This article was sooo long! Bottom line new owners bought it and have other plans for the property. When you allow nudity it's going to limit your business to only naturalists. They decided to go another route. If you don't like it go find a place that allows nudity. Not a lot of places to go?? Well, there's not a lot of people with that same view on it. Quit making everyone's life miserable because you want to be naked and not everyone agrees with that plan for their business that's they spent their own money on. Go buy your own property and do

Unsmart SDSU students march in support of Israel in wake of Hamas attack
SD on the QT, Oct. 20, 2023
...And as usual, no American flags to be seen, even though we're the ones going broke for their BS wars. Neoconservatism (specifically the school of Project for the New American Century) is to blame, as it is the foreign influence compelling our government to put the interests of others over its own citizens. Their sudden cultural pivot from Ukraine/progressivism to Zionism/conservatism is laughably clumsy -- too much chutzpah, too little self-awareness -- and common Americans are not buying it.

First they were patronizing minorities with Black Captain America and female Thor, now they're patronizing White people by featuring them again in military recruiting ads -- and neither are dumb enough to fall for the BS.
"Sorry about the last 6 years, White trash, now forget about the ideological purges and gross violations of the Nuremberg code we perpetrated during COVID and go die for the same SOB's who have spent the last 3 decades fomenting race riots for their benefit, opening your borders, dismantling your country and looting your treasury because Iran did 9/11!"

LINDA VISTA

Weed freed on appeal Batting cage can't restrain dispensary development

As the city considers allowing more than 38 cannabis outlets, a fight is on for a coveted spot in Linda Vista, a low-income neighborhood, which is just where officials want to see the numbers grow. On October 12, San Diego's city planning commission heard an appeal of a permit that would, if approved, be the last dispensary allowed to open in Linda Vista.

"This project moved forward because the applicant addressed all staff review issues and obtained an environmental determination."

Current city code limits cannabis outlets to four per council district within commercial and industrial zones. There are currently three approved in council district 7, and the project at 5325 Grant Street — a 3000-square-foot space in an existing building half a block from Sherman and several blocks north of Friars Road — would be the fourth and final dispensary. Citywide, it would be the 35th since the city's recreational cannabis regulations were first adopted in 2017. By this point, says a city report, "It is extremely difficult to find locations for the opportunities that remain."

Still in an early phase, the current proposal to nearly double the allowed number of outlets would help enable people who were arrested during the war on drugs to break into the city's highly regulated market. An Equity Assessment recommends, among other things, reducing zoning restrictions.

But not everyone is eager to welcome the new business. The July 12, 2023 decision to approve a conditional use permit for the Grant Street project was appealed by Willie Senn, owner of the Urbn Leaf dispensaries in Bay Park and other locations, and Peter Ishak, who is also an applicant for District 7. Senn argued, "the main concern is the BrickYard Batting Cages located less than 20 feet as the crow flies from the prospective cannabis retailer."

One of the city's dispensary location rules — which the new proposal to allow more outlets would relax — is that there must be a 1000-foot buffer from places with minor-oriented uses such as parks and schools. Because of that separation requirement, Senn believes BrickYard needs to be considered, despite its never having applied for a building permit. "The city has chosen to turn a blind eye to approve this cannabis outlet, literally because the applicant addressed all staff review issues and obtained an environmental determination." They noted that tough zoning and separation requirements for cannabis outlets "have resulted in very few locations" that meet all location criteria. "This location does meet all criteria."

The appeal steps up...swing! And a miss! A batting cage is clearly not a kids' space!

The Linda Vista Planning Group in May voted 8-0-1 with one abstention to recommend approval of the project with no conditions.

Criminals and activity Athletic assaults on the rise

Exercise is good for you — except, of course, when it provides the occasion for getting assaulted. Recently, multiple locals have been attacked while toning their muscles; one was tragically murdered. On June 19, a woman named Chi Cao was exercising at the Central Avenue Mini Park in City Heights when Silveinusi Hamala allegedly attacked and stabbed her, according to police. Cao died shortly after the random attack. In the wake of this and other assaults, more San Diegans who work out outdoors are carrying mace or a whistle, or walking or jogging in groups in order to protect one another.

On October 7, dozens of women met up at Balboa Park with Monica Figueroa, founder of @sandiegogirlswhowalk, for just such a group trek. On one of Figueroa's previous podcasts, she said, "So if you're a girl in San Diego and you think it should be our right to walk in a group because there is safety in numbers, and you feel safer walking with other women because men are creepy and sexually harass you when you're walking alone, then come join our walk on Sunday." Figueroa has been organizing these walks in San Diego since before July, and their numbers keep growing — despite alleged threats from the city and park rangers to bust and fine the unlicensed gatherings. The group now has almost 30,000 followers on Instagram, partly due to the a growing list of assaults on people exercising outdoors.

According to the El Cajon Police Depart-

David O'Brien of the San Diego Police Department reportedly said that a suspect shoved the jogger to the ground and stabbed him in the back of his neck, throat, and wrist. The veteran was hospitalized and survived. There have been no updates on whether the Farmer — "who is a registered sex offender and has a lengthy arrest history including theft, vandalism, domestic violence, and sex with a minor — ran after the elderly man until he realized the police had been called, and then he ran away." Farmer was arrested shortly afterward.

Heath Freeman's bull riders

Alden Global Capital, the vulture investing outfit that in July took control of the San Diego Union-Tribune from Los Angeles biotech mogul and LA Times owner Patrick Soon-Shiong, is the target of a new documentary called Stripped for Parts: American Journalism On the Brink. A week ago, the 26th United Nations Association Film Festival in Palo Alto gave the film its Grand Jury Best Documentary award. "The business model of newspapers — still the largest source of news by far, even in this digital age — is faltering, due to many things, including the loss of advertising to Facebook and Google, the changing way that people seek out news, and other challenges presented by the digital age. But, unknown to many, capitalist greed is also to blame. This is the heart of our story," says the documentary's website. "When Alden Global Capital and its founders, Randall Smith and Heath Freeman, started gobbling up newspapers in 2011, their profiteering model and intentions were largely unknown, even to the journalists who worked at their newspapers. Now, largely due to the reporting and events covered in our documentary, Alden is widely perceived, and labeled, as 'the destroyer of newspapers.' Exposure by journalists, activism by their union The NewsGuild, and growing public opposition have foiled Alden Global's attempts at times. But some takeover attempts succeed, as happened last year with The Tribune Company and its flagship The Chicago Tribune. Who will win these battles: Wall Street 'vulture capitalists' who profit from newspapers' destruction, or those concerned with the health of their communities and the people's right to know?"

Amid all the fuss, Alden honcho Freeman has diversified his investment portfolio, snapping up the Oklahoma Freedom, a Professional Bull Riders team, according to PBR.com. The bull riding league is owned by a sports conglomerate known as Endeavor. "The opportunity to help continue building this amazing league that has such significant cultural meaning is very exciting, and I look forward to supporting the efforts of PBR, Endeavor, and the riders whose talents make this such a popular new league with so much potential," the usually taciturn Freeman said in a statement cited by PBR.com. Another Freeman venture, EHP Hospitality Group, "manages eateries that include Si Si Restaurant, and Sunset Harbor, and the Italian-style Buongiorno Bakery — all situated on nine waterfront acres at EHP Resort & Marina

East Hampton, the Latin American-inspired restaurant Crash Cantina in Hampton Bays," per Behind the Hedges Magazine. By coincidence or not, the Los Angeles Daily News, one of the papers owned by Freeman's Alden Global Capital, castigated bull riding critics in a February 16, 2022, opinion piece. "The fact is, the extraordinary bucking bulls in PBR get great care throughout a long and pampered life as valuable, world-class animal athletes in a sport enjoyed in hundreds of millions of homes across the globe," wrote Sean Gleason. CEO and Commissioner of Professional Bull Riders. "Counter to other disinformation circulating, rowels on the riders' spurs are dull and do not harm the animal, whose skin is seven times thicker than a human's," added Gleason. "And the claim that these animals are frequently dying? Bull injuries or fatalities are rare relative to the number of times they perform."

Landing pads Some prominent ex-U-T reporters, along with a top business staffer, who left the paper during Alden Global Capital's mass buyout earlier this year have landed elsewhere. They include Dana Littlefield, once a heralded U-T public safety editor who's ended up at LAList and its parent, LA-area public radio station KPCC, as a senior editor, per her X account; and ex-U-T tech writer Mike Freeman, who has just become a communications specialist for Global Strategy/International Affairs at San Diego State University, according to his LinkedIn profile. Longtime U-T Vice President for Advertising Paul Ingegneri, also out after the Alden takeover, has taken a job as general manager of the Daily Journal, a Los Angeles and San Francisco newspaper for lawyers, per LinkedIn. Disclosure records show the Daily Journal Corporation is partly owned by Charles Munger, a longtime business associate of legendary billionaire Warren Buffett.

McGrory's millions

Ex-San Diego city manager Jack McGrory — who made millions working for Padres owner John Moores and Sol Price after he left city hall, where he aided their projects, then later was named by Democratic Governor Jerry Brown as a trustee of the California University System and helped mastermind SDSU's takeover of the former Qualcomm Stadium site — gave $5440 on October 10 to the Toni Atkins for Lt. Governor 2026 committee. McGrory is currently married to Una Davis, widow of Las Vegas billionaire Kirk

Isn't it funny how they are all about "f the man" and all that, but always attack working-class neighborhoods? They never go after places like La Jolla or Rancho Santa Fe. The reason, of course, is that they wouldn't want to attack their wealthy Bolshevik donors and F-B-I handlers or else their "donations" they use to buy their Funko-pops and Fentanyl might dry up. UNREAL ESTATE

by Dave Rice

Twenty-ish years ago, my weekends often involved meeting a handful of friends at my Ocean Beach apartment before a leisurely bike ride along Sunset Cliffs. We'd head as far south as we could, stash our bikes (which were, remarkably, never stolen) somewhere past the parking lot off Ladera, and scramble down the cliffs to walk as far as the tide would allow along the beaches below Point Loma Nazarene University. During the leisurely two-mile pedal back into town, my gaze would alternate between the sea to my left and the glorious houses, both new and old, perched just above road level to take advantage of the unobstructed views (well, except by the hundreds of people who flock to the cliff-edge trails) over the Pacific.

I wouldn't have seen this week's entry, Chateau Beau Soleil, on any of these rides, however, as the 7500-square-foot home that the Zillow agent remarks describe as an “unparalleled oceanfront masterpiece” wasn't built until 2014. When I saw its listing pop up — the opening aerial photo showing not just the house, but the cliffs themselves, populated by the familiar joggers, strollers, and sightseers ignoring the signs to stay away from the unstable edges of the bluff — I was struck by a twinge of nostalgia. Let's have a look at the place, shall we?

The first on-property photo on our tour highlights the “exquisite infinity pool and spa” looking west. Given the fact that you wouldn't want to spoil the view with a fence, the yard doesn't exactly offer a ton of privacy, but unless a house nerd like me happens by, I'm pretty sure that most pedestrians are more interested in watching the breaking waves across the street. More views of the backyard show extensive stonework on the patio, and liberal use of those “vanishing glass doors that effortlessly blur the line between indoor and outdoor living.”

An oversized arched door leads us into a rather austere entry. There are a couple of white chairs here, but I'm not sure why anyone would choose to sit in a room with absolutely nothing to look at except for the front door. Let's assume it gets better moving on. There's a room under the stairs that looks like a bar or a kitchenette: we've got a sink, icemaker, wine fridge, and some cabinet space. Why is this room here? Who wants to leave the party outside to go into this little box for a glass of wine?

Our next stop is the “floating teak spiral staircase encircling a glass elevator” that make stops at each of the home's four levels. We've seen private elevators before, but this round one (and the staircase surrounding it) looks a bit more impressive than the standard enclosed box tucked somewhere out of the way. An elevator as a design element rather than simply a functional conveyance is new to me, even after looking at hundreds of fancy homes like this. Nicely done.

An upper-level living room offers a stone fireplace and another one of those retractable glass walls leading to a deck outside; next to it, there's a dining room with seating for 12. Also, a second fireplace, this one a fake gas (or electric?) wall insert. The requisite “gourmet chef-inspired kitchen equipped with top-of-the-line appliances” is featured, as usual, though the layout of this one is a little odd, with the range on one island, the sink on another, and a handful of other spaces that I can't quite figure out from the listing photos. It would take some getting used to, but I think I could grow to like cooking here.

The primary suite has yet another fireplace and more of those giant glass doors, along with “a dressing chamber, a vanity room, and a stone-encased soaking tub with a messpace, I thought maybe the windows would be a bit bigger.

The rest of the photos take us on a speed run of typical luxury features, including a private theater that looks comfortable (if a bit generic), a home gym where an egg-shaped sofa features as prominently as the few pieces of cardio equipment on display, and another bath and pair of patios we missed previously. There's also “an expansive subterranean garage spanning 3000 square feet, designed to provide a secure sanctuary for up to six of your cherished vehicles.” Given that we're in Sunset Cliffs, I suppose this makes sense, but underground garages have been tried in other parts of OB with considerably less success.

Something new: an elevator as a design element.

merizing ocean backdrop.” From there, the tour continues with a peek into the home's other four bedrooms and a few of its eight baths, stopping at the “executive office” before arriving at “the crowning glory of the home, referred to as the ‘turret’ by the architect,” which “grants a 360-degree panoramic view that is nothing short of breathtaking.” It seems nice enough up here, and I enjoy the exposed-beam wood ceilings, but after seeing the lower levels and hearing the pitch for this an extraordinary opportunity that is sure to captivate the admiration of anyone who lays eyes upon it,” the listing concludes. Public records list a Miramontes and Thompson trust as the current owners, with the last sale having occurred in 2011 for $1.7 million — three years before the current home was reportedly built. It was first offered for sale earlier this year with an asking price of $9.5 million, in early October the price was reduced to $8,999,000, where it remains to date. ■

Guru Rattana: apostle of the “amazing technology” that is kundalini yoga.

One from the heart

“My job is to bring this unity of consciousness through a woman who has practiced for over 50 years daily, and how I have experienced my gradual awakening.” The woman Guru Rattana (it means “jewel”) is talking about is herself, of course. She and I have walked down to the beach together this evening and gotten to chatting.

Talk of “awakening” is foreign territory for me, if I am honest. I have long considered myself a kind of shallow-end-of-the-pool guy. But I’m interested now, because it turns out Guru Rattana is famous worldwide in kundalini yoga circles. She has been a student of meditation and teaching and has been writing books about what she calls “this amazing technology” — kundalini — for 40 years. Titles like The Destiny of Women is the Destiny of the World and Transitions to a Heart-Centered World leap out at you from her website.

And she’s no lightweight philosopher. She got her masters at Johns Hopkins and her PhD at the University of Geneva — in environmental science. Indeed, she says she came into this spiritual phase later, amid concern that too much thinking and not enough feeling was going into the environmental discussions of our times. “When I was studying, people were so polarized that they couldn’t think straight,” she recalls. “If you didn’t go for the American definition of democracy, then you would be presumed to be going for communism. I realized that this type of discussion is not the answer. We can’t find an answer to world peace or to environmental sustainability through emotionality and dogmatism. It requires consciousness. So then I devoted my life to trying to help people wake up, to be conscious and to live from their heart.”

She says she was given the honorific “Guru,” by her spiritual teacher in Boston, where she was studying at MIT. She wears a turban because it gives her a feeling of serenity and concentration. But it’s not an ancient tradition: the only women who do wear turbans are Americans, she says. And “guru” does not replace “scholar.” “I’m still very much an academic. I’ve written twelve books that are used every day by students around the world, and other books as well. But it was my own spiritual practice that woke me up to the idea that there’s more. That human beings are extraordinary! That we can actually come up with something better, if we go more into our hearts, and if we care more about people, and basically, if women, and feelings and emotions, and earth, and the feminine are honored, instead of denigrated and exploited. Actions so far have been for centuries dominated by the mind, the patriarchy, and the male. Men have been in charge, basically. We need women’s input, but from women who are self-empowered, and know what it’s like to be a woman, and not a woman who thinks, ‘I just have to act like a man and then I’ll be powerful.’ That’s not how it happens.”

We get up from the concrete bench we’ve been sitting on, one that looks out over the Pacific. The sun is still out there, but all its power is gone. The spin of the earth has distanced and gentled it. I wonder if the time of men’s unquestioned dominance is also cycling out.

We head back to the sidewalk. “After you,” I say.

From the road to the sit-down

It’s a sunny morning. Scot Walker and I are sipping coffee. He’s got one of those humor-ready faces that a pretty good life on the road gives you. He’s a roadie. And it’s been a long and joyful road. “When I was just getting out of high school, my aunt, Roberta Kent, was Barry Manilow’s opening act, in Vegas. She was a stand-up comedian. So when I got out of high school, [she and my parents] said, ‘Do you want to go to college? Or do you want to go on the road with Barry Manilow, wear satin jackets, stay in nice hotels, meet girls who are going to sleep in the hallway?’ It took 30 seconds to decide.”

Walker spent years on the road, until he met a lady who ran a cue-card company. “Remember cue cards? I went to work for them. They owned the cue card rights to all the game shows, and for five years, I became Wheel of Fortune’s cue card person — writing out and holding up prompts seconds to show it. I can give you three looks, two at the knock-down, and one reaction shot. Baseball: when you’re watching, and you see a replay, a home run usually consists of three things. A ‘swing,’ a ‘shag’ — which is the ball soaring away, don’t even ask — “and a ‘hero.’ So, go to Camera Two, look for the swing, go to Camera Four, look for the shag, and either Camera Five or One for the hero shot, the batter coming around the bases. And by the way, I cover Petco Park. I love it. Everybody for the talent. I also did Family Feud, Scrabble with Chuck Woolery, and then a couple of years on the actual Academy Awards. I covered boxing, pro wrestling, Major League Baseball. Do you remember Jerry Lewis’s telethon? I was Jerry Lewis’s cue card guy. I did seven telethons with him. I was blessed to work with Sammy Davis, George Burns, even Milton Berle at one point. But it wasn’t all plain sailing. During one of Jerry’s telethons, I have the cards ready for 40 minutes of live coverage. Jerry’s there waiting for me on the other side of the stage. Then I loves Petco Park.”

Three decades on, he’s still traveling the world. “But let’s just say I call myself more of a teacher at this point. Basic things, like I know that when the guy’s sitting in the chair, make him sit on his tail, so it looks like there’s no wrinkles in his clothes. Put make-up on the talent’s hands, because when his face is made up, and you see these fleshy hands, not good.”

And for the talent, the advice never changes. “Never chew gum on television. Never eat, unless you’re on Chopped [the cooking TV hear ‘On in 5, 4...’ Aargh! I go racing across the stage, and trip. Spill the cards everywhere! We’re now on, live. Jerry chases me around the camera. ‘So Scot, what should I do next?’ Millions saw that.”

Walker has since evolved into a live event editor, traveling all over the world, from Major League Baseball to the Olympics to the Kentucky Derby. “I may have as many as eight cameras at one time. Like boxing: if somebody’s going to get knocked out, I have ten game show]. Take the Coke can off the table. Take the water off the table. Spills! Straighten your tie. Your microphone should be over your shoulder. But the most-asked question I get is, ‘Am I doing okay?’ Like Ryan Seacrest, who’s going to take over Wheel of Fortune. When he was starting out, I was his cue-card guy. It was the Radio Music Awards. I would follow him around, and we’d go do little hits, chats with the crowd. And after each chat, he’d say, ‘Scot, how was that? Was it funny?’” ■

BIG FISH SMALL BOAT

Friends Ross Zoerhoff and Lery Espinoza in Bahia Asuncion. Ross, here gifting Lery a nice yellowtail, was always one to share the wealth. He fished his SOT kayak well into his seventies.

On a kayak, you get towed around like a bobber on the ocean

In 2005, my brother Russ and I launched a couple of kayaks into the Sea of Cortez and paddled out to inter our father's ashes off Punta Willard in Bahia de San Luis Gonzaga. After our sunrise ceremony, we paddled around the point and island, fishing along the way. We caught some nice cabrillas, and the sierra mackerel were thick. About halfway along our circuit around the island and through the spit back to our camp at Papa Fernandez, a 30-foot juvenile whale shark decided my kayak would make a great play toy. Thanks to its attentions, I had some pretty good rides sideways, and at one point, I found myself gently scratching the "harmless" giant with my paddle as it rested its flat head on the side of the kayak, its chin reaching from my hip to my toe. I was more worried about getting dumped and losing a lot of gear than anything else, but I still had to try to look calm. That thing was big.

I've been kayak fishing for more than 30 years, and I've seen some things. I've had an orca cow and calf swim under me off Ensenada de Los Muertos, the cow rolling over and seeming to make eye contact as she passed. I've had free-leaping one-ton manta rays drive me back into the bay of Yelapa, where I was less likely to wind up a pancake. And I've often shared my fishing grounds along the Pacific side of Baja with feeding whales. Even in La Jolla, I have been as near as a couple yards from massive grays. But these things do not deter me. These things, together with the prospect of catching big fish, keep me coming back.

Inland beginnings

My first adventures in kayak fishing took place in early-'90s Colorado. I was building a garage on a property in Penrose, and spotted an old white and red fiberglass sit-in tandem kayak leaning against the back of a barn. The property owners were happy to toss it in on the deal, along with a paddle and a trolling motor with a bracket that mounted behind the rear cockpit. And if they were happy, I was happier, even if I never did install that motor.

The next day, I paddled out on the Arkansas River just above Pueblo Reservoir and drifted lazily, fishing my way into the breaks and eventually, the lake. Floating silently through nature while catching a good mix of white bass, smallmouth bass, channel catfish, and a couple of trout was soul-stirring. For a few minutes, a large beaver swam within 20 feet of me before wrapping up its brief surveillance by slapping its tail so hard I thought a shotgun had gone off. I lurched in surprise. The beaver dove underwater, swam away, and popped up by a beaver dam alongside an inlet stream.

I fished out of that kayak in the river and a couple of local high-country lakes until I returned to San Diego in 1997, leaving it behind. But I soon found I was hooked — pardon the pun. I started seeing articles about fishing from kayaks in magazines, and even found online chat rooms that discussed this newish addition to San Diego's more established practices of shore-pounding, float-tubing, renting or owning a boat, hiring a charter, or riding on an open-party sportfishing boat. They called it Sit-On-Top (SOT) kayak fishing.

Soon after moving back to the place of my birth, I found a slightly used SOT Scupper Pro TW, the most popular model being customized by the few kayak anglers fishing out of La Jolla at the time. The guy I bought it from said found the idea of SOT fishing exciting, tried paddling out with some gear, got dumped, nearly drowned, and decided he would rather ride in a boat. He gave me one simple bit of advice: "Don't die." I didn't plan on it; the fellow was also a head taller and half-again as wide as I was, and my balance had been pretty good in that old fiberglass boat. I knew there would be a learning curve once I got out on the ocean, but I was confident; I'd been at this a while.

A little history

I have enjoyed fishing all my life. When I was a toddler, my maternal grandparents babysat when mom worked, and one of their ploys to keep me occupied was a plastic fishing set with which I hooked hoop-nosed fish out of a big pail of water on the back patio. When I was old enough, I fished off the riprap of Mission Bay, or at Torrey Pines beach, or off one of the piers. When I was a little older, trips on boats out of San Diego and Baja weren't uncommon. Both of my parents and all my grandparents fished, and it naturally became my major pastime — and at times, my occupation.

In 1979-1980, I worked the deck of the sportfishing vessel Grande when it ran out of San Pedro's 22nd Street landing. The boat had been refitted with a whole new drive and new boatwork bow to stern, so we had no off days for maintenance that season. When you're working the deck on overnight trips that depart at midnight and return the following evening seven days per week, you tend to think about little else besides your work. You learn the ocean, its moods and tempers. You learn to pay closer attention to the conditions above, around, and below you. You learn about how tides affect kelp; how the attitude of the birds can signal game fish activity. And you learn about fisheries within the marine biospheres of Southern California. So yes, I knew ocean fishing. But the ocean looks much different when your butt is below the water line.

The fitting

Before I could begin fishing, or even learning to fish, from my new acquisition, I needed to fit it. I would need some rod holders, one in front for trolling and a couple more set up behind the seat but easily accessible. I would need a bait tank, as I soon learned that the most productive fishing being done by kayak anglers was slow-trolled live bait, namely greenback mackerel caught by the kelp edge. A spreader bar was in order; this would allow the mounting of my fish finder, out of the way but still in front where I could see it easily. I would also need to mount the transducer, run wiring, and have a dry storage for the battery that would run both the fish finder and the bait tank pump. The only one of these things produced commercially and specifically for kayaks at the time was the "Rhynobar," a spreader bar made by Jeff Krieger, or "Rhyno," as he was known by the small contingent of kayak anglers on the coast at the time.

I first mounted the transducer for the fish finder on the hull using an epoxy, as suggested on one message board. That worked well: the Garmin 160 I used could send its signal through the hull and get an accurate reading to over 200 feet deep. I made a battery storage out of a waterproof tackle bag and stowed it inside

As the ocean in general, and Baja especially, can be rough on humans and machinery, my kayak has outlasted three Jeeps and two major injuries over the past 25 years or so.

the front hatch next to the mounted transducer. For a bait tank, I bought a Coleman 24-quart ice chest that fit perfectly inside the tank well behind the seat. I added an overflow drain and intake tube fitted to a Rule submersible pump, then cut the lid in half and moved one hinge so I could have one operable side nearest me, with a secure strap over the inoperable side.

With wiring run from the battery to a seat-side waterproof toggle switch, then to a terminal block on the back of the molded seat, I could turn the bait tank pump on and off to save on battery use through the day. I didn't buy a Rhynobar; I was adept at sweating copper, so I made my own spreader out of 3/4-inch copper tubing, two 90s, and two drop-ells that served as mount points. I added a stainless "rocket launcher" adjustable rod holder to the compass platform, the cockpit, and the forward hatch, and a gaff holder on my left side — within reach, but out of the way of my lines, which I would be running to my right. Finally, I added two more rod holders to the front of the bait tank. I procured a comfortable life jacket and a whistle, and declared myself ocean-ready.

The learning curve

I started in the relative calm of Mission and San Diego Bays; I knew I needed to get used to the kayak's balance, and to learn how to reboard easily if I did take a spill. Unlike my old sit-inside, my Scupper Pro was made for reboarding on the water. It was a diver's kayak: the "TW" stood for the tank well behind the seat, molded to fit a single SCUBA tank. The sides were low, just a few inches above the water. I practiced first in waist-deep water, then out where I couldn't touch bottom, and found that, done properly, reboarding was fairly easy for me.

Even so, there was much to learn. First, launching and conditions were a challenge. Colorado had sent sudden rain squalls, thunder, and lightning my way. The Pacific offered strong currents, waves against my chest, and teeth in the fish that inhabited the marine biospheres. Inquisitive, sometimes boisterous sea lions were larger than that suspicious beaver had been, and there is nothing in Colorado's fresh waters like sharks or whales. Then of course, there was the matter of navigating the waves again as I returned from a day on the water. Waves that snuck up on me as I paddled in and sometimes toppled me. The learning curve was steep; I soon found out that a long, narrow SOT kayak won't "surf," but will happily go sideways in a breaking wave and roll over, so that you lose your pliers, your sunglasses, and your favorite (un-tethered) bass rod. First lesson: stow or tether everything before entering the surf in either direction.

Like me, many of my fellow kayak anglers had considerable fishing experience. Like them, when I began launching my newly fitted Scupper Pro out of La Jolla Shores, I learned how much I had to learn, despite my experience. I had caught a couple large bat rays while hunting spotted bay bass and halibut in the bay, so I had an idea of what it was like to pull on fish larger than striped bass from a plastic kayak. But an idea is not an experience, and I still had to learn how to cast out, hook, and pull on a big fish without tipping. Fish fought differently when you fished from a kayak than when on a boat. Boats are large platforms that do not move much when a hooked fish is running. If you button down on the drags, you are more likely to break a fish off, especially on large sportfishing boats. On the kayak, you usually get towed around like a bobber on the ocean. In La Jolla — and fisheries that set up like La Jolla — yellowtail and white seabass tend to fight horizontally. In Baja, a lot of the areas are loaded with pronounced reef rocks where fish can break you off, and the fight is more vertical as the fish run straight down to the rocks.

Location, location, location

It helped that I lived where I did: the particular topography of La Jolla helped the offshore version of the sport to grow, and grow fast. The access and launchability from the beach at the end of Avienda de la Playa brings a kayak fisherman as near to big game fishing as one can get on the West Coast without being taken out to sea on a “mothership trip” aboard a larger vessel. Launching in either bay and then paddling out to the kelp forests and beyond was a long trip, but from La Jolla Shores, it was only a half mile to the outside of the reserve boundary and the beginning of a fishery where large white seabass, yellowtail, halibut, and even thresher sharks could be caught. The point at Boomers kept the surf relatively small unless a large northwest swell was coming in, and you could offload on the beach and usually find parking nearby.

La Jolla’s reefs are usually marked by the kelp forest, and that outer edge of kelp in 80 feet or so of water runs east to west out until it turns south outside of Boomers and runs along the coast toward Bird Rock and Pacific Beach. The most fished area is outside the reserve boundary along that stretch of kelp, and north, where, just past the kelp, the bottom turns to a tapered flat ocean floor dropping off toward the La Jolla Canyon edge at around 120 to 140 feet, where the steep edges of the canyon drop off into Yellowtail have been my primary target when fishing from the kayak. They are a strong fish and make for great table fare.

400 to 600-feet deep. The La Jolla Canyon cuts in from the west about in line with Scripps Pier, then a mile or so offshore, turns southeast and remains over 400-feet deep to about one-quarter mile from the launch on the beach at Avienda de La Playa.

When you’re fishing along the kelp edge, yellowtail and white seabass will often run into the kelp and wrap you. This can be frustrating, but I found that with patience and pressure, I would get more fish than I lost. I pulled tight but not beyond the line strength, and the fish would eventually cut through the kelp. Then I could then get them to the gaff. When braid line came onto the scene, many anglers utilized what we call a “kelp cutter” rig: heavy braided line to a clear monofilament of fluorocarbon leader. But I rarely lose a fish to kelp, so I stick with monofilament and use no heavier than 40-pound test line.

The reason for this is that 40-pound test is the largest weight line I can break off from the kayak. Let me explain: as a kid, I was taught never to leave a length of line in the water. Losing terminal tackle is part of fishing, but often, losing line is not. Line will typically break at the knot, so if you’re snagged on the bottom, pulling hard by hand will usually break the line at the tie. Unless I’m fishing the pinnacle reefs, like those of Bahia Asunción or Bahia de Los Angeles, most large fish I have targeted are catchable on 30-pound test. On those pinnacle reefs where fish dive straight to the structure to break you off, you have to fish heavier line to win those vertical battles, but this is usually not the case in La Jolla.

Catching on

As big fish tend to tow you around, they eventually wear themselves out. A SOT kayak will move very easily with little push or pull. Even a small yellowtail can pull you a hundred yards before tiring and beginning to turn in circles as you gradually win the battle and bring them up to gaff. To speed the process, I learned the “duckfoot,” a name I gave to the maneuver of putting my feet over the side and splaying them flat to create a little more resistance. Any fish going toward the kelp, especially, got the “duckfoot,” but when they were running out toward the canyon, I would keep my feet in and let them drag me along. Then, once the fight turned more vertical, I would put my feet out, this time for the added balance.

Back in what I call the early days, we had to figure out how to outfit our kayaks, navigate surf on launching and landing, and basically learn the art of kayak fishing. Now, you can find a bevy of tutorials about just about anything, including kayak fishing, online. But all that’s before you get on the water. Once there, no matter how much you’ve prepared, kayak fishing can be a challenging, grueling and soul-searching adventure, one that tests you, teaches you, humbles you, and broadens you.

At one point a couple of decades ago, I had a small apartment with a small garage in Chula Vista, and a boat in the marina. I also had a kayak hanging on a wall in the garage. Eventually, I realized that I went to more places and caught more fish with the kayak than the boat. I sold the boat. I wasn’t alone. Social media helped grow the sport by spreading photos of amazing catches, and people began to realize they could get out on the water on a stable boat built for one and catch fish without the inconvenience, cost, and maintenance of a more “traditional” boat. Kayak fishing grew during a period when property values shot up, rent got tougher, and earnings for many dropped against the cost of living. The fact that a kayak took up less room, had much easier portage and access, required less investment and maintenance, and required no fuel certainly helped. If you had a car, those early models were simple to launch: just roll it down to any legal fishing spot from wherever you could park. No ramps needed.

As the market grew, the technology improved, to the point where it seemed to me that kayaks were becoming something other than kayaks. The technology was often very cool:

e.g., pedal drives with flippers that moved these heavier, wider, more stable kayaks along faster than most people could paddle. Some had reverse drives, and with those, an angler could cast and work edges hands-free, adjusting the kayak's motion by subtle manipulations of the rudder. These new boats were awesome machines, with rail systems and adjustable everything, super comfy seats high out of the water, and moldings designed to fit specific accessories. Just amazing. Of course, the prices reflect all that improvement and rising demand, and the weight and design became enough to require a trailer.

I don't think I was snobbishly "OG" about it, but I kind of went the other direction. As I moved south to Baja bit by bit — first for a few weeks at a time, then a few months per year, then most of the year and even a few years in a row — some of the DIY accessories on my Scupper Pro became obsolete for the types of fishing I was doing. I rarely anchor, so I didn't need the trolley system that allowed me to set my angle once anchored. I didn't use live Another chunky catch from the kayak at 60 years old. In going on three decades of kayak angling, I have caught tons, literally, from my low-budget kayak.

bait anymore, and most fish I targeted were too large to fit in my ice chest, so I didn't need the bait tank or pump. My third fish finder was a small Garmin Striker, and it mounted better between the footwells than on the spreader bar, so the spreader bar could go. My kayak is now as basic as it gets — a milk crate with a couple PVC rod holders in the back and the small fish finder and rod holder in front.

Without the spreader bar in the way, I found it was easier to scooch forward and stow larger fish in the forward hatch. It was much safer to cut the gill strap, put the fish in the hull and let it kick out, die, and bleed there than trailing it along on a rope tied close but out of the way enough to paddle, as I did often in La Jolla. You can always bleach out a hull; replacing a leg lost to a larger predator attracted by blood in the water is more difficult. And if you compensate by trailing it further back, the sea lions are sure to take advantage and get you into a tug-of-war you're better off avoiding.

Sharks and other hazards

There have been a few incidents with kayaks and sharks. The wrong kind. I know of two occasions in which white sharks have bitten kayaks right on or near those seal-ish flippers on the pedal drives. I've seen big sharks near my kayak, but my eeriest encounter didn't involve a sighting. One night around 10 pm, I was trolling a mackerel while coming into La Jolla from outside the corner of the kelp, paddling maybe twenty yards of the east-west stretch of the beds, and my fish got bit. Except there was no tug: my line just went slack. My fish must be coming toward me, I thought. Nope: I wound hard to catch up found nothing but clean-cut line and no hook. I shrugged it off, tied another hook on, pinned on a fresh bait, and let it back into the water as I began paddling toward the four lights of the La Jolla Beach and Tennis Club just south of the launch.

I was still a few hundred yards from the reserve line and wanted to get a fish after a long, slow afternoon and evening. Again, the line went slack before I had even let the mackerel back to the 40-yard length at which I liked to troll them. Same result. Hmm. If a sea lion wanted that 12-inch mackerel, it would have left the head and the hook. They are adept at that; I have never hooked a sea lion. With pressure, a lot of toothy species like barracuda can cut through line, but 30-pound line, with no pressure and a foot-long mackerel? Gotta be a shark. So, there's lots of sharks? Let's catch a shark, then. If it's a thresher and I get a decent hookset, that's some good eats right there.

I pin on my last bait and let it back, but this time, it got eaten just ten feet behind the kayak — really, just as I set the rod in the holder and began to paddle to let the bait out. Then I heard whatever it was come out of the water, heard it thrashing in the air, and finally, heard (and felt) it land, as though someone dropped a Volkswagen right behind my kayak. Big mako? I didn't know, I just knew I was soaked and cold and tired and scared and a long, long way from the beach. Just a few moments before, I had been sad that it was late and so the night's fishing would soon be done. That was probably one of my quickest but longest paddles through the half mile of reserve to the beach.

Sharks, whales, gregarious whale sharks, and even pesky sea lions aside, the biggest threat for kayak anglers offshore in the ocean are the water condition and the elements. Especially in remote areas with little traffic, changing winds, strong currents, pop-up chubascos, or just a constant burning sun can turn a day's outing to a risky adventure. There have been those who have paddled out and never made it back. Planning is everything in kayak fishing. Wind is a hard thing to paddle against, and I always plan first by wind and weather, most often heading out from my launch into the expected winds. But wind predictions can be off, and even a well-planned trip can go sideways with just a little more wind than expected.

La Jolla has this added benefit: if the wind does come up, it is usually onshore. Santa Ana winds blowing toward the west generally get stronger the further you get offshore, and unless they're unusually strong, they don't pause much of a threat to kayakers fishing that area. It's just one more reason — together with ease of launch, access to a great fishery that holds species from rockfish off the canyon edge, to lingcod, sheephead, halibut, white seabass, yellowtail, and more — why La Jolla is an excellent place to fish from a kayak. I believe that modern-day kayak fishing really got a big push from the crowd fishing out of there in the '90s and early 2000s, and I feel fortunate that I was able to cut my teeth there.

Paddle out and catch big fish

Really, kayak fishing, once you has the basics down, proper safety gear, and a little bit of balance, is a reasonably safe adventure most any person old enough to handle a paddle can enjoy. I have had an extra yak off and on over the years, and have taken more than a few folks out after they have expressed an interest. It's always a fun outing, and it can be cool to watch folks pick it up quickly and catch their first fish by kayak. One friend in San Quintin, Rebecca, had just learned to fish in the surf and decided she wanted to go out on the kayak. She had great fun catching sand bass in the bay, and within a month of fishing in the ocean for the first time, she would have had no problem paddling outside for larger fish. A neighbor who did landscaping and odd jobs, Luis, decided to give it a shot. He had never paddled a kayak before. His first time out he caught some nice halibut, and even won our kayak halibut tournament that year.

And, in spite of the dangers of being on a tiny craft in a huge ocean, kayaking itself is good for your health. I've had elbow and neck surgeries, atrophy on my left side, and various other work or accident-related ailments over the years since first paddling out. The kayak has not only been a means to get out on the water to fish, but is also my ongoing physical therapy: in general, paddling builds core strength and is a great non-impact exercise. I'm into my sixties now and a bit beat up, but I don't see myself giving it up any time soon. Throughout my days in Colorado on the Arkansas River, to the years in San Diego's bays and out of La Jolla, to chasing yellowtail, yellowfin tuna, and dorado off Baja, I have felt truly blessed. When I'm on the water in that old Scupper Pro TW, I have the means to what I love to do; paddle out and catch big fish. Even on the days when they're not biting, the tally for the day doesn't really matter; a good paddle out and I am once again alive in my element.

another surfer surf over a girl who was paddling out. "She was immediately bleeding heavily from her head," he wrote on NextDoor. "When she got to the beach, she was covered in blood down to her feet, and her boyfriend told me the man who did it yelled, 'You should've stayed out of the way,' and paddled away while they were rushing her to shore to get help." To Schmid, it looked like the surfer had "full control of his board and aggressively turned at her and ran her over out of irritation," he recounted. "Then he threw up his hands and paddled north." Others on the app who said they witnessed the surf assault corroborated the story, and added that the girl needed staples to close the wound.

Last February, five women walking and jogging outdoors in the University Town Center neighborhood reportedly became victims of a sexual predator. One was assaulted in broad daylight, the San Diego police said. Around the same time, an 87-year-old man named Fernando was exercising by walking downtown by 5th Avenue and Broadway when suddenly, "unprovoked, he was violently attacked by a transient male," according to Banker's Hill resident Randy Rodriguez. "The transient threw Fernando so hard to the sidewalk that his spine was severely and permanently shattered. The doctors stabilized his back to a point, but they said he will never be the same." Rodriguez, who is Fernando's son-in-law, continued, "Fernando was an avid walker and would wake up every day at 5 am-6 am to go for long walks all around town. He would walk from Bankers Hill to Shelter Island and back some days. Many days, he walked four to six miles." But lately, Fernando has been bedridden, and he needs ongoing care.

Happily, the police made an arrest in Fernando's case. Concluded Rodriguez, "Thank you for making folks aware of what is happening to our city and the lack of safety in the community. It has been quite a traumatic experience and a long road for my father-in-law."

Kerkorian, who died at 98 in 2015, when he and Davis were in the process of breaking up their short-lived marriage. After Kerkorian's death, Davis claimed a third of his $1.8 billion fortune, but ultimately settled for just $12.5 million, plus $10 million for a "donor advised fund, established in Davis' name, which will be administered by the National Philanthropic Trust," reported Variety.com in December 2018. "Last year, the estate agreed to pay $7.27 million to Vanessa Sandin, a former companion of Kerkorian's who had alleged that he promised to bequeath her $20 million." Added the Variety account: "Davis' attorney, John Deily, said his client was pleased with the outcome. 'The settlement wasn't about money,' he said. 'It was about her being able to be involved in the charitable purposes.'"

Rhyme & Verse The Black Art

A poem by Anne Sexton on her 105th birthday

A woman who writes feels too much,
those trances and portents!
As if cycles and children and islands weren't enough; as if mourners and gossips and vegetables were never enough.
She thinks she can warn the stars.
A writer is essentially a spy.
Dear love, I am that girl.

A man who writes knows too much,
such spells and fetiches!
As if erections and congresses and products weren't enough; as if machines and galleons and wars were never enough.
With used furniture he makes a tree.
A writer is essentially a crook.
Dear love, you are that man.

Never loving ourselves,
hating even our shoes and our hats,
we love each other, precious, precious.
Our hands are light blue and gentle.
Our eyes are full of terrible confessions.
But when we marry,
the children leave in disgust.
There is too much food and no one left over to eat up all the weird abundance.

Anne Sexton (1928-1974) was an American poet who epitomized the style of confessional poetry which emerged in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Other exemplars of this style include her friend Sylvia Plath and Robert Lowell. Her poems are highly personal and explore her struggle with mental illness, alcoholism, and suicide, and many are written within the context of her relationship with her husband and children. Despite a successful career as a poet—she received the Pulitzer Prize for poetry in 1967—she committed suicide soon after completing her eighth book of verse. She was born on November 9.

near Sorrento Valley. Hundreds of sycamores can be also be seen in Marian Bear Park (San Clemente Canyon) along Freeway 52 between University City and Clairemont.

Santa Ana Winds In San Diego County often reach their greatest intensity during November, particularly at the mountain passes, where dry air from a high-pressure area over the interior deserts swoops coastward toward a low-pressure area offshore. The subsiding air warms rapidly while it descends, resulting in 80°–90° temperatures close to the coast. While passing over the mountains, though, the dry air can be surprisingly cool — 60° or less in the daytime.

Don't Miss An Amazing Conjunction On November 9 between 3 am and sunrise in the eastern sky. The crescent moon and Venus will be side-by-side at almost equal brightness. If the clouds don't show up, you'll be able to see one of the best conjunctions of the year.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde An elegant, somehow unfussy presentation of a sincere, old-style dramatic investigation into moral and philosophical territory that ought to be uncomfortably familiar in an age that is sold on better living through chemistry. (A great many of us, it seems, attempt to medicate the mind by drugging the brain...) Early on, decent Doctor Jekyll wonders if a murderer's cry of "What have I done?" might not be rhetorical, but sincere: what if it really was as if someone else was wielding the blade? And what if that someone else could be isolated, contained, restrained via chemical intervention? Jekyll may be decent, but he's also distressed — by his indecent colleague Sir Danvers Carew, for starters — and envies those tribal mystics who can obtain serenity by puffing on a pipe. So he's mocked up a medicine, and severed himself from his beastly other half, the monstrous Dr. Hyde. Hyde is not simply man's animal nature before morality slaps on the shackles; he's properly monstrous — which means he's still human, and therefore, still desperate for life...and love. But medicines have side effects, don't you know, and this one may include prolonged blackouts, during which terrible things start to take place. Shana Wride's presentation of Jeffrey Hatcher's adaptation of the Robert Louis Stevenson novella smartly dresses everyone in the same costume, so that any of them can serve as Jekyll's warped reflection as the story demands. In one particularly chilling moment, several of them gather to whisper Hyde's dark desires just out of the hearing of the one character who is always herself: the lovely Elizabeth, the Beauty to Hyde's Beast. Why does she fall for him? Who can say? Love isn't simply chemistry or animal desire; it's a force that has little to do with Jekyll's mind-bending tincture. He would have done well to attend to it's immaterial workings. The adaptation of Stevenson's work isn't perfect — there is at least one inexplicable dramatic decision near the climax of the action — but it is consistently clever, and while the expert cast is utterly serious about its work, the show remains an entertainment and not a lesson. NORTH COAST REPERTORY THEATRE, 987-D LOMAS SANTA FE DR., SOLANA BEACH. 858-481-1055. 8PM THURSDAYS, FRIDAYS, & SATURDAYS, 2PM SUNDAYS.

The Little Fellow, or, The Queen of Tarts Tells All A more apt alternative might have been The Queen of Tarts Threatens to Tell All — it doesn't flow as trippingly off the tongue, but it does have the advantage of describing the play's actual drama: will she or won't she? The "all" in question has to do with the paid dalliances between the Iron Duke of Wellington and one Harriet Wilson, aka The Little Fellow, aka, the Queen of Tarts, aka The Top of the Bottom. It's that last title that gets her in trouble; at one point, Wilson has the chutzpah to declare, "I am not like other women," and the conflict here really does stem from the wounded pride of a whore who feels she's been wronged. (Who also feels the passage of time: brought into the trade at 13, she's already had a good long run, and sagely notes that "there are no old whores.") That her gentleman clients think it impossible to wrong a whore is made deliciously clear from the outset, when one of them advises against publishing, saying, "To make money off a man's private little pleasures would be rather low," as if that isn't what she's been doing all her life. That's in the early going, when everyone is already enjoying the frank honesty that's possible when all social niceties about morality have been cast aside like so many satin undergarments — "all is seared with trade; bleared, smeared with toil," as the poet puts it — but before things get desperate enough for all concerned that the conversation (and action)

turns nasty. (One of my favorite things about Kate Hamill's very smart — and very blue — script is the way everyone keeps punching, scoring palpable hits without ever quite managing a final KO.) Keiko Green has the thankless task of starring, while the show's other three actors take on the sundry other roles. It's not that she's not a commanding enough presence to hold the center; she is. (It's no small thing to plead your dignity in your underwear.) It's just that everyone else is left free to rack, rue, and rage about her with abandon, particularly MJ Sieber, who ranges from the ridiculous to the sublime to the downright sinister with astonishing aplomb. reading this listing, you probably did — you may recall the star of the Mamma Mia film, one Meryl Streep, giving a sweet little speech about how some musicals are so insanely ridiculous that they work sort of simultaneously in spite of and because of the ridiculousity, or words to that effect. The script lets her off easy — she cites Little Shop of Horrors, a show about a man-eating plant from outer space, as her example. But if they'd had guts, they would have had her reference this little gem, which takes the most sweetly bubblegum band ever and makes it the soundtrack for what could be imagined as either tragedy or farce — a girl playing Who's My Daddy right before she gets married — and makes it a feel-good smash. Amazing. The magic of theater, ladies and gentlemen.

The Creator — A thought-provoking vision of a future where Los Angeles lies in ruins, devastated by a nuclear catastrophe triggered by artificial intelligence, The Creator thrusts the United States into a war against sentient machines known as "simulants." At its heart, the story unfolds through the eyes of a former special forces operative (John David Washington) who's been tasked with a perilous mission deep within the Republic of New Asia, where he must locate and terminate the first AI child. Set against a backdrop of breathtaking visuals, The Creator stands tall as a science fiction classic. Yet, amidst its sci-fi grandeur, the film powerfully conveys a more profound message: the horrors of warfare. With the US Army in relentless pursuit, the mesmerizing visual effects gradually yield to the stark reality of war's brutality. "They're not people, it's just programming," says our hero while killing a simulant. But once the bombs start falling like rain, we have to wonder who's really been programmed. (2023) — R.B. ★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

The Holdovers — It's tempting to call director Alexander Payne's latest a kind of Dead Poets Society for grownups. Not that Peter Weir's film was childish. But Payne's is definitely adult. There's the obvious similarity of setting: a private school for boys in New England, filmed with aching loveliness and care. But here, it's the '70s. The American innocence of DPS's '50s has been seen to by the war in Vietnam, which has claimed the life of Curtis, the ambitious son of school cook Mary Lamb. And there is the similarity of dynamic: the story concerns the relationship between a teacher who loves the classical tradition (Robin Williams' John Keating had Horace and his aspirational cry of Carpe diem, Paul Giamatti's Paul Hunham has Marcus Aurelius and his stoic love of virtue despite the circumstances) and a student with a strained familial situation. But Dominic Sessa's Angus doesn't want to chase his dreams and act, he just wants to go home for Christmas — and maybe avoid getting booted into military school. Both teacher and student are sour, sullen, surly, sarcastic, and smart In a way that wins them few admirers — and with reason. The two wind up trapped together for the holidays, and it's a testament to both actors that the thaw between them happens so gradually that it's hard to notice until it's obvious. (Giamatti has a ball here as a glass-eyed grump, but he's a known quantity. The lupine Sessa is the revelation; it's a gutsy move putting him in a theater watching Dustin Hoffman, but it's no accident.) And while DPS Keating had to learn the price of his principles, Hunham's work has more to do with finding the limits of their value. Payne is happy to amble; there are points where you may feel the 2 hour, 13 minute runtime. But he's always going somewhere, and the destination is worthwhile. (2023) — M.L. ★★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

Priscilla — Few tales resonate as profoundly as the tumultuous love story between Elvis and Priscilla Presley. At one end of the spectrum, we have Baz Luhrmann's delirious biopic, Elvis — a frenetic blur where music and fame collide. At the other end, standing with delicate poise, is Sofia Coppola's Priscilla, a slow-burning portrait of the duo's flawed union. Coppola opens with a 14-year-old Priscilla falling under the spell of a musical deity through a chance encounter. But instead of a relationship that blossoms into love, Coppola shows a series of stark snapshots, each infused with a potent cocktail of drugs, eroticism, and abuse. As an expert of dreamy introspection, especially when showing women in waiting, Coppola depicts an uncertain girl, plucked from the vine by famous hands before she was ripe — left to languish in the harsh glare of the public eye and suffocate in solitude within Graceland. But instead of rotting away, Priscilla endures a slow, painful maturation that unfolds in isolation as she continues to yearn for a broken man, whose true self is masked by fame, rendering him blind to the needs of others. — R.B. ★★ (IN WIDE RELEASE)

A taqueria Contodo emerges in Skyline

Contodo Fresh Mexican Eats; 111 S Meadowbrook Dr., San Diego. Had you asked me a few weeks ago, I might have claimed that, over my decade writing Feast stories, I had visited every San Diego neighborhood. Every one that's home to a restaurant, at least. Then last month, I turned left into Skyline, and Skyline reminded me:

A carne asada taco, on a handmade corn tortilla.

this is a big city. Maybe give it another 10 years.

If there's a particular reason I hadn't previously been to Skyline, aka Skyline Hills, it would be that there's not a lot to eat there. Open up Google Maps, and you'll find the southeast San Diego community is a mainly residential area, small enough that even Skyline Hills Park and Skyline Hills Library don't technically fit within its boundaries. But it does have at least one terrific neighborhood taco shop, thanks to the recent arrival Contodo Fresh Mexican Eats.

The first time, I wound up at Contodo by chance — I happened to be nearby when I got hungry. As it happens, I've tried scores of neighborhood taco shops all over the county for the same reason, and rarely do any stand out. But as I drove away from this one, the heat of a punchy creamy chipotle salsa still fading from my tongue, I already knew that Contodo and I had unfinished business.

Priority number one was proving to myself that the vegetarian taco wasn't a fluke. Historically, veggie tacos aren't my first choice. But it turns out, if you spend a years writing about the likes of cheeseburgers, fried chicken, and pork belly, your cholesterol's going to take a hit. So, though I desperately wanted to order the $11 Contodo burrito (carnitas, rice, beans, guacamole, pico de gallo, and corn), instead I opted for a fish tacos and something dubbed the Poblano ($3.50). It's a rajas taco, featuring sauteed onions and corn, along with strips of grilled poblano peppers.

These ingredients alone might have made it pleasant eating, but considering the name of this place means "with everything," the taco was appropriately dressed up with additions of crema, cotija, and a crispy layer of cheddar that had been melted onto the tortilla as it grilled upon the flat top. A second poblano taco cinched it: not a fluke. Simply an excellent vegetarian choice.

Unfinished business number two: the pork belly taco ($4.25). Yes, I initially made the "healthy" choice to avoid this option, but then I spent the next two weeks regretting it.

It's not every day you get a chance to eat a thick strip of pork belly nestled within a fresh, handmade tortilla. This sumptuous morsel takes after cochinita pibil, topped with pickled red onions to go with cotija and guacamole. I have zero regrets. For one thing, closer to downtown, a taco this succulent probably wouldn't sell for under six bucks. And even then, it might not have the same quality of thick, chewy, hecho a mano tortillas, either.

Though the above tacos proved most memorable, everything I ordered eats well folded inside those tortillas, whether fish, chicken, carne asada, or another standout, adobada. If you demand quality tortillas and salsas, Contodo is a taco shop for you. An employee told me that one of the founders of Contodo had previously operated the tiny taco counter Mimi's Tacos, which had earned a loyal following in Pacific Beach until it closed due to the pandemic. And Contodo is little more than a taco counter itself. Though it occupies a standalone building, the kitchen takes up most of the space, so the seating is outside at a couple of picnic tables. For sure, Mimi's had a higher profile location, but also for sure: Contodo's the best thing going in Skyline.

I'll stop short of suggesting that taco enthusiasts from all over the county should rush to pay a visit, but certainly anyone who lives close enough to already know where this neighborhood is will want to give it a try. Especially on Tuesdays, when tacos go three for $8.

Youth will be served

Brian Warren's band Weatherbox toured with Say Anything circa 2008; Warren recalls playing in rooms in front of 2000 people. Last month, Say Anything played the two-day When We Were Young festival in Las Vegas, which drew 85,000 patrons per day. He estimates that Say Anything played in front of about 10,000 fans at that event. And this time, Warren wasn't in the opening band. He was an official member of Say Anything.

"I've been friends with the bass player in Say Anything [Alex Kent] for a long time — since fifth grade," explains Warren. "He left the band, but now he's back. We grew up together. We were going to shows in the late '90s. All that Fat Wreck Chords and Saves the Day, New Found Glory sort of stuff. We were best friends back then, and he joined Say Anything in 2004-2005. I tried out at the time, but I wasn't good enough. So it's always been in my mind that to be in Say Anything was a possibility, but I just wasn't really good enough. I tried out and failed. It was kind of a bummer. When Alex rejoined the band, they asked me if I wanted to be in it, and it was kind of like a full circle thing. I'm kind of living out my fantasies about being a little kid and wanting to be in a big rock band. It's pretty crazy. It's very surreal. Say Anything was always my favorite band, so being in it is a whole other level."

Just now, Warren is back in San Diego and preparing for Weatherbox's appearance at Soda Bar's 15th anniversary celebration on Saturday, November 11. Anticipation is high: the band had planned to record a new album in Atlanta in April 2020, but that plan (along with some tour dates with Manchester Orchestra) was derailed by Covid. And their last San Diego show was a bit of a debacle: they played as part of the 2022 Escorted Trips festival at the WorldBeat Culture Center in Balboa Park on a Saturday during the park's extremely popular (and absurdly packed) December Nights Festival. "It was very bizarre. There was no parking. People were getting stuck for an hour in traffic before they got there. It was not ideal, but it was fun. It was fun to be onstage and play with the band. I loved that part of it, but everything else was a nightmare." Some specifics: Weatherbox drummer Jordan Krimston says he had a friend who tried to Uber from Barrio Logan to Balboa Park, a trip that would usually take 20 minutes at the most. "He said after an hour of being in the Uber, he just got out and walked the last mile to get there, which is just insane."

"I'm kind of living out my fantasies...it's very surreal."

Drummer Krimston will be pulling double duty at the Soda Bar gig, drumming for Future Crooks as well. "I didn't even realize that the first Soda Bar show I played was with Future Crooks, almost exactly ten years ago," he recalls. "I was just filling in, and that was my first time playing with anyone in that band or the Weatherbox circle." Krimston was only 15 when he played that show, and he had to leave the club after the band had finished due to his age. He recalls standing outside the venue on numerous nights, listening to various bands playing their sets. "It's kind of a bad spot if you're not 21 and you're trying to listen in," he explains. "But the Casbah is really good if you're under 21 and trying to listen in, because the stage is right at the front of the venue. At Soda Bar, I would go to the side parking lot where the bands load-in in the back. I think I figured that out because I had played there a couple of times and loaded from there. When you were loading out and you were in the back parking lot, you could hear the next band pretty well."

Back when Facebook was the dominant form of social media, Krimston and his fellow youngsters would occasionally utilize the site's powers and exert their influence via event RSVPs. "Back when Facebook events were more popular, you could see who was RSVPing a show. If there was a 21 and up show that me and my friends wanted it to be all-ages, we would all comment on the event page 'Please move this to the Che.' It was cool that sometimes Cory [Stier, the promoter] would do that for us."

MARIE HADDAD at La Jolla Athenaeum

NOV 10

The fifteenth anniversary celebration for the Acoustic Evenings at the Athenaeum series is headlined by Marie Haddad, who first earned local notice with the San Diego Beat Organization, which was nominated as Best New Artist at the 2002 San Diego Music Awards. The bill includes a set from Israel Maldonado, who melds Brazilian, salsa, gypsy, funk, reggae, classical, and rock, and a duo performance by Jimmy Patton and Enrique Platas.

THE GIFT MACHINE at Oceanside Moose Lodge

NOV 10

Enjoy an evening of psych-tinged melodic rock from two North County indie bands, with the Drabs from Carlsbad topping the bill and getting opening support from San Diego-via-Anacortes Washington band The Gift Machine. Both groups will be showcasing material from their newly released LPs, the Drabs' Hurry Light and The Gift Machine's Consolation Prize.

The Fall Fest in Nestor features local artisan vendors, kid's activities, native plant and seed displays and demonstrations, food trucks, and family-friendly live music. Headline performer Gregory Page has released around two dozen folkie albums since 1990, as well as playing and recording with the Rugburns and the Hatchet Brothers, and he's produced music for over two dozen artists, including Jason Mraz and Tom Brosseau.

AMANDA COGAN at Mission Bay Boat & Ski Club

NOV 11

Singer-songwriter Amanda Cogan is best known as the singer for Rosewood & Rye. Cogan will celebrate the release of her debut solo album Shifting Winds by headlining a bill that includes performances by Uruguay-born singer-songwriter Gaby Aparicio, whose bilingual album La Bella Vita earned a 2020 San Diego Music Award nomination. Also appearing will be Howlin' Moon and Ash Foster.

THANKSGIVING PUNK ROCK FOOD DRIVE at Belching Beaver Oceanside

NOV 11

The 15th Annual Thanksgiving Punk Rock Food Drive is an all-ages event raising food and funds for the North County Food Bank. Bands include Corporate Citizen, Bad Cop Bad Cop, Failing Up, Flailing Idiot, Fine Dining, F+, and Parade of Horribles. An after-party will feature Bad Religion tribute Generator. Bring three non-perishable food items and receive a free raffle ticket.

THE GONZO REPORT

Roundhouse redux

Lots of bodies and clean, clear sound at The Whistle Stop

"I think I dropped a couple of verses there," jokes The Color Forty Nine singer-guitarist Phil Beaumont. "Maybe they're on the floor." Or maybe it's drummer-singer John Meeks who's talking. I can't see either one up there on the stage at The Whistle Stop Bar in South Park, so my information is as limited as my view. I can see bassist-singer Jason Hooper's head when the crowd sways, so I know it wasn't him. The venue holds a maximum of 200, and the place is over half filled. The performance area is separated from the main area by a wall with Flintstone-style openings and floor access on each side. Those who arrived early are not moving from their spots up front, and others are claiming their territory elsewhere, including a couple locked in a high school style slow dance, holding each other and moving in a tight circle. The music fits the moment.

I notice that the jukebox here spotlights the bands that are playing at the club. I also notice that the bartender is wearing a sweatshirt advertising the Tower Bar. I ask her if anyone gives her shit for wearing another venue's swag, and she tells me no. Her tone makes it clear that to do so would be a proper dick move. Looking at the notice board, I spot flyers and notices for several local venues and events. Supportive, not competitive.

This is not an earplugs-only event. I don't need to wait for the lull between bands to carry on a conversation near the bar at the back of the club. There, I catch up with artist Mark Habegger, who shocks me by mentioning to Markel Tumlin that he worked on Dead Man, a favorite film of mine. I've been chatting with this guy for years, and he's never mentioned it. After I register my initial surprise, my insatiable appetite for detail is well fed. Heading out for a smoke break, I take the opportunity to learn more about the area immediately outside the bar as I eavesdrop on two artists, one of whom is Eyebite. Eyebite clandestinely pastes macabre imagery on the backs of street signs and on electrical boxes. The art keeps getting taken down, and I suspect that he and his compatriot are plotting something, because they stop talking when I start smiling.

The Stargazer Lilies come on, and they command more attention than The Color Forty Acid Mothers Temple: visually obscured, but aurally present.

Nine did, what with their saturated feedback and the films projected behind them. The films give me something to look at — because I still can't see the artists. It's not bothersome, but it is consistent. The dancing couple silently registers their approval of the new act by continuing their spinning embrace. I wonder if they ever stop, if either of them ever has to use the restroom, like I do at the moment.

Nationally touring headliner Acid Mothers Temple has a merch table in front of the men's room, and keyboardist Higashi Hiroshi is interacting with happy fans sporting raglans from the Japanese psych-band's previous tours. I hear a young woman saying her vape is annoying her, and I must know why. Her name is Kiara Pornan, and she shows me a device that lights up in sequences. It's bright enough to be used as a flashlight in a pinch, but it has no off button, and continues to flash long after a hit is taken. She tells me The Whistle Stop is where everyone goes from her job at Mothership, a restaurant we can almost see from the sidewalk outside the bar. Pornan excuses herself when her Taco Bell Door Dash arrives; she's off to "eat the fuck out of this chalupa."

Everett the doorman has warned me that Acid Mothers Temple is loud, and that earplugs are available. But the band isn't as loud as I anticipated, so I (probably foolishly) skip the earplugs. There's a mini laser show on the wall that matches the tone of the music, which I can only describe as a strain of Black Sabbath with Uli Jon Roth playing guitar. As cool as that sounds, it falls short of a complete description.

The sound, as it has been throughout the night, is clean and clear. I still can't see the musicians, but I've accepted it and so I enjoy the show. I imagine that this is how it might have felt to crowd into the Roundhouse in England, where various psychedelic bands played early in their careers. It was a happening place, the scene as much social and supportive as it was a musical. I was too young and too American to have experienced that, but I'm here now.

As I'm leaving, I notice that the couple is still slow dancing. I'm no longer curious about bathroom breaks or anything else that would force them to relinquish each other. I choose to believe they stayed like that long after the music ended. ■

IMMORTAL BEAUTY

BY GARRETT HARRIS

Nietzsche teaches, Strauss sublimates

The San Diego Symphony's Jacobs Masterworks series officially starts on Saturday, November 4, at 7:30 pm. The venue is The Rady Shell at Jacobs Park. This will be the 14th season I've covered for The San Diego Reader. There have been several moments of majestic music-making over the years, one of which was a performance of Richard Strauss's Also Sprach Zarathustra. Lo and behold, that piece will be starting the 2023-2024 season.

Also Sprach Zarathustra, is a philosophical novel written by Friedrich Nietzsche and published in four parts between 1883 and 1885. Strauss wrote his tone poem in nine parts in 1896. Stanley Kubrick brought it to the big screen with 1968's 2001: A Space Odyssey. Since then, it has been a staple of popular culture, as both inspiration and parody.

The central theme of the book is the death of God. Nietzsche famously proclaimed that "God is dead," meaning that traditional religious beliefs and values no longer held sway in modern society. In the story, Zarathustra descends from his mountain solitude to share his wisdom with humanity. He challenges the prevailing religious and moral systems, urging individuals to embrace their own power and create their own values. Nietzsche argues that the death of God opens up the possibility for humans to become the creators of their own destiny.

That's a lot of responsibility.

One could argue that the 20th Century proved that humanity is not up to the task, what with all the genocide, world wars, and atomic bombs. Nietzsche believed that all living beings possess an inherent drive to exert their power and assert their dominance — see genocide and world wars. However, it is power over oneself and one's suffering that is the ultimate goal. Zarathustra encourages individuals to embrace their will to power and strive for self-overcoming. By doing so, they can transcend their limitations and reach their full potential.

This is commonly referred to as sublimation.

And it is here that classical music gives us the greatest example. Not in the form of Richard Strauss, but in Music for the death of God: Richard Strauss circa 1894.

Beethoven. Beethoven's entire life was one big act of sublimation — but that's another story. Also Sprach Zarathustra was the best thing Strauss had written to that point. In that way, at least, he overcame his previous limitations.

The eternal recurrence is another important idea presented in Also Sprach Zarathustra. Nietzsche suggests that life is cyclical, and that every moment will recur infinitely. We must therefore live our lives in such a way that we would willingly repeat every moment for eternity. It calls for a radical affirmation of life, embracing both its joys and its sufferings, as they are essential parts of the human experience. Nietzsche argues that only by embracing the eternal recurrence can individuals truly live authentically and overcome the nihilism that arises from the death of God.

Put that in your woke pipe and smoke it.

Classical Music this week

Lea Desandre & Thomas Dunford: Lettera Amorosa
The San Diego Early Music Society welcomes mezzo-soprano Lea Desandre and lutenist Thomas Dunford. The duo will present works dedicated to love by Italian composers of the seventeenth century. Featuring arias by Monteverdi, Merula, Kapsberger, and Frescobaldi, the program explores the richness and complexity of romantic ardor. Friday, November 10, 7:30pm; $10-$50. All Souls' Episcopal Church, 1475 Catalina Boulevard.

Paul Tseng & Dan Yu
6 composers, 5 countries, 3 centuries. Paul Tseng and Dan Yu take you on an epic musical journey with masterpieces by legendary composers such as Bach, Borodin, Faure, Dvorak, and Brahms, presented by San Diego Music Society. Sunday, November 12, 3pm; $25-$55. California Center for the Arts, Escondido, 340 N. Escondido Boulevard.

The Ring Without Words
A night of epic music begins with Wake Up: A Concerto for Orchestra, a new piece by Carlos Simon, commissioned by the San Diego Symphony. Music Director Rafael Payare also leads a sonic and visual expedition into Richard Wagner's Ring Without Words, arranged by conductor Lorin Maazel. Friday, November 10, 7:30pm; Saturday, November 11, 7:30pm; $25-$108. Rady Shell at Jacobs Park, 222 Marina Park Way.

USD Wind Ensemble: We Found a Time Machine!
Join the USD Wind Ensemble for an evening of music. Sunday, November 12, 6pm; free.

Conrad Prebys Performing Arts Center, 7600 Fay Avenue.

Ukrainian Mosaic Orchestra Concert
The orchestra of 40 musicians plays traditional Eastern European folk instruments. They will present a program of music from Ukraine and around the world. The concert will also feature folk dancers Larissa Nazarenko and Nikit Pilipko, along with guest singers baritones Salvador Padilla and Vadis Jansons and soprano Anna Belaya, and instrumentalist Andriy Pidkivka. The orchestra's professional directors and arrangers are Iryna Orlova and Anatoliy Mamalyga. Sunday, November 12, 3pm; $25-$50. Oceanside High School, 1 Pirates Cove.

World Ballet Series: Cinderella
A part of the World Ballet Series, Cinderella is performed live by a multinational cast of 40 professional ballet dancers gathered to bring the most celebrated fairy tale to life. Saturday, November 11, 3pm and 7pm; $35-$95. Balboa Theatre, 868 Fourth Avenue.

PERSONALS

JUST WHEN everything gets better, it's too late.

LIFETIME SUPPLY of stupid or none at all is my motto.

DEAR MOLLY My loins yearn for your sweet touch, to feel your rough hands on my neck, your warm breath on the bottom of my feet. Until we meet again. Xoxo

DEAR KEVIN, You're my favorite Halloween date - no matter what we do. I love you so much!

PEOPLE ARE VERY MUCH LIKE THE MOON they all have a dark side and you rarely get to see it

YOU'VE HEARD: When life gives you lemons, make lemonade! But the converse is also true: When life gives you S---, make S--- sandwiches!

GUESS WHAT not every hotel room in Paris has a view of the Eiffel tower

TOO BAD we couldn't start with the Christmas celebrations until after Thanksgiving!

BUTCH David H., Take good care of my Best friend and your Dad. Love ya buddy. GMAN

DREW C Happy Birthday Drew....Enjoy your special day... Hugs....Gary and Nancy...

IF YOU'RE GOING TO BE STUPID you better have a lot of money because it's expensive

JIM AND BARB Who Loves ya Baby? I do...Barbie, where are the shot glasses? Lets party.....Love you guys....GMAN and Nancy.

JIMMY L. Jimmy, always fun when we all get together. May your plane ride home, be a safe one. Love ya Buddy. Gman and Nancy.

JOHN AND SHARON Thanks for the awesome barbecue. Sharon, where is the tequila? Love you.....Gman and Nancy....

SENIOR LADY SEEKING GENTLEMEN FRIEND Mission Valley senior lady. Young at heart seeking senior gentleman friend to get together from time to time to enjoy San Diego holiday festivities. Maybe a casual movie or concert. Please leave a voice message for Carmen (619) 488-0822.

THE BEATINGS WILL CONTINUE until morale improves!

DEAREST M In M's eyes, my heart takes flight,. Together we wander, day and night. Exploring the world, hand in hand,. Our love, like journeys, expands. With every place, a memory's born,. In M's love, I'm forever sworn. Through adventures near and far

LET'S HANG OUT FOR MY BIRTHDAY It's my birthday on Monday. I don't have anything to do or anyone to hang out with. Let's get something to eat, or drink, or go somewhere? I'm open to almost anything. I am in my early 40's. MAYANMUSH-IES@YAHOO.COM

DEAR KEVIN, Time to plan a road trip! You're my all time favorite traveling companion. Remember Ziga zig ah? Can't wait to see all the things and share those moments with you. I love you so much!

HOW DO YOU FAKE BEING SEEN by 500 people after being crucified? First Corinthians 15:3-6

YOU KNOW IF PEOPLE were still able to do what they do but couldn't be house broken no matter what, it would sure level the playing field with the rest of the beings here.

IF WE EVER MEET AGAIN Just close your eyes and we can be what we really are inside; I'm still 36 and still dream up things to do (very ably too); flabbergasting under a veil too!

I WAS SUCH A NEGATIVE HUMAN BEING My apologies to Becky, Marianne, Janice and Michelle. Obviously I over reacted at your expense. Forgive me.

WISHING YOU a Happy Birthday Leslie. You rock!

YOUR OPINION Strike out the name the Padres, a name with religious identification. Hit a Home Run for a new name. How about the Amigos? The center for applied critical thinking CACT. (619) 428-1274

NOTICE OF ADOPTION

TO THE ABOVE-NAMED DEFENDANTS STELLA ENYINNAYA AND HER
ATTORNEY, JAMES SHADD, III, ESQUIRE, MICHAEL MURPHY
& JAMES DELVON
THOMAS:

YOU ARE HEREBY GIVEN THE FOLLOWING NOTICE:

- That an adoption proceeding was filed in the Family Court of Richland County in the State of South Carolina on October 6, 2022, and in the Complaint you are alleged to be the parents of an African American female child born in San Diego, California, on February 11, 2016.
- That if Notice to Contest, Intervene or otherwise Respond is filed by you with the Court within thirty (30) days of the receipt of this Notice of Adoption Proceedings, you will be given an opportunity to appear and be heard on the merits of the adoption. To file notice to Contest, Intervene or otherwise Respond in this action, you must notify the above-named Court at the Richland County Courthouse, 1701 Main Street, Columbia, South Carolina 29201, in writing of your intention to Contest, Intervene or otherwise Respond. The above named Court must be informed of your current address and any changes of address during the adoption proceedings.
- That your failure to respond within thirty (30) days of receipt of this Notice of Adoption Proceedings constitutes your consent to the adoption and forfeiture of all of your rights and obligations to the above-named child. It is further alleged that your consent to this adoption is not required under S.C. Code Ann. Section 63-9-310 and that your parental rights should be terminated pursuant to S.C. Code Ann. Section 63-7-2570(7).

This notice is given pursuant to S.C. Code Ann. Section 63-9-730(E).

SUMMONS

NOTICE TO DEFENDANT:
(AVISO AL DEMANDADO):
VILLA CHARDONNAY - HORSES WITH WINGS, a California corporation; MONIKA KERBER, an individual; and DOES 1 THROUGH 25, inclusive,

YOU ARE BEING SUED BY PLAINTIFF:
(LO ESTÁ DEMANDANDO EL DEMANDANTE):
CELINE MYERS, an individual, and THE ARK WATCH FOUNDATION, a California corporation,

NOTICE! You have been sued. The court may decide against you without your being heard unless you respond within 30 days. Read the information below.

You have 30 CALENDAR DAYS after this summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff. A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form if you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), your county law library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the court clerk for a fee waiver form. If you do not file your response on time, you may lose the case by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court.

There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), or by contacting your local court or county bar association. NOTE: The court has a statutory lien for waived fees and costs on any settlement or arbitration award of $10,000 or more in a civil case. The court's lien must be paid before the court will dismiss the case.

¡AVISO! Lo han demandado. Si no responde dentro de 30 días, la corte puede decidir en su contra sin escuchar su versión. Lea la información a continuación.

Tiene 30 DÍAS DE CALENDARIO después de que le entreguen esta citación y papeles legales para presentar una respuesta por escrito en esta corte y hacer que se entregue una copia al demandante. Una carta o una llamada telefónica no lo protegen. Su respuesta por escrito tiene que estar en formato legal correcto si desea que procesen su caso en la corte. Es posible que haya un formulario que usted pueda usar para su respuesta. Puede encontrar estos formularios de la corte y más información en el Centro de Ayuda de las Cortes de California (www.sucorte.ca.gov), en la biblioteca de leyes de su condado o en la corte que le quede más cerca. Si no puede pagar la cuota de presentación, pida al secretario de la corte que le dé un formulario de exención de pago de cuotas. Si no presenta su respuesta a tiempo, puede perder el caso por incumplimiento y la corte le podrá quitar su sueldo, dinero y bienes sin más advertencia.

Hay otros requisitos legales. Es recomendable que llame a un abogado inmediatamente. Si no conoce a un abogado, puede llamar a un servicio de remisión a abogados. Si no puede pagar a un abogado, es posible que cumpla con los requisitos para obtener servicios legales gratuitos de un programa de servicios legales sin fines de lucro. Puede encontrar estos grupos sin fines de lucro en el sitio web de California Legal Services, (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), en el Centro de Ayuda de las Cortes de California, (www.sucorte.ca.gov) o poniéndose en contacto con la corte o el colegio de abogados locales. AVISO: Por ley, la corte tiene derecho a reclamar las cuotas y los costos exentos por imponer un gravamen sobre cualquier recuperación de $10,000 ó más de valor recibida mediante un acuerdo o una concesión de arbitraje en un caso de derecho civil. Tiene que pagar el gravamen de la corte antes de que la corte pueda desear el caso.

Good fishing continues late into fall – A lesson learned, again

Dock Totals 10/29 – 11/4: 1502 anglers aboard 70 half-day to 3-day trips out of San Diego landings over the past week caught 1 black seabass (released), 280 bluefin tuna (up to 100 pounds), 43 calico bass, 347 dorado, 1 halibut, 22 lobster (45 released), 40 perch, 142 rock crab, 3039 rockfish, 39 sand bass, 130 sculpin, 62 sheephead, 14 skipjack tuna, 1 thresher shark, 271 whitefish, 599 yellowfin tuna, and 266 yellowtail.

Saltwater: Angler counts and fish counts have been dropping with the temperatures as we head into winter in what has been another amazing year for the San Diego fleet. Still, here in early November, we are getting good numbers of bluefin and yellowfin tuna, while the sluggish yellowtail bite has improved. Rockfish numbers are very strong, even with the current depth restriction requiring anglers to only take groundfish beyond the 50-fathom (300-feet) line in U.S. waters. Once in Mexican waters, all depths are allowed, though the per-species, per day limit is five fish. So, the numbers would indicate decent deep-water fishing still going on for the boats fishing north of the border. The depth restriction can also account for the lack of lingcod in the counts, as they tend to prefer depths between 60 and 330 feet.

Calico and sand bass are biting well off the kelp and on the flats, respectively. If you want to target those species, then half-day boats like the Dolphin are running afternoon trips to those local spots, while their morning runs are generally out to target the deep-water rockfish. If you want to target bluefin tuna, the more successful trips are those running to the areas between the Corner and San Clemente Island. 1.5-day and longer trips are advised to get some dark-hour fishing in, as some of the larger grade bluefin are still biting between sundown and sunup. Take a range of gear, from 25-30-pound flyline live bait setups to heavier 60-plus-pound combos for jigging.

Yellowfin tuna are biting mostly south well off the coast along with dorado, while yellowtail are showing nearer to shore on high spots from the Coronado Islands south along the Baja Peninsula. The better trips to target those species will be 2-days and longer, given the cooling water and need to venture further south, where the California current has a lesser effect on the near and offshore fisheries. Even so, there is a plethora of bait along the coast, mostly anchovy, and signs are good for pelagic species to continue to feed while the water temps remain above 65 degrees or so. I was out on Saturday on my kayak in San Quintin, and bonito targeting the mass of anchovies were biting so heavily I could barely get a lure down through them to the halibut I was targeting on the bottom.

Speaking of which, I re-learned a lesson that day, a lesson I had learned as a kid working the boats long ago. When fighting a big fish to the gaff, it is advisable, once the fish is tired and about to be gaffed, to back off on the drags a little. This way, if the fish bolts or comes off the gaff, it can run without you suffering the sudden stress of a frantic fish breaking the line or pulling the hook. Or, in my case, getting nearly dumped from the kayak. One of the times I did get my lure through the bonito, I hooked something large with a familiar head shake. I knew what I had, and after about 30 minutes, my suspicion was confirmed. A large black seabass came up, and my heart began racing. The fish was close to five feet in length and probably between 125 and 150 pounds. Not huge, but respectable by any standards. (I was in Mexico, where one black seabass per angler per day is allowed, and I intended to take this fish.)

Normally, a fish that size would take a bit longer to get to gaff on the 25-pound setup I was using, and it has been my experience with black seabass that they tend to give up and roll due to the stress of the fight over a long duration. This makes them easier to handle. Usually. So, when on the kayak, I tend to ignore my better instincts and button down on the drag once the fish is alongside to keep its head up. On a boat, I would loosen or leave the drag alone, as the boat is a more solid platform, but on the kayak, a fish surging at the last minute tends to simply tow you along until you can get back into gaff range. Well, this fish never rolled, but remained upright. The fight also seemed brief once I saw the size of it, but still, habits are habits, and after over 20-years of fighting big fish on a kayak, I did what I normally do but would never advise; buttoned down on the drag before reaching for the gaff.

When I had the gaff over the fish and was aiming for a collar-shot, it bolted straight down, burying my G-Loomis rod tip deep into the water and nearly rolling the kayak and spilling me and all my gear into the drink. I instinctively put my legs out over the side, not unlike a bull-rider trying to last eight seconds, heels dug into the hull and turning sideways. Just as I thought, "Welp, looks like I'm swimming," the hook bent and pulled. And not just any hook: this was a Mustad 8/0 Ultra Point hook, generally very strong and perfectly capable of handling an even larger fish. That I lost the fish was actually kind of a relief. I'm getting older and towing that catch back to the beach would have taken some extra effort.

Still shaking a bit, I looked at the hook and the way it was twisted sideways and concluded, given the size of the fish, that it must have been basically in the jaw and not around it. I don't think an 8/0 hook could get around the jaw of a black seabass that size. It had been a good morning on the water, and I weighed the option of continuing fishing or heading in before the bonito in the hold began to turn. Bonito is fine eating if kept cool and bled, but not so much so when the fragile meat gets mushy. That's when I decided my day was done: with a limit of fresh-caught bonito and a couple bass in the hold as the wind started coming up chilly from the northwest, I made my way back to the launch like a James Bond martini, shaken. But also stirred.

I was once again reminded of my greatly missed and dearly departed fishing friend, Ross Zoerhof, who used to ask me on occasion, "How many kicks from the same mule does it take?" I reckon I will leave the drags alone from now on.

Be Careful What You Ask For

— A store in Swansea, Wales, that supports the Barnardo children's charity has circulated a request to its donors, United Press International reported on Oct. 27: Please don't send us your sex toys. "Please be mindful that we are a children's charity and as such we have a range of ages on our wonderful volunteer team," the statement read. "We therefore ask that you refrain from donating your used and unused marital aids! ... The branch has CCTV so that these items can be traced back to their owners." In other words, we know who you are.

Ewwwww!

— Desirae Kelly of Farmington, Missouri, woke up at 5 am on Oct. 24 to a strange feeling. "I actually felt something move in my ear," Kelly said in a TikTok video. Fox News reported that Kelly was in such discomfort, she started to cry in the waiting room at urgent care. As a nurse started to flush her ear with water, Kelly "felt whatever that was crawl out of my ear ... and I watched out of the corner of my eye something fall and land on my sweater," Kelly said. "I watch this black spider with all eight legs crawl across the floor." She said she screeched and threw up as the nurses trapped the spider in a container. "The nurses were so sweet and passed no judgment like I thought they would," Kelly said. "I don't think I could ever sleep without earplugs again."

News You Can Use

— Bet you didn't know that every year, U.S. Department of Agriculture officials distribute oral rabies vaccines to raccoon populations in 14 states, driving around and targeting areas where the critters will find and eat the bait. But, as NPR reported, in rural communities, it's more efficient to drop the little packets from low-flying planes. "The planes have a tube and a conveyor belt that just drops these vaccines to make sure they're sort of evenly dispersed," said journalist Emily Mullin. Jordona Kirby with the USDA said the trick was to make the vaccines palatable to a raccoon, so they come in a fish flavor and a sweet flavor. If other animals find and eat the packets, it won't hurt them.

The Continuing Crisis

— The Toccoa Riverside Restaurant in Blue Ridge, Georgia, has updated its menu with an addendum: patrons will get a surcharge if they are "unable to parent" -- $50 per bill for misbehaving kids -- NBC10 Philadelphia reported. A Google review from diner Lyndsey Landmann described a "huge scene" made by the owner in front of the whole restaurant: "He got in our faces and told us that we belonged at Burger King and not at his restaurant," Landmann said. "He was yelling." The owners, however, said they weren't going to "comment on a policy we've had for years. We just want to live in the woods and cook."

Questionable Judgment

— As college antics go, it stands up: on Oct. 25, someone wearing a giant penis costume was escorted out of the stands at a football game between Sam Houston State University and the University of Texas at El Paso, Huff Post reported. A school spokesperson said the prankster was given "the option to take the costume off or leave the stadium." Sam Houston was winning the game until the phallic fan was removed; they lost 37-34.

Buried the Lede

— Joshua Dillon, 37, went on a drug-fueled rampage early on Oct. 29, forcing his way into two homes in Rush Township, Pennsylvania, WTAJ-TV reported. Dillon told homeowners he had been shot and was in danger. After barging in at the last house, he threw a television to the ground, dumped a CD rack, threw a lamp, BROKE THE HANDLE OFF A CAST IRON SKILLET (our emphasis) and rubbed frozen meat on his chest. Dillon had allegedly consumed a quarter-ounce of hallucinogenic mushrooms and now faces felony charges of burglary and criminal trespassing. But let's talk about that skillet handle!

Crime Report

— Officials in Melbourne, Australia, raided a home on Oct. 31, where they found a meth lab, boxes of gemstones and so many Legos that they'll need a truck to haul them away, The Guardian reported. Police found 1130 boxes of the plastic blocks valued at more than $200,000 and arrested a 36-year-old man and a 32-year-old woman. "This is the first time our detectives have seized a Lego collection," said Detective Inspector Anthony Vella.

Inexplicable

— Two unsuspecting visitors to Wortham Park in Houston, Texas, on Oct. 26 were the victims of a teenager's scream for attention, KHOU-TV reported. Alford Lasean Lewis, 19, and 18-year-old Kingston Miker cooked up a scheme wherein Lewis first tried to rob a man, and then sucker-punched another man in the back of the head, as Miker filmed the actions. "They did this for fun and posted it on social media, which is simply unacceptable," said Ashlea Sheridan, a prosecutor in the Harris County District Attorney's office. Lewis was contrite: "You know, I just made a mistake, and everybody makes mistakes," he told KHOU. "What people don't see is that I shook his hand after and gave the man a hug." Oh well, then. Case closed.

What's in a Name?

— Too many words, according to officials in Spain. Fernando Fitz-James Stuart, the 17th duke of Huescar, recently baptized his second child with a name 25 words long, Sky News reported. The name pays tribute to the baby's mother and father, other members of the family and religious devotions. But register rules limit a child's name to one compound name and two simple ones, and the duke and his wife will need to shorten the name for legal purposes.
