Joan Jett & the Blackhearts, Poison, Mötley Crüe, and Def Leppard rocked our butts off. From whence does the term "Butt rock" stem? According to the internet, it was probably spawned by someone mis-hearing a Texas radio station advertisement pitching "Rock, Nothing But Rock." That seems a likely enough origin, but how does one define the term? On that, few internet experts seem to agree.

But as I say (ha!), even without definition, San Diego was graced by butt rock royalty on that warm summer night. Whittney Blue and I were dropped off just outside the stadium by an Uber. As we got out of the car, a big black party bus pulled up next to us, and out tumbled a dozen butt rockers, dressed in a panoply of zebra- and leopard-skin prints, leather, bandanas, sunglasses, heavy makeup, and wigs (I assume), their tongues lolling from their enthusiastic faces and their hands horned up. "This is going to be a fun one," I said to Whittney. "I can already tell." I chased after their butts and asked if I could snap a picture. They obliged. I heard one of the dudes say "Come on, babe, let's make the guy's day." It was like being blasted back to the '80s in an instant. All that was missing was the cigarette smoke.

Unfortunately, by the time we arrived, we'd missed Joan Jett & the Blackhearts. She went on around five o'clock and didn't play long. A disappointment, but I don't think she gives a damn 'bout her reputation. A woman like Joan can do what she wants to do, and I respect that. Poison slithered onto the stage and played a solid set as the daylight started to wane. "We love it here in San Diego!" Bret Michaels repeated at least a half dozen times between songs, as if confirming his location. Still, the frontman brought nothing but a good time (that's a song, son), and did a great job of keeping the lively crowd geared up for Mötley Crüe and Def Leppard.

Plumes of pink smoke began to envelop the 40,000 seat park as bloody visual effects splattered the Jumbotron screens. We weren't sure which band was following Poison; our eyes strained as we looked on from our ground floor seats, double fisting $15 tallboy Pacificos in anticipation. Then the red Mötley Crüe lights lit up the stage and the crunchy opening riff of "Wild Side" hit the tracks. Mick Mars could still do it - although it did look as if there might have been some invisible rock 'n' roll angels holding him upright. He didn't move much, but his seventy-one year-old fingers crawled around that fretboard and hit the notes, just as they always have. The rest of the band was still moving okay.

Nikki Sixx stayed cool, Vince Neil kind of looked like a nice old lady, and Tommy Lee refrained from dropping trou. Overall, the set kicked ass and the fans all around me fist-pumped hard enough to fuck up a rotator cuff, especially during "Shout at the Devil."

While Mötley Crüe made their final curtain call and Def Leppard hit the stage, Whittney and I walked up to meet some friends who were sitting near the front of our section. I found it peculiar that they were dressed in full formal attire: dresses, buttoned-up tuxedos, gold necklaces, the whole drab. Apparently, they had been a part of a wedding earlier that day, and the wedding party was now at the show. It felt like I was on the set of an '80s VH1 music video. I mingled with some of the wedding guests, but noticed no bride. Did she run away to become a groupie? I guessed this would be the place to do it. Then it was brought to my attention that it had been a gay wedding: only happy grooms and rocking butts.

So there you have it. A carousel of wigs, spandex, eyeliner, cheap perfume, lipstick, jewelry, free flying tongues, sunglasses at night, black leather, red leather, sweat, lust, and gay love, all twirling together to the harmonies of electric guitars, shouts, and dudes in their late thirties demanding that young people name three songs from the band whose shirt they were wearing. With that, I do believe I've correctly discovered — and hereby donate to the internet — the correct definition of "butt rock."

You're welcome. ■

IMMORTAL BEAUTY

Lions and Vikings and Bears, oh my!

Continuing on with our pairings of NFL teams and classical music, we now focus on the NFC North and the AFC South. The NFC North features legacy teams such as the Chicago Bears and Green Bay Packers, while the AFC South is full of newish teams such as the Jacksonville Jaguars and the Houston Texans.

The Green Bay Packers are named after a meat packing company. Classical music about meat is rare. However, there is classical music about carnivals. The ancient tradition of carnival entails gorging upon meat before it is given up for the 40 days of Lent. It's the busiest time of the year for those ol' meat packers. Therefore, Le Carnaval Romain ouverture by Hector Berlioz is the music of the Packers.

The Viking culture came out of, in part, what is now Finland. Jean Sibelius was a Finnish composer whose most famous piece of music is entitled Finlandia. The ominous opening brass fanfare of Finlandia could spell doom for the opponents of the Minnesota Vikings.

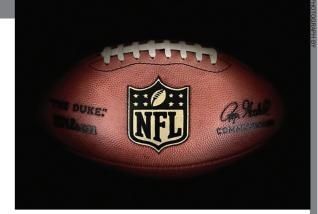

How about the Chicago

Bears, who were once called the "Monsters of the Midway"? Believe it or not, one of Joseph Haydn's symphonies was subtitled "The Bear," but it lacks the theatrical quality we are looking for with this pairing. We go, instead, to Edward Elgar's "The Wild Bears" from The Wand of Youth.

BY GARRETT HARRIS

The final NFC North team is the Detroit Lions. Otello, in Giuseppe Verdi's Otello, is known as the Lion of Venice. In the opening scene, he arrives after having won a great naval victory in the middle of a storm. Lions coach Dan Campbell is a storm of a man. Perhaps he, like Otello, will proclaim the glory of victory at the end of this season.

The first AFC South team is the Indianapolis Colts, formerly of Baltimore. The Colts have a long and storied history of great quarterbacks, from Johnny Unitas to Peyton Manning and How is the Jacksonville defense like Beethoven's Seventh? Read on!

Andrew Luck. Their music is the Light Calvary Over-ture by Franz von Suppé. About halfway through this music, everyone invariably says, "Oh, this one."

The Houston Texans represent the entire state of Texas, apparently. There is one piece of classical music that sounds as if it was written to represent Texans riding their horses, en masse, across the wide plains of the west. That music is the finale movement of Alexander Borodin's Symphony No. 2.

The music for the Jacksonville Jaguars is going to be a bit of a stretch. Jacksonville is named after Andrew Jackson, Andrew Jackson was a hero of the War of 1812. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 premiered in 1812. lacksonville was once called Sack-sonville based on the Jaguar's defense applying pressure to opposing quarterbacks. No piece of music applies constant pressure like the second movement of Beethoven's Seventh. Et Hutchins Consort: Any Way You Slice It Music both old and new reimagined for the Hutchins Consort instruments, featuring mandolin and accordion continuo. The Hutchins Consort plays on the eight scaled violins of the violin octet designed and built by famed luthier Dr. Carleen Hutchins. The instruments are the first successful attempt to create an acoustically balanced set of instruments that can sound truly like violins across the entire range of written music. With instruments ranging from the tiny treble violin, tuned one octave above the standard violin, to the gigantic large bass violin, tuned one octave lower than a 'cello, the Hutchins Consort produces an astonishing palette of sounds. Friday, September 23, 7pm; $20-$35. St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Encinitas, 890 Balour Drive.

SO NEWEST SIDE EFFECT OF LONG COVID: Suicide! Rr is it a side effect of the long term isolation? The long exposure to our selves, unfiltered by others in our space? Hang on! Stick around! It's still one hell of a ride!

THE DRIVEWAY SOCIETY suggests that you should check your oil and fluid levels on your car once a month. It's a good practice and is helpful for your automobile efficiency.

DEAR FATE, Universe, God/ ESS, et, all! Thank you! My son was in a horrible motorcycle accident, broken- jaw (3 places) left wrist and ankle, reconstruction! Pelvis! 5 places! And severed bladder!! But, he will walk, no spine injury or head! I know My mama, was his Guardian Angel that day!

IF I HAD THREE WISHES, it would be for stability, to be slender again, and to be a famous writer and write fiction books.

LOOK ALL I'M TRYING TO DO IS love and be nice and help. And look what it becomes. Do I ever ask for anything. I'm sorry if I'm ugly I've lived for 300 yrs. But my heart is the very best. So why does everybody make it a crime if u love and care? That's making me slowly become a really bad feeling thing even I don't want. I'm not a norm I'm a free outlaw spirit excuse me were different better for the miz fits love where theres none etc. Mj ATTENTION CITIZENS, PATRI-OTS and conservatives, I will drive your vehicle from sea to shining sea. Any destination in the county, per diem & expenses. Spotless record, Lester (619) 458-1012.

IF YOU KNOW SOMEONE specifically close supposedly and they see you, why wouldn't they say Hi.?

KNOCK YOURSELF OUT CHAMP! Not a problem, keep your friends, unnecessary to introduce. Point taken, enemy.

M, our canoe story was a roller! Barely healing from the stitches, bonafide hilarious. Cuzano Rojo we toast? Did it fly over? I caught it. Not a lame duck!! What's f-u between us, stems from your childhood, we do make a good team, Player. M

MY DARLING FRANK I have been taking care of my cats and I am still waiting for the kids to come back home. Join me in the kitchen and we can dance to Harvest Moon

WE LOVE YOU MIKE WOODS Didn't want you to go without letting you know we will miss you. See u on the other side my friend Karen. (619) 626-7964 / grrrimalion69@gmail.com

Hurricane Kay, Albacore on the Intrepid

Dock Totals 9/4 - 9/17: 8736 anglers aboard 328 half-day to 3-day trips out of San Diego landings over the past two weeks caught 69 barracuda, 3663 bluefin tuna (to 242 pounds), 1 blue marlin (released), 3 bocaccio, 362 bonito, 2,170 calico bass, 16,485 dorado, 20 gray smoothhound shark, 5 halibut, 4 lingcod, 1151 rockfish, 1 mako shark, 4 octopus, 291 sand bass, 4 sanddab, 241 sculpin, 200 sheephead, 4 skipiack tuna. 1 triggerfish. 137 whitefish. 26 white seabass (released), 2857 yellowfin tuna, and 551 yellowtail.

Saltwater: Hurricane Kay rolled northward along Baja Sur as a Category 1 storm, making landfall at Bahia Asunción, downgrading to a tropical storm then a depression from there. Her effects were varied and far-flung, including high winds and rain in the San Diego County mountains and desert. Aside from damage to roads and structures on both sides of the peninsula north and into the U.S. (including the new seawall at Bahia Asunción), it seems Kay affected fishing as well.

Yellowtail seemed to fall off in the counts drastically, while the dorado bite continued in force. Bluefin were caught in strong numbers just before the storm and have ebbed a bit since. There is much more debris floating about in the offshore currents, which should provide more paddy stops and continued success on dorado for the near future, though how long the bluefin continue to bite is anybody's guess, as they are always out there somewhere.

Most of the overnight-plus boats cancelled their planned outings and stayed at the dock waiting for the storm to pass. But not the scheduled Intrepid eight-day trip. They instead chose to fish the northern California coast for a species that used to be the meat of the catch in San Diego, and arguably the one species, if there is any one species responsible, for building the world's largest live-bait sportfishing fleet here in America's finest city: Albacore, Albacore tuna have shifted their migratory pattern northward over the past two decades, especially since the warming trend has increased annually since 2013-2014, and now their near-shore activity is centered near the Oregon/Washington border. Whether it's because they are feeding too deep when close to San Diego or because their migrational pattern completely avoids our warmer waters is debated, but either way, every season over the past decade, someone predicts a hot albacore bite within 50 miles of Point Loma and it hasn't happened.

Running on intel, the Intrepid found albacore willing to bite as far south as off of Fort Bragg, though not in the numbers hoped for. As the effects of Kay settled, the Intrepid headed back south after getting some good central coast reds along with the albacore and big eye tuna. They finished up their trip catching bluefin and dorado, and came in with quite a mix, even for an eight-day trip. Many applauded the decision to run north rather than postpone the trip, and the hunch turned out great.

As Captain Bill Cavanaugh put it, "Our weather window was perfect, and I was able to gather enough info for us to get up to Fort Bragg and try our luck. We ended our day with 36 albacore that were mostly 18 to 25 pounds. We made the move with the possibility of having a big day on albacore that unfortunately did not happen. We did, however, have an experience that none of us will ever forget, and everyone is stoked that we gave it a try. So, with a hurricane in our way, we went north about the same distance as it would be going south and fishing

the Ridge."

Other effects in the fishery of Kay's run north included a rare whale shark sighting in U.S. waters, an even more rare megamouth shark sighting, and a locally caught potential world record moray eel by a shore angler in the harbor during the storm. San Diegan Justin Kayasone hooked and landed a 14.44pound, 52-inch-long moray eel, which, when officially credited, will better the old record of 10.8 pounds by nearly 4 pounds. The eel was weighed on a certified IGFA scale, so it is just a matter of the paperwork

Moray eels are listed as 'Least Concern' on the IUCN Red List and are found throughout the world's oceans. As ambush predators, they spend most of their time in rock or coral reefs and caves. They can be extremely aggressive when handled and boast a double row of rear slanted razor-sharp teeth that make escape difficult for prev. They are often commercially fished around the world and used in many dishes. Many ditties are made up about them, given the pronunciation of 'a moray', such as, "if you reach into a hole, and something bites but won't let go, that's a moray."

Freshwater: There is a fishing derby for youngsters from ages 3-15 at Lake Cuyamaca this Saturday, September 24. The 22nd Annual O.P. Ball "Fishin' in the Pines" Kid's Trout Tournament is free to enter, with many giveaways and raffles for contestants and families. And no, it is not a dance; the O.P. stands for Orville P Ball, who introduced the Florida strain largemouth bass to the west coast. His contribution to San Diego County bass fishing produced impressive results; 11 of the world's top 25 largemouth bass have come from San Diego County lakes! Other prizes include some gear from Randy Jones and a raffle for a boat. The first 400 kids to enter will receive a free rod and reel. Register in person day of event beginning at 5:30 Saturday morning and good luck to all!

They're out there, so go get 'em!

Capital of Craft pulls into Port

"I approached Pizza Port this year to host the collaboration brew because they met the requirements for the size of the batch (90 bbls), packaging needs, and distribution," says San Diego Brewers Guild Executive Director Paige McWey Acers regarding the decision to invite Pizza Port to host the brewing of this year's Capital of Craft IPA. "They also hadn't participated in it since the original collab brew in 2017." The beer's release is one of the most anticipated events of the annual San Diego Beer Week, which this year takes place November 4th through the 14th

Along with Pizza Port, seven other breweries are participating in the collaboration: BattleMage Brewing, Culver Beer, Fall Brewing, Mcilhenney Brewing, Mujeres Brew House, My Yard Live, and TapRoom Beer. The seven collaborators were nominated by the breweries that collaborated on last year's Capital of Craft, and as the brewers change year to year, so does the IPA. "The 2022 Beer Week specialty beer will be a crisp, tropical fruit-forward hoppy ale/lager hybrid," explains Sean Farrell, Pizza Port Director of Brewing. "For the malt, we're going with Hana barley, which is a Czech heirloom variety that should give an authentic, complex Pilsner malt flavor. For hops, it's El Dorado, Sitiva, Moutere, and Nectaron, which will give nice tropical fruit citrus notes. We're also going to be fermenting this one a little cooler and blending in lager yeast for a really clean flavor that will showcase those malts and hops better."

The collaboration is already underway, and the 2022 Capital of Craft IPA is set to be released in conjunction with Beer Week, which is, for the first time, holding this year's Guild Fest kickoff event at Surf Sports Park in Del Mar. Tom Kiely, Thorn General Manager and Brewers Guild member, explains the move, "We had a few venue types in mind and explored a variety

Capital of Craft IPA: brewed by some of San Diego's best of options, including Liberty Station, museums at Balboa Park, and Broadway Pier. We were also discussing having something centrally located, so North County residents could more easily access the event, and Paige remembered the Polo Fields from a small beer competition a few years back."

Capital of Craft won't be the only new brew on hand at the event. Continues Kiely, "We are launching the San Diego Estate Beer Project, which is an attempt to tighten the relationship between San Diego brewers and San Diego farmers by creating new styles of beer using ingredients which can be grown in San Diego County. We have also partnered with QUAFF in a homebrew competition, the winners of which will partner with professional San Diego breweries. And those beers will be featured at the festival."

As usual, the November 14th closing event of Beer Week is slated for The Lodge at Torrey Pines, where an upscale beer garden will feature 28 breweries and 14 chefs. The breweries participating in the beer garden are chosen by lottery and will be announced at a later date.

They Buried the Lead

 Skydiver Gary Connery, 53, was sentenced in Oxford Crown Court in England on Aug. 16, the BBC reported, for grievous bodily harm after he threw his girlfriend, Tanya Brass, down a staircase. The assault, which shattered Brass' shoulder, took place in October 2020. The now-infamous abuser previously achieved his 15 minutes of fame when he served as Queen Elizabeth II's stunt double in the opening ceremony of the 2012 Olympic Games, when he and "James Bond" (another stunt double) leapt out of a helicopter and parachuted into the Olympic stadium. After the stunt, Connery told the BBC it had been "an amazing experience." Perhaps he can relive it during his 18 months in prison.

Precocious

- Aug. 12 started as a pretty typical day for 1 1/2-year-old toddler Ethan and his mom, Brittany Moore, of Senoia, Georgia. They were playing with bubbles in the backyard of their home when Ethan chased one to the fence and noticed something in the woods beyond, ABC4 News reported. When his mom asked him what he saw, he said, "Feet." Ethan had discovered 82-year-old Nina Lipscomb, who had been missing for four days. Lipscomb was alive but disoriented; her daughter said she had wandered away from a nearby home where she was visiting family. "Her sister lived here in this house, but she passed away in March," Karen Lipscomb said. The Lipscombs and the Moores got together to celebrate the little boy who probably saved Nina's life. "It took a child ... that was being worked by God," Brittany said.

Florida

 James Hunt, 41, and his girlfriend got into it at a Clearwater, Florida, Burger King on Aug. 13, because "the victim was not eating her food," The Smoking Gun reported. When the 53-year-old woman left the restaurant, Hunt followed her and launched his cheeseburger at the back of her head, allegedly causing her to fall over a curb onto the ground and hit her chin and lip. How did cops know? There was blood on her shirt and shorts and cheese in her hair. Hunt admitted hitting her with the cheeseburger but didn't think it caused her to fall down. Nonetheless, he was charged with felony domestic battery and held on $15,000 bond.

Sweet Revenge

- A 31-year-old man in Seoul, South Korea, has been ordered to pay his ex-girlfriend $1,150 after an argument ended with him urinating into her Louis Vuitton handbag, Oddity Central reported. The incident took place in October as the couple argued about her spending habits; the spiteful boyfriend retrieved the bag, unbuttoned his pants and let loose into the bag as the woman looked on. He later tried to cover up the evidence by pouring liquid deodorant into the bag, but DNA tests confirmed the presence of urine and tied it to him, and he confessed.

- Miller High Life has a new product introduction: Ice Cream Dive Bar, United Press International reported. The collaboration with Tipsy Scoop, maker of alcohol-infused ice cream, comprises all your favorite flavors from a dive bar: beer, peanuts, tobacco smoke, caramel and dark chocolate. The bars contain up to 5% alcohol, which you may need after you see the price: $36 for a six-pack.

Awesome!

- News of the Weird generally eschews world record stories, but this one seems happily adventurous. Peter McConville and Pavel "Pasha" Krechetov of Austin, Texas, and Abdullahi Salah, of Minneapolis, broke a world record by traveling to all 50 United States in five days, 13 hours and 10 minutes, starting on May 13. They started in Vermont, KXAN-TV reported, and finished the continental part in Washington, then flew to Alaska and finally Hawaii, having spent about $12,000 and 120 hours in a rental car. McConville said the Grand Canvon in Arizona was his most memorable moment of the trip: "I can't even describe what that experience was, not only because we were so tired, but we were seeing so much at once," he said. The group's record is listed by All Fifty States Club, as Guinness discontinued listing speed records

Update

Remember the fatal lightning strikes in Washington, D.C., on Aug. 6? Those shocking events were responsible for the deaths of three people, WUSA-TV reported. Amber Escudero-Kontostathis, 28, of Newbury Park, California, was with the group huddling under trees during the storm, and she was the lone survivor. Escudero-Kontostathis suffered burns down the left side of her body and initially couldn't walk, but she's now using a walker and looking forward to getting back to her job. What saved her? She and her mother, Julie Escudero, think the thick rubber soles on her Dr. Martens boots helped out. But she also credits the first responders and traveling nurses who happened to be in the park for their quick action. "The trauma doctor ... said she's an absolute miracle," Julie said.

Briaht Idea

- Inmate Jazmyne Levesque, 23, was "bored" in the Pinellas County (Florida) jail on July 28, The Smoking Gun reported. So as she was being escorted by a female corrections officer, she punched the officer in the face. Levesque said she "had nothing else to do and was already in a couple of fights earlier in the day." She was in jail for punching a municipal bus driver earlier in July; at the time of that arrest, Levesque was free on bond in a felony grand theft case. Added to her rap sheet: one felony count of battery on a law enforcement officer.

its surroundings — argued at a January 26 trustees meeting that stadium liquor advertising and promotional rights were worth "hundreds of thousands of dollars." Other exemptions have been previously carved out of the ban, but in the view of many critics, SDSU's ongoing drinking crisis will be further exacerbated by allowing more booze promotion at the school's taxpayer-owned campus facilities.

Bill sponsor Hueso has his own history with alcoholrelated infractions. The San Diego Democrat incurred a DUI after attending a boisterous August 21, 2014 Latino Caucus party held at the state Capitol, when he was pulled over by the California Highway Patrol and booked with a blood alcohol content of .08 or higher at 3:27 am. He subsequently entered a no contest plea to a charge of "wet reckless," and got three years probation, an $1100 fine, and a six-week reckless driving program. Per Hueso's SDSU legislation: "In order to aid in the economic viability of the new stadium and to ensure the fair and efficient application of the alcoholic beverage control licensing laws with respect to eligible facilities on the campus of San Diego State University, it is necessary that this act take immediate effect."
